our desires to purchase a newspaper and job office. Any one desiring to sell would do well to correspond with this office.Gibson & Brown have fixed their photographic rooms up in fine style
and by-the-way they are doing work
that would be a credit to any gallery
in the state.Don't forget the little folk's entertainment at the N. E. church, Mondayevening, March 26th. Proceeds for library purposes. Admission 10 cents;
all welcome.Mrs. Nellie Arnold has obtained a decree from the court giving her
the possession of her children and an alimony from her husband of $10 a week and $50 valuation fees.A. E. Rockwell went to Ann Arbor Wednesday and had a long talk with the president of the university and an allusion to his future will soon be able to take a tooth and fit a man to it.If a man keeps a slave he expects his wife and children to patronize him
and is proud of what he can give them from his stock. Substitute the word saloon for slave and see how it reads.There will be a meeting of the alumni of the Northville Union school
in the High school room on Monday, March 26, at 7:30 p.m. A large attendance is desired, says the president.If a man patronizes the saloon any,
or even goes into it, can be sure his son if he drinks. If a man votes in favor of keeping saloons, is he not guilty of causing his son's downfall? Let the father whose son is tipping, answer these questions.One need not go to New York state for a library, as we had a small one here yesterday. Not for beautiful winter, south-eastern Michigan takes the cake. North of us and south of us east and west of us they have had much severer weather than we have here.On account of the recent heavy storms in the east which delayed mail to such an extent that the Detroit Telegraph was unable to get its new serial story ready for this week's issue. The story by Mr. Stever in "The culture of Tell-Tell Forest" will surely begin next week. The Tribune is to be enlarged and will be furnished with the Record for $1.75.Rev. Mr. Lancashire who was announced to preach in the Presbyterian church last Sunday was unable to come on account of sickness and Rev.
Mr. Sanderson, editor of the Beacon,
the Congregational organ of the state came to his supply. Mr. Lancashire has written that he is improved in health and will be here next Sunday and will preach morning and evening.The prohibition state convention has been called to meet at Grand Rapids, May 18. The call has been out for a democratic committee called their state convention for the same date at the same place. It is now in order for the republican papers to claim a bargain and coalition. This is a chance to abuse the other parties they will be pleased with the evening's entertainment.Owing to disappointment in not securing one of the parties desired the young peoples lecture course in the M.
E. church will be postponed for the present. Consequently the entertainment advertised for this Friday evening will not be held.The question discussed at the regular weekly meeting of the Literary Society in the K. of L. hall last Monday evening was resolved. "That foreign immigration is detrimental to the best interests of this country," proved to be a very interesting one. It was decided by a vote to continue the discussion of the same question at the next meeting Monday evening, March 26th.The society extend a cordial invitation to everybody to come and participate in the debate as well as to enjoy hearing what others say.The most disastrous fire that ever occurred at Milford took place Thursday morning, resulting in the total destruction of what was known as the Pettibone mill. This mill was built about 40 years ago and rebuilt recently as a roller process mill. It has been running day and night of late, and this morning the night Miller found a fire had broken out, from one of the chimneys. He made efforts to save the mill, and gave the alarm, but the efforts of the mill men, citizens and the little village fire department were unavailing, and the property was destroyed. The loss on mill and stock is about $30,000, with $8,000 insurance.
The owner, Mr. J. Willman, is as yet undecided whether he will rebuild or not. The mill was the most important industry in Milford, and gave employment to 10 men.—Evening Journal.At a prohibition caucus held at

A DISPLAY OF COURAGE.

Last Monday evening as the family of Mrs. S. A. Clarkson—consisting of herself and daughter, Miss Emma—were about to retire they became convinced from the noise that there wassome person up stairs who did not belong there. Miss Emma took a lamp and went on an exploring expedition.As soon as she went into the front room she could smell wet clothing (it had been raining during the evening)

and she made up her mind there was something wrong and she was the one to discover it. Soon her attention was called to burnt matches on the floor

and this increased her courage.

She examined the closet and looked under the bed where the form of a man was visible in one corner could be plainly seen. Just then her lamp went out and her feelings just at that moment can better be imagined than described. She buried down stairs and went to the neighbors for male

help but before they returned the man had raised a window and escaped by way of a window over the front stoop.

All trace of him was lost and it is a mystery how he got into the house and upstairs. Miss Lukens showed a remarkable degree of courage. The same evening one or two other places

in the village were disturbed by robbers but we have not learned of any thing being taken.

STATE NEWS.

Condition of Wheat.

The Michigan crop report for March includes estimates from 1,000 correspondents representing 150 townships; 696 are from 142 townships in the southern four-tiers of counties, and 190 from 158 townships in the central counties. In answer to the question, "Has the ground been well covered with snow during February," 175 correspondents in the southern four-tiers of counties answer "yes," and 503 "no"; 105 correspondents in the central counties answer "yes" and 50 "no"; and 165 correspondents in the northern counties answer "yes" and "no," "no." In the southern counties 32 correspondents report wheat injured during February, and 300 report it not injured; in the central counties 56 report it injured and 185 not injured, and in the northern counties 2 report it injured and 10 not injured. The temperature and rainfall during February were both below normal. In the southern four tiers the ground has been practically bare of snow since about the middle of February, and a succession of frosts and thaws is undoubtedly damaging wheat.

Reports have been received of the quantity of wheat marketed by farmers during the month of February, at 1,000,000 bushels and mills. Of these, 718 are in the southern four tiers, which is 66 per cent., and 25 are in the fifth and sixth tiers of counties, which is 4 per cent. of the whole number in these sections, respectively. The deduction is that somewhere near 1,500,000 bushels besides what is necessary for their own needs remain in the hands of the farmers of Michigan, to be placed upon the market later.

Value of Farm Animals.

At the present time the world is working 53,713,221 horses according to a report just issued by the agricultural department. This shows that the United States has 13,000,000 horses in service, Europe has 32,000,000, South America 5,000,000, As a 5,000,000, Canada 2,000,000, Australia 1,000,000, and Africa 2,000,000. For every horse a Michigan man sees a spangled star eight goats.

In the matter of live stock Michigan is second to the front. She has 4,500,000 horses, worth an average price of $21,000, or a total value of $91,440. The number and value of other classes of stock are: Hogs 2,000,000, worth $12,651,750, or an average of $31.33 each; cattle and other cattle, 3,111,000, worth $32,640,000, or $10.22 each; hogs, 1,075,000, worth $1,750,700, or $1,633 each.

The value of live stock seems to be much more in Michigan than in states adjoining it. For instance, the average price of hogs in Michigan is $41.00, in Indiana, $1.00, in Illinois, $7.50. The average of sheep in Michigan is $2.72, in Indiana, $2.15, in Illinois $2.45. In Ohio $1.50. The same shows in favor of Michigan in all other classes of stock.

Hints on Forestry.

The proceedings of the forestry convention, which was held in January in Grand Rapids, under the auspices of the state forestry commission, have been published in bulletin No. 21 of the department of botany and forestry. A great many valuable papers are given and it is well to refer not only to the frontier forests, but to every farmer who has a wood lot or has occasion to set trees. Among the writers are C. W. Garfield, J. W. Harter, F. D. Watkins, F. A. Peck, Harry Cook, Salterton, Kelcey, H. E. Fernow, the United States Commissioner of Forestry, George Atwater.

"Hints for Arbor Day" is the title of bulletin No. 21. Besides giving a concise history of Arbor Day it contains an article by Prof. Northrop of Connecticut, urging its observance by schools, and it also contains a dialogue and programme prepared by the teachers of the Grand Rapids schools, suitable for adoption by schools of the state.

All the suggestions of the bulletin are adopted Arbor Day may be of interest to the school children and of future value to the state.

How it will be Spent.

A draft of $1,000 from the United States treasurer was received at the state agricultural college the other day, which paid the first installment of the $15,000 appropriated by congress under the Hatch bill for an experimental station at the college. Three thousand dollars of this amount will be used as the law permits for buildings. The college will build up the bee house and the experimental farm to the station, and the station will also take an interest in the new horticultural building. Two thousand dollars will be used in establishing and inducing a branch on the sand barrens in the northern part of the state. The location of the station has not yet been definitely decided upon. One thousand dollars will be expended under the direction of Mr. Norton of Leavenworth, and Mr. Chairman of Teton county, for the dairy interests, and experiments will also be conducted in horticulture, forestry, geography, agriculture, entomology and meteorology.

A Venerable Judge Dead.

Judge Eastman Johnson died at his home in Miles recently after a brief illness. He was 83 years old.

Judge Johnson was a gentleman of the old school, cordial, genial and dignified. He had for many years been prominent in his state. He has been a regent of the State University, was probate judge of St. Joseph county several years, and was the Republican presidential elector for his district in 1856. But it was as a high and learned Mason that he was best known. He was a thorough masonic student and possessed an extensive library of the literature of the order. He was grand secretary of the grand lodge of the state, a number of years, and was grand master of the grand lodge one or more terms.

Six Killed.

A serious accident on the Mexican National road near Saltillo occurred on the 15th inst. A construction train taking a large number of Mexican laborers from Saltillo to the end of the track, while en route one car containing thirty men jumped the track and rolled down an embankment, killing six seriously injuring twenty. The train was under control of a contractor, and the company is not responsible for the accident.

AN EMPEROR'S FUNERAL.

Emperor William Buried With Royal Honors.

The funeral of Emperor William took place on the 16th inst., in Berlin. The troops, who were ranged four deep along the route taken by the funeral cortège, wore heavy cloaks. The low temperature had no apparent effect upon the people, and hundreds of thousands of spectators occupied the space behind the soldiers, while every window along Unter den Linden was crowded. All the houses on the thoroughfare were covered with mourning and exhibited flags with black drapery. At the street crossings massive pillars draped with black and surmounted by Prussian eagles had been erected. The lamp-posts were covered with crape, and at every 50 paces there were large candelabra bearing flaming torches. The route of the funeral presented a most imposing aspect, entirely in keeping with the deep sorrow and reverence of the people. The center of the road was strewed with flowers and incense. The mourners were dressed in black, and the funeral cortège was preceded by a band of musicians.

THE KETTLE'S HOME-SONG.

BY ERNEST MCNAULY.

In the dusk of winter evenings when the snow lies white
On the highways and byways across the path of night.
There I sit within my kitchen, with Helen on my knee,
And listen to the song that the kettle sings to me.
Outside it's cold and cheerless, but all within is warm.
What care I for the wailing of the wind above the storm?
I am sitting watching Don, and Helen creeps in glee.
As she hears the cheerful song that the kettle sings to me.
You can talk about your nightingale in the month of June,
But he couldn't hold a candle to a kettle all in bone.
Though the music of composers is good enough for art,
It takes a kettle's singing to electrify the heart.
Jingle jangle, joggle joggle, the kettle's keeping time,
To the music of its din, like the tinkle of a rhyme;
And "substantial and substantial,"
Is a sort of Latin jingle the kettle sings to me.

The frost is on the windows I see the summer's gleam
And the dash of running waters in the kettle's voice of steam.
And robins in the sunshine are warbling in the grove
As the kettle sings its solo upon the kitchen stove.
And Helen winks and wriggles asthe fire glows
While I count the many dimples on her chubby little toes.
And Don and I and Helen—we all of us agree
That there's nothing like the song which the kettle sings to me.

THE GOVERNESS.

By J. E.

CHAPTER I.

Margaret Crewe sat on a side in the home meadow, staring dreamily, almost moodily, at Oak Hurst, whose red roof and queer twisted chimney-tacks were wreathed in ivy, while the sunlight fell in bars of burnished gold on the windows, making them flash like polished copper, and streamed between the trunks of the giant oaks that gave the place its name, and glanced on the silver birches and budding beeches, and other woods that bounded the land around the forest house.

It was a pretty place always, and looked its best illuminated by the cherry, spring sunshines that woke into life the modest violet and pure snowdrop, and the girl sitting in the still dell a picture in itself that at the thought of leaving it her heart of three years.

They had been happy—moderately, temperately happy; only after the brilliant and stormy ones that had gone before, they seemed full of peace and quiet to the untroubled girl.

However, there was no help for it—the past gone.

Henry Locksley's new wife hated Margaret Crewe, the governess, because she was beautiful, and the Mrs. Locksley was pale as she was jealous of the good honest fellow whose affections she had won.

Why she had never pitied on Margaret as the object of her jealousy was a mystery, for the master of Oak Hurst meant making love to her, surely he would have done so when he first came into his house three years before to teach his little motherless boy, and not after he had taken to himself of his own free will another wife.

Only the green-eyed monster took a possession of Gertude Locksley's heart, and nothing would exorcise the demon save the departure of the governess.

Harriet Locksley, Henry's sister, had declined to see any fault in the girl who had so honorably discharged her duty towards Little Jim, and it was hardly a subject on which the new-made wife could consult her bridegroom, she set herself silently and steadily to work to make Miss Crewe feel herself at home at Oak Hurst, and miserable and unwelcome, as one woman so well can make another, if she is spiteful and chooses to do so.

Margaret struggled on bravely for the sake of the child for a while, and also because the Locksley brother and sister were unfailingly kind to her, and being friendless and poor, she dread'd just a little facing the world again.

Each day Mrs. Locksley became more rude and insulting in her manner, found fault with everything she did—her mode of teaching the child, her dress, her manners, etc.—and lost no opportunity of lowering and humiliating in the eyes of the servants who readily took their cue from their new mistress, and were insolent to the dependent governess, who, after all, they argued, was little better than themselves and really a servant for all that she dressed like a lady and had her meals with the family.

Mrs. Locksley uttered this, and after her arrival Margaret breakfasted, in lonely state in the schoolroom.

Henry Locksley made a feeble protest against this, but he was completely under his wife's thumb, and gave way to her in all things.

"No, it must come to end. I cannot brook any more insults," said Margaret slowly, as she looked at the old red house through a mist of blinding tears, that blurred and flouted out the landscape for a while. "She hates me, and it is better I should go."

"Poor little Jim!" tenderly after a pause, while the tears welled afresh to the red blue eyes, "she will miss me, I hope—I do hope she will be kind to him," and then she thought of the days she had spent rambling in the fields and meadows with the boy, his little hand clasping hers, his little feet patterning along, and his tongue going at no end of a rate as he ask'd her all sorts of queer questions, the outcome of the dawn of intelligence and understanding.

It galled her to dwell on those peaceful days, full of calm, ere Gertrude Raynor came to reign at Oak Hurst as mistress for all was so sadly changed since she held the reins of management and she felt that she was being driven out, worsted in the fight, and her proud spirit, not yet subdued by poverty and adversity, rebelled fiercely against this tyrant in petticoats, who, secure in a good man's love, with every comfort money could procure, was heartlessly forcing her to move more to face a pitiless world alone.

"She treats me like a dog," she murmured angrily. "I will not lay myself open to such treatment any longer," her pride stung by the thought of the many humiliations she had experienced at Mrs. Locksley's hands. "I will look out for something else and tell Mr. Woodside—no, my employer," as she would term him, bitterly, "of my decision to-morrow."

And having come to this conclusion, Margaret rose slowly from the stool with her usual grace of movement, and turned toward the house.

Half-way across the lawn, she was encountered by a big fair woman, deceptively colorless-faced, fair hair, light gray eyes, with white lashes, and a skin like a snow drift.

"So, Miss Crewe," commenced this large white woman, "filling away your time as usual? It was only yesterday I told you I thought you might occupy your leisure hours—which, by the way, seem to be many—in mending the child's clothes. I don't care to do it."

"I can quite believe that," returned Margaret shortly, her blue eyes flashing ominously.

"It is your duty," continued Mrs. Locksley with irritating calm and effrontery, "to keep his clothes neat and tidy—part of your daily work, just as much as it is the housemaid's to dust his nursery."

"And like the housemaid I fail to give you satisfaction," observed the governess coolly, controlling her wrath.

"Well, certainly," acknowledged the mild-mannered Oak Hurst, with a sneer that made her plain face absolutely hideous.

"If the arrangement for Jim were placed in my hands I should look out at once for another, and, to my mind, more suitable substitute for him."

"A fortunate thing for me that arrangements are not in your hands."

"I've no doubt you'll take care to my mind you are altogether unequal for the position you hold."

"Indeed?"

"You think I am too good-looking?" suggested Margaret tauntingly.

"By no means," returned the other quickly. "You look good-looking, if you like."

"You are the first person who has ever told me that," exclaimed the girl with another outburst of her beauty.

"Really?" said Mrs. Locksley, uninterestingly. "I dare say I shall not be the last to have more the appearance of a third-rate actress than a governess," with a jealous glance at the slender figure and well-polished graceful golden head.

"And you look like a lady, and are not one—not even womanly," retorted Margaret, freely, losing all self-control, and then realizing to what a low level she was sinking by hasty words with such a woman, she turned away abruptly, and walked away to the school room, where tea and her pupil were awaiting her.

That evening, as soon as Henry Locksley returned, she caught him, and in a few words told him her desire to leave as soon as possible.

"I shall be sorry to lose you," he said with kindly eyes, "and Jim will be in despair."

"I hope not," she said quickly, a suspicious moisture in her eyes, a tremble on her red lips.

"I am sure of it, he is much attached to you."

"He is so young; he will soon grow to care for another governess."

"I don't know that; he is not like most children."

"No; he is unusually quick and keen for his age."

"You have managed him wonderfully well."

"I am glad you think so."

"And I am very sorry to hear you must leave us. I hope you have nothing to complain of that you have been uncomfortable here."

"You and Miss Locksley have been most kind," she returned warmly.

"To why you go?" he enquired with visible hesitation. "You do not find the work too hard?"

"Oh no! I have had plenty of leisure. Only I think it best to go."

Locksley seemed to understand, for he remained silent, regarding the governess intently. For the first time in all the three years she had lived in his house he realized how beautiful she was—how graceful, how lady-like, and well bred; and also for the first time a suspicion of his wife's unreasonable and groundless jealousy flashed across his brain, and a feeling very like indignation stirred his honest heart.

"And what are you going to do?" he asked kindly.

"Try to get an engagement in one of the southern counties—Devonshire if possible."

SCIENCE OF BUMPOLOGY.

The Bumps of Conspicuity, Acquisitiveness, Caution and Self-Esteem Described.

Henry Guy Carleton in N. Y. World.

WAS asked last week by a man who had been my warmest friend for twenty years, but with whom I am not now on speaking terms, to go to a phrenologist and have my head examined. Noticing my start of alarm, he said that the operation did not consist in prying off the lid and meddling with the contents, but simply that the phrenologist would study my bumps and then give me information of great value concerning my most prominent characteristics. Phrenology, he said, was the coming science of self-knowledge, and a man who knew his own bumps could infallibly tell what his career was going to be and ask no favors.

I went to hunt up a phrenologist. I soon found one. For ten minutes I was entertained by an inspection of the rogues' gallery in the ante-room, displaying the heads of Mr. Chalmers, a human baboon, Daniel O'Connell, an African gorilla, Theodore Parker, Boss Tweed, Thomas Jefferson, Dr. Channing and other desperados, and then I was asked, in a hollow and impressive whisper, to step into the consulting department, where the examination would be held.

I sat down on one chair, and a young man with a wealth of auburn hair and some stenographic ability sat on another, prepared to take notes. The professor then stood in front of me awhile, studied the architecture of my ears sized up my facial expression and ran his eye rapidly over the various slopes and plateaux of my head. Then he said:

"Remarkable; very remarkable, sir. You have a very remarkable head."

I waved my hand in depreciation, but what he said was no surprise to me. He approached, ran his fingers cautiously through my principal cowlick, and said:

"Remarkable; very remarkable, sir. You have a remarkable head."

FRIDAY, MARCH 23, 1888.

An exchange says: "One of our old and reliable subscribers tells us that if any person in the habit of smoking or chewing tobacco desires to quit, there is just one day in the year, and only one on which it can be successfully accomplished, and that is Good Friday. If a person will neither smoke or chew on that day, all desire for the weed will suddenly leave them, and not to return. Suppose you try it if you desire to."

LIVONIA MATTERS.

To Mr. and Mrs. George Gaisserth
My darling children David and Will,
God called them home with him to dwell
and let me weepings in the dear old home,
With new power all brightness fades.

My little ones, we read my life to you,
My darling child tell me now where to turn,
Now I feel bereft, I wear a shroud,
With grecy pain Beset at home.

They have gone to a better resting place,
While I am in this world to grieve,
Poor little Brodie John.

They are sleeping now, their spirits go,
Where the spring flowers grow. Now we Fit little ones to sleep and care,
Have gone and left the house, we soon life's journey will be done.

Then we shall meet them in that better place,
Then never more will the house be left alone.

One year ago last June, a new enterprise was undertaken in a small way

in Lansing, known as the Michigan Condensed Milk Company. The success of the institution has been wonderful. Although not yet two years old, its business has been increased until now they are working 50,000 pounds

of milk daily, and have working force

100 hands to run it. The milk for its use is shipped to them by railroad

as far as 60 miles. They also manufacture all their cans for use which being all done by machinery is much cheaper than could be made by the usual hand labor. The building is a three story brick building with steam power. In the manufacture of the condensed milk it passes

through a boiling process in huge copper tank, and a certain proportion of sugar cane is mixed with it,

and condensed so as to get one pound

from four pounds of milk, and put up in one pound tins, hermetically sealed for market. We noticed in passing through the establishment that the most perfect cleanliness is observed in every part of the concern. The product of this enterprise is marketed in all parts of this country, Europe, and South America. The beauty of the whole is that they don't have to look for sales as the order comes in. Later than they can supply them, and they

then go back several thousand cans and fill on filling orders. This they have to do every day in the season for all comes around, when they are in

shortage of help, and before long Mr. C. T. Rogers is the business manager, and is a master in the management of thorough business operations. — North Lansing

PLYMOUTH.

Joe Somers has opened a brick yard here.

Polly & Wherry are getting out the material for a large number of their iron harrows for the coming season's trade. Charles Brems is also getting out material for iron harrows.

Rumors are flying that one of our school teachers is to be married soon to one of Detroit's young men. So mote it be.

The short line telegraph is to be put up about the town as soon as the weather is warmer, to repair it. It will run from the village to F. & P. M. depot and thence to the crossing. There is some talk of stringing it along the F. & P. M. poles to Northville and have its terminus there in E. N. Passage's tannery parlor and him as the operator. The line would be a great convenience to both towns.

Toot Taft who has been quite poorly with lung trouble is now on the gain.

Frank Shattuck and Andrew Passage, prominent Odd Fellows here are on the sick list. They are being cared for by the Odd Fellows Lodge.

The Marshall Air Gun Co. are doing a thriving business. Their guns are being shipped to all points of the compass.

The Plymouth Air Rifle Co. recently organized have commenced manufacturing their guns. C. J. Hamilton is general manager. The business outlook for them is quite favorable.

CHEEK.

No, my son, cheek is not better than wisdom; it is not better than honest modesty; it is not better than anything. Don't listen to the sinner who tells you to blow your own horn or it will never be tested upon. The world is not to be deceived by cheek, and when it finds it is not, it is avarice. Check never deceives the world, my son. It appears to be a cheeky man, but this is not so. He is deceived. Do you know not of any man in all your acquaintance who is not blinded by his cheek? — But this book is turned over, and I am continually drawing character, etc., over check and avarice. All who I especially hate the cheeky man are not. See the lines of the brazen glaze of his face, the hollow twinkling of his crystalline tongue, the noisy expression of his forwardness. The features of cheek are only apparent. He bows his way alone through the world, and frequently leaves people give way for him. But so they give way not only for reason with a faint portion of head. Not because they respect the laws with the faint portion of head, but because they want to take care of their clothes. Avoid check, my son. You can sell goods well at it, and your customers won't run and hide in the cellar when they see you coming.

THE CARE OF THE EYES.

At a sanitary convention held at Allentown, Md., not long ago, Dr. C. J. Loring, of Detroit, read a paper on "Hygiene in Relation to the Eyes," which showed how the wiles of civilization, especially among teachers and schoolteachers. A fruitful source of eye trouble is shown to be the excessive strain upon the muscles and nerves of the eyes due to faulty educational methods, the ill planned and insufficient lighting of school rooms, poor ink and paper not in school books, and other causes which education might correct.

In conclusion, Dr. Loring lays down the following rules for the better care of the eyes:

1. Avoid reading and study by poor light.
2. Light should come from the side, and not from the back or from the front.
3. Do not read or study while suffering from bodily fatigue or during recovery from illness.
4. Do not read while lying down.
5. Do not use the eyes too long at a time for the bear work, but give them occasional periods of rest.
6. Reading and study should be done systematically.
7. During study use light, stooping position, and over folding of the eyes, and a tilted head and flat back.
8. Read well printed books.
9. Correct errors of sight, as with glasses.
10. As far as possible, conditions and surroundings should be good.
11. Take sufficient exercise in the open air.
12. Let the physical keep pace with the mental culture, for education is most easily observed in those who are lacking in physical development.

Canada Money Taken in Trade at Part

Northville Record.

Senator Ingalls, of Kansas, who is openly opposed to Prohibition, gives this invaluable testimony in its favor. He says: "My disbelief in Prohibition probably renders me a more disinterested observer of its results, and I do not hesitate to say that, though attended with some deplorable tendencies, it has been to great advantage to the state of Kansas, both morally and from the material and economic standpoint. The grocery merchants and other dealers say that their bills are more promptly paid, the records of the courts show a marked decrease in debt and crime. The predictions of its opponents have not been verified. Immigration has not been hindered nor capital averted from the state." The Senator also says: "There can be no doubt that the dram shop is an intolerable drainage of the national resources; the nursery of crime; the enemy of domestic happiness; the three-fold of the poor-house; the vestal of the jail; the portal of hell."
