END OF VOLUME SECOND.

With this number expires Volume Second of the Record. That the paper has improved since its last anniversary, will be admitted by all.

Just as soon as there are subscribers sufficient on the list, (which at the present rate will soon be obtained) a Weekly will take the place of the present monthly issue.

THE FOURTH IN DETROIT.

all-round Excursion—Appearance of the City—Dinner and Fires—A few hints to the citizens here turned out in full Detroit on the fourth. A heavy night previous foreboded a wet morning.

noon arrived the crowd were making their way to the various Hotels, all of which must have been crowded to their capacity. As for ourselves we went for Eisenlord's where we found many others from Northville and vicinity.

While some did great credit to themselves in the parts which they performed, we will say that all did well, many times exhibiting a literary ability in advance of their years.

For the Record.

The Chinese Language

Learning the English alphabet begins with letters, but in Chinese the beginning with syllables, because there are no letters for what we should call letters, or words, or characters. Our twenty six letters the Chinese have about five hundred syllables, and these are combined together in an almost infinite formation, to make their thirty six thousand words, each of which is represented by a separate character. From the paucity of their syllables, they have to give them a great many meanings, as for instance, the syllable 'sh' has two hundred and twelve meanings, and 'ch' one hundred and thirty-six. Hence, if one Chinese says to another simply 'sh' or 'ch', he may mean any one of two hundred and thirty-six things, which is really nothing, and he has to speak in order to limit it to some word, to speak another syllable, or a hundred syllables, either before or after it. Thus two syllables (sometimes three), he utters so quickly together that they form one word as much as in English, which fact makes it impossible to call the Chinese a monosyllabic language. In other words the arrangement of syllables in English is inevitable, so that in case of the word 'incomprehensibility', for instance, we cannot write any two of the syllables together to make another word, while the Chinese (supposing it had so long a word, though it has none longer than three syllables) can pick it to pieces, and make perhaps a dozen, perhaps two dozen, new words out of it.

Let me use homely illustration. Suppose two Chinese sit down on opposite sides of a table, one of them with five hundred little blocks, each of which is furnished with glue on both ends. He might pick up and show to the other any one of them, and he would call out any one of its dozen or hundred meanings, each of which has its own symbol or character; but in order to communicate an extended or precise information, his friend must take a hundred or a thousand of these. This is why the Chinese is not, as it is usually called, a monosyllabic language. We can say in English, 'I went to town last night and found my friend, and went with him to see the play,' all in monosyllables; but it is impossible to express in Chinese the same thing in monosyllables. The Chinese has to use a great many characters to separate his syllables by greater intervals than he does his words; neither do the Chinese. The error of calling the language monosyllabic has arisen from the fact that, in writing, the Chinese makes one character for every word, but that word may, nevertheless, be spoken in two or three syllables.

But I will skip over these interesting mechanical details, and come to generalities. One advantage the Chinese has, and its spelling difficulties, is the simplicity of English naturalness with which the words are arranged in sentences. It has no inflected and cumbersome inflections, by which one word qualifying another is made two or three lines distant, as in German or Greek, and especially in Japanese; but the words are built up one upon the other in the simple, easy construction of nature, in what Miss Miller calls the "architectural order." Thus to translate as literally as possible the sentence 'I am very happy to see you,' we say 'I see you, very happy.' Then, to omit the Chinese, we have this: 'I see you to-morrow come to see me.' To sum it all in a word, if Chinese were only written with our letters, it would be a delight to a child to acquire that language. It is delightful for its child's simplicity in that respect, for the absence of prepositions, conjunctives, and other such things of these 'parts of speech,' which were the nightmare of our school days. No declensions, no conjugations, no moods, no tenses, no first, second and third person singular and plural, no gender (except by the addition of a few particles in certain cases); nothing but these little naked, innocent bits of words strung along together. If you find a verb it never has but one form, instead of the seven hundred or more of those remorseless Greek verbs in which, if you have a noun, it always remains in the same shape.

Building a Light-House under Difficulties

The English Government has built a light-house upon Wolf Rock, which is situated about nine miles southwest of the Enderby. The surface of this rock is very rugged; consequently, to land upon it is at all times a very difficult matter. At high tide, moreover, in deep water (about twenty fathoms on all sides), and exposed to the full force of the Atlantic Ocean, a terrific sea falls upon it, as may readily be supposed. From this cause the building of the new light-house has been a child's play. The light was first exhibited on the 1st of January, 1875, and since that time has been burning steadily. The light is a very simple one, and is worked by a very simple apparatus. On the 1st of January, 1875, the light was first exhibited on the 1st of January, 1875, and since that time has been burning steadily.

do so sanguinary a deed did she wish it do so sanguinary a deed did she wish it instances are on record where cats have crawled into a cradle or bed, and laid down on an infant's face, not probably with any criminal intent, though children have been found dead under such circumstances—but purely for the sake of the warmth of the infant's body and clothing. Ashes as Cattle Feed. The Maine Farmer says: 'One of our substantial subscribers, in a recent communication, gave his experience in training neat stock affected with the habit of eating wood, chewing bones, etc. His cattle were the spring affected in this way, they became thin in flesh, refused to eat hay and presented a sickly appearance. He had the impression that their food lacked the elements for making bone; but his neighbors used horse manure, without noticing any good results whatever. Last spring he put about four bushels of leached ashes in his barnyard, and threw out to them about a shovelful each day. They all ate it as if with evident relish. After turning them out to pasture, he put one peck of dry ashes per week on the ground in the pasture. They ate it all up, and gnawed off the grass where it had been lying. The cattle began to improve, gain flesh and look better than they had for several years. He says that this method, as he says, was not new, and that he had seen it used by his father and grandfather. He has another proof of the value of ashes for stock from this incident. He had a large tub full of leached ashes, which remained in it some time. It was afterwards used as a watering tub; and when the cattle drank at it they would lick and gnaw the sides and bottom of the tub, actually biting off pieces and eating them. Evidently he gives one quart of ashes, mixed with the same quantity of salt, to twelve head of cattle, about once a week, and finds it to agree with them wonderfully. Farmer's Homes. Keep a stock of wood ahead. Any wife has a just reason of choice for a husband who is so mean and so shiftless that he cannot be depended upon to provide for the needs of his family. A man who has a stock of wood ahead, and a man who has a stock of wood ahead, and a man who has a stock of wood ahead.

Abuse of Slavery

Parents, ignorant of the laws of health, and without experience of their own in the acquisition of knowledge, are almost sure to urge their children to an injurious excess of mental labor. All around me I see juvenile children who are victims of their parents' unenlightened ambition. As school from nine to ten or eleven; then books, pens and slates, and dark, and in the evening, study till nine or ten. Each of them they have by night, and in the morning, they are up at five or six. These children are some of them from utter destruction, but their ceaseless rebellion against our unscrupulous requirements. They will not sit still in ill-ventilated rooms! They will not learn those long lessons out of school! They will not read creases and hollays from their mothers. We compel them to disobey and misbehave, in order to have their lives. Parents, in Public Schools.

USEFUL AND SUGGESTIVE

A wet spring and green leaves are worn in the hat by the wind to avoid sunstroke. Those coming from ponds, should keep ducks away from them. One able bodied duck, it is said, will kill and eat ten times a day, and an ordinary flock will clean out a pond in a year or two. Poverty and riches are more imaginative distinctions. The man who can eat his bread and be happy is certainly richer than he who can't eat it unless it is spread with butter. Whichever to eat ice cream or not, that is the question. The following is an opinion: 'For that is a very injurious influence upon the functions of the stomach. As soon as it becomes melted and diluted it becomes a powerful heating material, producing a violent reaction, and leaving the system in a heated or congested condition. Diet, roots are an abominable to an active man, besides being a prolific means of wasting time, which is money. The slaves of the mower should be kept well ground, and while the horses are resting, the driver who has been riding comfortably by hand the field, should be occupied in giving a keen edge to them by means of a emery stone or common whetstone. When a knife is changed it should be ground and prepared immediately, that it may be ready for use the moment it is needed. A 'stitch in time saves nine,' should be chalked upon the door of every mechanic's shop.

MAN AS A BAROMETER AND THERMOMETER

Science has failed to invent any apparatus as sensitive to atmospheric changes as the human frame. It is therefore of vital importance to guard it against the effect of variations in the weather; and experience has demonstrated that Dr. Watkins' 'Vitality Bitters' is the best medicine for this purpose. It takes the depressing influence of sudden alternations of heat and cold, it will certainly prevent the bowels becoming constipated, and the system becoming morbid, and the result of these diseases, arising from these causes. PARSONS' CELESTIAL WHITE WINE VIADAR will keep Fidelity. Ask for it. For loss of end, both all red water in cows, loss of appetite, rot, or murrain in sheep, thick wind, broken wind, and roaring in horses, use 'Stearns' Calf's Condition Powder. An Irishman called at a drug store to get a bottle of Johnson's Snuff. He asked for the rheumatism, the druggist asked him in what part of the body it troubled him. 'Be the soul,' said he, 'I have it in every hole and corner there.'

Miscellany.

Carlos Sleepers.

SLEEP is nearly as great a puzzle as ever it was. Much has been discovered concerning the bodily peculiarities manifested during this portion of our existence; but all whose opinions are best worth listening to admit that they are only on the threshold of the subject yet. Why, for instance, can some men maintain their bodily and mental vigor with so small an amount of sleep as falls to their share? Lord Brougham, and many other great statesmen and lawyers are known to have been content with a marvelously small quantity of sleep. Frederick the Great said he allowed himself only five hours; John Hunter, five hours; General Elliot, the hero of Gibraltar, four hours; while Wellington, during the Peninsular War, had still less.

How, on the other hand, to account for the comorant sleepers? De Motive, the mathematician, could (though it is to be hoped he did not) sleep twenty hours out of the twenty-four. Quin, the actor, sometimes slept twenty-four hours at a stretch. De Motive, the mathematician, could so manage these potent meals, followed by one long and deep sleep, would last him for two days. Lord Parr slept away his later days in slumber. In the middle of the last century a young French woman, at Toulouse, for half a year, fits of sleep varying from three to six days each. About the same time, the Newcastle-on-Tyne, slept four weeks without waking; and the comorant occupied three days to mend Doctor Bianchi, of Paris, twenty cases of a lady who slept for eight days together when she was about thirty years of age, fifty when she was year's old and nearly a whole year, March 18th, Easter Sunday, 1862, till physicians (on this long sleep) which was being extended, one of her from tooth her mouth. Dr. Bianchi, an opening tells us that "The Chronicle," in the "Tuesdays" of April, 1844, being putmaker in London, W. Foxley, London, told us, in the Tower of London, that he had seen a woman who had slept for two years, and so continued, waking only to be waked with a stick, or otherwise, till the
