TOWN TALK.

The dry weather we have had helps the wagon makers if no one else.

Milford is agitating the question of bonding the village for waterworks for fire protection.

Samuel J. Springer has been appointed postmaster at Plymouth in place of W. J. Burrows.

The Whitney family are announced to be here before long. The name guarantees a good show.

While L. Crocker and son were returning from Farmington last week Thursday evening the buggy was upset and the son badly hurt.

The indications are good for another dry summer, and already Pontiacen in this locality is solicited containing local news.

Anonymity communications not inserted under any circumstances.

Ypsilanti held an election Monday to vote on the waterworks question. 738 voted for it and 23 against it. The city will own the works and bond the town.

Within the past week the trees have put on an entirely different dress. A week ago it was cold and they would not blossom but to-day they are clothed in beauty and fragrance.

The lecture expected this evening by Mrs. Hollister of Detroit has been postponed to a later date. Due notice of lecture will be given in these columns. She speaks in the interest of the Y. W. C. T. U.

Old probabilities told us Wednesday morning that there was a storm hovering over Dakota and would reach here by Thursday. We hope he hasn't altered his mind and sent it off somewhere else.

Last Sunday afternoon Rev. W. T. Jacques preached at the Summit Congregational church and after services a Sunday school was organized there. Mr. Jacques will preach there again next Sunday afternoon.

The Organ company are working on extra time to catch up with their orders. This does not look like shutting down their factory. We understand they have been offered a large bonus to move their factory elsewhere.

G. S. VanZile has visions of a large flock of sheep in the near future. From three ewes this spring he had seven lambs. If the rest of his flock keeps up the average he will have to buy land adjoining Novi township to pasture them on.

We often hear favorable words spoken in favor of large cisterns being built in the central part of town for fire protection as suggested by the Record recently. Has anyone anything to say against it? Let us have at least that much fire protection.

After copying our article about the village buying the road scraper left here on trial so long the Wayne Record says they have one left with them in about the same way and they are now expecting some agent to call and collect pay for their's with interest. It is a way they have of selling their articles.

It can be said to the credit of a jury in Michigan that in seven minutes time they pronounced R. Irving Latimer guilty of murdering his mother. People predicted a disagreement because so many juries have disagreed and let the guilty ones go but they were disappointed. If ever a man was insane Latimer is. His conduct since his arrest can be explained in no other way.

An interesting case has arisen in Grand Rapids. A young lady of that city while acting with a theater company, acted as bride in part of the play and went through with a marriage ceremony. The groom now claims her as his wife because she stood up with him before witnesses, due to having linked her fortunes with his and to test the master has sued for a bill of divorce.

The village board are now doing what ought to have been done years ago. They have S. C. Woodward, the surveyor of Ypsilanti, here establishing the grade for Main and Center streets. Heretofore work has been done haphazard, one year one set of officers builds up and the next tears down. Now a grade is to be established which will be permanent and the streets built to it.

PERSONALS.

Mrs. John Gardner is able to be up around again.

Mrs. Ada Ambler is recovering slowly from her attack of rheumatism.

Mrs. S. A. Clarkson has been spending the week with friends at Ypsilanti. Frank Ambler has accepted a lucrative position with a drug store at Oxford.

S. H. Marquisee, of Reedsburg, Wis., is visiting his niece, Mrs. George H. Sinclair.

Mrs. Martha Beal was called to Ann Arbor Wednesday to attend the funeral of a relative.

Miss M. E. Lapham and party are in Palestine viewing the remains of that sacred country.

S. Willes was visited this week by Geo. Williamson, supreme scribe of the Knights of the Red Cross.

Mrs. Amanda Burgess is a little better than a week ago. She is considered out of danger now but improves very slowly.

Mrs. George Bradley, Jr., sailed on the steamer Nevada this week from New York for a three months visit to Brighton, England.

T. M. Sheriff, editor of the Labor Advertiser and state secretary of the Knights of Labor was in town Tuesday evening. He visited the assembly at this place.

We can print cards for changes in the advertising clock in the post office.

It takes 65,000 cochineal insects to make one pound in weight, and the amount imported into America during last year was 1,849,342 pounds. The annual slaughter of these insects, therefore, to supply carmine for Aver. Jean ladies' toilette, and the various dyes and tints for their ribbons, feathers and dresses, actually reaches 130,233,700,000 in number.

"Twas ever thus, says the Oxford Globe. "We are informed that some of our citizens were not willing that our dealers in wallpaper should make an honest penny out of them so entrusted their money to a traveling tramp who represented that he could buy it at half rates for them. It's the same old story. The cash, the tramp, nor the paper have not been heard from as yet. Serve them right."

Why will not our aspirants for the post office submit their claims to a vote of the people who get their mail at this office? This is being done in many places and is giving good satisfaction. No man would want to be post master unless he was the choice of a majority. Let the aspirants for the place agree among themselves to such a vote and we will guarantee the patrons of the office will gladly acquiesce.

Don Yerkes is playing ball with the Lansing team and the Record says of him: "D. P. Yerkes, of Northville, is one of the twirlers, and it was he who brought the agricultural college team to its present state of perfection. His habits are exemplary and he is a steady man; one to be relied upon at all times; is a good all round athlete and is always in good condition. In Lansing he is well known and popular."

The entire business portion of the town of Waldron in the south part of Hillsdale county was destroyed by fire Monday afternoon. The fire started in a shed back of one of the stores and as there was no water handy nor fire protection of any kind in town the entire row of stores was burned. Loss $60,000. Twenty-one business places and nine offices and dwellings in ashes. What have we in Northville to prevent us from such a fate some day?

Hamilton Force, of South Lyon, after being jailed for nearly a year just had his examination completed the other day and was held to trial in the Circuit court on a charge of arson. Mr. Force, it will be remembered, has been tried and acquitted on a similar charge and we understand more complaints are ready should the present one fail to stick. Such proceedings seem to be a little out of the regular order, and whether guilty or innocent the prisoner is certainly entitled to more speedy examinations and trials.

AN 88TH BIRTHDAY PARTY.

Mrs. Clarissa Benton-Rhodes celebrated the 88th anniversary of her birthday at her son's—Hiram Benton's—a well to do farmer and connoisseur horseman of this place, on the third inst. Mrs. Rhodes with her first husband, Gideon P. Benton, settled on the farm where her son Hiram, now resides in 1826. Mr. Benton died in 1883.

The widow married Wm. Bramble in 1812, who died in Tennessee in 1863, a union soldier. She subsequently married Mr. Rhodes with whom she lived several years. Since his death she has made her home with her children.

Mrs. Rhodes is a woman of great energy of character and activity of mind. Her life has been spent in doing good to others, rather than in securing her own enjoyment. Few persons in this community has had the pioneer experience of this venerable mother and grand-mother. Her health is good for one of her age, and she retains her mental faculties unusually well.

The following named persons were present at her anniversary. Mrs. H. Thayer, widow of Capt. Thayer, who resides with her son Hiram, on the farm her late husband located and moved on to in 1826, her age is 88 years; Clark A. Griswold aged 82, who came to Michigan in 1829; J. D. Yerkes aged 71, came in 1826, his wife aged 65, came in 1831; John Sandt aged 70, came in 1827, his wife aged 68, came in 1833; E. S. Woodman aged 72, came in 1837, his wife aged 65, came in 1837; Mrs. Ester P. Wells, aged 78, came in 1828; Asa M. Randolph aged 68, came in 1830, his wife aged 64, in 1847. The aggregate ages of the above named twelve persons is 823 years, lacking one year of 72 years each.

Mrs. Benton provided a sumptuous dinner which would have tempted the appetite of an epicure, to which all done ample justice. The pioneers spent the time in relating incidents of early pioneer life, the changes that have taken place since they first settled here and became acquainted with each other. After some recitations by Mr. Benton's daughter Nancy, ten years of age, which would have done credit to a person much older. After a general hand shaking the friends separated, wishing the venerable lady many years yet in which to have birthday parties. W. Northville, May 5th, 1889.

At a business meeting of the society of the Presbyterian church held last Monday afternoon there were but few present. The vote heretofore passed to build on the corner of Wing and Main Streets was reconsidered and the proposition to build there was voted down.

Tuesday evening there will be a commandery of the Red Cross organized in the K. of L. hall. This is another mutual insurance society. Our village is blessed with secret societies. Read the list. Knights-Templar, Council, Chapter, Blue Lodge, Knights of Pythias, Royal Adelphians, Knights of Honor, Grand Army Republic, Sons of Veterans, Knights of Labor, Red Cross, Chosen Friends, and a dead lodge of Odd Fellows. A bakers dozen of goats kept groomed and ready for service.

Think of the greased poles, branding irons, and other impressive (?) articles kept to torture the aspirant for society honors.

Charles E. Barnes, deputy state commissioner of the labor bureau, was in town Tuesday to arrange for taking the census of all labor employed in our factories. The commission are engaged at present in learning all they can of the condition of all employees employed in furniture factories, this includes church and school furniture of all kinds. The other lines of business will receive attention later on but now they are completing the census for this branch in the state. The editor of this paper was appointed by Mr. Barnes to take the census in this place. This bureau is doing a good thing for labor in this commonwealth.

Hamilton Force, of South Lyon, after being jailed for nearly a year just had his examination completed the other day and was held to trial in the Circuit court on a charge of arson. Mr. Force, it will be remembered, has been tried and acquitted on a similar charge and we understand more complaints are ready should the present one fail to stick. Such proceedings seem to be a little out of the regular order, and whether guilty or innocent the prisoner is certainly entitled to more speedy examinations and trials.

Notice is hereby given that there will be a meeting of the Building & Loan association at the RECORD office next Tuesday evening at 7:30 for the purpose of loaning money. Parties desiring to bid for money will do well to take notice. O. J. PALMER, Secy.

SCHOOL COLUMN.

BABIES IN SCHOOL.

Why are the children sent to school so young? This question is suggested to any person on entering our primary room. We fear the parents are not always considerate and thoughtful enough of the true interests of the children. The children do progress for a year or two and then apparently lose interest in school and school work and seemingly almost stop in their mental growth.

Unless in kindergarten work and in short hours we believe, as a rule, children are injured more than they are benefited by attending school before seven. And heartily agree with Capt. Richards of St. Louis, who says: "Nearly all parents make the mistake of sending children to school too early in age. There is a general assent among medical men to the proposition that seven years is the earliest age at which a child should be subject to the discipline and restraint of the school room, and the opinion is confirmed by eminent educational authority. The superintendent of the St. Louis, Mo. school has stated as a result of large experience and wide observation that children entering school at eight years can make terrible progress in primary work that pupils of five years of age can accomplish. At five the energies are needed for purposes of growth; at seven or eight there is a healthier equilibrium existing between the nervous system and the muscular, and the physical strength can withstand the increased activity of study and the turning aside of the energies to purposes other than growth."

STATE-NEWS.

MURDER IN JACKSON.

A Young Colored Boy Found With His Head Crushed.

On the night of April 29 Patrick Banner of Jackson reported to the police that a man was lying in a pool of blood about three blocks east of the Michigan Central depot. Officers were at once sent to the place and found the body of a colored man, who had been struck on the side of the head by a stone weighing at least three pounds, which was found by his side. He was still alive when the officers arrived, but died soon after. Frank McGuire, who was with Banner, when he reported the murder, said that he saw a man stagger up onto the sidewalk and heard him mutter some words. He then met Banner, and with him went to the station house.

Coroner Heine was called and impanelled a jury, who viewed the remains. After which they were taken to Carey & Delehaney's mortuary. The wound was examined, showing a severe bruise on the head over the right ear, where the stone had struck.

A man named John Devine has made a confession of the truth to the murderer. He was one of the party when the murder was committed, and said he saw Dennis McCullough throw the stone at Cunningham, and the latter fell as if shot, and we ran away. I saw McCullough stand over for the stone and saw him throw it. I know it was a stone he threw.

Devine said all agreed to say nothing of what they saw, and when he lied about it, Chief W. J. Farrel pinned him down to the truth. John Farrel corroborated Devine after the latter had told the truth.

McCullough is now locked up at the station. McCullough is a Michigan Central switchman, 37 years old.

Crops and the Weather.

The state weather service crop bulletin for the week ending April 27 gave the temperature for the past week at 31.10° above normal. The rainfall has been 34.10 inches below the average and sunshines below.

Wheat and grass made slow progress because of the drought. Plowing and seedling is in progress, and corn planting will be commenced next week in the extreme southern counties. The weather in the northern counties has been more favorable upon growing crops by reason of a greater rainfall.

Tragedy at Marquette.

Andrew McGregor, proprietor of the Saginaw house at Marquette about and instantly killed. His McGregor club whom he had been living for the past five years. He also shot himself, but not fatally. McGregor is in the county jail, and will recover, though seriously hurt. Frick and jealousy are given as the reasons for the crime.

May 1, the Michigan railroad lands embodied in the grants recently declared forfeited by congress were formerly thrown open for entry.

The big boilers of the Negaunee Concentrating Works, which were being removed to the Queen mine, have been attached for an old debt and there will be a big law suit between the Jackson and Concentrating companies. The latter failed to pay for lumber bought of the Jackson mine seven years ago.

Dennis McCullough has confessed that he threw the stone which killed William Cunningham in Jackson the other night. McCullough came to Jackson six months ago from Lima, Ohio, where his father, John McCullough lived. His associates in Jackson were men of his class—mostly railroad men. McCullough was a switchman at the Michigan Central Junction. He told of being out with Farrell, Egan, Devine, Wiley and Murray. Of their meeting Cunningham and pitching into him. McCullough says he stood off while the others were beaten in the fight. He picked up a four pound boulder and tossed it into the crowd, expecting to startle them and stop the fight. Cunningham was struck in the temple and fell. They all were frightened and fled, offering to assist Cunningham. McCullough again asserted he had no intention of hurting any one.

Chas. Lurkin, one of the most prominent and wealthy farmers of Van Buren county, died in Decatur a few days ago.

John Burns, a farmer living in Bridgeport township, Saginaw county, stabbed and mortally wounded James McMichael the other morning in a drunken quarrel. The affray occurred at the house of a man named Masters, and Burns first attempted to murder him. McMichael interferred and tried to avoid bloodshed, when an ugly-looking knife was plunged into his stomach. The physicians give the hope of his recovery.

Two shafts in the Calumet & Hecla mine have been opened, and no signs of fire have been discovered.

Seventy-five employees of the Calumet & Hecla smelting works were discharged on the 23d inst. and further reductions on the force are to follow soon. The mill and smelter works employ 100 men when running full force. The discharge of workmen means a reduction in the output of copper by the Calumet & Hecla.

Hon. Peter White of Marquette received a letter recently from Wm. P. Spaulding of Scott St. Marie, which concludes as follows: "I believe I am with one exception the oldest emigrant resident of the Lake Superior country, the exception being Wm. W. Spaulding of Duluth, who reached Ontario in the fall of 1845 by canoe from the head of the lake. I have seen the wonderful growth of a rich district, whose destiny no man can foretell. The first winter here we had the arrival of three mails by dog team, to-day we read our Chicago and Detroit papers of yesterday, and can reach Detroit in 20 hours. I can step on the street car at my door and ride to the depot 14 miles for five cents, or a carriage by lightens. I am ready to believe anything now. Tell me what you may, I doubt no more."

The Ogemaw Lake Breeze says that G. L. Norum of Bel. Jache has deposited a very valuable piece of currency with the First National bank. It is a Danish bank note for the sum of 1,000, the number of the note being 53,300. It was issued in 1792. On the right-hand margin of the bill is a warning to counterfeiters stating that whoever attempts to counterfeit it will lose his life, his freedom and his God; and who ever gives any information leading to the arrest of such counterfeiter will receive a liberal reward and his name will be kept secret.

Bennett of Battle Creek. The next annual convention will be held at Cadillac on the third Wednesday in May, 1890.

Another vein of coal has been found in Tuscola county, this time on a farm two miles south of Unionville.

After Wartime of Lansing has presented to the state museum a pocketbook made entirely from iron taken from linings of military coats worn by Gen. George Washington and Marquis de Lafayette during the American revolution. The lining is rather primitive in appearance, being made from native fat by the natives of that period. The cloth from Washington's coat is faded red, and just from Lafayette's slightly green. The relic formerly belonged to Ephraim Wessman, who was tutor to Washington and Lafayette during the revolution.

The F. & P. M. railroad company will build a new depot at Bay City.

Theodore Schloss, convicted of placing an obstruction on the railroad track near Coopersville station, has been sentenced to three years at Ionia.

A Terrible Panic.

A series of distressing accidents occurred on the lake front in Chicago on the evening of April 29, just as the festivities of the day were closing, which marred the joyous proceedings of the entire day. A crowd of 100,000 persons were present. Five persons were fatally injured in the crush of people and a score or more received wounds of a serious nature. But few of the names of those injured could be learned, owing to the fact that the majority of them were cared for by their friends and taken to their homes. The panic was caused by the premature explosion of fireworks used in the celebration of the "bicentennial" centennial. The same evening a crowd was gathered in Lincoln park. When the last rocket had exploded the people made a rush for every street leading from the south end of the park. The wooden sidewalk at the north-west corner gave way and several hundred persons fell. They all were frightened and fled, offering to assist Cunningham. McCullough again asserted he had no intention of hurting any one.

Chas. Lurkin, one of the most prominent and wealthy farmers of Van Buren county, died in Decatur a few days ago.

John Burns, a farmer living in Bridgeport township, Saginaw county, stabbed and mortally wounded James McMichael the other morning in a drunken quarrel.

The affray occurred at the house of a man named Masters, and Burns first attempted to murder him. McMichael interferred and tried to avoid bloodshed, when an ugly-looking knife was plunged into his stomach. The physicians give the hope of his recovery.

The mill and smelter works employ 100 men when running full force. The discharge of workmen means a reduction in the output of copper by the Calumet & Hecla.

GENERAL NEWS.

ANARCHISTS PREPARING.

An Inflammatory Circular Relative to the Unveiling.

On May 30 the Haymarket monument in Chicago is already preparing for the event to be followed by the issuance by some secret printing establishment of an inflammatory circular copies of which have fallen into the hands of the police.

One of the circulars was enclosed in an envelope and sent to Chief Hubbard. Another was found lying on the base of the monument. The neighbors saw flames leaping from the windows of the lowest floor of his house. The fire spread so quickly over the frame building that nothing could be done to save the inmates. When the neighbors reached the house they saw Williams and his wife with the babe in her arms leaping from the second story. They were severely burned. The other four children were not seen and they were burned to death in their beds. Their ages ranged from six to fifteen years.

The circular reads as follows:

"May 4, 1886, and Nov. 11, 1887."

"May 4, 1886! A peaceful people attacked by 150 armed policemen, acting under orders of a well-known daily and action contrary to the demands of the mayor of the city! An unknown hand thrown deadly and death dealing missile and in a moment the air is rent by the shrieks and groans of wounded and dying men. And this the result of disobedience.

Citizens, you are asked to commemorate by your attendance at the unveiling of the statue erected to the memory of the police who fell on that terrible night. The bravery is not of the common men who had no choice but to obey, but the man headed whose murderous act caused infinite suffering. Some of you who read this will listen, it may be with approval, of the racial of the awful scenes of that memorable night. With vengeance and great eloquence orators will picture to you the situation and strong appeals will be made to your patriotism and your patriotic feelings.

Albert, C. Blashfield of Marshall, was arrested in Elgin, Ill., a few days ago for forgery of notes on his father and other prominent farmers of Calhoun county to the amount of $1,000.

The first annual meeting of the Young People's Methodist Alliance of Michigan was held in Lansing on the 1st inst. The officers elected for the ensuing year are:

President, Wm. W. Cooper of St. Joseph; vice president, Rev. D. B. Miller of Battle Creek; secretary, Rev. F. L. Thompson of Manistee; treasurer, Rev. A. H. Haynes of Battle Creek.

Students at the state normal school will compete for a prize in oratory on the 10th inst.

Grand Rapids has 145½ miles of streets, of which 2½ are improved.

The State firemen's association, in session at Lansing, elected officers as follows: President, J. A. Beale of Eaton Rapids; vice presidents, C. C. Dunham of Cadillac, F. W. Peabody of Alpena and John Neblett of Lansing; secretary and treasurer, W. A. Teller of Petoskey; statistician, O. F. Jackson of Ithaca; representative to national convention, J. H. Bennett of Battle Creek. The next annual convention will be held at Cadillac on the third Wednesday in May, 1890.

Another vein of coal has been found in Tuscola county, this time on a farm two miles south of Unionville.

After Wartime of Lansing has presented to the state museum a pocketbook made entirely from iron taken from linings of military coats worn by Gen. George Washington and Marquis de Lafayette during the American revolution. The lining is rather primitive in appearance, being made from native fat by the natives of that period.

The cloth from Washington's coat is faded red, and just from Lafayette's slightly green. The relic formerly belonged to Ephraim Wessman, who was tutor to Washington and Lafayette during the revolution.

Michael O'Keefe, an aged resident of Flint, burst a blood vessel while coughing, and died in a short time.

J. F. Wadeworth, former superintendent of the Port Huron & Northwestern railway, has been appointed chief inspector at Fort Gratiot.

Considerable square lumber will be rafted in Tawas bay this summer and shipped to eastern dealers for shipbuilding purposes.

The annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of the state will be held in Bay City May 22, 23, 24 and 25. Medical fests have been secured on all railroads.

It is quite probable that the Toledo, Saginaw & Milwaukee railroad will be extended this season from Saginaw to Alpena, connecting with the P. R. C. & W. road to Alpena. The road will pass through West Bay City.

Harry Thies of Bay City, dropped dead in the Eagle hotel the other morning.

Mrs. Wallington, the alleged blackmailer of Flint, has been held for trial at the first term of court.

J. P. Hackett of Pittsburgh, Pa., was arrested at Bay City recently and released on $5,000 bonds. He recently fled from the instance of Bay City parties who claim that he is indebted to them to the extent of $4,000.

The F. & P. M. railroad company will build a new depot at Bay City.

Theodore Schloss, convicted of placing an obstruction on the railroad track near Coopersville station, has been sentenced to three years at Ionia.

A Terrible Panic.

A series of distressing accidents occurred on the lake front in Chicago on the evening of April 29, just as the festivities of the day were closing, which marred the joyous proceedings of the entire day. A crowd of 100,000 persons were present. Five persons were fatally injured in the crush of people and a score or more received wounds of a serious nature. But few of the names of those injured could be learned, owing to the fact that the majority of them were cared for by their friends and taken to their homes. The panic was caused by the premature explosion of fireworks used in the celebration of the "bicentennial" centennial. The same evening a crowd was gathered in Lincoln park. When the last rocket had exploded the people made a rush for every street leading from the south end of the park. The wooden sidewalk at the north-west corner gave way and several hundred persons fell. They all were frightened and fled, offering to assist Cunningham. McCullough again asserted he had no intention of hurting any one.

Chas. Lurkin, one of the most prominent and wealthy farmers of Van Buren county, died in Decatur a few days ago.

John Burns, a farmer living in Bridgeport township, Saginaw county, stabbed and mortally wounded James McMichael the other morning in a drunken quarrel.

The affray occurred at the house of a man named Masters, and Burns first attempted to murder him. McMichael interferred and tried to avoid bloodshed, when an ugly-looking knife was plunged into his stomach. The physicians give the hope of his recovery.

A SONG.

SIMPLY WHITCOMB BILLET.
There is ever a song somewhere, my dear;
There's ever something sings always There's the song of the lark when the skies are clear,
And the song of the thrush when the skies are gray.
The sunshiny showers across the graft,
And the bluebird trills in the crevices,
And in and out, when the leaves drip rain,
The swallows are twitting carelessly.
There is ever a song somewhere, my dear,
In the midnight thick, on the huddled blue;
The robin pipes when the sun is here,
And the cricket chirps the whole night
there;
The buds may blow and the fruits may grow,
And the autumn leaves drop crisp and bare;
But whether the sun, or the rain or the snow,
There is ever a song somewhere, my dear.

"A TALISMAN."

BY MRS. N. H.

CHAPTER IV.

The storm had burst. A horror no longer nameless and dreaded, but tangible and surpassing all the wildest fear of the most fearful, was turning India's golden land into one scene of bloodshed and cruelty, torture and terror.

Too late now for escape or safety. Lady Huskin's cowardly selfishness had brought its terrible punishment upon not only herself, but her husband and cousin.

All escape was cut off from the little town of B— by the hordes of natives who were besieging it. Fire and death, wounds and sickness filled each day with new disasters, and the detected little band of English thus shut up in their terrible plight could only pray and hope for the deliverance they surely trusted would come. Ah, but when? Each day might make it too late.

As gold is purified by fire, so in a time like this all that was good in human nature came gradually out. Men performed prodigies of valor and endurance, women displayed wonderful patience and courage.

Lady Huskin had no good in her, and in this scene of trial, for which she belied herself to spasm, she was a perfect hand of self-reproaching and miserable alarm.

Dorothy Beauchamp became a heroine. Quietly and unobtrusively, yet with the unflinching courage and steadfastness only a great nature can show, she came to the front and did an hero's or an angel's work. Nothing came amiss to her—tending the sick, succuring the wounded, and sympathizing with the bereaved, cheering the brave, first and foremost, capturing the hearts of all—patrolling, capricious, either in thought or self, and never a spark of fear or repining upon her sweet face.

Dorothy Beauchamp never failed for grace, and the roughest men watched for her coming, and breathed a silent prayer for her safety as she passed in and out a very angel among them.

"Where are you going?" an abrupt voice stopped Dorothy as she was crossing the barrack-yard.

She looked up, and a faint tinge of color came into the lovely white face as she saw the man who had stopped her—the handsome soldier whose face she had never yet clearly seen.

Glad of an instant's rest the girl leaned against the wall as she replied: "I am going round to the opposite as usual just to give the men tidings of their friends, and say a prayer for those who like it. Each day I miss some faces," her lips quivered.

"And will do," the man replied briefly. "The fire is heavy on the north side to-day—terribly heavy. You must not go, Miss Beauchamp." She shook her head with a faint sad smile.

"I must go," she said faintly. "The man look for my coming; I promised them. And Share's wife is dead, and left him a message. I must give it to-day or it may be too late."

"Is your own life of no account?" the soldier asked, half angrily—half with a tenderness in his accents which colored the girl's face again. "I have watched you day by day doing what no man among us could do. You are doing an angel's work, but it will kill me if it goes on thus."

"I am not afraid," she only said softly. "We can not do out atmost, and trust to a Higher Power for aid."

He looked at the exquisite, frail, brave form, at the sweet grave face, the soft dark hair was all cut off, and clattered, damp, with the terrible heat, in silky little rings around the broad brow, on which the blue veins showed too clearly; the once pretty white frock, now torn, and scaled with many red stains, hung loosely upon the girl-like figure.

The little hands were roughened by their unaccustomed toil, but the glorious eyes were more lovely than ever, deep and serious, calm and sweet. Out from them looked the brave woman's soul within, and the soldier knew that this weak young girl might die beneath her self-imposed task—in the likelihood of that was all too apparent—but would never neglect one particle of some emotion. He did not wish her to see, when he said quietly:

"If you will go, let me accompany you. I may be some protection, and I can spare the time just now."

He was taking it from the two little hours of sleep, which were all that could be allotted to the over-worked garrison. But Dorothy did not know that.

Side by side the soldier and the maiden were crossing the yard, when they ran against one of the officers, Major Harvey, who looked excited and flushed.

He just bowed to Dorothy, then turned hastily to her companion.

"Smith, I want a man to do a hero's work. We can't hold out much longer at this rate. Their numbers have increased. We have one chance and only one. If someone could get across to K— and tell of our plight they might send us reinforcements, and save us. Their strength is just augmented. To-morrow will be too late. But who dare take the message and the risk of such a journey?"

"Send me, sir," the soldier said quietly and without a moment's hesitation, as if it were a message into the mess-room he proposed taking instead of a ride for miles across the country infested by the rebels, and some portions of it swept by their guns.

The Major hesitated and looked at him.

"You will do it, Smith, if a man can do it, I believe. You can ride over anything that I know of—cross-country at home? Ah, yes—but I don't disguise the danger of this. If you get there the chances are a hundred to one of your returning alive. Who ever undertakes this must do it voluntarily."

"I volunteer, sir."

Dorothy's dark eyes glanced up with an unconscious agony of appeal in their depths. She did not speak, but her breath came quick and short, and the soldier turned from that eloquent look.

"If I get to K—, sir, I care nothing for the rest," he said in a firm steady voice.

"I will write the note and meet you here at K—," the major said, and hurried off.

"You will go?"

Dorothy spoke quietly, but her eyes and her lips could not scarce.

"Would you have me less brave than a woman—yourself?" was his only reply.

She drew a deep quieting sigh.

"Don't start till I get back," she said, and hurried on her rounds.

He sat at the point of his duty, succuring the wounded, and sympathizing with the bereaved, cheering the brave, first and foremost, capturing the hearts of all—patrolling, capricious, either in thought or self, and never a spark of fear or repining upon her sweet face.

Dorothy Beauchamp never failed for grace, and the roughest men watched for her coming, and breathed a silent prayer for her safety as she passed in and out a very angel among them.

"Where are you going?" an abrupt voice stopped Dorothy as she was crossing the barrack-yard.

She looked up, and a faint tinge of color came into the lovely white face as she saw the man who had stopped her—the handsome soldier whose face she had never yet clearly seen.

Glad of an instant's rest the girl leaned against the wall as she replied: "I am going round to the opposite as usual just to give the men tidings of their friends, and say a prayer for those who like it. Each day I miss some faces," her lips quivered.

"And will do," the man replied briefly. "The fire is heavy on the north side to-day—terribly heavy. You must not go, Miss Beauchamp." She shook her head with a faint sad smile.

"I must go," she said faintly. "The man look for my coming; I promised them. And Share's wife is dead, and left him a message. I must give it to-day or it may be too late."

"Is your own life of no account?" the soldier asked, half angrily—half with a tenderness in his accents which colored the girl's face again. "I have watched you day by day doing what no man among us could do. You are doing an angel's work, but it will kill me if it goes on thus."

"Yes, I fear so. It was a last chance and our only one. He may have got across, however, even if he failed to get back. Keep up heart, Miss Dorothy; things cannot get much worse."

But there was little cheerfulness in the attempt to cheer.

A look came into the lovely dark eyes which the major could not understand.

"You think he—Smith—is certainly killed?"

"I fear so—we cannot tell one more brave life gone—that is all, and our own turn may come at any moment."

"Hark! What is that—what is that?" the girl bounded forward.

A rush, a cheer raised long and loud in eager little crowd collecting, which opened, however, to let Dorothy's slender figure speed in and up to its central figure—a tall man alighting from a horse and giving a strained crumpled paper into Major Harvey's eager hand, who read it as he stood there, and then cried aloud:

"If we can keep up for two more days, my friends, we shall be saved!"

Then the cheer broke out again, but as it rose, Smith just sank down at his officer's feet, and Dorothy's practiced eye saw the thin red stream glistening through the torn uniform.

Calm and helpful, Dorothy Beauchamp stood beside the surgeon as she had stood beside many a wounded man, for she was Dr. Carr's right hand in his laborious work.

With no trace of agitation save the intense pressure of the earnest lips, she handed the surgeon his appliances, and waited for his verdict as he examined Smith's wound.

"Not fatal," he said brightly. "We shall have him about again in a very short time. Miss Beauchamp, we can ill afford to lose a man like this. He will have the Victoria Cross, I should say, if he lives to return home, and never man deserved it more. Just give me that linen, Miss Beauchamp; I will finish his dressing before he returns to consciousness."

Dorothy gave a nervous start and handed the linen with a sudden flush upon her thin sweet face.

What memories! What flood of sudden old dear memories came upon her at sight of that handsome face laid white and still upon the pillow, clearly and fully exposed for the first time to her gaze!

She gave a great start, but she had no time for thought, as the busy surgeon began his task.

"Here, take this, Miss Beauchamp; keep it for him when he asks for it, will you? Some love-token, no doubt, poor fellow! Ah well, a woman might be proud to be constant to a man like this. Curious thing, though, this little trinket has, without doubt, diverted the bullet's course. Strange, now, on how trifling a thing one's existence hangs: this bit of gold has saved your poor fellow's life."

Dorothy, accustomed to the little doctor's moralizing, went on with her preparing of the dressings, without glancing at the trinket which Dr. Carr put down as he continued his work, but when the wound was dressed, he picked it up again.

"Look here, Miss Beauchamp, how this gold is bent: without doubt it saved the poor fellow's life by diverting the bullet's course; just one hair's breadth to the right would have made all the difference."

Dorothy looked at the trinket then and uttered a little cry.

She stretched out her hand for it, and as she held the little crescent set with diamonds, and suspended to a slender golden chain, all her vague memories assumed shapes of certainty.

St. Patrick and the Pirates.

During Patrick's childhood, while playing upon the seashore with his two sisters one day he was seized by Irish pirates, taken to Ireland and sold to the petty chieftain of a pagan clan in that country. Like the prodigal son, he was sent into the field to feed swine. While thus engaged, the religious instruction received from his pious mother came fresh to his mind and touched his heart. Bowing before God he sought and obtained pardon for sins.

St. Patrick has left a vivid account of his being thus converted. It is contained in a Latin manuscript which he calls his "unseen son," and which, with a letter—at least in Latin—addressed to Coroticus, a Welsh chieftain, who had seized several of Patrick's Irish converts, is the only literary relic of him that has been preserved.

"I am 16 years old," he says, "and knew not the true God; but, in that strange land, the Lord opened my unbeliefing eyes, and, although late, I called my sins to mind, and was converted with my whole heart to the Lord, my God, who regarded my low estate, had pity on my youth and ignorance, and consoled me as a father consoled his children."

Thus it was that this young sinner was born again by the truth and spirit of God, while wandering, solitary and alone, over the green pastures of Ireland.

Of the power and genuineness of his subsequent religious experience he writes as follows: "The love of God increased more and more in me, with faith and the fear of his name. The spirit urged me to such a degree that I poured forth as many as 100 prayers in one day. And even during the night, in the forests and on the mountains where I fed my flock, the rain, snow and frost, and sufferings which I endured, excited me to look after God."

The Spirit fermented in my heart.

St. Patrick's Legends.

In his efforts to convert the Irish pagans St. Patrick met with much opposition from their heathen priests, the Druids, who employed every possible trick and deception to retain their hold upon the people. It was to expose these imposters that many of St. Patrick's most remarkable miracles were performed. He cursed the kettles which the Druids employed in the performance of their mysteries, so that nothing could be boiled in them. He transformed the fertile lands into bogs, and banished the fish from the waters, to show the marvelous power he had derived from God.

But the Druids still remaining obstinate, he caused the earth to swallow them up, and so put an end to Druids in Ireland forever. Another of St. Patrick's miracles is thus described in the old Irish ballad of "Polly Roe":

St. Patrick, as is legends told,
The morning being very cold,
In order to assuage the weather,
Collected bits of ice together,
Then gently breathed upon the pines,
When every fragment blazed on fire.

The dressed-beef handlers of Missouri, who have large interests in Kansas City, have adopted a novel way of making war on the states which pass laws, like that of Indiana, for the exclusive of all meats not produced within the state. This plan is to boycott the cattle of the states enacting such legislation. Colorado is now subjected to this discrimination. A Colorado brand being equivalent to rection, the dealers in Kansas City say the same method of "get-out" will be adopted in regard to other states.

PLYMOUTH.

Saturday night a fight occurred on our streets in front of the Miller & Westfall saloon in which Ol' Westfall pounded Bob Black quite severely. As we hear it Black has a dislike for Westfall and whenever he gets drunk shows it out. He refused to complain of him for selling him liquor although he had been mauled he preferred whiskey and whippings to peace and sobriety. This place continued its business right on although the council rejected their liquor bonds thus violating the state law from May 1st to the evening of May 8th when they got the bonds in such shape as the council accepted them. Yet every election day they tell us we have a good enough law and they generally live up to it. Oh how long you American citizens will you listen to the pleadings of the widow and orphan, the wives and sisters of our fair land? How long will you look upon the fallen and remain unmoved? How long before you will acquit yourselves like men?

A teacher in one of the public schools, having occasion a few weeks since to punish one of his scholars for some misdemeanor, placed him on the platform to wait till he heard some classes recite, but the culprit took advantage of the teacher's engagement and escaped from the schoolhouse. The teacher being somewhat vexed promised another scholar a reward of a quarter if he would bring the runaway back to the schoolhouse; before this could be accomplished however, the boy who had escaped heard of the offered reward, and sent word to the teacher that he would "return and take the whipping for a dime—cash down."
