The Dubuay mfg. co. have engaged the services of Ed. L. Crosby, of Plymouth to manage and push along their air gun business. Mr. Crosby has had years of experience in this business and will no doubt make the department another of Northville's hustling industries.

More boarding places are needed at once for the Keeley institute patients. Our citizens must hustle around and open up their houses. Don't wait for the committee to call on you, but send your names, accommodations, and prices at once to some one of the committee; they are T. G. Richardson, B. A. Wheeler and F. S. Neal.

Detroit is chosen as the place for holding the next annual meeting of the Michigan Press association, the date to be fixed by the executive committee. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Junius E. Real, of Ann Arbor; vice president, Theo. E. Quibby, of Detroit; secretary, James Slocum, Holly; treasurer, L. M. Sellars, Cedar Springs.

A Buffalo concern has submitted to the postmaster-general a slot machine for the sale of postage stamps, so designed that a one cent or two cent stamp can be secured by dropping the necessary coins into the slot. The beauty of the device lies in the fact that when it has no more stamps to sell it locks itself and refuses to take more money. Postmaster-general Wanamaker will entertain a proposition for the adoption of the machine by the government.

Brown & Co., have put in some new improved machinery for the manufacture of picture frames. They now occupy the entire second floor of the Randolph building.

The Eagle steam printing house has received a new 18x19 Gordon Job Press, and 30 fonts of type of the latest designs and will now compare with any jobbing house in the state.

The ladies' Missionary society will hold a Thank offering service in the Presbyterian church Sunday evening, Jan. 24. A pleasing program has been provided by the children and young people.

The RECORD would like very much to see some of those papers, read at the Mich. press meet, at Ann Arbor last week, in print, for the benefit of some of our poor editors who couldn't raise money enough to attend.

Union Council No. 5, O. C. F. will install their officers for the ensuing year on Tuesday eve, Jan. 26. All members of the order and their families are cordially invited to be present. Refreshments will be served by the ladies. T. F. Payne Dept. Supreme Councilor will be present.

South Lyon has a news-boy who would like to see matched; he is 13 years old and weighs 154 pounds. — [Excelsior.]

We don't want to brag any, but Northville has a boy 11 years old, who could act in this same capacity, who weighs 203 pounds. This would nearly match two of your boys, Bro. Roarbacher.

There are 40 patients under treatment here at the Keeley institute. No other institution of the kind in America can boast of such flattering results and so bright prospects for being open but four weeks. A number have been cured and discharged, and they are loud in their praise of the institution, its management and treatment; the beauty and attractiveness of our village and the hospitality its citizens.

Mrs. Almira Dobbins-Wight died Saturday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Cass Sanford near Novi, of general debility. She was a little past 70 years of age. Mrs. Dobbins settled in Northville in 1832, and was the oldest member of the Northville M. E. church at the time of her death. She was well known in this section and highly respected by all. We believe there are but two children living: Mrs. Sanford as above mentioned and Chas. H. Dobbins of Buffalo, N. Y. Undertaker Porter had charge of the funeral which occurred from the home Tuesday afternoon, Rev. Bradley officiating. The remains were interred in the Knapp cemetery.

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved: That the Michigan Bichloride of Gold club, of Northville Mich., extend a vote of thanks to all the people of Northville Mich., who have so kindly opened their doors, and extended the hospitality of their homes; also to those who have worked hard to find homes for the patients, under treatment at the institute at Northville.

Resolved: That a copy of this resolution be printed in the Northville RECORD.

Mrs. John ... has been spending a week at the Detroit friends.

Mrs. Lydia ... has been sick two weeks very ill.

C. H. Debbins, of Buffalo was called here last week by the sickness and death of his mother.

W. B. Thompson, of Los Angeles, Cal., is spending the winter with his father, J. J. Thompson.

Geo. Wager and family, who have been undergoing a siege of the grip are masters of the situation again.

Tonsorial Artist Sutherland is repairing two chairs in his shop now. Mr. Pearce from Flint is his new assistant.

Editor Miller, of the Mt. Pleasant Democrat, visited the Keeley institute, and other Northville attractions Saturday.

A Power of Kent City who was called here last week to attend the funeral of his brother, A. D. Power has returned home.

Tom Jenkins, an employee of the Western Newspaper-Union, of Detroit, a former Northville boy, Sundayed with friends in our village.

Mr. Shum Cook, Arthur Coe, Miss Silva-Meritt and Carrie Benham (Ypsilanti) spent Sunday with the Meses Howlett's at this place.

Mrs. Geo. Stark, who has been at Ann Arbor for eye treatment for some time past, returned home Saturday. Both eyes were successfully operated upon and she is in a much improved condition.

Charles Gardner, known far and near as "the sweet scented drummer," arrived home from New York Saturday where he had been for new samples. Charlie travels for Rikseker's great New York perfume house, and prior to the holidays last year sold more orders for perfumes than the house could fill, and they telegraphed him to go home and wait till they got caught up. What Charlie lacks in statue he makes up in "get-thar-ness."

Just as we go to press we learn of the death of Mrs. C. H. Johnson. She died last night.

TO-NIGHT.

Night, gentle mother, holy night,
In robes of darkness dressed,
With noiseless footsteps, slow and light,
Thou bringest us peace and rest.

Night, gentle mother, holy night,
Earth's weary, grief-worn child
Is, while the thoughts of day take flight,
To slumber soft beguiled.

Thou hast the world to slumber hushed Thy cradling arms within;
Thy wayward child whose brow was flushed

At eve with shame for sin.

Beneath thy ministry depart
All thoughts of evil quite;
What holy thoughts to fill the heart
Alone with God and night!

OUR LIGHTNING JERRY.

I am Lightning Jerry, I'm a typographical tourist and I want to throw in a case or rush up a few sticks in order to get something to eat. The country editor completed the sub-head, "A Bucket Brigade Wentad," in a profound article on "The Prosperity of Our Town," and looked up at the individual who had invaded his sanctum. The visitor, who very much resembled the venerable chap who posed for the picture on the St. Jacob's oil labels, continued: "I am not one of the common prints who wander up and down the country, but have worked in every state and territory in the Union during my forty years' experience and pilgrimage." He also volunteered the information that he could be "holding cases" on one of the leading morning papers of the country, "were it not so that electric lights wait back on his eyes," and added that he "never drank anything." The editor seemed to be a little skeptical on the latter point; at least he said: "Well, Lightning, we are a little rushed now, and can give you a job for a month, or until you get drunk. Go to the restaurant around the corner and get a square meal, and when you come back we will give you something to do." Thus was an engagement made that lasted nearly six weeks.

Old Lightning was verily a jewel. He couldn't put up as much type, perhaps, as he could have done thirty years ago, but he set a clean proof and speeded superbly. He would quarrel with the copy, of course, and that frisky contributor, "Horry-Headed Granger," who advocated mangle-wurzel as food for stock, was his pet aversion. "The idea," he said, "of this old crank, who doesn't know how to plant potatoes, except in the columns of a newspaper, waiting to make stock-food of roots, just because they have got a name that is on hinges! Mangle-wurzel, indeed! They don't contain any oil and wine, and wouldn't put flesh on anything. Corn, wheat and other grain are the only proper food for animals." He was also a little severe on correspondents who underscored every third or fourth word, put "howling points" at the end of every line and make "break lines" in the middle of sentences. "Why is it," he would petulantly inquire, "that folks who haven't sense enough to ride in a covered wagon imagine that they can write something worth reading for a newspaper?"

He had a rich fund of reminiscence and spoke as familiarly of Horace Greeley, James Gordon Bennett, "not the fellow" he always explained, "who owns the yacht," and other great newspaper men of the old school, as if they had been old chums of his. His admiration for "Old Mattie Van Buren" was intense, while he regarded John Van Buren as "a chip off the old block," although a little wild. His stock of anecdote in regard to country newspapers was large and varied and would have made him wealthy, if it had only been bar, which could be sold at three dollars per ton. He said: "The toughest lay-out I ever struck was down in Arkansas in '67. The display type was kept in smoking tobacco sacks, which were hung on nails around the room." He pronounced the editor of that paper the "best short-hand speller and long-handled writer" he ever met—"except you," he added, in order to keep down any feeling of jealousy that might arise in the bosom of the editor addressed. He also visited the office out West where they used a billy-goat for a press, and explained elaborately how an impression was taken. The form was placed against the wall, a sheet of paper was put on it and a certain "monkeying of fingers by the devil," the goat was induced to strike it with his head. This naturally set the "press" back on his haunches and gave the pressman a chance to remove the printed copy and put on another sheet. "They used an old goat for the paper and sale bills and a kid for visiting cards," he explained, "and they were the cheapest presses I ever saw, too, as it didn't cost anything to keep them, for they kept fat on old exchanges and empty ink cans."

The old man was a sincere devotee of the "art preservative" and always placed the business at the head. He expressed great attempt for the "blacksmiths" who got out some of the exchanges, and spoke of the good old days, when the "cub put in two years in washing and caring for rollers." A young man, who was cashier of a bank, had a natural fondness for the printer's trade, and possessed very excellent taste. He used to come into the office and set up jobs merely for practice and amusement. Lightning at first resented this, but when he saw the class of work he could do, he formed quite a liking for him. One day he broke the young man all up by remarking, with great earnestness: "See here, young fellow, you are silly for fooling away your time in a bank; you would make a good printer."

But the time finally came when the engagement mentioned in the beginning of this article, terminated. Lightning had often spoken of his stay in a printing office in Talequah, and admitted that he had "learned to talk Indian equal to the greatest buck in the nation," but had always been discouraged when he sought to give a sample of this acquirement. One morning he failed to show up at the office, but came in at 11 o'clock, and to use his own expression, "fetched a yawp," that would have done credit to an untamed Comanche redskin. He then commenced a harangue in Choctaw, or some other choice brand of Indian tongue, and at last said: "My time is out, let's settle up, for I want to go to St. Joe and grow up with the country. When does the next train go South?" He had been talking of buying some winter clothing with his earnings, as cold weather was at hand, and the editor suggested, as he paid him, that he do this. He replied: "I've got a new pair of socks, and here is a good overcoat." With this remark he cut a sheet of heavy paper, and said, as he placed such "overcoat" under his vest: "This will keep out the cold, and prevent a fellow from taking inflammation of the stomach or bowels." He then took his money and went to a saloon, where he talked Indian and set up the drinks until long after the train for St. Joe had passed. He then went to the depot and asked which way the next train would go. When told that the next train would be the north-bound freight, he said: "All right, I'm a Northern man, and will go on in. Have the caboose to draw up to the platform and telegraph the porter to bring me a footstool." He left on this train, and during the half-score of years that have passed since then, nothing has been heard of his wanderings.

Poor old Lightning Jerry! He possessed qualities of mind, which if rightly directed, might have entranced a nation. During his life and wanderings he had gathered pearls of thought that would have decorated the most beautiful structures of language, but were ruthlessly thrown in the mire, or used to accomplish ignominious ends. He had a good education, and a natural thirst for information, which he sought to quench in his better moments by drinking deeply from the fountains of history, literature, science and art, but his ambition seemed to reach no higher than the existence which has been depicted herein. His familiarity with important events, useful facts, etc., shone brilliantly when he chose to talk in extended strain, but was more often exemplified in remarks called out by circumstances. In the latter case he almost invariably used the vernacular acquired during his wanderings.

The world looks, in such cases as his, for a life history—an unfortunate love affair in youth, or a cherished ambition, killed by the early frosts of disappointment. If any such clouds ever flitted across his life he never mentioned the fact. He was probably only a member of the large army of men who formed a disposition for roaming, and it overshadowed any particular purpose he might at one time have had. He doubtless had a surname, but he chose to be known only as "Old Lightning," or "Lightning Jerry." Two objects seemed to enlist his affectionate attention. One was his long beard, which had been "snowing" for at least twenty winters, and the other was a "battered letter," which he carried in an inner pocket, and re-read at frequent intervals. The letter, he said, was from a little niece, whom he spoke of "going to see" when he got in better shape. Whether or not this time ever came, is not known. If he still lives, may the winter of life, which is now far advanced, find him better prepared for his last great journey than he was for the trip which he took on the "north-bound freight," on that winter's day years ago.—Arkansas Traveler.

"No Clue." "Well?" queried the detective from headquarters, who had climbed three pairs of stairs on Griswold street, in response to a call from an insurance office, says the Detroit Free Press. "Why, I gave a trampish looking fellow a quarter to bring up some coal and he had scarcely gone when I missed my spectacles," replied the agent. "Good-bow?" "Yes, I suppose he could sell them for about a dollar." "You do?" "Yes—on your forehead." "Bless me!" gasped the agent as he put his hand up. "So they are! So they are! Well, well, but I must be getting absent minded! You needn't arrest the party."

"It seems that he simply intended to take them, but had no show." "I see." "Just report no clue and see that the papers don't get hold of it. That's all. Wonderful how smart you detectives are in unraveling mysterious cases! I must really speak a word in favor of the department some day, if the man had actually taken them I believe you'd have arrested him some day or other. Good-day."

American shipbuilding. The old-time shipbuilders in New York are indulging in the hope of a revival of their industry within the next few years. The shipbuilders of New Bedford are rejoicing over the orders for vessels to engage in the trade between our ports on the Atlantic and on the Pacific. The shipbuilders of Duluth are pleased with the prospect of activity in the construction of a big fleet of whalebacks for service on our western lakes and on the Atlantic. The outlook for American shipbuilding is more encouraging than it was a few years ago.

A Winter Night, OR, Found in a Snow-Drift.

"What a misery it is to have to sneak away like thieves in the night," said Pierce, as he settled Dorothy in a first-class carriage. She was heavily veiled, and seemed very lonely. Jane rode apart, feeling very jolly; the idea of so much change was pleasant to her, and she liked Dorothy immensely. "I suppose I was foolish to travel with you, darling, but I could not bear the idea of your enduring the long journey alone. I fear it will tire you terribly. Are you sure you are well wrapped up? I have tipped the foot-warmer comfortable." "Yes, I am quite too cozy; I shall go to sleep, I believe."

"So you shall, sweet, if you will rest your dear head on my shoulder, so that I can kiss you when I like. I hate that horrid veil, I can't get at your lips."

Dorothy laughed, and lifted it so that he could kiss her sweet red lips. Then she said: "When do we start, Pierce?" "Almost directly. Keep your head turned, I will lean out of the window, and see there is no one about."

Everything went smoothly, and the train steamed out of the station without any unusual delay. The journey passed pleasantly enough to the lovers. At Gloucester Pierce said he would get a second to get a drink, and asked Dorothy if she would have anything.

"No, thank you, Mrs. Steel filled my bottle with wine, but you get yourself a like so well, and don't forget you want some matches, or you will be done out of your smoke."

"All right, keep your seat, I'll shut the door. I hope no one will get in." Pierce swung out of the carriage, and ran across the platform to the refreshment buffet. He had gone, a gentlemanly attendant, who had been sitting in a corner, as still as a statue, and remained as still as a statue.

He was on the same side as Dorothy, who did not take much notice of him, so anxious was she for Pierce's return. "Take your seat," shouted the guard, banging the doors to hastily, and Dorothy's heart sank.

She saw Pierce come out of the bar and hesitate. The guard confused him. Dorothy was about to get up to wave her hand to attract his attention, when the gentleman stood up, and filled the window with his hand.

"Oh, please let me look out, my friend has missed the carriage." Still the man did not stir. Dorothy got desperate, and putting her hand on her arm, said excitedly: "You are no gentleman to stand there preventing my friend from finding me! Let me look out!"

Still he was as immovable as a fate. The train moved, and another moment it had steamed away. Dorothy, afraid of she knew not what, sat down shivering.

Just then the man turned round, and sat down beside her, saying: "So I am no gentleman. Yet I am your guardian, Miss Snow, and have a right to know why you are travelling at night with a man of whom I altogether disapprove."

With a shriek of terror Dorothy sank back in her seat, her eyes riveted on the brilliant face of the man she feared more than the King of Terrors.

"Good help me!" wailed Dorothy. "What shall I do?" "Why, get as a modest girl should: return to your home with me, and try to trust your best friend."

"You my friend! Sooner than be at your mercy I would throw myself among a pack of hungry wolves. Keep your distance, don't dare to touch me, or I will throw myself out of the train. I am no coward, there is nothing under heaven I fear as I do you."

"You are in my power, Dora. I am a desperate man, and this is a dangerous venture for us both. You see this pistol? If you don't promise to return to my protection, I swear I will shoot you, and myself afterwards."

to him. This fired his blood to fever-heat, and when he felt the train slacken speed,

he was almost inclined to get out and walk along the footboard, as guards do, till he came to the right carriage, but the idea of grinding his legs between the platform and the train kept his impatience in bounds.

Still, he hung out as far as he could. In the distance he could see the signal-posts, their lights looking like huge gems. Then,

oh, horror! he saw two carriages in front with a door fly open, and a man spring out with a struggling woman in his arms.

The train was then running past a big snow-drift, piled together in clearing the line. He saw the two forms writhing in a heap, a sickening sight, suggestive of broken bones, and thanked God the people

fell clear of the train.

He was quick to raise the alarm, but the train did not really stop till it got into the station.

Pierce's excited account of what he had seen was gravely listened to by the guard

and men sent at once to search the spot

where the snow-banks were.

Pierce, in his anxiety, was about to follow

the men, but the thought of Dorothy's alarm

at not seeing him decided him to forego the adventure till he had assured himself of her safety.

He hastened along the row of carriages

and came to the one he fancied he had

warmer, a lady's travelling-bag, and some wraps.

He sprang in. Merciful heavens! where was Dorothy? These were her things. Surely she must have got out to look for him.

He sprang out again in evident alarm, but could not find her. Then came the terrible idea that it was her he saw flying from the carriage in the arms of the man. Alarm seemed to lend wings to his feet; he flew rather than walked, to where a crowd of people stood over two prostrate forms. The light of a lamp fell on their faces; the man's was livid with the hue of death, the woman's white as the snow on which she

Obituary.

After an illness of but one week

Arthur D. Power died at his residence four miles east of Northville, last week

Wednesday at 5.30 p. m., of pneumonia.

Mr. Power was born at Farmington

Aug. 27, 1827, thus making him age which was 65 years of

She took the tiny, quiet, Amy to her heart, and cried over it quietly for the first and last time in his life.

Penfold fainted away.

Inside the circus all was confusion; the people would have the scene explained, so old Lee, a fine-looking old man, came to the front and gave his own version of the affair, which was that it was all a part of the performance, a dramatic situation to interest

the public in the clever little actress, etc.

But the old man looked anxious when he left the ring and found his daughter waiting like a madwoman at the loss of her child.

After this Alison fretted herself into a fever, and her old father grieved over her as over the most faithful and virtuous daughter of the world could find.

Thanks to his nursing, she came back in health and spirit, though, broken in

broken bones, and thanked God the people

fell clear of the train.

He was quick to raise the alarm, but the

train did not really stop till it got into the

station.

Pierce's excited account of what he had

seen was gravely listened to by the guard

and men sent at once to search the spot

where the snow-banks were.

Pierce, in his anxiety, was about to follow

the men, but the thought of Dorothy's alarm

at not seeing him decided him to forego the

adventure till he had assured himself of her

safety.

He hastened along the row of carriages

wraps.

He sprang in. Merciful heavens! where was Dorothy? These were her things. Surely

RESOLUTIONS.

Adopted by the W. C. T. U. of Northville.

Whereas, God in his all-wise providence has deemed it just to take from us in our work "For God and Home and Humanity," our honored member and ever willing helper, Mr. Arthur D. Power, therefore be it resolved:

That we tender our sincere and heartfelt sympathy to the afflicted family; That in the death of our brother the state has lost a useful and efficient worker, and we can only hope that God will raise up another to fill the important place so sadly vacated by one who loved the temperance work.

That we as members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Northville, will each strive to profit by his example in his zeal and devotion to the cause of humanity, trustfully looking forward to the time when our work is ended and we too shall enter the haven of rest.

Obituary.

After an illness of but one week Arthur D. Power died at his residence four miles east of Northville, last week Wednesday at 5.30 p. m., of pneumonia. Mr. Power was born at Farmington N. Y., Jan. 27, 1827, thus making him but a few days less than 65 years of age. He was the son of Ira and Amy (Lapham) Power, the later being still alive, though in feeble health. There were eleven children in this family of whom two brothers and two sisters are living. When Arthur was four years of age his parents moved to Livonia township and settled on this same farm where Arthur had continuously since resided. In 1852 he married Miss Maria Hart, of Battle Creek. There was born to them two sons and one daughter; one son died in infancy and the other, Sumner G., is a resident of Detroit, and the daughter, Mary H., resides at home.

A. D. Power was one of the best known, and highly respected citizens to be found in this part of the country, and was always ready and more than willing to lend a helping hand to a needy person or any worthy object. He was one of the founders of the Prohibition party of Michigan, and was for years a member of the state central committee, and chairman of the committee, in 1884, when the party cast its largest vote; was the party's candidate for congress from this district in '86 and made a very strong canvass against so heavy odds.

Mr. Power was one of the most successful cheese manufacturers in Michigan, and his factory, through his personal energy, and mode of doing business, has gained a state reputation second to none. And thus one by one they pass away. The wife has lost a good husband; the children a kind and loving father; the neighbors an ever obliging and ready friend and the community at large a valuable citizen and business man.

The funeral, under the direction of Undertaker Porter, was held from the late residence Saturday afternoon, Rev. L. G. Clark officiating, and the remains laid at rest in Rural Hill cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS.

The family of the late Arthur D. Power wish to sincerely thank all the kind friends who in any way assisted them during their recent bereavement.

Mrs. M. H. POWERS.

$100.00

YES! those elegant Gold Dollars, that I told you I had lost, has been found, and this is "Just how it all happened." One year ago I told you that I had sold more goods the previous year than any other year in all my business life; and I then told "Will the Dry Goods man" and "Slim Pete" that if during last year (1891) they would beat that record, even by a single dollar, they would each receive $50.00 IN GOLD at the close of the year, and by the look on their faces I could even then see I had LOST ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS IN GOLD, for they just "took off their coats" and went to work, each with gold dollars in their eyes, and beat it they did by a good many dollars. And this is how, when, and where, I Lost One Hundred Dollars in Gold, and these Hands will give you pointers as to the ones that found them. Yours as ever, T. G. RICHARDSON.

And now we, "Dry Goods Will" and "Slim Pete," most humbly make our bow and thank our friends and patrons for so kindly helping us win the prize, and you will always find us ready and willing to show you through the store where you can buy DRY GOODS, BOOTS and SHOES, and CLOTHING, cheaper than at any other place in town, or in other words at the store that "T. G." built.

"WILL, the dry goods man." — "SLIM PETE."

ENDAVOR to always be patient of the faults and imperfections of others; for thou hast many faults and imperfections of thine own that require a reciprocation of forbearance. If thou art not able to make thyself that which thou wishest to be, how canst thou expect to mould another in conformity to thy will?

THOUGHTFUL persons of much experience know that the way to be happy is to give up all attempts to be so. In other words the cream of enjoyment in this life is always promptly the chance walk, the unexpected visit, the unappreciated journey, the unsought conversation or acquaintance.

A Westboro, Mass., young lady rode several miles on a bicycle at breathless speed to give an alarm of fire, and the department responded quickly enough to save valuable property. This is encouraging. Instead of being a mere lad, the utilitarian side of bicycle-riding will doubtless soon become the most prominent. By the opening of the century it may be a common occurrence to see a messenger boy on a wheel and in a hurry.

Our civil war was a great destroyer of American patriots. Troops from all parts of the North were thrown together and all kinds of angles rubbed down, often to the vanishing point. Even the North and the South were somewhat unified, albeit they met only as mortal enemies and gun in hand. But large as our own country is and peopled originally from such different sections of England, it has no such extremes of provincialism as, according to Arnold, may be found in the mother country.

The most ignorant monk who ever twisted and played together the language of the gospels and his own ignorant ideas of the poetical meaning of classical myths was a teacher for Shakespeare. He begged of him and received gifts from him as from the very poorest of the poor—ballad-makers whose productions were hawked about the streets to supply the intellectual needs of the coster-mongers and fish-wives. Into the company of these, the very lowest of the low in the intellectual world, Shakespeare went and there sat as one of them to receive the gifts they were receiving, counting nothing common or too low for him if it only supplied the intellectual hunger for knowledge of the seeming human life of which his was a part; a part which could only grow larger in the whole and approximate comprehend the whole through this begging importunity, born of poverty of spirit.

Some of these good people of whom there seem to be so many in England, who have nothing better to do than to carry on aimless debates in communications to the newspapers, have been lately discussing in a London daily, "Are women naturally impolite?" The answer to this ought to be self-evident and the question unnecessary. Of course women are naturally impolite. So are men. Politeness is not a natural virtue. It is acquired. In a state of nature no such virtue is recognized. There every man is for himself. It is when men agree to live together under a social order that some sort of consideration for others becomes necessary and, as civilization advances, is gradually developed into a habit. It may become an hereditary or race habit among favored nations, and so far we can speak of natural politeness; but in general politeness is the result of education, of contact with the world, of association with polite people.

WANT can be minimized only when one producer gives his surplus to another producer in exchange for his, that the needs of both may be supplied by the surplus of both. Alms-giving to the poor, the building of hospitals, libraries and almshouses by those who have accumulated more of the medium of exchange than they can use in exchange diminish want only in a few individual cases. For the great masses of the struggling, suffering, lacking producers of the world it can only be minimized by the largest possible production, accompanied by, as it is always dependent on the freest possible exchange. To bring this about is worthy the best efforts of any man's life. It is work for the unconsidered millions of humanity who in all ages have suffered as producers because as producers they were not allowed to relieve their own wants by relieving the wants of others through fair exchange. To work for this object is to work in a practical way for a practical end—the greatest possible production, the widest possible distribution, the greatest possible prosperity, the least possible need, discomfort and poverty.

THE ECHOES.

THE SUBJECT OF DR. TALMAGE'S LATEST SERMON.

The Sounding Again From the Mountains, from Ezekiel 7:7, Furnishes a Theme for an Instructive Discourse—Echoes of Bad and Good.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Jan. 17, 1892. Dr. Talmage gave a new illustration in his sermon this morning of his mastery of the art of drawing spiritual lessons from common natural phenomena. His subject was "Echoes," and his text: Ezekiel 7:7, "The sounding again of the mountains."

At last I have found it. The Bible has in it a recognition of all phases of the natural world from the aurora of the midnight heavens to the phosphorescence of the tumbling sea. But the well-known sound that we call the echo, I found not until a few days ago I discovered it in my text: "The sounding again of the mountains." That is the Echo. Ezekiel of the text had heard it again and again. Born among mountains and in his journey to distant exile he had passed among mountains, and it was natural that all through his writings there should loom up the mountains. Among them he had heard the sound of cataracts and of tempests in wrestle with oak and cedar and the voices of the wild beasts, but a man of so poetic a nature as Ezekiel could not allow another sound, viz., the Echo, to be disregarded, and so he gives us in our text "the sounding again of the mountains."

Greek mythology represented the Echo as a nymph, the daughter of Earth and Air, following Narcissus through the forests and into grottoes and every whither, and so strange and weird and startling is the Echo I do not wonder that the superstitious have lifted it into the supernatural. You and I in boyhood or girlhood experimented with this responsiveness of sound. Standing half-way between the house and barn we shouted many a time to hear the reverberations, or out among the mountains back of our home, on some long tramp we stopped and made exclamation with full lungs just to hear what Ezekiel calls "the sounding again of the mountains." The Echo has frightened many a child and many a man.

It is no tame thing after you have spoken to hear the same words repeated by the invisible. All the silences are filled with voices ready to answer. Yet it would not be startling if they said something else, but why do those lips of the air say just what you say? Do they mean to mock or mean to please? Who are you and where are you, thou wonderful Echo? Sometimes its response is a reiteration. The shot of a gun the clapping of hands, the beating of a drum, the voice of a violin are sometimes repeated many times by the Echo. Near Colobentz—that which is said has sevenfold echoes. In 1766, a writer says that near Milan, Italy, there were seventy such reflections of sound to one snap of a pistol. Play a bugle near a Lake of Killarney and the tune is played back to you as distinctly as when you played it. There is a well 210 feet deep at Carisbrook, Castle in the Isle of Wight. Drop a pin into that well, and the sound of its fall comes to the top of the well distinctly. A blast of an Alpine horn comes back from the rocks of Jungfrau in surge after surge of reflected sound, until it seems as if every peak had lifted and blown an Alpine horn. But have you noticed—and this is the reason for the present discourse—that this Echo in the natural world has its analogy in the moral and religious world? Have you noticed the tremendous fact that what we say and do comes back in recited gladness or disaster?

So, also, the Judgment day will be an echo of all our other days. The universe needs such a day for there are so many things in the world that need to be fixed up and explained. If God had not appointed such a day all the nations would cry out "Oh, God, give us a Judgment day." But we are apt to think of it and speak about it as a day away off in the future, having no special connection with this day or any other day. The fact is that we are now making up its voices, its trumpets will only sound back again to us what we now say and do. That is the meaning of all that Scripture which says that Christ will on that day address the soul, saying, "I was naked and ye clothed me, I was sick and in prison and ye visited me."

My subject advances to tell you that eternity itself is only an Echo of time. Mind you, the analogy warrants my saying this. The Echo is not always exactly in kind like the sound originally projected. Lord Raleigh says that a woman's voice sounding from a grove was returned an octave higher. A scientist playing a flute in Fairfax county, Va., found that all the notes were returned, although some of them came in raised pitch. A trumpet sounded ten times near Glasgow, Scotland, and the ten notes were all repeated, but a third lower. And the spiritual law corresponds with the natural world. What we do of good or bad may not come back to us in just the proportion we expect it, but come back it will; it may be from a higher gladness than we thought or from a deeper woe, from a mightier conqueror or from a worse captive, from a higher throne or deeper dungeon. Our prayer or our blasphemy, our kindness or our cruelty, our faith or our unbelief, our holy life or our dissolute behavior, will come back somehow. Suppose the boss of a factory or the head of a commercial firm, some day comes out among his clerks or employees, and putting his thumb in the armpits of his vest, says, with an air of swagger and jocosity: "Well, I don't believe in the bible or the church. The one is an imposition and the other is full of hypocrites. I declare I would not trust one of those very pious people further than I could see him." That is all he says, but he has said enough. The young men go back to their counters or their shuttles, and say within themselves: "Well, he is a successful man and has probably studied up the whole subject and is probably right." That one lying utterance against Bibles and churches has put five young men on the wrong track, and though the influential man had spoken only in half jest, the Echo shall come back to him in five ruined lifetimes, and five destroyed eternities. You see the Echoes are an octave lower than he anticipated. On the other hand, some rainy day, when there are hardly any customers, the Christian merchant comes out from the counting-room and stands among the young men, who have nothing to do, and says: "Well, boys, this is a dull day, but it will clear off after a while. There are a good many ups and downs in business, but there is an overruling Providence. Years ago I made up my mind to trust God and he has always seen me through. I remember when I was your age, I had just come to town and the temptation of city life gathered around me, but I resisted. The fact is there were two old folks out on the old farm praying for me, and I knew it, and somehow I could not do as some of the clerks did of go where some of the clerks went. I tell you, boys, it is best always to do right, and there is nothing to keep one right like the old-fashioned religion of Jesus Christ. John, where did you go to church last Sunday? Henry, how is the Young Men's Christian association prospering?" About noon the rain ceases and the sun comes out and the clerks go to their places, and they say within themselves: "Well, he is a successful merchant, and I guess he knows what he is talking about, and the Christian religion must be a good thing. God knows I want some help in this battle with temptation and sin." The successful merchant who uttered the kind words did not know how much good he was doing, but the Echo will come back in five lifetimes of virtue and usefulness, and five Christian deathbeds, and five heavens. From all the mountains of glory and all the mountains of eternity, he will catch what Ezekiel in my text styles "the sounding again of the mountains."

And if it is so hard to destroy a natural echo, how much harder to step a moral echo, a spiritual echo, an immortal echo. You know that the echoes are affected by the surfaces, and the shape of rocks, and the depth of ravines, and the relative position of buildings? And once in heaven, God will so arrange the relative position of thrones and temples and thrones that one of the everlasting charms of heaven will be the rolling, bursting, ascending, descending, chanting, echoing. All the songs we ever sang devoutly, all the prayers we have ever uttered earnestly, all the Christian deeds we have ever done, will be waiting to spring upon us in echo. The scientists tell us that in this world the roar of artillery and the boom of the thunder are so loud, because they are a combination of echoes—all the hillsides, and the caverns and the walls furnishing a share of the resonance. And never will we understand the full power and music of an Echo until, with supernatural faculties, able to endure them we hear all the combined sounds of heavenly echoes—harps and trumpets, orchestras and oratorios, hosannas and hallelujahs, east side of heaven answering to the west side, north side to south side, and all the heights, and all the depths, and all the immensities, and all the eternities joining in echo upon echo, echo in the wake of echo; in the future state, whether of rapture or ruin, we will listen for reverberations of earthly things and doings. Voltaire standing amid the shadows will listen, and from the millions whose godlessness, and libertinism and debauchery were a consequence of his brilliant blasphemies will come back a weeping, wailing, despairing, agonizing million-voiced Echo. Paul will, while standing in the light listen, and from all the circles of the ransomed, and from all the many mansions whom he helped to people, and from all the thrones he helped to occupants, and from all the gates he helped through with arrivals, and from all the temples he helped fill with worshippers, there shall come back to him a glorious ever-accumulating, transporting and triumphant Echo. Oh, what will the tyrants and oppressors of the earth do with the Echoes. Those who are responsible for the wars of the world will have come back to them all the groans, the shrieks, the cannonades, the bursting shell, the crackle of burning cities, and the crash of a nation's homes.

But you know as well as I do that there are some places where the reverberations seem to meet, and standing there they rush upon you, they rain upon you, all at once they capture your ear. And at the point where all heavenly reverberations meet, Christ will stand and listen for the resound of all his sighs, and groans, and sacrifices, and they shall come back in an echo in which shall mingle the acclamations of a redeemed world and the "Jubilate Deo" of a full heaven. Echo saintly, cherubic, archangelic! Echo of thrones! Echo of palaces! Echo of temples! Omnipotent echo! Everlasting echo! Amen!

It is said that the first regular theatrical company to perform in the United States came from England in 1752 and landed at York, in Virginia. Its first public appearance was at Williamsburg, Va.

There were produced in the United States last year 141,229,516 tons of coal, of which 45,606,487 was anthracite. All of the anthracite, except 53,517 tons from Colorado and New Mexico and 2,000 tons from New England, came from Pennsylvania.

TELL YOUR LANDLADY.

What a Grocer Learned by Looking Into a Corn Factory.

"Ain't you got no corn like we've been havin'?" That you sent me this mornin' ain't sweet corn at all. It's nothin' but cow corn."

"Let's see," said the grocer, replying to the woman's complaint. "What kind of corn have you been havin'?"

"Why, you called it 'Honey Drop,'" answered the woman, according to the New York Times.

"And what kind did we send you to-day?"

"The label was jest the same."

"Well, madam, both lots is from the same factory, but there may be a little difference in the doping."

"The doping? What's that?"

"Why, the sweetening! Put a little sugar in the next lot you cook and then it'll taste just like the old."

"Put sugar in corn?" exclaimed the woman, greatly astonished.

"Why, certainly, there's sugar in every can of corn put up. Didn't you know that? Probably not. Most people don't know it, but it's a fact all the same. It's sort of a trade secret that I found out for myself."

"I used to think that all the difference was in the corn itself, but that's bosh. Of course some corn is better than other corn—tenderer, juicier and naturally sweeter—but none of it is sweet enough to can without the use of sugar."

"Dear me, I never heard of that before," murmured the woman.

"Probably not," responded the grocer, "but it's so. There are lots of canning concerns down in Maine, and only lately I had a chance to look one over. It's a great business and no mistake."

"The farmers bring in their corn by the wagon loads, and dump it in the yard. Then the huskers go at it—men and women and children—about half the town in that one yard. The husked ears are put into baskets and carried into the factory. The corn is taken off the ear by a machine that works quicker than lightning. Before you could say Jack Robinson the cob falls out of the window, leaving behind in a pan every bit of the corn with which it was covered."

"Then comes the packing into the cans, thousands every day, an enormous number. And now listen to this: Into every single can there goes a quantity of sugar. When the corn is a choice lot, there is little sugar needed, but when it's inferior or has been kept over night, they dope it in great shape."

"So, madam, use the sugar, and I'll guarantee that your boarders will like that corn as well as any they ever ate."

"Well, I'll try it," said the woman, "and if it works well I'll be a grand good thing to know. Perhaps I'll be able to buy cheaper corn hereafter."

"May be," answered the grocer, but he looked a little bit dubious.

THEY DON'T.

Why It Is That Lobsters and Crabs Turn Red.

"What makes lobsters and crabs turn red when they are boiled?" said the observant fish man in reply to a question. "Well, strictly speaking, they don't. The lobster or the crab is just as red before it is put in hot water as it is afterward, only it is subdued by a mingling of blue in its makeup that gives it a grayish-blue appearance. The blue and red of a live lobster or crab are pigments in the shell. As long as they are there together the red becomes gray. But both of these pigments are not fast colors. The blue won't wash, but the red is there to stay. If it were possible to keep lobsters or crabs alive for any length of time in the sun the blue would fade out as quickly as the same color does out of a cheap flannel suit, and the shells would be a vivid red as if they had been boiled. It is not an uncommon thing to catch live lobsters and crabs more frequently the latter, that are entirely red. It has been determined, however, that this eradication of the blue pigment is the result of disease. Live red crabs and lobsters are never put on the market. So the reason a crab or a lobster turns red as the saying is, when it is boiled, is because the hot water instantly washes the fugitive blue coloring matter out of the shell and leaves only the fast red. It does not take long boiling to change the color. If you were to rescue a lobster from its hot bath two seconds after it is submerged you would find it as red as if it had been boiled for an hour."—New York Sun.

A Definition.

"Can anyone in the class give a definition of the word 'parasite'?" asked the teacher.

There was no response and she proceeded to define it herself.

"A parasite is a creature that lives on its fellow-creatures. Now, remember children, what is a parasite?"

And a little boy with a thoughtful, Emersonian cast of countenance stood up and said:

"A parasite is a cannibal."—Chicago Tribune.

Song Birds in Oregon.

An association for the importation of song birds has been formed in Oregon, and a consignment of linnetts, skylarks, thrushes and bullfinches has recently been received from Europe. There is every prospect that the experiment will be successful, as the climate and forests of the Northwest are peculiarly adapted to the needs of these delightful songsters of the woods.

THE KEELEY INSTITUTE.

An Interesting Letter from one of the Cured Ones.

Northville, Jan. 19 1862.

Editor Record:-

As I am about to leave the Institute at Northville, where I was enrolled the 26th day of last Dec., as a patient seeking cure for periodical drunkenness, and thinking something I might say, would come under the notice of some fellow being afflicted with the same disease, thereby inducing him to try the Keeley Bi-chloride of Gold Cure at Northville Mich. The following is something of my experience: My father was an Englishman by birth and saw no wrong in drinking, and from my earliest recollections until I was fourteen years of age, at no time was my father's cellar without cider in it and most of the time it contained wine and liquor also, and he always said that there was nothing too good in his house for his children. You will readily see that his children were on dangerous ground, and especially in my own case as I was born with a natural appetite for the stuff. About the time I was fifteen years old my father opened a saloon in connection with his grocery which necessitated a bartender and to save an additional expense, this duty fell upon me, which job I faithfully held for three years, at the expiration of which time, it is needless to say, I had become a pretty fast young man, and my mother, becoming alarmed at the havoc liquor was doing for her son, induced father to close the saloon, but, alas it was too late, liquor had done its work. I see now, I was as much the slave of drink then as at any time since. About this time I became acquainted with the young lady, that is now my wife, reared as she was in a strictly temperate family, and as it approached the time of our marriage, it was necessary that I quit drinking, as that was the understanding and conditions between her father and my-self, and God knows I meant to be true to the vows I then made, but in a few months they were broken. The disease was then upon me, and the battle for supremacy followed. At that time I honestly believed that I had stability, and firmness of character; enough to quit of my own volition but I soon found out my weakness, then I looked about me for such relief as was at hand. I joined the Good Templars and for a few months all went well but the old appetite declared itself, and it was master of the situation. I became discouraged and gave myself up to drink. Then things went on from bad to worse until a short time ago when a paper was placed in my hands explaining the Keeley Bi-chloride of Gold treatment for Alcoholic disease, then in practice at Dwight Illinois, with its wonderful list of cures. My father-in-law learned of my anxiety and desire to be cured and at once placed the means within my reach. At this time the Keeley Institute at Northville was opened to suffering humanity and as this place had all the advantages that were to be had at Dwight, I at once arranged to come to Northville Mich. On my arrival here I had an idea that I would find there for treatment a class of the most low degraded men imaginable (for a drinking man always thinks he is the most respectable one of his class) and in fact I commenced to look for that element as soon as I stepped off the cars. But to my entire surprise I found nothing of the kind neither among the inhabitants of Northville nor the people who were patients at the institute. On my arrival at the institute I came in contact at once with Mr. Anson Waring, the secretary of that institution, who is a gentleman in all its meaning-kind, attentive and obliging—who at once made me feel comfortable and at home. I was next introduced to Dr. Wm. H. Yarnall, the medical director of the institute, a pleasant gentleman with an unlimited knowledge and acquaintance with the care and cure of his patients. After three weeks treatment I find myself entirely cured of any desire whatever for liquor, and not only that, I simply abhor it; the very smell of the stuff is abominable.
