Hungarians and Reumanians.

The Hungarians, as all who have fraveled on the Danube knew, are dan-dies in their own fashion. They de-light in clean shirts, richly embroidered light in clean shirts, richly embroidered in red and bisck, in cotten drawers or trowsers, edged with lace or crochetworks, and as our English ladies, affect upon their ciothes, and in magnificent lites ian boots, which are brushed to brightness at least enco a week. The male Roumanian, on the other hand, is dirty and careless in his attire. A fifthy sheep kin iscket, swarming with fear sheep-kin jacket, swarming with fleas, is his cilef garment; short trowsers, of leather or the coarsest cloth, and the everlasting conical woolen cap, together everlasting comeal wooden cap, together with some minor articles, among which the piscolor knife stock in the waist-belt must not be forgotten, completing his attire. But when we turn from the men to the women, we find that the comprision is reversed. Nothing can well be more writched than the dress well be more wretched than the dress of the Hangarian women on the banks of the Lower Danube. At Mohaca, for example, our saw them marching down to the over to get water, clad in a pair of their husband's enermous books, a of their amounts produced to the knees, and a sheepskin jacket that elso was the property of their better half. Again, at the frontier station, just before entering Roumania, my sensibilities were somewhat shocked at seeing the sension of the sen ing a girl of seventeen busily engaged in sweeping the veranda, and it nothing batta hach undergarment, of very moderate dimensions, and this in spite of the fact that at least a dozen soldiers were founging about close to her. In Hungary, in short, while the man is well dressed, his wife or daughter is dressed like a savage. In Roamania, on the other hand, the dress of the women is decidedly better than that of the men; and offers a most favorable contrast to that worn by their Hungarian sisters. In fact, after crossing ing a girl of seventeen busily engaged the frontier. I saw no dresses which were not at least decent and sufficient, according to the Western standard, which is more than can be said of my experience in some parts of Hangary. -Fortnightly Review.

No balance, therefore, as applying o superior advantages, can be drawn from those documents; and if we examine the natural operation of comtrue, would soon be injurious. The great support of commerce consists in the balance being a level of benefits among all nations.

Two merchan's of different nations trading together, will both become rico, and each make the profit in his wa taror, consequently, they do not get rich out of fagar other and if is the same with respect to the nation is the same with respect to the nation is which they live. The case must be, that each nation must get rich out of the own means, and increases that riches by something which it procures from another in exchange.

If a merchant in Boston sends an article of man: facture abroad, which costs him a dollar at bome, and im-ports something which selfs for two, he makes a balance of one dollar in his own favor; but this is not gained out of the fereign nation or the foreign-merchant, for he also does the same by the article he receives and arither has a business of advantage upon the other.
