The Y. W. C. U. is fairly organized and the members meet every Monday evening. They desire to announce that they will make ladies and children's underwear for any person or of any kind, size, shape or description. The young ladies are planning for active work and intend to keep their hands busy.

Col. B. C. Kellogg, who recently visited the battlefield of Chickamauga for the purpose of properly locating the troops engaged in that battle, has returned to Washington. He is now engaged at the war department preparing his report, which will be accompanied by a number of maps showing the entire plan of that memorable fight with the brigades and regiments engaged.

If the village council does anything that does not suit you—cut 'em.

They get no salary for the time devoted to looking after the affairs of the village from year to year and do what seems best for everybody, but that don't matter.

They are elected for the express purpose of pleasing all factions and persons at the same time, and if they don't do it cut 'em. They expect it and will be disappointed if you don't.

George McVay, of Harrison, Clay Co., is visiting friends in town. For the past ten years he has been suffering with a painful sore on his heel which was caused by jumping.

Dr. Burgess operated on it Friday and instead of finding a piece of loose bone as he expected he found a mass of hair next to the bone which had caused all the suffering. When and how it got there is a mystery. The young man is doing well at this time.

Just fifty dollars was raised the other afternoon at the factory for the Johnstown sufferers. The other citizens did not respond very liberally to the call for aid. As a rule the laboring men are much more liberal with their means than are others. Calls for aid will be responded to more quickly and freely from them than from the man who has a little and hangs on to it with a vice-like grip.

The man with several thousands dollars worth of property who refused to give a quarter of a dollar for decoration day services or anything for the Johnstown sufferers is a poor stick beside the workman who freely gave a mite.

John Waterman celebrated his eighty-fourth birthday at the residence of his son—Richard B. Waterman—in Salem township last Tuesday. In 1834 he moved into Northville and purchased a half acre of land on two of the corners of Main and Center streets—the corners where the Recruit block and Masonic block stand.

Since that time he has been a continual owner of real estate in the village and thinks he has owned property in Northville longer than anyone now here. He was one of the pioneers of this section of the state and has not only watched its growth but has added to the state some of the best of her citizens for his children are a credit to him and the community.

Mr. Waterman is yet lame, but is improving daily and the physician joins with his children in wishing him many years yet of life.

Rev. W. T. Jacques occupied the pulpit at the Sijamit Congregational church last Sunday. And a goodly number were present whether considered. The Sunday school numbered sixty-eight. A vote of thanks was tendered the Presbyterian society for the singing books donated to the Sunday school. Prof. O. L. Palmer will preach next Sunday afternoon.

It will be remembered that mention was made in these columns a few weeks ago of the visit with relatives at this place of L. H. Brannock, of California, and mention was made of his being on a tour around the world.

The following we copy from the Pontiac Bee Paper. "Mr. L. H. Brannock of Santa Cruz, California, arrived in Pontiac, May 24, and registered at the Hotel Hodges. He left this city for the golden state in 1852, and had not been in town long before it was reported that fortune had smiled on the old gentleman half a millions worth. It was also reported that his wife had been dead about twenty years, his children were grown up and on account of poor health he was on his way to the world for a change of air and scene.

Shortly after Mr. Brannock's arrival he was introduced to Mrs. F. M. Hagerman, regular boarder at the H. H. and it seems to have been a case of love at first sight. The feeble old man aged seventy-two years, became young again, laid aside his cane and showed his agility by climbing the hotel stairs two steps at a time. Mrs. Hagerman, who was divorced about a year ago, was also fancy free, although several parties had been showing marked attention of late, and in a very short space of time she announced her acceptance of an offer to become Mrs. Brannock. The marriage ceremony was to have been performed last Friday evening at the hotel parlor, but fearing Frank Hagerman, of Oxford, the divorced husband, might make some trouble, the youth of seventy-two and the maid of fifty left Pontiac Friday morning expecting to get married at Detroit. Whether they did so or not we have yet to learn. The efforts of the Detroit News, Saturday, to make a sensation of the affair, by its usual well known methods, fell very flat here where the parties and facts were known."

SCHOOL COLUMN.

SHALL MUSIC BE TAUGHT IN SCHOOL?

In regard to the matter suggested in these columns last week of "Music in schools" the following questions were sent to a number of our citizens and we publish some of their replies.

QUESTIONS.

1. Do you favor the teaching of vocal music in our public schools?

2. Will you please answer and give reasons for the same?

ANSWERS.

"I do. More and better music in our home, our schools and our churches will be an additional safeguard to our nation. Music helps to make men of more strength. I always loved music." "Whoever hath skill in this art, the same is of good kind and fitted for all things. We must of necessity mention music in schools; a schoolmaster ought to have skill in music, otherwise I would not regard him." Is not this the wise saying of Luther? the monk that shook the world?"

"In answer to your question, 'Do you favor the teaching of vocal music in the public schools?' I would say yes by all means. The purpose of public schools is to prepare the young for citizenship, and whatever conduces to this end is within the sphere of our educational institutions. To much of the present system of education tends to get something into the boy's pocket, and to little of it purports to put something into the boy. While a knowledge of vocal music may not assist the boy or girl in gaining a fortune, in after years, it will beyond doubt assist them in occupying their true position in society as well as having added to their moral being something that will be an unlimited source of pleasure, and while they may not become finished musicians they will have an ear which will enable them to appreciate and enjoy music in all its departments. Might we not go further and place the teaching of vocal music in our schools, on the ground of duty? How much of

In the distribution of this fund I am limited and directed in its use. The resolution reads as follows: "And to it further resolved that a sum of $5,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary, be and the same is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the state treasury not otherwise appropriated, on the warrant of the auditor general, to be expended under the direction of the governor of the state of Michigan for the purpose of assisting in paying the transportation to said dedication at Gettysburg of such survivors of the Michigan organizations who were present and participated in the battle of Gettysburg and who are residents of the state of Michigan as are not able to meet their own expenses."

A SON'S AWFUL CRIME.

One of the Most Shocking Crimes in the State's History.

Charles Veltz, a furniture worker of Grand Rapids, 23 years old, out of employment for some time past, became despondent. On May 23 he surprised a long-stabbed wife to a pistol, and going to the room where his mother, an invalid, lay, he stabbed her in the breast eight times, inflicting mortal wounds. Veltz then went to his own room and shot himself through the head with a double-barreled rifle. He died shortly after the tragedy was discovered.

Veltz had written to a friend that he contemplated suicide. The friend called at the Veltz home and was met at the door by the young man, who said it was too late. The visitor then started for a doctor, thinking Veltz had taken poison. The tragedy was thus disclosed to the world.

Among Veltz's effects are letters to the several newspapers in the city and to a number of friends. He gives minute details of his mental disposition since his act of his act. He did not want any relatives to speak of his mind, but after writing to his doctor, he left his care letter to write.

The latest swindling scheme the granger is called to meet is worked by a fruit tree agent. They propose to mark the trees and accept as say three or half the fruit for the first year. The farmer who enters the deal gives a bond of $500 for the faithful performance of his agreement. This is to be tested against the fact the agent's confederate calls a little later and makes an extravagant offer for the farm. The bond is discovered in a search of the records, and then the chance of an advantage arises to the disadvantage of the bond. The customer for the farm is seen to move and the swindlers divide his property.

GENERAL NEWS.

Chicago's Mystery.

On the 4th of May, Dr. P. H. Cross, an Irish physician in Chicago, was called to attend an aged person in his home and disappeared as soon from public view. He was reported as seen afterwards in the city, in London, New York, St. Petersburg and Toronto; and an unscrupulous reporter in the last named city telegraphed a manufactured interview with him to the papers. He did not return, however, and a few days ago his whereabouts remained in the mystery of a lake, View in the suburbs of Chicago, with numerous and unestablished stories of murder upon the head.

That is numberless told fabrication seems probable as the doctor was a prominent man and was believed to have dictated the secrets of his life to his wife.

The Kansas State Sabbath school association has passed resolutions declaring that prohibition in Kansas is a success; that instead of hindering the growth and prosperity of Kansas, it has stimulated it; it was the only solution of the labor problem, and expressing the hope that for these reasons the prohibition of Kansas may be victorious in their struggle.

AN OLD MAN'S DREAM.

An old man I watch you with the bright's
Lighting the beams of your golden hair,
Nearing within the stories of your eyes,
And kissing tenderly your cheeks so fair,
Whilst all my youth is in the far away;
I dream but of the time to come no more.
Wadist you have hardly returned unto me.

And yet I love you with a love so pure
As ever breath its birth in human breast,
I love you with a love that will endure,
And hold you ever as its first and best.
How I have watched, as one would do down.

Your many charms, my darling, soft and bold,

Longing to shelter you thro' storm and snow.

But you are yours, my dear, and I am old.

It would not do to place your slender hand.

With mine own, save for a little space,

It would not do for you and me to stand

Before the altar in God's sacred place.

Another one will come and two and three.

A lover with a youth as bright as thine.

And I will keep my anxious thoughts with mine.

And pray that you may taste love's joy divine.

May and December are not made to wed,

Spring's sun and winter's sun cannot meet.

God bless thee; there is so more to be said.

And keep thy faith and pray for him, my sweet!

Dream in the freight, I am watching near.

Weave all your tenderas over again,

May all life's happiness be yours, my dear,

Only for me the solitude and pain!

A TELLING STORY OF THE FRANCO-PRUSSIAN WAR.

BY MARCIA LECLERC.

CHAPTER II.

A DARING SIEGE.

THE mill was very old.

The family of Leroux had occupied it for generations past. It had gone down from father to son successively, each new owner accepting it as his birth-right, and bringing to it the toil and care, and thrift which slowly and surely brought riches and comfort to their train.

Pierre Leroux, the present possessor, had succeeded to the ownership while still young. Unlike most of his race who had been sharp-witted, learned, hard-working men, he was fonder of book-learning than of the market place and the corn-fields; less sharp in bargaining than generous in giving, shy and reserved, but of strictest virtue and truest charity, a man whom many misjudged and but few loved.

"A good son and a kind master," so the people said, "but too much of a dreamer, and easily起伏ed; with no eye for a girl's merry smile, and no care for the passage of the wine-cup at the village tavern." Up to 30 years of age he had never seemed to give thought or glance to woman, but then suddenly and unexpectedly he had taken the fancy of Lerouin its wiles, and most dangerous form. Ninetta Dar was the loveliest girl, the ardentest coquette, and the worst match in the village. She certainly was also the very last woman in the world any one could expect to subjugate the quiet reserved Pierre Leroux. Nevertheless she had done so with scarce an effort. He loved her at first sight, and with no thought of question as to who she might be.

The glory of her beauty dazed and intoxicated him. Still his sight grew blind and his brain reeled, and from that hour he had but one thought, to resolve left to win her.

A life once branched on the temptress sea of passion, is not one to be envied. No more was Pierre Leroux's. He passed through foyers of jealousy, through fires of infatuation, through thorns of delicious joy, and restless pain and sweet idleness. His very coldness and indifference hitherto only made him an easier and surer captive. His whole life was filled with but one memory—and dead to all else.

Ninetta at first conjectured with fear—that toed this devoted and yet timid wooer. His eyes spoke, even though his lips were dumb—he scarcely knew himself how much they betrayed, how plainly their pathetic entreaties told of the love consuming him—of the madness and tumult that were at once so mingled and so nameless to his own benumbed brain. In his strong young manhood, with the loyal faith, the dauntless courage, the honesty and truth that made his nature at once so noble and so great, he lay at this girl's mercy as utterly as if he were a rick to be broken—a straw on a river's current. She first storied in her power, then grew afraid of it—afraid because the game begun in carelessness had turned to such terrible earnestness—afraid because she had hitherto won love without scruple, and played with it as heedlessly as a child, yet now something of its pain and joy and wonder had touched her too; all that was purest tenderest most generous in her until now nature had been called forth, and for the first time the worth of a great passion shamed her own unscrupulousness. Had she but known it this very feeling proved her lord to be at last true—at last nobly—for it is the greatest and most brilliant type of a woman's passion when she feels its very depth and devotion are yet far short of what she would have them, when she loves them at the feet of the man who has won her heart, and deems the gift nothing.

In every grade of life—in every type and phase of character—now the old story repeats itself!

The love of these two—a village girl and a Norman Miller—might not seem to possess any striking characteristics, and yet the elements of tragedy lie beneath in the maturing of a romance terrible in its pathos, grand in its truth.

The quivering sunbeams danced on the river as it ran gurgling in the light on the solitary level of the corn fields, the hot rays poured their morning brilliance. The birds hidden in delicate shadow, noted out their songs of welcome; the tall lindens and the straight sombre rows of poplars swayed gently in the cool early breeze; everywhere blared the scarlet poppies, the gold of the corn, the flame of tulips, the hues of roses.

Pierre Leroux stood and looked at it all in the glow of the summer dawn, while the song of a lark thrilled the silence with melody, and echoed his heart's own music. His lips smiled, his eyes brightened, as he looked at the beautiful picturesque old house—the house where to-day his wife would be brought to reign henceforth in her gray girlish beauty as the idol of his life.

While he stood there thinking these thoughts, dreaming these dreams, the stillness around was broken by the beat of drums, the sound of marching feet. He started and looked away across the level golden fields to the white winding road beyond. He saw the gleam of color, a flash of muskets, a cloud of dust between the towering hedges and the slender poplar stems. nearer and nearer they came, marching steadily up to the mill entrance. He moved forward and stood before them.

"Whom do you seek?" he asked.

"A deserter," the officer in command answered him. "He escaped last night. Have you seen aught of him?"

"No," was the firm surprised answer.

"Well, see you harbor him not. There is a price on his head, and whoever conceals, or abets his escape, becomes amenable to the law. Here is a description of him."

He read a paper to the young man; his eyes meanwhile searching the orchard grounds and the old mill itself, as if for the fugitive.

"Do you wish to make search?" asked Leroux. "You are quite at liberty to do so, to tell the truth, I am the last man in the world to show pity to a deserter. I sympathize too strongly with France now to pardon any rot who has been caught at her in the struggle."

"You speak well," said the officer, glancing approvingly at the strong, well-knit frame and handsome figure of the young soldier. "Why do you not lend you aid in her service?"

The young man looked round at his possessions reflectively.

"I am not at liberty to do so. My rare have been sons of toil for many generations past. This mill is my heritage; besides—"

"What besides?"

A soft sweet smile crossed Pierre's grave face; his eyes brightened with exulting joy.

"I am about to be married," he said.

"Oh, a good enough reason for stopping at home. But take care you are not called out! Things look very black now. Those devilish Prussians are hitting us hard. They say that every man fit for service will be summoned ere long."

The bronzed face of the young soldier gleamed perceptibly. The golden notes of the dancing air quivered before his eyes, the song of the rising lark lost its ringing music; late his heart a faint tremor, not for himself, but for her, the fair girl-wife whom he might be called upon to leave, even in the first sweet days of wedded bliss.

"It is as France wills," he said; and then turned and led the way through the shadowy orchard grounds, and into the quaint old dusky chambers of the mill.

The search was in vain, of course. No likelihood was there of Pierre Leroux harboring a deserter—a creature whom his cold courageous nature held in abhorrence, whom his tongue would have lashed with fiery scorn and stung with fierce rebuke. The soldiers accepted his offer of refreshments. The officer lingered a short while longer, chaffing and laughing good humoredly with his frank blue-eyed host; and then the whole party left, west away through the green meadows and along the winding field paths, and so into the high road once more. Pierre Leroux watched them, shading his eyes from the sunlight.

"Will they find him, I wonder?" he said to himself. "He deserves his fate if they do."

"Good morrow, Pierre Leroux," said a voice beside him. "I have brought a present for thy wife that is to be.

"I am here besides, am I not?"

He turned round.

"What is it, Rose Michel?"

"I have brought some flowers for thy bridal chamber. It is a poor gift, but I have none other to offer."

"The gift is welcome," he said kindly.

"Will you go within?"

"Presently. Were those soldiers who left you just now?"

"Yes, they are searching for a deserter. Have you seen aught of a soldier loitering in the neighborhood?"

"Not I. Did they give you news of the war?"

"Very bad news. They seem to think more volunteers will be needed."

"I heard so. Every able-bodied likely youth is to be called out. A sad day for us girls. You might have to go, Pierre. What would you ride say, think you?"

He was silent.

"Not but I dare say she would soon console herself," resumed Rose spitefully. "A born coquette is Ninetta, and one that will need to be well looked after by the man who meets his honor to her keeping."

"The young man turned swiftly on her, his eyes blazing fire.

"How dare you say such words of my wife?" She is all that is pure and virtuous. Her only faults have been the faults of youth and light-heartedness."

"She is blind," muttered the woman. "It will be well for you, Pierre Leroux, if you never sue to-day."

"Know you sugar to Ninetta's discredit?" he demanded fiercely.

"If I did, I would hardly tell you," laughed the woman sneeringly. "It is ill work opening folk's eyes that love to be blinded. You will find her out soon enough—soon enough."

And chuckling and laughing she went away into the bright, old, tiled kitchen, and up from thence to the cool old chamber, which the bride was so soon to call her own. From place to place she strolled, arranging the friends of fern, and clusters of roses and snowy wealth of lilies which filled her basket. The lovely delicate blossoms filled the room with fragrance and color, and enhanced its snowy purity and dainty cleanliness. Rose glistened round in all with matronly eyes and envious heart.

"For a worthless chit like that to have such a home," she muttered. Then on the table, before the owl-glass which would so soon reflect the young bride's face, she placed a bunch of deadly herbs—rue, nightshade, henbane.

"For luck," she chuckled maliciously, and then closed the door, and left the room to silence and sunshine.

The Light of Shooting Stars.

While commenting on a memoir presented to the Academy of Sciences, M. Corot gave it as his opinion that the light emitted by shooting stars is not due to conflagration or to the heat of impact. In those high regions our atmosphere is too unsubstantial to render the explanation acceptable. It is much more likely the phenomenon is one of static electricity developed by simple friction, and it is well known that rarefied gases can be made to glow intensely with but very little electric fluid.

A Hawk-Spotting Hog.

Clyde Sweet of Cumming, Ga., is credibly the Eli Perkins of that vicinity. He says his father has a hog that will spot a hawk sailing around in the air, and will hang around under the pirate bird until it makes a swoop. Mr. Hog then starts up, snatches the hawk out of the air and devours it. Clyde's father also has a cat that catches and eats rabbits.

The Cause of the Complaint.

Irritated passenger—"Say! can't you open the ventilators and give us a little fresh air? It's roasting hot in this car." Conductor (respectfully)—"Ventilators are all open, sir. It doesn't do any good." (To train boy) Johnny, if you sell any more copies of Amelia Bixby's new story in this car I'll throw you off the train!"

No Marriage After the Resurrection.

They were having a mild matrimonial disagreement, one of those disputes which are rather contests of the wit than of the temper.

"How?" Tom said. "I could never understand why it is that poor girls are so frantic to be married, and then so dissatisfied with the result afterwards."

"In the first place," his better half answered, "girls are never frantic to be married; they are just bullied into it by the men, and it stands to reason when they find out what has happened to them they would give anything in the world to be out of the fix. In the second place, if the girls had the faintest idea of the laizes and general worthlessness of your sex there wouldn't be another marriage between now and Doomsday. For my part, I am convinced that the reason there are to be no marriages after the resurrection is that then poor sex will be shown up in its true colors, and no girl will look at one of you fellows."

"Dreadful, my dear!" he responded, "but恐怕able because it has been shown over and over that there is one thing for which you women do not care a fig; it is moral cæsarean—so I am inclined to think that the true reason of the suspension of matrimony after the day of judgment is that there will be no women saved for us to marry."

"At least," she retorted, getting a small last word, "we shall then be spared the worse that could do to us. We might be condemned to an eternal marriage, you know."

NEW MEXICO'S HERO.

The Truth About "Billy the Kid," Who Figured in So Many "Penny Dreadfuls."

Troope has been more criticized probably about "Billy the Kid" than any other.

It is a letter to the New York Herald, than any other murderer who ranged the vast plains of New Mexico, and yet practically nothing was ever known about him before he came to this territory.

It is said that he was once employed at the Palmer house in Chicago as a waiter or bell boy, where he frightened a guest into fits who had ventured to remonstrate with his style of doing things.

He was the embodiment of malignant cruelty, the despoiler of innocence, a murderer by nature, and a foe to law, order, and society.

At the same time the possessor of these traits was a singularly handsome youth—he was but 23 years of age when he was killed eight years ago—with an open, pleasing countenance and mild blue eyes. His skin was so soft as a girl's, his form slight and well knit, and his voice agreeable. But one feature suggested the animal and that was his mouth.

His lips never closed over as beautiful white teeth as were ever seen in a human head, and when he was angry this characteristic gave him a tigerish expression.

Few men have lived who were entirely devoid of mercy.

"The Kid" was one of them.

He had no love of home or of human kind.

He deliberately chose to be an outlaw, and held the friendship of men as lighter than the pressure of his finger upon the trigger of his Winchester.

It was his ambition to become the leader of a band of outlaws, and this ambition was attained.

He ravaged sections of this territory and for years escaped arrest.

When at last he was apprehended the authorities were astounded to see the presence of his tigerish countenance.

In jail his ferocity asserted itself.

By means of a well laid plot two of his men succeeded in gaining entrance to the place where their leader was confined.

A revolver was given him and the three marched out to freedom. But

FLOWERS FOR THE DEAD HEROES OF GETTYSBURG.

Detroit, Mich., June 3, 1889.

Kind friends—Over a quarter of a century ago, this nation had a terrible war for national life. The greatest battle of that war occurred at Gettysburg, Penn., in July, 1863. For three days over 150,000 men on both sides fought, and nearly 40,000 men lay dead and wounded on that awful battlefield. Soldiers from seventeen states of the north participated in the terrible conflict, and the sacred dead who fell there have been gathered into a great national cemetery and the said states are erecting large monuments where each of their regiments fought.

On Wednesday of next week, the Michigan monuments will be dedicated. The survivors of the great battle and many people from Michigan are going there for that purpose. The president of the United States, governors of the states, and many distinguished people have been invited. The occasion will be interesting and the living veterans who fought there wish to decorate the graves of their fallen comrades in a becoming manner with a car load of Michigan flowers, to be contributed by teachers and pupils of Michigan schools. Kind friends, will you assist us in this patriotic object? The express companies will carry the flowers free to the city, and the railroad companies will take them to Gettysburg free. And now as those noble youths and men gave up their precious lives for their country, will you not assist also in doing honor to their memory?

It is the request of the floral committee that you bring together cut flowers and arrange them in bouquets, or as you prefer, carefully pack them in a box so they will not be shaken about and direct them to "O. B. Curtis, Detroit, Mich." Write also on the box "flowers for Gettysburg, from Northville." Please put them on the express car so they will surely arrive in Detroit by six o'clock on next Monday evening, June 10th, and as much earlier as possible. They can be sent in on Saturday evening or early Monday morning, if preferable.

Yours fraternally,
O. B. Curtis, 2d Michigan Infantry.

WILBUR HOWARD, 2d U. S. Sharpshooters.

H. M. Moore, 7th Michigan Cavalry.

The Boston Journal reminds us that during the last fifteen years, 310 amendments to the constitution of the United States have been proposed in Congress, only three of which have been adopted. The constitution of the United States is about the only thing we have in this country that doesn't go out of style.

"Is the editor in?" asked a stranger as he peered curiously through the door at the sanctum. "Yes sir," responded the man at the desk. "Ken you tell me where I kin see him?" "I am the editor." "G'wad." "Certainly. Is there anything I can do for you?" "You don't mean to say you are the editor?" "Yes sir." "Well, I be darned. You don't look any different from anybody else."

DOING GOOD IN HIS WAY.

"There," said a neighbor, pointing to a village carpenter, "there is a man who has done more good, I really believe, in this community than any other person who ever lived in it. He cannot talk very much in public, and he does not try. He is not worth $200, and it is very little he can put down on subscription papers. But a new family never moves into the village that he does not find it out, and give them a neighborly welcome, and offer them some service.

He is on the lookout to give strangers a seat in his pew at church. He is always ready to watch with a sick neighbor, and look after his affairs for him. I believe he and his wife keep houseplants in winter mainly that they may be able to send bouquets to friends and invalids. He finds time for a pleasant word to every child he meets, and you'll always see them climbing into his wagon when he has no other load. He has a genius for helping folks, and it does me good to meet him in the streets."—S. L. Goss-Drexel.

LIVONIA MATTERS.

When I leave this world of toil and care,
And from sin and sorrow I am free;
And meet with friends again over there,
What a beautiful sight it will be.
When I am called to that promised land,
And dear friends once more I see;
And take them by the friends' hand,
What a beautiful sight it will be.
When again my old school mates meet,
Trust us to play with me;
And walk with them the golden street,
What a beautiful sight it will be.
When I meet my dear old mother there,
That once held me on her knee;
And rocked me in her old arm chair,
What a beautiful sight it will be.
When I am laid in the silent tomb,
And mine eyes no more can see;
And go to that land where flowers ever bloom,
What a beautiful sight it will be.
When my journey is o'er,
And I go where all agree,
There meet with loved ones gone before,
What a beautiful sight it will be.

A SUBSTITUTE.

A lady who is opposed to corporal punishment visited a school at the north end where the rod was being applied. Before going away she said a few words to the offender, and asked him to come and see her on a certain evening, promising that her daughter should sing and play to him. He said he would come, and at the appointed time a boy dressed in his best was ushered into her parlor, and for an hour or more his kind entertainers devoted themselves to his enjoyment. Afterward the elder lady took him one side and began to speak of the importance of good behavior and obedience to rules, when she was interrupted with: "Oh, I ain't that seller! He gin me ten cents to cum instid fe him!"—Editorial Transcript.

Cart Ross was too modest to say anything of certain good deeds he desired to hide under a bushel, such as the Parcys-Poss scholarship which he founded fifteen years since, as a tribute to his wife's memory, in the Royal Academy of Music, at a cost of $5,000; and the assistance he rendered to the more modern Royal college. He never went through the ordeal of a benefit or received a testimonial. Nine years ago he married again, and the domestic happiness he had so sadly missed re-started once more to his home.
