What Ailed Him. BEN BURKE walked home through the twilight, in a disconsolate mood. He confessed to himself that he was confoundedly out of sorts. He guessed it was because he wanted to "dine down town with the other fellows," but he'd promised Hatty he'd be home early, and he must keep his promise.

ASTONISHED INDIANS. The Indian tribes have no system of notation by which to express large numbers, except by comparison, which convey a confused and general idea. As numbers "as the trees in the forest," "as the blades of grass," or "as the buffalo on the plains," are very obvious comparisons when an idea of uncounted numbers is intended to be conveyed.

Swallowing Pennies. If a child swallows a penny, should not some purgative be given at once to help expel it? No. It is very rare that any harm comes in such cases, but there is more danger when a purgative is given than when none is given.

A DIRECT VOIE.

Since the death of Horace Greeley and the casting of the vote for president by the chosen presidential electors; the people are getting their eyes opened to the faultiness of nominating a man for the presidency, and then, instead of voting directly for him, or voting for some other persons who may not cast a vote at all for the desired nominee. How many of our readers are there who suppose they vote directly for president and vice president of the United States? If there be any one such, next time he sees a ticket let him read it and see if it names the man of his choice for president or vice-president. Not a bit of it. Instead of this he will find "For Presidential Electors," then following he will see a list of names of persons who are to cast the vote of the State for whom they please for president and vice president on a certain day after...

How easy it is, under the present condition of things, for the presidential electors to defeat the wishes of the people by electing a candidate receiving a popular minority of votes, and even to vote for a man of whom, perhaps, the public has never heard! Out of all the Greeley electors chosen (some 81), only three voted for Horace Greeley. The balance of the votes were distributed among U. S. Grant, Thomas A. Hendricks of Indiana, B. Gratz Brown of Missouri, David Davis of New York, James Black of Pennsylvania, and Charles Jenkins of Georgia.

Another fault of the electoral college system is that in any State, each of the groups of electors might convene on the specified day, and both actually cast the vote of the State for entirely different candidates, and both send their returns to Washington.

What an undoubtedly large majority of the people of the United States want is to vote directly for the candidate of their choice. What we propose is this:—That there be a direct vote for president and for vice president; that the votes be counted separately for each of the candidates, at the same time and in the same manner as votes for the electors are counted now; that the certified number of votes be forwarded to Washington, the vote from all the states and territories there to be computed, and the candidate having the highest number of votes to be declared elected; that, in case of the death of the president-elect before the 1st of January or some other specified day, there be a new election called, (limiting the election to the two candidates having the next highest number of votes); or, in case of his death after said day and before inauguration, that the vice president elect be installed into office as President of the United States, and a Vice-President chosen in the usual manner in such cases.

HARPER'S BAZAR.

NOTICE OF THE PRESS.
The Bazar is issued with a contribution of text and talent that we seldom find in any journal; and the journal is the organ of the great world of fashion.—Boston Traveller.
The Bazar commends itself to every member of the household—to the children by its droll and pretty pictures, to the young ladies by its fashion-plates, in endless variety to the prudent matron by its patterns for the children's clothes, to the tasteful and tasteful designer for embroidered slippers and numerous dressing-gowns. But the reading-master of the Bazar is uniformly of great excellence. The paper has acquired a wide popularity for the festive enjoyment it affords.—N. Y. Evening Post.

MERCHANTS' Gargling Oil

IS GOOD FOR

Extracts of Letters from the People.

From Geo. H. Shepley, P. O. E. Gaines, Orleans Co., N. Y., Sept. 29, 1855, and happy to say that one bottle of your Gargling Oil has cured the Rheumatism in my right arm, when both sides would help me.

From George B. Thell, Warsaw, Ind., Nov. 5, 1855.—When I was appointed agent for the sale of your Gargling Oil, there was a large stock on hand, but it is now all sold, and I think you had better send me half a dozen more, one-half of which for "Family Use." It is regarded as the best medicine ever used.

From Dr. R. E. Parsons, Brighton, Ind., Nov. 5, 1855.—I keep a large stock of your Gargling Oil on hand, and it is the best preparation of the kind in use; and will cure more of it than any other.

From Dr. J. M. H. Jones, Bound Brook, N. J., Nov. 15, 1855.—I am now using more of your Gargling Oil than any

A SAD AFFAIR

A young and respected woman, mother of two children, and wife of a citizen of Mead's Mills, dies under the most deplorable circumstances.

Mrs. Margaret A. Pitts Benton of Mead's Mills (Waterford), in a fit of derangement, swallowed about a half-ounce of creosote Tuesday, Dec. 10th, and after extreme agony, died Wednesday, Dec. 11th.

The particulars of this lamentable affair are these, as near as we can learn: In September last one of her children was sick with inflammation of the bowels. In giving it needful attention, she was compelled to be up night and day. A short time after, or about ten weeks since, she was confined, took cold, and lay in bed hardly able to move. From this she was about recovering when on the 4th inst she saw her husband coming into the house, supported by two men with one leg broken above and below the knee. The sight, in her already exhausted condition, overcame her nervous system and she became deranged.

On the morning of the fatal day, the unfortunate woman left the bed, upon which her husband lay unable to move, and, going into the kitchen, took the vial of creosote, which had been previously obtained for toothache, and in the presence of the hired girl, drank its contents and then took a drink of water.

Excruciating heat in her throat, Dr. Hanson of this place, who has been the family physician, was sent for, and giving her an emetic caused the burning fluid to be emitted. The terrible power of this drug may be judged from the fact that while she vomited it forth, it was sure to burn them. After this operation and until insensibility ensued, she would go about the house like a mad woman, continually striking her chest. Of course medical skill could avail nothing in a case of this kind, and that she must die was evident to all. Just before her last, she regained her senses and said "What are you doing? Why are so many persons here? Upon some one telling her she had taken poison, she remarked, "Oh, yes; I remember—what made me do it?"

In this unfortunate affair, as in many others, public opinion is freely expressed, some going so far as to say that domestic quarrels and trouble was the cause of the fatal act. We are happy to state, from inquiry, and statements of persons intimate with the family, that both Mr. and Mrs. Benton lived as happily as could be expected, and the comfort of their nest in the home. And even taking it for granted that there was an occasional quarrel between the two (and what family does not have a disagreement now and then), it would be no time to attribute to such a quarrel a mother and wife's death and a husband's helplessness.

What made me do it? In this unfortunate affair, as in many others, public opinion is freely expressed, some going so far as to say that domestic quarrels and trouble was the cause of the fatal act.

MARRIED

LAMB—RODGERS—At the residence of E. W. Rodgers, Dec. 28th, by Rev. C. H. Richards, Mr. Nehemiah Lamb and Miss Carrie Rodgers, all of Northville.

The union received the compliments of the bride in a selection of very nice cake. Thanks, Carrie, you have our best wishes for your prosperity, and we hope that when Father Time shall have placed his finger upon you, the choice of your heart may be able to say:

Love more deeply with each day; May your heavy crown be clear; As its radiance fades away.

NORTHVILLE UNION SCHOOL

For the past eight years, this institution has provided ample facilities for educating the youth of the vicinity in a first-class manner. Few places, even in our favored State, have done more, proportionally, for the cause of education than our own.

A Graduating Course of three years is provided, which will compare favorably with others. Both Ancient and Modern Languages are taught. Philosophical and Chemical Apparatus are provided for teaching the Natural Sciences associatively.

The Amphicure Association and the School and Society Libraries furnish valuable opportunities for Debate and Literary Culture.

CALENDAR. Winter Term will commence, Dec. 2, 1872. Holiday Vacation of 2 weeks, Dec. 20. Vacation of one week, Apr. 3, 1873. Spring Term, June 10.

URGENT AND SUGGESTIVE

An oyster-shell pit into a tea-kettle will prevent its being covered with scales. A good protection against mistletoe is a policy in the Washington Life.

To Glaze Smirns.—To every quart of search add a teaspoonful of salt and one of white sugar. Scrape the smirns. Boil the starch (after adding hot water) until you have it as thick as corn-starch.

Medical man in India. Strongly recommends position of tea leaves, moistened with hot water, as preferable to other remedies in the first stage of bruises and scalds.

Feeding Grain to Sheep.—When coming to feed grain to sheep, too much care cannot be taken not to give too much at first; begin lightly and increase gradually until the maximum feed is reached.

To Keep the Hair Healthy. Keep the head clean. Wash the scalp with white stiff brush. Rub the hair with Castile soap, and rub into the roots bay rum, brandy or camphor water.

Smoke and Frost.—The practice of building smoke fires in orchards as preventative of injury from frost is an old one, but recently we note that a cover of fruit growers in France have used the value of a composition, principally of fat, which, burned in iron vessels, gave thick clouds of smoke that hovered over the land for miles around them.

To Estimate the Amount of Hay in a Mow.—A gentleman, largely engaged in the mowing of hay and stock in the New-England States, has found that in this part of the country the hay is measured in a mow, and allow 519 cubic feet for a ton, and it comes out very generally correct. I have sold a mow of hay and weighed it, and measured the mow, and this rule proved correct.

Truwhites of eggs are now used for boria. Seven or eight successive applications of this substance soothes pain, and effectually excludes the air from the burn. This simple remedy seems preferable to collodion, or even cotton.

Properties of a new oil, which is easily made from the yolks of hen's eggs. The eggs are first boiled hard, and the yolks are then removed, crushed, and placed over a fire, where they are carefully stirred until the whole substance is just on the point of catching fire, when the oil separates and may be poured off. One quart will yield nearly two pounds of oil. It is in general use among the colists of Southern Russia as a means of curing cuts, bruises and scratches.

Coffee as a Disinfectant.—Roasted coffee is one of the most powerful means, not only of rendering animal and vegetable effluvia innocuous, but of actually destroying them. A room in which meat in an advanced degree of decomposition had been kept for some time, was instantly deprived of all smell on an open coffee roaster being carried through it containing a pound of coffee newly roasted.

How to Read. Thomas Wentworth Higginson says in a recent number of the Women's Journal: "I was once called upon to prescribe intellectually for a young girl of fair abilities, who showed no want of brains in conversation, but had a perfect indifference to books. She read, dutifully and torpidly whatever was set before her; novels, travels, history, all were the same; each page drove out the previous page, and her memory was a blank. Her parents asked me to teach her to read, she joined in the request, and I consented to try the experiment, on the condition that she would faithfully read a single book in the way I should direct. She consented. It was at the time of Kossuth's visit, when everybody was talking about the Hungarian revolution. The book I chose was 'Hungary in 1848,' by Bracon, a book of far more interest than now. I prescribed it in daily doses of one chapter. If possible she was to read that no chapters being short—her under no conceivable circumstances was to read more than that. After each chapter she was to put down in a blank book I gave her some remark suggested by it. She must mention something that had interested her, or seek the explanation of some word, or anything else she pleased. Her comment might be only to say that Gorgey was a traitor, or to inquire how his name should be pronounced; but at least there must be some sentence of remark per chapter. From time to time I was to see what she had written, and answer her questions, if any. This was the prescription, and she took it conscientiously. I knew in advance what would be the greatest difficulty. It was to keep her to one chapter. It seemed to her such a mistake, such a waste of opportunity, that she could so easily manage five or six chapters in a day. Had she done so, all would have been lost, so I was inexorable. The consequence was that she never failed to read her chapter, and when she got to the end of it, for want of anything better to do, she read it over again, and went to work with her notebook. It was a very nice notebook, and she wrote a beautiful hand. When I came to look over the pages, every few days, I was astonished at the copiousness and variety of her notes. On some days, to be sure, there would be but a single sentence, and that visibly written with effect, but almost always there were questions, doubts and criticisms, all of which I met as I could. I found my own mind taxed by hers, and finally read every chapter carefully that I might be ready for her. And at the end she told me with delight that for the first time in her life she had read a book.

There was a large number of the protest; I suppose in the restraint, the moderate pace, and the necessity of writing something. "Reading," says my Lord Bacon, "is like a good dinner; an exact master." To clearly define and systematize that you know—write.

Apples for Milk Cows. The Hartford Courant gives an account of an experiment made last fall in feeding apples to milk cows, by Erasmus Eldridge of East Windsor Hill, Conn., a gentleman eighty-three years of age.

A large cow, something along in years, feeding exclusively on summer pasturage, and producing four wine quarts daily, was used for the first experiment, beginning about August 1, with four quarts of apples night and morning. The quantity was increased, until at the end of a week she was eating a bushel of the hardest, sourest winter apples each day. This cow was near her time of going dry, but she was increased in milk from four quarts to rather more than six quarts per day. Another cow, in fresher milk, yielding eight quarts daily, was then put upon a ration of apples. At this time Mr. Eldridge's cows had been running steadily in winter feed, which would naturally help flush the milk-pail. Yet upon the top of this succulent pasture the second cow was brought, when upon her full rations of apples—a half bushel night and morning—to a regular daily yield of twelve to fourteen quarts of milk.

All of these cows, five in number—excepting one—would have eaten more apples if they could have got them. That one was younger and smaller, though a good sized heifer. Half a bushel was found to be as many, and sometimes more, than she could manage at one feeding. The butter made from the milk was first rate, and there has not been noticed the least symptoms of ill effects of the apples on the cows.

Manure for Hay

It does not seem to be as generally appreciated as the fact ought to be, that it pays just as well to manure a crop of grass as any other crop. A farmer will not manure his potatoes or corn, or wheat, or any other crop, but he will manure his grass fields, and he will find that it pays him to do so. We have said that it pays a man to manure his grass fields, and he will find that it pays him to do so. It is a fact that it pays a man to manure his grass fields, and he will find that it pays him to do so.

How I Make Soft Soap. I keep my ashes dry, and when put in the hopper preparatory to making soap, I have from a half to one peck of unslaked lime put in with the ashes. Before putting the grease in, I swing the kettle of the fire, and let it hang a few moments. If there is any potash in it, I take a shovel and take it out. For if there is much potash in it, it will not make good soap.

I pack the ashes well, adding water enough to dampen them. Then I put three or four buckets of water on each day for two or three days, until I think it sufficiently soaked. And then, I pour on boiling water to run the lye off. As soon as I have enough run off to commence boiling, I put my kettle on the fire and boil the lye as fast as it will boil, still adding more lye as it boils down. In this way I continue for a whole day. By evening, it will probably be sufficiently strong to eat a feather in passing it three times across the hand. I now put my grease in (all I think it will eat), still boiling as fast as I can without its running over. If it eats the grease all up I add more. I now leave my kettle to hang over the fire all night. In the morning, if there are any scraps of grease that are not eaten up, I boil again for an hour or two, and if they do not dissolve I take them out. Then I take out a few spoonfuls of the soap and set it away a little while to cool. When cold, if there is no lye under it and it appears free from grease, I set my kettle off, and hang another one to boil more lye. Managing in this way, I generally can make from a ton to fifteen gallons of nice white soap in two days, and often in one day and a night.

I think that by purchasing this plan on a similar one, any one can make strong nice soap. A Farmer's Wife, in Connecticut Gazette.

Keeping Winter Fruit. A correspondent inquires for the best way to keep winter apples and pears for ordinary management, "more particularly with reference to leaving them in open bins or casing them tight in boxes, casks or drawers." In answer we can state that we have generally kept winter apples in open bins or shelves, made in the center of the fruit room, so that the attendant may pass around on every side to pick them over. The fruit room is separated from the rest of the cellar by a brick partition, is furnished with ventilating rods, and is furnished with ventilating rods, and is furnished with ventilating rods.

The proprietors of J. W. Harris & Co.'s Double Tree, and other Double Tree Remedies, have published a readable and instructive pamphlet, which may be had free at the stores.

down at pleasure, and the temperature regulated nearly to freezing by means of thermometers. It is the most convenient method for ordinary use, and is especially adapted for daily supply. A bottle is sent for a month, or longer if necessary, they are packed over and the "speckles" or decayed ones removed, taking care to disturb them as little as possible. It is better if the owner can do this work himself, as but few hired men will be sufficiently careful, but will tumble the fruit about needlessly, and injure its appearance and keeping quality.

Fruit will keep better, however, if protected from the air, and from the constant changes of temperature which currents of air impart. Wrapping the apples separately in paper, and simply placing them on the shelf, we have found to protect them from decay, a much larger number, by actual count, remaining sound than if subjected to ordinary exposure. Apples will keep longer in barrels than in bins, and this is the only objection to barreling is that they are kept from sight and examination, and sometimes become badly rotted before the rot is discovered. Drawers would be better, if not so expensive.

The Quebec ramparts are to be demolished, to give place to building lots.

On the Impediments to the Cause of Conservatism. How many of us can date the cause of our ill success in either a crowded room, or the sorting out in a cellar, or warming damp clothes, causing a cough which settles upon the lungs, producing seated pains in the chest. Allen's Lung Balm will check the disease and restore health to the system. It is only used in this way: A few drops are placed in a glass, and called at the drug store for Allen's Lung Balm. Every family should keep it at hand.

Said a Parson to a Child. "Just look at the Spooks!" he bellowed last week; look at new, all but the toes, which are worn through. Money thrown away, feet were stockinged soiled, all because they were not clean, gentle, Silver Tippees shoes. Without tips, with ragged holes and protruding toes. Which looks the Best? Which is the Cheapest?

A FINE FACT IN PHARMACY.—Considering the multitude of diseases, it is amazing that we live. In view of the countless remedies for them, it is wonderful that we die. Unfortunately, however, all the diseases are real, whereas most of the "remedies" are humbugs. One exception to the latter rule demands the recognition and approval of the press. We refer to Dr. J. W. Harris's VINEGAR BITTERS. Of the Doctor himself, we know nothing; but of his medicine we can speak from observation, for it seems to have found its way into almost every household. Probably it is more extensively used in this country, as a family remedy, than any other preparation, although it has not been in use for the world's time. We never see one who has not of it, and whenever we hear of it the complaint on its efficacy are enthusiastic. We have not a single objection to its use. It is a powerful purgative, and is especially adapted for the treatment of liver complaint, rheumatism, fever, and other ailments. It is a powerful purgative, and is especially adapted for the treatment of liver complaint, rheumatism, fever, and other ailments.
