SATURDAY, JULY 17, 1875.

By a talent and learning, are of no avail against the schemes of impostors. The smartest are often the most easily victimized. Such was the result in the case of Robert Dale Owen, the student, politician and author, when he indorsed the Katy King fraud in an ably written article in the Atlantic Monthly some time ago. He claimed, after witnessing one of her seances that she was a disembodied bit of supernaturalism and only learned of his error when too late, the article having made its appearance and read with astonishment, while the career of the notorious Katy was being terminated in a complete exposure.

A cruel race between the employees of C. E. James and Prentiss Brown, two leading hardware stores, will take place tomorrow afternoon at 1 o'clock from the head of Belle Isle to the Detroit boat house. -Detroit Evening News July 17.

It seems rather odd to think that two such firms as the above should be taking, particularly these close times, but then the publicity of the fact illustrates the enterprise exhibited by the News. If a firm in the city is in a leaking condition it is pretty sure to leak out through the medium of that paper.

An Effective Plan

Somebody wrote to the editor of a country paper to ask how he would break an ox. The editor answered as follows: "If you have a good way would be to hoist him by means of a long chain attached to his tail, to the top of a pole forty feet from the ground. Then hoist him by a rope tied to his horns, to another pole. Then descend on his back a fire ton pile-driver, and if that don't break him let him start a country newspaper and trust people for their subscription. One of the two ways will do it, sure." -Boston Transcript.

Pleasantries

The difference between having a tooth properly drawn by a dentist, and having it knocked out by a fall on the pavement is only a slight distinction—one is dental and the other accidental.

A few days since a farmer was falling in our hearing that he had planted an acre and a half of potatoes, and he feared they would be destroyed by the potato bugs. "Are they up yet?" asked a bystander. "No," replied the farmer, "but the darned bugs are sitting on every hill waiting for them."

A Pennsylvania ladies' maid says she is never satisfied that his lady friends understand a kiss, unless he lets it from their own mouths.

A western editor insists that he wrote the word "trossau" as plain as a pikestaff in connection with certain bridal presents. The printer, however, vulgarly put it "trossors."

That was a rather touching allusion to a deceased spouse, made recently by a farmer, who came to the village store to purchase things. "Can't I show you anything else, today?" politely asked the clerk. "No, I reckon not," replied the sad looking customer. "I lost two horses and my wife lost her hair, and I feel pretty poor. Good-bye, and good night."

The bottom has not dropped out of everything. We are sure of it, for we recently sat down on a wood bot-tomed chair on which a tick was standing on its head. We immediately arose with renewed confidence in our agility.

We see miniature baskets of champagne in the fruit stores, with this placard, "Real champagne, 83 a dozen." Why should one pay so much for sham when a three-cent green apple will produce real pain?

A Cleveland woman recently married a Chinese laundryman, and three days thereafter the unhappy Celestial appeared at a barber's shop and ordered his pigtail cut off, saying in explanation, "Too muchoo dam yank."

"Well, my boy," asked a gentleman of a little eight-year-old boy, "what are you crying for?" "Cause I can't find my dad. I told the old fool if he went off too far he'd lose me," was the filial reply.

To remove dandruff—go to Arizona and interview the Apaches.

The son of a clergyman was delivering a college rabble-rousing, when, in pulling out his handkerchief, he pulled out a pack of cards. "Hullo!" he exclaimed, "I've got on my father's coat!"

A Brown County editor bought his ink by the jug full, because he could get it cheaper, but his ink went to fill the ink stand one morning and found it wasn't ink but a jugful.

BAKING AND BAKERS

Boiled of Soft Cream - One pint of new milk, two eggs, three tablespoons of flour, one cup of sugar, and flavor with vanilla. Beat the eggs, sugar and flour together thoroughly, then add the milk. Have your water in a kettle boiling hot, put in your cream and stir constantly till the consistency of cream. Pat when cold.

When is the best hour to have dinner? Noon-time will not suit the busy men, yet it is the best for the rest of the household, and there the difficulty lies. Children should eat their hearty meal at midday, and then go to bed after an early supper. For adults, if the male members of the household can get home at that hour, five o'clock is a suitable time. Then there is the whole evening for digestion before going to bed.

Summer Following for Wheat. Among agriculturists it is still an open question whether or not summer fallowing is the best mode of preparation for that crop. It has generally been considered, in all ages as far as history reaches, that the produce of the land was increased by summer fallowing. But is this a reality, and if so what does the efficacy of naked fallowing consist of? It is argued that in strong clay lands one great benefit derived is the opportunity it affords for keeping the land clean. Many believe that weeds cannot be successfully exterminated without an occasional resort to this method, and it is very evident that this result will follow such practice as a general rule. In a naked fallow, where the seed are allowed to sprout and young plants to grow for a time, and then plowed in, the land is enriched by a green manuring of greater or less extent. If weeds are very abundant the enriching is so much the greater, and in almost every instance where land lies without an artificial crop during the whole summer a large crop of natural herbage will spring-up, and the bringing in of this soil must be productive of considerable good.

Trailing Tomatoes. Of course no gardener would ever think of trailing an acre of tomatoes, but we do not know of any one like that of giving the tomato vines some kind of a support. In a hot little practical difference what particular support is used, anything that will keep the vines from sprawling out of bounds and looking slovenly, that will keep the plant up where one can see to trim out superfluous growth, is a great comfort. Besides these advantages the fruit is less liable to rot, is in sight where maligned specimens can be cut out and is always clean. Another consideration is the greater ease in "worming" or killing the voracious green caterpillars, which it is almost always best to do after the fruit has begun to ripen, and to remove the waste leafy matter in readiness for the trellis before the plants are put out and begin to trail easily. Just here we would remind those who like to amuse themselves in the garden that a tomato vine with a good bit of manure at its roots, and trained against a net, shed or other building, by means of loops of string cloth and tacks, will make a display that will astonish those who have never seen a tomato thus treated, not only in the quantity of the fruit, but in the exceeding beauty of the whole plant.

Working Helters. A CORRESPONDENT of the Buffalo Stock Journal, who has a small farm of ten acres, is trying the experiment of having all his farming done with cows, thus saving the expense of keeping horses. He broke a pair of two-year-old heifers, with a view of using them when they got old enough and of sufficient strength. He finds them gentle and teachable and from what he has used them the past fall, just in the way of making them heavy, he finds them yield as much milk as his heifers usually have done. He argues that on so small a farm it would require a large portion of it to keep a span of horses, whereas if a cow can be made to perform the necessary team-work, and at the same time yield a good supply of milk, the saving on account of not keeping the horse, will be at least $120 annually. He proposes to adopt the system of milking and to keep eight cows on the ten acres. If the cows are all broken to the yoke this would give him four teams, and thus, by a frequent change of teams, no animal need be put to lounge or excessive labor during any day.

Microscopic Crystals in Plants. BESIDES the familiar bundles of needle-shaped crystals, called raphides, dispersed throughout the cellular structures of certain plants, there are in the seed covers and leaves of several orders of plants and in the pods of the bean family multitudinous of prismatic crystals of extreme minuteness which have hitherto escaped detection. In the horned poppy these crystals are as small as the 1,000th of an inch in diameter. In the madder root they are 1-3,000th of an inch in diameter, current about half as large. In the black berry, they are about 1-1,500th of an inch in diameter. They are as regular in shape as the seed covers. In the gooseberry they are so distinctly and regularly placed in the outer skin - each crystal in a separate cell - that they present the appearance of crystalline tissues. In plants of the bean family the size is variable, the average being about 1-3,000th of an inch. In the garden pea they are much larger. These crystals appear to consist chiefly of oxalate of lime, sometimes carbonate. Raphides are mainly phosphate of lime. Plants much relished by animals are found to be especially rich in these microscopic crystals. In a piece of the midrib of a clover leaflet, 1/10th of an inch in length, Mr. Gulliver, who has added more than any other to our knowledge of these minute but important products of vegetable action, has counted ten chains of crystals with twenty-three in length, making 230 in all, or no less than 17,500 to the leaflet. In like manner 21,000 crystals were reckoned for one inch of the aurial margin of a single valve of a pea-pod. The pod had four such margins, each three inches in length; so that in a single pod there must have been as many as 290,000 crystals. In view of the enormous number of these crystals, as well as their regularity and constancy, Mr. Gulliver believes it is no longer possible for physiologists to maintain that such structures are accidental freaks of nature, or of no relation or value in the life and use of the species. -Scientific American.
