was so much impressed with Northville and the Keeley cure that he gave it a column notice in the next issue of his paper which we reprint this idea that also would have come on stove man" had quite an accident and a narrow escape from death one day last week. Allen was fixing a pump pipe down in the bottom of a well and a ten pound iron vice which was being let down to him from above, snapped the string and fell a distance of fifty feet, striking him on the shoulder.

Allen had just test over for something and only for this the vice must have struck upon his head inflicting fatal injuries. He was laid up for several days but is now about as usual.

Mrs. C. H. Johnson died last week
Wednesday night at the home of her friend Mrs. A. K. Carpenter, with whom she was spending the day when taken sick some three weeks ago. Mrs.
Johnson's maiden name was Eva

Maine, Jan. 1842 and was in her 50th year. She was married to Mr. C. H.
Johnson, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. T.
Johnson of this place about six years ago and have resided in Detroit for a number of years. Mrs. Johnson was a sister of Mrs. Herb Lee of our village and Mrs. Elmer Smith of Kent City.
Mrs. Johnson was loved, honored and respected by all who knew her and has left a sorrowing husband, a little daughter of less than two years of age,
and a host of friends to mourn her loss.
The funeral was held from the residence of Mr. Carpenter Friday afternoon, Rev. L. C. Clark officiating, and the remains interred in the old cemetery at this place.

A certain clergyman of Halifax, N. S., while addressing his congregation on the subject of the "Prodigal Son," is said to have affected his hearers even more than he had anticipated when, with tears in his eyes and pathos in his voice, he pictured the aged father overjoyed at the return of his long lost boy, commanding them to bring forth and kill the little calf that had been fattening for years and years and years.

A bill has been introduced in congress authorizing the quartermaster general of the army to sell for cash to G. A. R. Posts and citizens of the United States, flags, of patterns prescribed by the army regulations, the price to be fixed at the same they cost the government, the object being to provide and encourage the display of the flag. The bill further provides that a person found guilty of printing, painting, or affixing to any flag anything tending to bring the government into contempt shall be guilty of misdemeanor, and subject to a fine and imprisonment.

It is generally understood that the sending of a postal note through the mail is no more security against loss than is the sending of currency. It would seem not, from the fact that quite a large percentage of the remittances in amounts from one to five dollars received through the mails are in postal notes. Postal notes, like treasury and national bank notes, are payable to bearer. No record is made in the post office of either the sender or the person to whom the postal note is to be sent, and "if lost or destroyed no duplicate can be issued." Postal notes are intended as a convenience in sending sums under $5 containing odd cents or fractional parts of a dollar, and not as a surety against loss. When you wish to send through the mail any sum under $5, and are not particularly anxious about its delivery, it is just as safe to send currency. But when you wish to have it safely insured, be generous with "Uncle Sam" and hand him five cents instead of three when he will give you a money order, positively insuring you against loss.

The Inventive Age, published at Washington, D. C., celebrates its third anniversary by moving into its new quarters recently built for the special use of that paper. This journal is now recognized as the faithful friend and guide of the American inventor, and one of the most valuable advertising mediums for patented inventions and manufactured novelties published in the world. It circulates in every State and Territory in the union, it may be found in many of the homes in Canada, Mexico and the Central and South American States; it can be seen in many of the U. S. consulates scattered throughout the world, and a large number of the great public libraries of the United States keep it on file. Send to The Inventive Age, Washington, D. C., five cents in stamps and you will receive a sample copy and the "March of Invention," containing over 60 illustrations of epoch making inventions.

"German Syrup"

A Cough and Croup Medicine.

For children a medicine should be absolutely reliable. A mother must be able to pin her faith to it as to her Bible. It must contain nothing violent, uncertain, or dangerous. It must be standard in material and manufacture. It must be plain and simple to administer; easy and pleasant to take. The child must like it. It must be prompt in action, giving immediate relief, as children's troubles come quick, grow fast, and end fatally or otherwise in a very short time. It must not only relieve quick but bring them around quick, as children chafe and fret and spoil their constitutions under long confinement. It must do its work in moderate doses. A large quantity of medicine in a child is not desirable. It must not interfere with the child's spirits, appetite or general health. These things suit old as well as young folks, and make Boschee's German Syrup the favorite family medicine.

ARMORIAL BEARINGS.

INCIDENTS WHICH GAVE RISE TO SOME OF THEM.

Mr. Morty, His Duc's and His Cannon—A Family Which Loves a Tribute of Horseshoes—A Man Hanging out a Gabbit.

It is sometimes hinted that not a few of the curious devices we see in the shape of heraldic coats have been adopted at the suggestion of coach painters or seal engravers. There is, perhaps, some truth in this, here, says the Saturday Evening Post, but in England no one is entitled to bear arms without either a hereditary claim to them or a grant from the competent authorities—the Herald's College in England, the Lyon's Court in Scotland, and the Office of Arms in Ireland. The whims of individuals, however, have been the means of originating some singular crests and armorial bearings.

A gentleman named Morty, for example, mounted in his garden a number of cannon of an antiquated kind, and soon afterwards had an armorial coat emblazoned on the panels of his carriage. Keeping clear of heraldic phraseology, we may shortly describe this as including two cannon, a duck and the motto "Dux Morty." A friend, struck on observing these peculiar devices, asked Mr. Morty his reason for assuming them. "Well, you see," was the reply, "I am very fond of ducks, but they always nearly kill me with indigestion, and I am also very fond of cannon. So I have taken the cannon for my arms and the duck for my crest, while the motto 'Leader to Death' applies equally to the duck, to the cannon and to myself, because I'm called Morty."

Bishop Shiraz, of Durham again, after his appointment to that diocese, emblazoned his escutcheon with six willow wands, which were arranged so as to represent a cross. For some time this was supposed to indicate that he had been a schoolmaster, but on inquiring it was found that the bishop had adopted the osiers because he was the son of a basket maker. Bearings of this kind are not uncommon. An English nobleman had on his shield a Greek cross entwined with ropes—a device due to the fact that he had commenced life as a rope maker. In a similar way various trades have been commemorated, from somewhat remote times, armorial bearings which continue in vogue. One Henry Ferrers, for instance, the founder of the Lordship of Ferrers was Master of the Horse and Master Falconer to William the Conqueror, hence the Ferrers of Rutlandshire bore three horseshoes on their escutcheon. The horseshoe is to the present day retained as the family badge, and as lords of the manor of Oakham the Ferrers have a right to claim a horseshoe from any punce or peer who enters their domain. At Oakham there is an entrance gate studded with such tribute shoes, some of them of great size, and so recently as 1881 when the Princess of Wales passed through the manor, she arrived provided with the necessary horseshoe.

Italian historians say that the Medici family was founded by a physician, who hung out a sign displaying six golden pills by way of attracting attention to his premises, hence these historians say, the six golden balls which the crowned heads of many countries quartered with their own arms. Writing of Italy reminds us, too, of that strange heraldic "freak" the well-known "Legg of Man," which only differs from the ancient arms of Sicily in being mail clad and spurred. It seems at least possible that the one badge was derived from the other. With reference to this Planché says: "The classical symbol of the Island of Sicily (Trinacria) was formed of three naked legs similarly conjoined and the triple mountained Isle of Man might have awakened in its Norman sovereigns some recollections of their Mediterranean conquests." Previous to 1270 the arms of Man were totally different—a ship with her sails furled.

Almost as curious, perhaps, as the device of the three legs is that of the large saucepan or cauldron so common in Spanish heraldry. This seems to have originated from the fact that certain nobles were privileged to levy troops to serve under their private banners, and as they were obliged to feed all these men at their own expense, the barons added the strange looking saucepan to their insignia.

More startling however than legs or saucepans is the figure of a man hanging from a gibbet which is or was borne on the escutcheon of a Scottish family. According to the late Dr. R. Chambers, King Kenneth II. having expressed a regret that one of his kinsmen had been hanged by his enemies and having offered a high reward to any one who would cut down the body and bring it to him, nobody could be found to undertake the task—fear, no doubt of the said enemies. At length a man of humble appearance came forward saying, "Dad yell!" ("I dare"). This hitherto obscure individual succeeded in rescuing the body and was honored with leave to bear in his armorial coat the figure of a man hanging on a gibbet, together with the motto "I dare." "both of which," says Dr. Chambers, "the Dalryells still assume." Sixty years, however, have elapsed since this was written, and while the motto remains we fancy the man and gibbet have been superseded by devices of a different kind.

One Woman's Work.

Eight years ago a young woman bought a farm near Old Lynne, Conn., and began to cultivate it herself. She was up with the sun, laying out work for men, and even taking hold herself. She handled the hoe and rake, drove the mowing machine and hay tedder, pitched hay and did any other work necessary. She was a successful agriculturist and paid for the farm in four years. She now owns a second farm and both yield her an income of from $1,200 to $1,800 a year, which she is laying by for old age.

A THRILLING ADVENTURE.

A Changeling's Experience With an Unknown Number of Burglars.

He is a little man and when his wife woke him and excitedly whispered to him that there was a man in the kitchen he told her to let him stay there.

"But he will get into the dining room and steal all the silver," she said in an undertone. Are you a coward?"

Well now, perhaps he was a coward when it came to tackling a burglar in the dark but no man is going to admit that to his wife so he jumped out of bed and said with the best show of courage possible.

"I'll go in the hall and see if I can hear him."

He went out into the hall and heard him. He didn't expect to and he didn't want to—but he did. There was some one in the house beyond all question, and he wasn't particularly anxious to meet him. He didn't think he had much of a show with a good burly burglar, and he was in a quandary until he remembered the speaking tube.

There was a mouthpiece in the hall and a whistle in the kitchen.

He went back into the bedroom and asked sharply.

"Where are my trousers?"

"Perhaps you had better not go down," George said his wife as she handed him the trousers.

"Don't be a coward," Mary he returned as he hastily pulled them on.

"I'll teach him."

"Perhaps there's more than one," she suggested anxiously.

"There are two or three, sure," he said in a business-like way, as he reached for his coat to throw over his shoulder, "but I'm good for them all, Mary. I guess you never saw me when I got 'em off before."

"But, George," she cried throwing her arms around him as he tried to go out of the room, "I think they have called for help from friends outside. I heard three screaming whistles in the kitchen just after you went out into the hall the first time."

"Quite likely," he said, as he turned himself away and hurried out, "but I'll fool them all, I'm not afraid of them."

He returned a few minutes later and, as he pulled off his trousers again, said reproachfully.

"Mary they got warning and got away with some cold meat. If you hadn't made such a fuss when I tried to make a quiet sneak on them I'd have captured the whole gang sure."

A THRIFTY BRIDESROOM.

He Managed to Make Something Out of the Minister.

It was an American minister who told this story. The conversation had drifted round to weddings, and accidentally marriage fees were touched upon.

"There is always something amusing," he said, "about this wedding fee. I have seen very few bridesrooms who were calm and self-possessed enough to act as if they seemed to know just what they were doing. But when I had a church in a New England village once I had a little experience which proved to me that one man, at least, knew a good bargain when he saw it even if he were getting married."

An odd looking couple came to me to be made man and wife. They seemed to be no objection to the marriage and I married them. When the ceremony was over the bridegroom drew me aside and whispered in my ear that he hadn't a cent in the world. I smiled and told him that that was all right. I was very busy and did not go to the door with them. "Well, when I started to go out to make a call that evening I found that the bridegroom had taken my hat, leaving his own shabby affair in its place, and also a new pair of over-shoes which were in the hall. That shifty couple may be rich now. I am still a poor preacher."—Saturday Evening Post.

Dragon of Holy Writ.

Among other interesting things now on exhibition in Philadelphia is a helliosaurus, supposed by naturalists to have been extinct for 200 years and regarded as the "dragon" of holy writ. The only description by naturalists has been derived from information obtained through the finding of the petrified animal in an upper strata of stone in Tilgate forest, in Sussex and Kent counties, England. The Philadelphia specimen is about five feet long and was captured last June in Egypt. It is covered with a thick skin having the appearance of scales and along its back is a row of conical bones resembling the fin of a large fish. The animal has the general appearance of a large lizard, its tail being about the same length as its body. It has five long talon-like toes on each foot and possesses two rows of teeth, which it is always ready to use. The dragon is a vicious animal, almost perpendicular on its tail, while its small eyes will give forth a baleful light accompanied with a hissing noise very similar to that made by a snake. The eyes are dark, surrounded by a blood-red iris.

A Snail's Tale.

A snail has 30,000 teeth. They are too small to be dangerous ordinarily, but when they are magnified by a microscope scientists have to be very careful to avoid being torn to pieces.

The reader of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one diseased disease that cannot be cured by medicine, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O. The wrong way, with Catarrh, is to stop it without curing it. The poisonous, irritating snuffs, strong caustic solutions, "creams," balms and the like may, perhaps, palliate for a time. But they may drive the disease to the lungs. The wrong way is full of danger.

The right way is a proved one. It's with Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. It cures, perfectly and permanently, by its mild, soothing, cleansing and healing properties, the worst cases of Chronic Catarrh. It has proved itself right, thousands of times, when everything else has failed.

And this makes its proprietors willing to prove that it's the right thing for you, no matter how bad your case, or how long standing.

If they can't cure your Catarrh, they'll pay you $500 in cash.

They mean it.
