Regarding the Mr. Hickock, spoken of in the sketch of Northville, in our last imue, we wish to relate an ineident told us the other day by a lady days, [about the year 1827, ] had beer living near the river Thames, Canada where he married a woman, of such a firey temperment as to have gained a notority for froedom of tongue. He departed for Michigan, and my unclee-boodreddgien cases off in gelvif marked: "That man Hickock bay done more for this place than all the rest put together." "How is that ?" asked the surprised listener. "Why," said my uncle, "he carried off one devel bodily."

Christian Principle.

Show me a man of the greatest practical wisdon, and you will show me a man with fesenment. This is the central idea of Christianity, Whether consonant with human nature, matters not ; its practical effect is creekent. But then we have the consolution to know that it is practiced, and always with success. And they who practice it have an influence for good such as nowhere else is found But we who are troubled most with the infirmities of himian-nature, practice (by self-denial,) and attain to eminences of Christians not church members necessarily, but men who do good from the nature of their principles, which their life, thus intored, necessally reflects.
