TOWN-TALK.

Corn is now making up for time it has lost.

The first haying we have heard of was done last Wednesday.

Millard expects a big crowd on the 4th. Gov. Luce is billed to be there.

Miss Hattie Yonkes is arranging another entertainment by her musical class.

The commissioners of the Michael Houghton estate met at the Park House last Tuesday.

Mrs. ex-president Hayes and Gen. Simon Cameron have passed over to the majority this week.

John Newison has arranged to move his harness shop to Durand. He will leave in a couple of weeks.

The Presbyterian Sunday school will picnic at Walled Lake next Wednesday, the day before the 4th.

It was expected that Stephen Andrews was dying yesterday but this morning he is about the same.

T. C. Richardson offers the choice from a barrel of buttons next Saturday. See his advertisement on last page.

There will be preaching services in the Catholic church at this place next Sunday morning at 10 o'clock and in the evening at 7:30.

Twenty-five to fifty dollars fine for driving sheep on the highway that have foot-rot, between the months of April and November.

The ladies of the Presbyterian society will serve ice cream and cake in the McKean building next Saturday evening. Go with your families.

Mr. Garfield says there will be plenty of huckleberries but there is so much water in the swamp that it will be difficult getting to them except by boat or raft.

Dr. H. M. Hard, of the Pontiac asylum, has severed his connection with that institution and accepted a position at Baltimore. Dr. C. B. Burr will take his place.

The condensed milk company have completed the organization of a new company and think they are in shape to push business. Hope they are and will do so.

The Chosen Friends had a very enjoyable social at their hall last Wednesday evening. This popular insurance order has a large and growing membership at this place.

Lost. Last week Thursday evening while at the commencement exercises on the way home a baby's gold chain with cameo charm. The finder will be rewarded by leaving at this office.

The wild market has been quite lively here this week. As high as twenty-nine cents has been paid by Starkweather Bros. Many knowing ones think the highest price has been reached by word and that it will drop.

Lute Elliott killed a rattlesnake Wednesday evening near the depot. It was young and only about fourteen inches long. It had four rattles. These snakes are about extinct in this locality and occasionally one is found as a reminder of days gone by.

It may not be generally known that "rag money" is due to soldiers or their heirs, if the soldier was at any time an inmate of a rebel prison. Soldiers who paid their own fare back to place of enlistment or discharge can recover the same upon application to the government.

The papers relate many amusing incidents about the manner in which things were located at Gettysburg last week by some of the Michigan boys. One of them—presumably J. W. Howd of this village, judging from the enthusiasm manifested by him since reaching home—who was trying to locate the exact spot where he stood in the line, said in a puzzled way "It was right here, I think; but that fence was over there further, and this tree was about 20 feet over that way." This knocked the crowd silly, as the tree was about three feet through. Another fellow at a point below Harper's Ferry, on the Potomac river, said a certain stone house was on the other side of the river when he was down there last.—Itasca Journal.

Complaints are published in different parts of the state about a green house that is on the growing wheat. Grave fears are entertained that they will injure the ripening berry. We were shown samples of wheat heads with a number of these little green animals on.

M. Crawford Safford, an extensive farmer, in the south part of this township was in our office yesterday and said he examined his wheat just before coming over here and could not find anywhere near as many of the vermin as he did several days ago. He thinks they may have had their day.

"I tell you, but work is scarce in this town," said a red-nosed man to an acquaintance, of whom he solicited ten cents. "I was in ———'s saloon all day Monday looking for work, and not a soul came around offering to give me a job. If times don't get better, I'll have to send my family to the poor-house."

Kudner, of the Lapeer Democrat, has the following in table etiquette, and he knows: "The proper eater is to serve strawberries with the stem on. A pile of sugar on one side of the saucer. Take the strawberry by the stem, dip it in the sugar, convey it to the mouth. It will take you some time to get your fill, but you will be doing the recheere thing."

While the battle of Gettysburg was being fought Dr. Edwin J. Wilton, of Richmond, Macomb Co., had his cannon pierced by a rebel bullet, and as the thing wouldn't hold water after that he hid it under a rock and went on with his fighting. When the Michigan veterans went to Gettysburg a few days ago to dedicate their monuments Dr. Wilton, who was one of the dedicators, hunted up his old canteen. It was quite rusty, but the bullet hole was still in it, and he brought it back to Michigan as a relic of the war and a reminder of his closest shave.

OUR JULY 4th CELEBRATION.

THE ORDER OF PROCEEDINGS FOR THE DAY.

BIG INDICATIONS OF AN UNEXPECTED CROWD.

Below we give the program as near as we have been able to learn it for the celebration which is to be held here July 4th, 1889. The committee of fifty citizens having the matter in charge have been greatly bothered in making a judicious disposition of the $900 placed in their hands to make the eagle scream to its utmost. They could not find any speaker who would engage himself so early in the season for the liberal amount of $200 which they were willing to pay as some other place might want his services who could not pay as much. So after a good deal of correspondence and urging they secured the Hon. Mum Poolittle, L. L. D., of Scraggy Hollow, Sleepy county, state of Canada, who will repeat his declamation learned while a kid at school. The memorable day will be ushered in by a grand national salute of fire crackers and torpedoes in charge of all the kids of town.

Any time after sunrise and before breakfast every Northvillian is expected to rise and prepare for the arduous duties of the great day.

At 7 o'clock the various whistles of the place may blow and all who desire can go to their various places of labor to earn money by the sweat of their brows and wag of their tongues.

At 9:30 in the morning the procession will begin to form headed by the drays as they come from the depot with freight. At 10:30 the procession will be completed and march to the post office where it will remain until the mail is all disturbed, when it will scatter and go to the well provided dinner which will be served at about three hundred places in the village—strangers are invited to help themselves wherever they may happen to be.

At 2 o'clock and at 3 they will form again and go to the post office to fill that place with tobacco smoke. After that they will be driven out of the post office as it will be closed the rest of the day—until 7 o'clock in the evening—and they can stand on the street corners or visit the different stores which will all be open, a few may gather at the lawn tennis ground for a little exercise.

The serious thing that may interfere with this procession is that the streets may not be in shape to march on by that time as it requires the oldest memories to remember back to the time of the commencement of the improvements.

The surplus crowds that cannot find room for celebrating in the place can hold an overflow meeting at Walled Lake or some other point that wants a crowd on that day.

In the evening there will be one of the largest displays of fire works that has been witnessed in this place since a larger one was shown. It will be exhibited in every yard where children can induce their parents to spend fifteen cents to show their patriotism and remembrance of the events that caused the Liberty bell to ring in 1776. The Record will give a detailed account of the causeries of the day.

"Novi boasts that she has among her 250 inhabitants one of the oldest women in the state. Mrs. Mary Ann Bush was born June 16, 1793, at Whitestall, Conn., where she passed her maiden days. Soon after she reached her 20th year she married Francis Bush, to whom she bore seven children, the only survivor being Mrs. A. Sage, of Novi, with whom she lives. Her husband died while yet in the prime of life. Mrs. Bush came to Novi 23 years ago, and while not obliged to do so she has worked hard up to the present time. She enjoys good health, feels quite as young as ever, and has smoked for 60 years, not to prolong, but to prevent headache."—Detroit News.

Lost. On the road between here and Salem two small account books belonging to B. F. Wright. The finder will confer a favor by leaving at Park house.

A tramp giving the name of Win. Shaw broke into E. S. Horton's house Saturday afternoon during the absence of Mrs. Horton and stole a suit of clothes, a revolver and some money. He started down the railroad track and at Plymouth went into a box car and put on Mr. Horton's pants and coat. Officers White and Jackson followed and arrested him south of that place. He was brought back and spent Sunday and Monday in the village cooler. He acknowledged the offense and was remanded to the circuit court for sentence. He is now in the county jail.

While hunting in Forrit's swamp, head of the lake, last Thursday, Art. Swover and one or two others discovered an eagle's nest and succeeded in capturing the contents—three young eaglets, which are about the size of month-old goslings. Charley Olitz has secured them for his museum, at the boat house, which among other living things, now contains a specimen soft-shell turtle, having only one eye; a gastropod, several anachnidias, of the genus pemelodus (vide Webster on a bridge), besides, as the auction bills say, "many other articles too numerous to mention"—at this time.—Orion Review.

THE GRAIN DESTROYER.

The grain aphid, or louse, was undoubtedly imported from Europe. Of late years it has become quite numerous in the New England states, Pennsylvania, New York and some of the western states, where it has done great damage to the wheat crop. They are all females, no males being required and this fact is vouched for by the best experts. Some have wings and some have not, the latter being the most prolific, it being estimated that they produce four young per day, and these becoming equally prolific in three days the total produce by the family in 20 days will be 20,000,000. No remedy has yet been found to prevent the destruction of these pests. They are provided with sharp pointed bills with which they pierce the leaves and stalks and suck the juice of the grain. The pests have a natural enemy in several species of parasites and "long bug".

FOR THE LADIES.

Mrs. Corporal Tanner Poetic Discourses.

Worth, the Man, Miller, and How
He Came to be Such a Fashion's
Summer Whims.

In the Garden.

She's fairer than a lily,
And she's sweeter than a rose,
And she knocks the neighbors silly
When she yields the garden hose.
She lifts her skirts from danger
With her left hand, while her right
Grasps the nozzle, and the stranger
Gets a very pleasing sight.

For she's always fresh and rosy,
And she seems so sweet and fair,
As she sprinkles every posy
With the most impartial care.

The neighbors' eyes all twinkle
And their interest daily grows,
For they like to see her sprinkle,
And they like to see the hose.

—Somerville Journal.

Worth, the Dressmaker.

Charles Frederic Worth was born in the town of Bourne, in Lincolnshire, England. His parents were English, and little dreamed that their name would ever become almost synonymous with the centre of the fashion world. It was their ambition that Charles should learn a trade, and with this end in view, apprenticed him at the age of thirteen to a printer. But the boy was so fastidious that he declined to soil his fingers even, and evinced a strong hostility to handling type. Against the kind remonstrances of his parents, he abandoned the printing office when he had been there but seven months, and as the saying is went up to London.

CHARLES FREDERIC WORTH.

The boy had previously written to a friend living in the capital, asking for assistance in securing a position in a draper's shop, or in what Americans call a dry goods store. His friend proved true, and after some difficulty procured for young Worth a situation in the house of Swan & Edgar. The lad evidently was a favorite at the start, and for more than six years continued to grow in the firm's favor. Speaking to an old acquaintance the other day Worth said, concerning his relations with the firm:

"The heads of the establishment, always treated me as if I were a near relative, and on one occasion, when I was seriously ill, Mr. Edgar took excellent care of me. Indeed, if it had not been for her I doubt if I should be alive today."

One naturally asks, How did Worth come to be a dressmaker? Those familiar with his past say that he first conceived the idea of becoming a designer of fashions while talking with the buyers of the firm.

Moreover, he frequently made suggestions which the heads of the departments were not slow to see in a favorable light. The more he talked with the buyers the more he resolved to go to Paris, and soon began the study of French. At length, unable to secure a positive engagement, he proceeded to the gay capital, and almost at once got a position with Gauguin & Co. I think Worth was now about twenty-two years old. In a few years he was at the head of the department, and strove to introduce several new departures. Failing to see his suggestions utilized, he established the firm of Worth & Bobergh. In 1870 he founded the now famous house of Worth.

He has dressed many queens and princesses, and has been awarded medals at many great exhibitions.

Mrs. Corporal Tanner.

THE ADMINISTRATION POET.

The following from the Philadelphia Times, although flavored somewhat with sarcasm, is such a choice bit of pleasanter that it will possibly give no offense if reproduced in these columns: The administration is to have a poet laureate—Mrs. "Corporal Tanner," the wife of the sturdy and widely-known Commissioner of Pensions. Ever since she graduated at Charlottesville, New York, she has written verse; but during the last year this has been gone into a stately and ambitious form that may be said to be unique. She has now three finished lectures written in verse, which she has delivered since inauguration day—one as her husband's substitute in Connecticut, when, in the middle of his campaign in Washington, she telegraphed him:

JAMES TANNER: Do not come. I will take your place.

And she did, reading a new lecture in verse on Soldiers, and especially the duty of the government towards them. Mrs. Tanner has four children, ranging from ten years old to twice ten, but she finds some time to give to the G. A. R., and to her other friends; the women suffragists.

I heard her lecture this week on this latter question—it was a rhythmic and rhymed argument, in the dialect of an old-fashioned New England farmer, a controversy between John and Betsy, after the fashion of Lowell or Carleton. Betsy's grammar was sometimes out of joint, but she had lots of facts and a shrewd wit and sarcasm that turned to derision John's ridiculous claims to superiority.

I have heard her lecture to the G. A. R., too. It is a heroic didactic verse and the mercuries of war time are emphasized by the scream of the old eagle Corporal and Mrs. Tanner seem exact counterparts like their predecessors, General and Mrs. Black. General Black is one of the most eloquent of orators and his wife an accomplished reciter, and each is proud of the attainments and ability of the other. Corporal Tanner is an eloquent man, facile and vigorous of speech, careful and precise of articulation, and with a strong voice capable of pathetic modulations; and Mrs. Tanner seems likely to win distinction in current polemics and dialectics.

Mrs. Tanner has a comely and attractive personality, a large head firmly poised upon ample shoulders and a square face, in which strength of purpose and decision of character are conspicuously marked. She wears her iron-gray hair brushed back from a high forehead in a style of which Madame Pompadour's coiffure was an illustrious example.

Commissioner and Mrs. Tanner are going next week to Georgetown to live, and there they will take the boys and girls and house-hold pets and penitents to a great, stately old mansion in the middle of two acres of lawn.

Such Pretty Ways.

"She had such pretty ways with her," that was the reason an honest, hard working man gave for marrying a girl of whom he knew little else, but who was really a professional bigamist, traveling about the country and marrying husband after husband as a matter of speculation.

It is the pretty ways of women which have ruined many a man of every age, including the greatest of generals, statesmen and philosophers.

If the pretty ways come from the heart it is all right. If they are the result of cold, selfish, calculating art, woe to him who falls their victim.

Nothing is truer than that women are both better and worse than men. A man could hardly be so bad as a woman is when she puts on the prettiest ways of her sex for mischief.

Characteristic of American Women.

"See that lady putting on her gloves," said a Frenchman, as he rode up in front of the Lafayette Hotel, according to the Philadelphia Inquirer. "Do you know that's the first means of recognizing an American lady on the streets of Paris? We would as soon think of buttoning up our vests, or putting on our ties after leaving the door for a walk, in Paris. Many and many a time we have picked out Americans in Paris, by that sign. I rather like the American girl for it, though. She looks as if she didn't care a cent whom it pleased or displeased."

Fashion Notes.

White skirts are undraped. Fashionable dress-makers manage to make them elaborate and decorative by alternate arrangements of plaits and gathers, shirrings and smocking, from the waist line, and panels and slashes, with rayers and borders, complete the elaboration.

In honor of the centennial year the Martha Washington kerchief, folded lightly and crossed over the chest, is worn with afternoon toilets. These kerchiefs are made of deep squares of white, cream and tinted silk, mull, ribbed or bordered with Puritan frills of silk lace.

Women who are sure that their throats and necks are pretty and white, full and well rounded, wear the wide-falling collar, like the Little Lord Fauntleroy's, now so popular with girls as well as with boys, or the deep falling plisse of mull or muslin or lace net, white, cream or tinted blue, yellow or pink.

Short-sleeved, very short cape-like mantles, with long lapels in front, the sleeves sometimes entirely of lace and bead fringes, are shown in a variety of forms and made of velvet gauzes, cashmere, bengaline, brocade silks and finished with tassels and flow of ribbon, passementeries, motifs, laces and ruche fringes.

Negliges for summer were never more charming than now. The tea-gowns, which have been cast down from their high place as reception dresses, are now universally made up as morning house dresses or negliges. They are generally made for summer of India silk or sheer French muslin, and in some cases of crepon, a light crumpled wool, which comes in delicate colors.

The long-handled parasol fails to find the general favor which was expected. It is too pronounced in style and too heavy. A parasol with a handle of medium size is preferred by the best dressed woman. There is considerable demand for pure white straw parasols with ivory or light carved wood handles. Bouffant styles in plain black or white net are also elegant for dressy use.

A VANISHED RACE.

Queer Sculpture and Painting on the Rocks in West Virginia.

The erection of the new Government dam in the river near Charleston, W. Va., has hidden from sight the famous "picture rock," one of the familiar landmarks of the Kanawha valley, and one which has occasioned much wonder and fruitless speculation. The rock was located near the mouth of Paint creek, and while the river was in its natural condition, was visible at low water every summer. Some years ago a part of the stone was removed for building purposes, an act of vandalism which should have been prevented at all hazards, and now the remainder is submerged at all seasons of the year.

When whole, the surface of the "picture rock" was about twenty by thirty feet in extent, and was covered with representations of animals, fish and fowls, carved deep in the smooth surface. On one side were the figures of a man and a bear, the latter being about life size. Near by was a buffalo track, and a short distance away was the representation of a large fish and a number of footprints, evidently representing the imprint of a child's feet. The work was evidently prehistoric people, as the traditions of the valley are that the representations were on the stones when the first white men visited the region, and that they then bore unmistakable signs of great age, being water worn and smooth.

The vicinity of Paint creek is rich in aboriginal and prehistoric relics, and a volume might be written of the discoveries which have been made there. Almost every excavation brings to light something of interest to the antiquarian, and there is every evidence that in past ages the valley was thickly peopled by an unknown race, probably contemporary with the mound builders of the Ohio valley.

At Moorefield, from the time of the first settlement, the cliff known as the Gap Rocks, in the Petersburg Gap, has borne the gigantic representation of a common fox. The picture is upon the sheer and inaccessible face of the rock, some thirty feet from the top and nearly one hundred feet from the bottom, and being colored a dingy yellow, in sharp contrast to the brown stone. Recently Glen McGill, of Ohio, who was visiting Cell Beans, went out to view the fox, accompanied by Mrs. Beans. After an inspection from the bottom of the cliff the two men ascended to the top, and making a rope fast to a tree, McGill lowered himself down to the fox. He describes it as being twelve feet long, and painted or plastered upon the cliff with a substance resembling earthenware glaze, which is as hard as the rock itself. The surface of the fox is quite rough, as though the stuff was roughly smeared on by hand before it hardened.

There was a high wind blowing at the time McGill made his venture, and he ran considerable risk. He took along a mallet and chisel, intending to cut his name on the fox, but was prevented by the force of the wind, which swung him about at an alarming rate.

This is a True Story.

A man by the name of Klinkingbeard says he was once hunting in the Virginia mountains. He got lost, traveled around all day until tired out, he sat down on a log to rest. After sitting there awhile he thought the log moved and jumped up and examined. He found to his unspeakable amazement that it was a large snake. He ran off about fifty yards and fired at it, but the ball glanced off without hurting the snake. The monstrous reptile raised its head about fifty feet, but Mr. Klinkingbeard soon had another load in his gun, and this time he aimed at the smooth place around the neck where there seemed to be no scales. This made the snake awfully sick and it spewed up a canoe and nine Indians.

Mrs. Gordon Mackay's Jewels.

The finest lot of gems possessed by a Boston lady are the property of Mrs. Gordon Mackay, the wife of the inventor of a sewing machine. Should she desire to appear with her dress adorned with all the contents of her jewel case she would probably stand up with not less than $300,000 worth of precious stones radiating the light in every direction from her. Next to Mrs. Mackay's collection comes a very beautiful one that has been selected with great care, owned by Mrs. John L. Shepard. Its value is certainly not less than $100,000. A pair of handsome diamond necklaces that are owned by Miss Shepard, being a gift from her parents, are worth $10,000. Mrs. John L. Gardner has $75,000 worth of diamonds, rubies and other precious stones. These are mainly set up in very fanciful and unique ways, and their fair wearer's taste in the selection of her articles of jewelry is often commended.—Boston Letter to Philadelphia Press.

FRIDAY, JUNE 2, 1889.

It is a fact that newspaper readers do not slight advertisements. They have come to realize that the advertisement in a newspaper represents the goods which the merchants have for sale, and they take pains to familiarize themselves with what shopkeepers have to offer. Moreover the constituency of a paper are very apt to be governed by what they read in their own paper. If the paper is accepted in its political, moral and intellectual tone, as our home paper, its advertisers share the respect and confidence bestowed upon the paper itself. This is an important fact for advertisers to remember at the same time it calls for the exercise on the part of the newspaper publishers of great care in the admission of advertisements.

In the case of the village against one Armstrong for violating one of the village ordinances by selling sewing machines without a license, was on trial Tuesday and Wednesday before Justice Loscy. After a long struggle a jury was found who had not expressed an opinion in the matter. The case was stubbornly contested all the way through. The village was represented by Geo. O. Kinsman, and the Singer company by J. Ten Eycke, of Pontiac, and a Mr. Tuttle, of Chicago. It was shown that the agent had sold machines in the corporation without a license, and for that he was arrested. The jury sustained the ordinance by bringing in a verdict of guilty. The case will probably be appealed to circuit court.—Oxford Globe.

Now is the joyous season of the year when if you are only acquainted with the precious secret of their preparation you can make for yourself with ten minutes' work candies more delicious than were ever purchased at the most expensive confectioners. The latter never have this particular sort of candies for sale because they will not keep. But, fresh-cooked, they are morsels for the gods, and this is the way to make them. Take some big strawberries, ripe but firm, and hull them. Then mix two cupfuls of granulated sugar with a little less than one cupful of cold water. Put the mixture on a hot fire and let it boil hard, until a spoonful dropped into cold water crystallizes to the brittle point immediately. Now take it off the fire and pour it into cups, previously warmed in the oven. Dip the strawberries one by one into this hot solution as quickly as possible, shaking them out with forks and laying them on greased tin pans. The briefest sort of an immersion will be sufficient to give each berry the desired coating of sugar candy. Finally, set the pans on the ice in the refrigerator, and as soon as the fruit is cold it will be ready to eat. Perhaps "gobbles" would be more appropriate word, considering the eagerness with which such strawberry glazes are usually consumed. In very truth they are not rivaled by any other kinds of sugar plums, as you will yourself confess, if you will try them. Malaga grapes may be treated in the same way.

HOW TO INCREASE WAGES.

Every thinker knows that the man who would succeed must do more work than he gets paid for, in every profession and trade. We take it for granted that the man who will do only $20 worth of work a week because his salary is but $20 will never get more than $20 a week, for the simple reason that he has never shown his employer that he is worth more. We figure it that an employe who means to succeed has to do from 10 to 20 per cent more work than he actually gets pay for. This he has to do until he reaches a certain point, and having reached that point he will find that by as much as his income has increased, by so much has the demand for amount and intensity of his labor diminished. To put this theory into figures, we will say that a boy receiving $8 a week should do $4 worth of work; the boy receiving $5 a week should do $7 worth of work; when he gets to be a man and receives $20 a week, he should do $30 worth of work; a man receiving $30 should do $40 worth of work, and so on until, say, the salary reaches $75 and then the laborer can give himself somewhat of a rest, that is to say, about $30 worth of work will satisfy his employer. Labor brings its market value, and is seldom overpaid, oftener underpaid. It is the experience—the "Know How"—that brings the money.—Philadelphia Ledger.

A WOMAN'S DISCOVERY. Another wonderful discovery has been made and that two of a kind in this country. This discovery has been made upon her and for seven years she withstood its severity. But her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz. Thus writes W. C. Hendrick & Co. of Shelby N. C.—Give a free trial bottle of A. M. RANDOLPH, Druggist.

COMMUNICATION.

EDITOR RECORD:—In your issue of June 21, you state the recent local option bill passed by our legislature, is not as good as the one passed two years ago as there are so many difficulties thrown around the securing of its passage that there will not be over five counties in the state that can take advantage of it. You will greatly oblige me if you will point out these great difficulties you mention. It seems to me that if a majority of the voters of a county are not in favor of its passage it would be useless to pass it, for unless you can elect officers on that issue the law would have no force if adopted.

Respectfully, K.
The writer of the above evidently looks at things differently from what the editor of the RECORD does. If we understand the bill rightly it requires a three-fifths vote to carry the measure in any county. The old bill only called for a majority vote and the additional requirement of so much larger majority will in nearly all of the counties, which passed the measure two years ago defeat it.

Then if the matter is carried at the polls by even a three-fifths vote, the law says the supervisors may, it does not say SHALL, take steps to enforce local option in the county. The bill after running the gauntlet of getting a three-fifths vote must wait the pleasure of the supervisors. As we said last week we believe these are insurmountable to the measure that will make it almost a dead letter and if it is not generally adopted in a large number of counties the opponents of temperance legislation will ask for its repeal on the ground of non-enforcement when the conditions are so that its enforcement is next to impossible.

PLYMOUTH.

On Friday evening of last week the Methodist church was packed until there wasn't even room for another to stick their head in. It being the occasion of the school commencement. The church was beautifully decorated. The class of seven was made up as follows: Emma Durfee, Mary Fairman, Mary Rodgers, Theron Harmon, Edgar Bennett, Forest Smith, Edward Hough. The class motto was an excellent one and we hope all may live up to its fullest meaning. "What we ought to be, we will be." The music furnished by Mrs. J. W. ... Mrs. Berdan, Misses Carlin, ... Bennett, Mary Rodgers, Carrie Brown, Maud Sherwood and C. E. Gage, Bert Roe, E. H. ... Bert Bennett, G. F. Hall and Fast E. Bennett with his late wealth of song an excellent quality that cannot speak of any except to say it was good. Ed. Hough gave as "The glories in our platform," then Theron Harmon told of "Not much in a little, but a little in much," when Mary Fairman appeared with her essay "Wanted," and Edgar Bennett showed us "Where to draw the line." Emma Durfee essayed on "Modern agonies," and Forest Smith came with "The power of thought," and Mary Rodgers presented her essay on "Shams." The Adrian scholarship was awarded to Miss Emma Durfee. Dr. Jackson of New York is about to try an interesting experiment in marine propulsion. He has constructed a boat one hundred feet long, often tons burden, with a boiler of one thousand five hundred horse power applied to a Worthington pump, used to eject a three-quarter inch jet of water from the stern post at the keel line. This stream is to issue under a pressure of 2,500 pounds to the square inch, which is expected to give the vessel a speed of from thirty to forty miles an hour. If successful, this simple water jet invention will effect a revolution in the art of steam navigation. Dr. Jackson is a man of varied scientific attainments and a successful inventor.

Miss A.—Splendidly.—Boston Courier.

It is not often that a rooster has any particular desire to take a bath, but a few days ago a Port Orman, N. J., bird showed that under the pressure of necessity he could swim like a duck. He was chased by a dog to the edge of the Morris Canal, and, seeing no other mode of escape, he jumped in. The dog followed, but the rooster, using both wings and feet as propellers, forged rapidly through the water. An eye witness reports that the winged one was the faster swimmer, and when he struggled up the opposite bank the dog was a bad second. The triumphant rooster stood upon the shore and crowed for over a minute, and, while thus engaged in self-laudation, the dog landed and almost succeeded in catching him by the tail. He saved himself by uttering a scream.

ONLY A WHILE.

PEARL RIVERS.

Only a little while to work,
And a long, long time to rest.
Then drive the cloud from the aching brow,
The sigh from the troubled breast.

Only a while to watch and pray,
And then a long, long time to praise;
Our God, the Father, knoweth best—
Then question not His ways.

Only a very little while,
As short as the going down
Of the setting sun, to meekly bear
The cross and the thorny crown.

Only a little while to sow,
And a long, long time to reap.
Let's sow in faith with an open hand,
And tares from the good seed keep.

Only a little while to lose,
And a long, long time to find.
The jewels death has robbed us of—
The friends we will leave behind.

Only a while to trim our lamps,
Ere the bridegroom passeth by;
Then fill them well with the oil of life,
Let the flame rise pure and high.

Only a little while—what matters it
If our life be short or long?
If we only sing a few faint notes
Of the whole of the changing song?

Only a while our bark must drift
To the misty Isle of Tears,
Where the pirate, Time, has buried deep
Lost hopes from the bygone years.

Only a while these barks are borne
On the swell of sorrow's waves,
By the stranded logs of other days,
By a shore of grassy graves.

Only a while they'll struggle on,
Mid the darkness and the strife;
Then God will drop their anchor deep
In the quiet sea of—Life.

A THRILLING STORY OF THE FRANCO-PRUSSIAN WAR.

BY MAURICE LEGRAND.

CHAPTER V. THE WRATH OF LOVE.

To be with those we love
Doth work like madness in the brain.

—Coleridge.

SHE sat in the old tiled kitchen, her hands crossed listlessly on her lap, her face pale, her eyes heavy. The table was prepared for the evening meal, and flowers decorated the snowy cloth and gave color and fragrance to the simple homely arrangements.

His eyes took in the whole quiet pretty scene—the clean blue and white tiled floor, the glitter of the brass pots and pans, the dusky walnut-wood presses, the old oak chairs and trestles, and above all, the quiet little figure leaning so listlessly back in her seat, with the spotless headgear and blue kirtle of the picturesque Norman dress.

He stayed an instant on the threshold. As his step paused and his shadow fell she started from her listless attitude. She went to meet him swiftly, her eyes shining welcome, her lips smiling, her face upraised for the kiss that never failed to greet her. But she met a look that drove the blood back to her heart with a deadly sickening fear. She covered back, her arms fell to her side, her slight frame trembled, her bright girlish beauty changed into a shamed and shrinking semblance of the guilt he sought and the fear he dreaded. He looked at her in silence for a moment.

"Is this thing true?"

The words were few and stern, but they pierced to her heart with a terror she could not conceal. Her head drooped on her breast, she stretched out her hands to him in piteous appeal.

"Pierre, what have you heard? What do you mean?"

"You can ask that—your own words condemn you."

She looked at him with wide appealing eyes; her lips quivered like the lips of a grieved child.

"Indeed, indeed, you wrong me," she cried. "I have done nothing very faulty; I—"

The attempt at extenuation fired his whole soul with fury.

"Answer me," he cried, seizing her in his arms and gazing down at the pale, frightened, quivering face, with eyes whose passion and wrath struck fresh terror to her heart. "Answer me—your whom I loved, and deemed fairest, purest, truest among women—whom do you seek when you steal from my sight at dead of night, like a thing of guilt and shame? Who is it you love so well that you risk reputation, honor, peace, for his sake? Oh, Heaven, that I should have to ask it! Oh, love! Oh, wife! say it is false; look in my face as you looked but a few short hours ago, and I will curse myself that my lips have wronged you by even the utterance of a doubt."

The wild impetuous words poured out her prayer unchecked, unstayed; but with all the agony she suffered, with all the yearning for his trust—his faith—that thrilled her to her heart's core, she could not yield to his prayer or answer the entreaty.

"Who has told you this?"

The pale lips, the shrinking form, were not those of innocence. A tempest of fury shook him once more.

"Is this all you say?" he cried in his torture. "Are you then what that woman called you—beautiful, seductive, tempting—a traitress to honor and to womanhood?"

"I am none of these," she flashed out scornfully, stung by reproach so great, by calumny so vile.

"None! Then why not refute the charge? Why not answer what I ask? A word—but one word—is all I need. Have you stolen out at night and galled down the river to meet some man—some lover, as I heard?—Yes, or no? Nay, do not shrink; I will have the truth now if I track your paramour to his hidden lair and force it from him with my knife at his throat."

A change passed over her face and stole all its warmth and bloom. till it looked like the grayness of death. He saw it and his voice rang out imploringly. "Oh, my love, I frighten you; forgive me; you know I love you. You know the upraised voice of all the world would never make me believe ill of you. Why do you torture me so? A word, one little word, is all I need; a word you can utter so easily."

"Heaven help me, I cannot."

The faint imploring cry broke from her white lips involuntarily. She hid her face in her hands and burst into a passion of wild agonized weeping. He who loved her so, who would have cast the very shadow of grief or suffering from her path could he have willed it, looked down on her now with the mute despair of a broken heart, with the tearless agony of a shaken faith.

"You cannot. Are you then guilty?"

"Of deceiving you—yes. Of aught else I am innocent."

His laughter rang out fierce and wild on the stillness.

"Of deceiving me! Oh, no! That is no sin, no wrong! Your lover has taught you to reason well."

"I have no lover," she moaned. "It is a lie."

"Whom do you go to meet then, like a thing of infamy, as they have called you?"

She was silent, while the glow of the fire flames flickered over her white changed face, and showed him the pathetic misery of her imploring eyes.

"You will not say. Well, then, I believe the worst. The woman who withholds a secret from her husband would count it a small thing to dishonor his name, his love, his rights. Your looks, your words, condemn you. You have had my love; you have smiled in my eyes; you have talked of a lifetime spent in the joy that has made this past week a very paradise; and now you have deceived and betrayed me."

"If you think that," she cried, with the sudden anger and indignation of her outraged womanhood, "your love is little worth. If you can listen to the tongues of slander and believe such villainess as you have imputed, you are less worthy of my love than I of yours."

The fiery indignant words touched him with remorse.

"What secret is it then, you withhold from me?" he pleaded. "Oh, think, is not my love wide enough to forgive, my trust deep enough to shelter you from all consequences? Is it some youthful folly, some girlish imprudence that has woven this mystery and secrecy about you? Only tell me, Nisette; you do not know what I suffer!"

The agony of his voice, the passion in his eyes, touched her more deeply than any reproach. She threw herself at his feet, the great salt tears blinding her gaze as it sought his face, and sought in vain for the love and trust of old.

"I don't know," she moaned, "for I suffer, too."

"Then tell me; trust me."

"I cannot."

Once more these fatal words; once more that terrible despair which defied all entreaty; and admitted of but one interpretation. He laid his hand upon her shoulder with the grasp of a desperate man.

"To kill you were a crime; but heaven knows it were a crime justified by the madness and the shame that is my portion henceforward."

The fire of jealousy scorched his heart as with a hot iron. The ferocity of an undisciplined race, stern of creed and rigid of honor, stirred and woke beneath this bitter provocation. The light of certainty showed him but one belief, to that he clung, though its agony maddened him. Before that cry of inability, before that silence of shame, his doubt grew surer, his faith fell as a tree whose roots the ax has severed.

"Go to him you shield," he cried wildly; "go and laugh together over the poor fool that once loved you; once, ay, once, but long ago! The woman that I loved is dead!"

Then he released her, and without another look upon her face he went out from the house, ere his strength should fail him, ere his hands should be stained with the blood of the fair foul creature he had brought to his hearth and home in the fondness of a passionate joy, in the trust of a great love.

She lay where he had left her, in the glow of the wavering firelight. Tearless sobs shook her, a great dread numbed and froze the blood in her veins. The intense agony of those first few moments would have made unconsciousness a blessed relief, but it never came. Each sound, each sight—the ticking of the clock, the stir of a leaf, or the rustle of a branch against the open casement—all came to her with clear and painful distinctness. The coolness of the midsummer air deepened the gray hues of twilight, then at last she rose and dragged her weary frame to that accustomed seat by the fire, and shivered in the warm, golden glow as if the coldness of winter reigned around.

"He must let me tell," she moaned. "My oath cannot outlast such wrong and misery as this. But how to reach him now? Oh heavens, if I should be watched, tracked, discovered!"

She sat there motionless, her brain racked with the effort at invention of schemes and plans, each in its turn cast aside as futile. The serving girl came and cleared away the untasted meal, and spoke wonderingly to her, and asked if she needed aught, but she only shook her head and answered nothing.

To all external sounds and cares she remained blind and deaf. The reaction that follows upon intense excitement was with her, and she lay in the dull, heavy stupor of a misery so intense that it numbed her senses to all sentimental life, and left her but the memory of suffering.

The delicious coolness of the air as it swept over her aching brow brought the first sense of relief she had yet felt. A cluster of rose foliage smote her as the wind stirred it; the quivering luminance of the moon and stars lit up the whole quiet grounds; the far-off murmur of the flowing water broke in monotonous music against the motionless wheels of the mill.

As her gaze swept over the vast stretch of silent country, she heard a step on the path, a shadow fell across the silver lake which the moonbeams had made on the dewy sward.

"Are you looking for your husband, Mistress Leroux?" said a harsh voice in her ear. "You will never see him more—he has enlisted as a soldier, and marched with the troops yonder, an hour ago!"

A Touching Incident.

The following, which appeared in a Detroit paper, is one of the most touching incidents to be met with. If true, it was a very remarkable case, and if merely imaginative, it is very suggestive.

There is a family in this city who are dependent upon a little child for the present sunshine of themselves. A few weeks ago the young wife and mother was stricken down to die. It was so sudden, so dreadful, when the grave family physician called them together in the parlor, and in his solemn, professional way intimated to them the truth—there was no help.

Then came the question among them who would tell her. Not the doctor! It would be cruel to let the man of science go to their dear one on such an errand. Not the aged mother who was to be left childless and alone. Not the young husband who was walking the floor with clenched hands and rebellious heart. Not there was only one other, and at this moment he looked up from the book he had been playing with, unnoticed by them all, and asked gravely:

"Is mamma doin' to die?"

Then, without waiting for an answer, he sped from the room and upstairs as fast as his little feet would carry him. Friends and neighbors were watching by the sick woman. They wonderingly noticed the pale face of the child as he climbed on the bed and laid his small hand on his mother's pillow.

"Mamma," he asked, in sweet, caressing tones, "is you afraid to die?"

The mother looked at him with swift intelligence. Perhaps she had been thinking of this.

"Who told you—Charlie?" she asked faintly.

"Doctor, an' papa, an' gamma—everybody," he whispered. "Mamma, dear, little mamma, don't be afraid to die, 'll you?"

"No, Charlie," said the young mother, after one supreme pang of grief, "no mamma won't be afraid."

"Jus' shut your eyes in 'e dark, mamma, teep hold my hand—an' when you open 'em, mamma, it'll be all light there."

When the family gathered awestricken at the bedside, Charlie held up his little hand.

"H-u-s-h! My mamma doan' to sleep. Her won't wake up here any more!"

And so it proved. There was no heart-rendering farewell, no agony of parting; for when the young mother woke she had passed beyond, and as baby Charlie said:

"It was all light there."

A man living in Clay, who owes us over two years subscription, put his paper back in the post-office last week marked "refused." We have heard of many mean men. There is the man who used the wart on the back of his neck for a collar-button, the one who pastured a goat on his grandmother's grave, the one who got rich by giving his five children a nickel each to go to bed without supper and then stealing the nickel after the children were asleep; but for pure down-right meanness the man who will take a paper for years, mark it "refused" and then stick it back into the postoffice, is entitled to the first premium.—Limeville, Ala., Democrat.
