A CORESPONDENT who has trav eled from Fiji to San Francisco, write to the London Trues from the laster town under date of Angust: I was fortunate when I was in Fig.

I was fortunate when I was in Figin witnessing two thoroughly prehistories pectacles. One was a voling girl, dressed in two rards of citico print and a circle of leaves breaking ray mus, a kind of large coarse chestnut with a hard shell, with a genuine stone, adz. fixed to this worden bandle by coils of plained string. The damsel was evidently unaware that the work on which shows a employed for the satisfaction she was employed for the satisfaction relatives would secure her a most favorable reception at most learned and antiquation societies. The other was a little, shriveled old women, who was making an eartherware ressel nearly as large as herself, with no other un-plement than a round, flattened peb-ble about four inches in diameter, and ble about four inches in diameter, and a piece of wood about as iarga as the back of an ordinary har-brush, slightly concave on the surface. Dipping both stone and wood frequently in water, she molded the inside of the huge pot with the former, and patted the outside into shape simultaneously with the latter. They ressel as eggs shaped, the opening being at the top or large end of the egg, with an invested in height and two in diamoters and was formed of clay found, near the village. When it is complete a fire is built round it on the ground and it is built round it on the ground and it is carefully baked before being removed. In the houses we saw several pots of the kind in use. They are placed on their side, with the mouth inclined slightly upward, and are seldom ex-posed to the risk of breakage by re-moval from their site. They are, of course, very fragile, but in the hands of the native the area of the last of of the natives they are said to last for years. If the spot is of long standing i it may require several applications. In woolen or estion the spot may be rubbed when the liquid is applied, and

-In. d. Lawrence Smith has re-cent'l communicated to the American Tournal of Science the result of pro-tracted researches into parism com-pounds found in meteorates. He thinks some of them resemble the graphite or plumbago of Borrowdale, audithat others are hydrated carbons. Only four noticerites contain a hotable percentage of cution, from 0.8 to 6 per cent., and, as the material is brance, it is difficult to waste much of it is analysis. Dr. Smith does not think
