THESE ARE THE PEOPLE,

Who Did It, Thus Showing Their Interest in the Welfare of Northville.

Though it consumes considerable space, the Record is only too glad to publish this week the names of Northville people who have shown by their subscription, be it large or ever so small, that they have an interest in Northville, and we can only wish there were many.

GOT A REVOLVER.

Rockwell's Jewelry Store is Slightly Burglarized.

About eleven o'clock Monday night one of the show windows in A. E. Rockwell's jewelry store, Main street, was broken in by some man, who, after grabbing a handsome twelve dollar Smith and Weston revolver, made a sneak around through the alley between Whipple's store and the barber shop. The chap used a brick to smash the glass and evidently was no novice at the business. Mr. Lundy, who lives in the Conoley block nearly opposite, saw the man standing in front of the store, saw him smash the glass, pick out the revolver and run. Mr. Nash's folks and Fredy's tailor also saw the fellow, but before any of them got down stairs the chap had disappeared. Dr. Burgess, who was out on a call, notified Mr. Rockwell. Of course it is thought the deed was done by some one connected with the circus, but it might have been some talent for all of that.

TOOK HIS NEW SUIT.

John Brown is Arrested Charged With Stealing A Fellow Boarders Clothes.

A Swede named John Brown was arrested by Detective White as he was about to take the train for Detroit at Plymouth Tuesday, charged with stealing goods from Dave Barber's house at Meads Mills. In the day time Brown has been employed on the Plymouth water works for some time past and boarded at Dave Barber's. Tuesday morning, it is alleged, he went to the room of Charles Johnson, a fellow workman who was absent, and took his new suit of clothes, a shirt and a pair of suspenders and started down the track toward Plymouth. Mrs. Barber soon missed Brown and the clothes and started two neighbors after him and sent word to Dave who was working up here. Brown was brought back to Barber's and relieved of Johnson's property and he started again for Plymouth. Dave got a warrant from Justice Blackwood and together with White started for Plymouth where they captured Brown as above stated. Brown was up before Justice Blackwood Tuesday afternoon for a hearing. He was bound over to the circuit court and in default of $300 bail will rest in the county jail until time of trial. White in the lock-up here Brown confessed, Detective White says, in the hearing of the Justice and Barber that he took a satchel containing some workman's wearing apparel from a cheap hotel near the M. C. depot at Detroit a few days ago. This valise he turned over to the officer. White took him man to Detroit yesterday morning. Brown claims to be a druggist by profession.

Royal Baking Powder

Is Chemically Pure.

The only Baking Powder yet found by chemical analysis to be entirely free from both lime and alum, and absolutely pure, is the "ROYAL." This perfect purity results from the exclusive use of cream of tartar specially refined and prepared by patent processes which totally remove the tartrate of lime and other impurities. The cost of this chemically pure cream of tartar is much greater than any other, and it is used in no baking powder except the "ROYAL."

UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS,
CHAMPAIGN, Aug. 5, 1891.

I have recently analyzed samples of the Royal Baking Powder purchased by myself in open market, and I find it invariably to be composed of wholesome ingredients and entirely free from adulteration or impurities of any kind.

AND STILL ANOTHER.

A Northville Young Man Leads a Milford Girl to Hymen's Alter.

George Barley of this place and Miss Minnie Taylor were married at the home of the bride's aunt, Mrs. Pinckney, in Milford yesterday afternoon. The happy pair left on the 3 p.m. train for Detroit for a brief visit.

The groom is a well known and highly respected Northville young man; a member of the Northville cornet band and a worthy member of the Knights of Pythias of this place. The bride is also well known here, having clerked for C. W. Horton & Co. for some time, and has a large circle of friends in our village.

The Record and about 1999 other Northville people extend congratulations.

Communication.

Editor Record.—

There exists a number of young men in our town who style themselves Brown's Colts—whose sole object is to play ball with what degree of proficiency they have done this I leave you to judge. Saturday was the day for us to see a ball game, for according to agreement we were to have at least one game if possible a week. It seems that Manager Brown asked the Globe Furniture nine to cross bats with them Saturday afternoon. It will be remembered that the Globe nine gave the Colts the best game which Northville people have seen for many a day on May 30, and many of our towns people have wished to see them play again. The Globe boys began practice and also to strengthen up their nine and on Friday night, 10 and behold, Brown's favorites backed out. We know not the cause, but surmise it was from fear. Is this the reason there was no game of ball last Saturday. Come boys brace up and give us a game once more. BUSINESS.

The first of a series of Demerest medal contests will be held in the M. E. church under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. next week Friday evening. The program will consist of recitations interspersed with music, etc. Not less than six, nor more than ten contestants can compete for the silver medal and when six persons have each won a silver medal they may each compete for the gold medal. The contest is open to members of either sex between the ages of 12 and 25. The admission will be 10 cents.

While Mark Burgess, James Clark's brother-in-law, and another young man were going home in a wagon Monday night they were run into by two parties who it is said were having a little race down Main street. They met in front of J. S. Lapham's and Mark, in trying to save himself jumped from the vehicle, striking on his head and inflicting some severe bruises. He was conveyed home and did not regain consciousness until Tuesday morning. Dr. Burgess, who is attending to him, is alright now.

SCINTILLATIONS.

THE BEAUTIFUL CITY

THE Beautiful City! Forever
Its rapturous praises resound;
We vainly would behold it—but never
A glimpse of its glory is found:
We slacken our lips at the tender
White breasts of our mothers to hear
Of its marvelous beauty and splendor;
We see—but the gleam of a tear!
Where lies it? We question and listen;
We lean from the mountain, or mast,
And see the dull earth, or the glister
Of seas inconceivably vast;
The dust of the one blurs our vision—
The glare of the other our brain,
No city nor island elysian
In all of the land or the main!
The Beautiful City! O mortal,
Fare hopefully on in thy quest,
Pass down through the grassy portal
That leads to the Valley of Rest,
There first passes the One who, in pity
Of all thy great yearning, awaits
To point out The Beautiful City,
And loosen the trump at the gates.

THE skill and knowledge essential to the production of the most popular remedies known have enabled the Hartzell Medicine Company to achieve a great success in the reputation of their remedies.

THE best part of a woman's love is worship; but it is hard to her to be sent away with her precious spikenard, and her long tresses, too, that were let fall ready to soothe the wearied feet.

"THE last time I went hunting," remarked Ed. Monroe, the umbrella traveler, "I shot seventeen ducks in one day." "Were they wild?" inquired a listener, "No, but the farmer who owned them," said Ed.

THOMAS WORRALL, who travels for a Broadway clothier, says the meanest man he ever met lives in a Consumption.

According to statistics more people die every year of consumption than all other diseases combined. Over three millions every year, ten millions every three years, thirty-five millions every ten years. Equal to one-half of the population of the United States. And this vast multitude of people die of consumption every ten years. It is appalling!

Did you ever stop to think how slight a cold would lay the foundation for consumption? You've taken a slight cold; you say it will wear off in a day or two. Don't do anything for it. It isn't necessary! In a day or two you don't feel very well; you go and see a doctor, pay him a dollar or two, but get no better after taking his prescription, very soon a cough comes on; not very troublesome at first, but you cough a great deal at night; the cough gets worse, you try everything that you can hear of that ever helped anyone else, but Hartzell's Cough Syrup—never heard of it? Well that's funny! If you had gone to the nearest drug store you could have got a bottle for a quarter and cured your cold and stopped your cough. Our advice to you is to take Hartzell's Cough Syrup whenever you notice the first symptoms of a cold or cough. Hartzell's Cough Syrup is the best and only remedy that can be relied upon for the cure of coughs, colds, asthma, bronchitis and consumption, in the early stages. There is more virtue in one bottle of Hartzell's Cough Syrup than in a dozen bottles of any other cough syrup offered you. Be sure you ask for Hartzell's Cough Syrup and take no other. For sale by your druggist.

As we remarked above, always patronize your home institution; merchants, manufacturers, etc. We forgot to place your druggist in the list. He is a very important man if you only knew it. Often times the life of some member of your family may depend upon his knowledge of drugs and the promptness and accuracy with which he prepares your family receipts, or fills your family physician's prescriptions. Don't by any means think he does not understand his business. He does and will attend to it too; he is generally a level headed man who knows every man, woman and child within ten miles, and understands many of their peculiarities better than the doctor. You can nearly always take his word for what is good for you, because you will find him out if he should recommend something that is not good. That is the reason that he will tell you that Hartzell's Cough Syrup is the best. Hindoo Oil will relieve your aches and pains either internal or external, and that Cu-re-na is the best remedy for women known.

Didn't Mean Any Offense.

He was such a weak and humble little man, when he came into the grocery store to make a complaint, the clerk was disposed to be haughty and impudicous.

"May I inquire," he said, in a small voice, "if any gentleman here sold my wife some butter yesterday?"

"I guess I'm the man," responded a big, brawny fellow, with an inch or two more chin on him than a clerk usually has need of in his business.

"Oh, excuse me," exclaimed the customer, shrinkingly, "I meant no offense. The butter is all right, but I wanted to say that three colors of hair in one roll is somewhat incongruous. And I thought I might add, also, a request that if you could send up a brush and comb with the next sale we would be ever so much obliged. Of course, it was an oversight on your part, and I am not complaining, you understand—not complaining, merely suggesting."

The clerk's face was a study.
"Referring again to the hair mentioned previously," went on the little man, "permit me to say that I find no fault because of its quality, or its length. The incongruity of color was the only objection. In the old times we read that Sampson had long hair, and a great deal of it, and your butter, in that respect, has rights my entire family is bound

A Little Child's Influence.

Bernard J. Schmitz, a wealthy farmer of Atchison county, Kansas, went to Germany last November to visit his old home, and was arrested for deserting the German army thirty years before. The matter was placed in the hands of the United States minister in Germany, but all efforts to secure Schmitz's release appeared fruitless. Schmitz's eleven-year-old daughter, however, wrote a letter to the emperor of Germany from her home in this country, setting forth in a childlike manner the facts in the case and asking for her father's release on his birthday, which came on the fourth of last month. The letter reached the emperor on the 27th, and he was so touched that he issued a pardon for Schmitz, who is now on his way home.—New York World.

A Column of Facts.

We would call your attention to the fact that the present generation of women, as a class, are more predisposed to diseases peculiar to their sex than any previous generation, the old adage "women and woe" applies to them, more than to the men. They are certainly weaker mentally than their grandmothers, and they are certainly weaker physically than their ancestors. Of course, this is a cause for regret. But we might just as well try to stop the earth in its course, as to co-vince women that they are to blame in any way for their poor health, and we want to try. We are simply going to call their attention to the fact that there is a medicine that will remove that predisposition to diseases peculiar to women, another fact is that it will cure any and all of the various diseases of women. It will restore vitality, it will build up broken down constitutions, it will remove that tired feeling, which so many women complain of. It is the best nerve restorer known, it does not stimulate the nerves, but it is a wonderful tonic, restoring the diseased condition and restoring healthy action to the shattered nervous system. Ladies who are in poor health from whatever cause can find a permanent and sure relief in "Cure-na." After taking a few doses, that nervous, irritable, indescribable feeling will be gone. That backache, headache, and "all gone" sensation will have left you. The world will have a new interest for you. Things will look brighter. Your friends will be more pleasant. You will marvel at the change—but "Cure-na" did it.

Another fact is that the proprietors of "Cure-na" sell it under a positive guarantee that it will do more good, give more relief and better satisfaction than any other medicine offered you. Read the following unsolicited testimonials:

HARTFORD, JULY 9, 1892.

HARTZELL MEDICINE CO., SCOTTVILLE, MICH. GENTLEMEN—I beg pardon for not having acknowledged the receipt of your medicine before this, but I thought after waiting so long I would wait until I saw whether it helped me or not, and I can say that it has wonderfully. I felt like another person by the time I had it half taken. I have it all taken and have another bottle. I think the Pellets have done me nearly or quite as much good. Have recommended it to others. Yours with respect, Mrs. E. N. PATTERSON.

HARTFORD, JULY 17, 1892.

HARTZELL MEDICINE CO., SCOTTVILLE, MICH. GENTLEMEN—I in regard to your medicine I hardly know how to express my sincere thanks for the good it has done me as I feel much better now than I have for the last three years, and shall continue to take it until completely cured. Respectfully yours, Mrs. W. V. SMITH.

Blessings to be thankful For.

Did it ever occur to you that many of the good things of this life come in a roundabout way? Sometimes we are to blame ourselves for not accepting the blessings that are showered upon us or are laid at our feet. Perhaps we had better define a blessing! Anything that will relieve the various infirmities of mankind is a blessing. That is the reason why Hartzell's Cough Syrup is a blessing. It will not only relieve, but cure Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Coughs, Colds, and in the early stages of Consumption it is unsurpassed. It is the popular remedy of the day.

HEMORRHOIDS OR PILES CAN BE CURED.

After many years of research and experiment, we have obtained a remedy that will cure all curable cases of Piles. We have given this remedy a thorough trial before offering it to the public, and we have the most flattering reports of its success in the treatment of this very distressing and disagreeable disease. In perfecting this remedy we have become satisfied that only by bringing the remedies directly in contact with the parts diseased, can Piles be cured.

HARTZELL'S RECTAL CAPSULES

Is the only remedy that will do this, when used according to directions. They will allay irritation, stop pain, heal the diseased tissue, arrest and prevent ulceration, exert a tonic effect on the bowels, and consequently are curative in their action and a specific for Piles.

HARTZELL'S RECTAL CAPSULES

Will dissolve slowly but surely, bringing the remedies contained in them in contact with the parts affected for a longer time than by any other means.

Hartzell's Rectal Capsules

THE MAN WHO VANISHED.

BY FERGUS HUME.

CHAPTER I.

Flying From Justice.

In a handsomely-furnished room, in a large house which stood in one of the fashionable streets of Piccadilly, sat two young men playing cards. A handsome room it was, but evidently that of a bachelor, as in the picturesque confusion there was wanting that subtle touch of refinement and order which indicates the hand of woman.

In the centre was a table at which sat the two young men aforesaid in evening dress, with several packs of cards scattered at their feet and their eyes intent upon the game, which seemed to be rather an expensive one, judging by the pile of gold pieces that lay on the green cloth.

One of the players was tall, with clearly-cut features, dark hair, closely cropped, and a small dark mustache, beneath which gleamed regular teeth when he smiled, which he did not seem inclined to do at the present moment. Adrian Lancaster was not at all pleased as luck was dead against him. His friend, Philip Trevanna, was short, fair and insignificant-looking so much so that not even the well-cut clothes he wore could give him a distinguished appearance.

The Louis Quinze clock on a bracket in one corner of the room chimed eleven, with a silvery ring, but still the two young men played on steadily. The savage look on Adrian's face showed that he was losing still, until at last the look of triumph on his companion's smug countenance proved too much for his philosophy, and rising from his seat with a stifled oath, he hung down his cards upset the table by his sudden movement and lunging over to the fireplace, lighted a cigarette.

"Hallo," said Trevanna lazily, looking at the overturned table and the scattered cards with an air of well-bred surprise, "what's the matter?"

"Nothing," replied Adrian, thrusting his hands into his pockets and looking down at the debris from his height of six feet odd, "only I'm sick of playing—you've won a deuce of a lot, so unless I want to leave myself a pauper, I think I'll give the game a rest for to-night."

"Better luck next time," said Trevanna, rising and stretching himself, "you're a bad loser."

"There never yet was a philosopher who could bear the toothache patiently," quoted Adrian with a grim smile.

"You call losing at cards toothache," murmured Philip indolently, "I dare say you're right, it's quite as disagreeable at all events."

He glanced complacently over the bundle of IOUs he held in his hand, added the amounts together, then offered them to his companion.

"It's rather in a lucky way to-night," he said in a satisfied tone, "if you don't mind old chap, I'd like a check for a thousand."

Adrian bit his neither lip angrily, then walking toward his desk and pulling out a blank check made it out for the amount named, which he handed to Philip without a word, then taking the IOUs he tore them up and threw the pieces on the floor.

"That pretty well clears me of red-tape," he said at length, resuming his position in front of the mantel-piece.

"Never mind," said Trevanna with an evil smile, "your marriage with Olive Maunders will put you straight."

"Leave Miss Maunders out of the question," observed Adrian imperiously, "you've no right to use her name."

"I'll use the name of anybody I like," retorted Trevanna.

"Except hers," said Lancaster quietly, although his dark face was flushed with anger.

Philip Trevanna laughed insolently at the remark and taking up a few cards lightly balanced them in his hand.

"Don't talk bosh," said Trevanna politely, "you know you only want to marry Olive Maunders for her money."

"Speak for yourself," cried Lancaster, going over to a side table and taking up a decanter. "I know you'd give anything to be in my place."

"Tell you what," said Trevanna, with an ugly look, "I'll play you for her—if I win, I'll marry her."

"Hold your tongue," retorted Adrian, grasping the stem of the decanter in a paroxysm of rage.

"I'll back this thousand against Olive Maunders," observed Trevanna, ignoring the menacing look of his friend.

"Will you play?"

"No."

"Then go to the devil," shouted Philip losing control of himself and flinging the cards he was holding in to the face of Adrian. "Take that!"

The hot blood flamed in Lancaster's face, and with a stifled roar of anger he threw the heavy decanter he was holding at Philip Trevanna's head. It struck him full on the temple and without a word the young man fell like a log on the floor, while the decanter, smashed into a thousand pieces, was scattered over the carpet and the contents diffused an odor of spirits through the room.

There was a dead silence for one awful moment, broken only by the steady tick of the clock. Suddenly a woman in the street laughed and the sound seemed to arouse Adrian out of the lethargy into which he had fallen. A red mist floated before his eyes and his limbs seemed paralyzed. Even when he strove to cry out his voice died away in a hoarse whisper, and he stood with a terrible look of anguish on his face staring at the overturned card-table, the broken pieces of glass, and the figure lying at his feet so still and deathlike with a thin red stream of blood flowing from an ugly wound in the temple.

Once more the woman laughed, and

Adrian rapidly sprang to the windows in a stealthy manner, closed them and pulled down the blinds so as to shut out this terrible sight from the eyes of the prying world.

A sudden roll of thunder startled him, and with a hurried glance around he crept toward the still form of his friend.

"Philip," he whispered, kneeling beside Trevanna's body, "Philip."

No answer! Adrian opened Trevanna's shirt and placed his hand on the heart—it did not beat—he leaned his face downward to the slightly parted lips: there was no breath, and then for the first time a sense of what he had done seemed to break on him.

"Dead!" he whispered with ashen gray lips in a paroxysm of terror, clasping his hands. "Dead! I've killed him!"

He arose slowly to his feet, looked vacantly round the room, at the still white face, at the stream of blood.

"I can't stay here," he whispered to himself, putting one hand up to his throat, "they would arrest me for murder—I would be hanged—Oh God, the disgrace—poor Olive!"

There was no time to be lost for at any moment some one might come up to his rooms and discover his crime; he would have to fly—but where could he fly to? Where in all this great city was there a refuge for a murderer? Still, he could not stay; he could give no plausible explanation of the evidence of his guilt was too strong; the police would come up, he would be arrested, then the inquest, the trial, the verdict—with the rapidity of lightning the possibility of these things flashed across his mind—and with a hoarse cry he sprang past the body on the floor into his bedroom.

Then he put on a heavy ulster which reached nearly to his feet, effectively hid the evening clothes he had no time to change. Then he put on a soft hat, pulled it down over his eyes, caught up a heavy stick, and stole out again.

The sitting-room half-lighting that it was all some hideous dream. But no, it was too true—there on the floor lay the body of the man he had killed, and he, Adrian Lancaster, was a murderer.

The clock struck twelve with a silvery chime as he slowly pulled the dead man's cloak off the back of a chair, and with a sudden movement flung it over the body as if terrified to look upon his handiwork. He turned over the gas which was flaring in the pink globes and then crept toward the door in the darkness, carefully avoiding the place where the body lay. Once outside the door, which opened with a loud creak as if to denounce him, he locked it and dropping the key into his pocket, stole stealthily downstairs out into the stormy night, feeling that on his brow burned the mark of Cain, which from henceforth would make him a fugitive on the face of the earth.

He walked slowly down the street toward Piccadilly, not heeding the direction but only longing to get as far away from the scene of his crime as he could, and when a hansom suddenly drew up at the side of the pavement, he felt a sudden convulsion of terror at hearing the voice of the driver, asking him if he wanted a cab.

For a moment he hesitated, then, without a word, sprang in and hung himself back among the cushions, closing the doors as if he could thus hide himself from the eyes of justice.

"Where to, sir?" asked the driver, peering down through the trap door in the roof of the cab.

Where to indeed? Was there any sanctuary in this mighty London where he could hide? No, he could think of none but with that instinct of self-preservation which is strong in the breast of every human being, he wished to fly as far away as he could, so said at a venture the first name that came into his head.

"Hampstead,"

"Right, sir," said the driver, and closing the trap-door with a bang, he let down the glass and drove off.

CHAPTER II.

The Reckless.

The rapidity or slowness with which time passes depends entirely upon the feelings and although the drive to Hampstead occupied only an hour, it seemed to Adrian Lancaster as if centuries had passed since the last his chambers. Between his past life of carelessness and ease and this one of agonizing feelings, a great gulf had widened which he knew would ever more separate him from his former state. A short time ago he was a pleasure-loving man, rich, honored and courted, but now he was a hunted fugitive—a social outcast, scorned of all men and pitied by none. The shock had been so great that he did not yet understand his position, but he lay back among the cushions in a kind of apathy, the whole journey seeming to him to be a kind of hideous nightmare.

Suddenly the cab stopped, and the trap-door in the roof was opened by the driver.

"This is Hampstead, sir," he said, in a hoarse voice, "and the limit of the run."

"Very good," replied Adrian gully, "I will get out here."

He jumped out on the sodden ground, turning up the collar of his coat, for the rain was still coming down heavily and gave the cobbles ten shillings in gold.

"I have no change, sir," began the driver.

"It doesn't matter," said Adrian, waving his hand. "Good night," and he tramped off into the darkness, while the cobbles with a muttered expression of thanks drove back to town.

It was a lonely road, with a high fence on each side, topped by trees and beyond, great houses all in darkness as the inmates had apparently gone to bed. Adrian had no idea where he was but walked slowly along the muddy path with downward head, and his hands that felt well into his pockets. His boots were more adapted to Piccadilly than to country roads, and the cold chill struck through the thin soles, but he paid no attention, mechanically walking on without heeding where he was going.

At last he found himself walking along under a weather-stained brick wall, on the top of which grew luxuriant ivy, and toward the end a low door appeared which stood slightly open. Half thinking that it would admit him into some park where he could conceal himself, Adrian, with no very definite purpose in his mind, pushed it wide open and entered.

He found himself in dense darkness standing in a path which apparently ran through a belt of beech trees whose branches, reaching overhead, stretched hands he carefully advanced following the windings of the path, and carefully avoiding collision with the trunks of the tall trees on either side. At last he emerged into a wide lawn half ringed by dense masses of trees, while at one end stood a large house with many gables and turrets standing black against the clear sky beyond.

Adrian recognized it as one of those old country houses which still remain in Hampstead, isolating themselves in sullen pride amid their wide parks, although enclosed on all sides by rows of red brick villas and desirable residences. The long drive, the frightful excitement through which he had passed, and the dampness of the night were all telling on him physically, and he longed to find some place where he could lie down and rest. With this idea he stole across the lawn toward the house and on turning the corner of a great beech tree which stood high up on a knoll, he saw a bright light shining through an open French window. With stealthy steps and abated breath he stepped up to it, keeping in the shadow beyond the screen of light, and on looking through, espied a large comfortably furnished apartment with a man seated in a chair near a table covered with a white tablecloth, on which was spread a comfortable supper. Hardly knowing what he was doing, but only anxious to have some one to talk to and relieve his overburdened mind, Adrian boldly stepped into the room, a tall, sombre figure with muddy boots and wet with rain.

THEY GLORY IN A GOAT.

A Welsh Regiment Has One That Starches Ahead of the Soldiers.

The Welsh soldiers of the Old Twenty-third are a very ancient corps. They were embodied in 1688 and it was the Pall Mall Budget believes, at an early period of their existence that the custom of having a goat with a shield and garland to its horns to march at the head of the drums first obtained. Gross in his "Military Antiquities" mentions this custom as follows:

"The royal regiment of Welsh fusiliers has the privileged honor of passing in review, preceded by a goat with garlands, and adorned with rings of flowers; and although this may not come immediately under the denomination of a reward of merit, yet the corps values itself much on the antiquity of the custom. Every 1st of March, being the anniversary of their tutelary saint David, the officers give a splendid entertainment to all the Welsh brethren; and after the cloth is taken away a bumper is filled round to H. R. H. the prince of Wales, whose health is always drunk the first on that day, the band playing the old tune of 'The Noble Race of the Shennin.' At that time a handsome drummer boy, elegantly dressed, mounted on the goat, richly caparisoned for the occasion, is led thrice around the table in procession by the drum major. It happened in 1773, in Boston, that the animal gave such a spring from the floor that he dropped his rider upon the table, and then bounding over the heads of some officers he ran to the barracks with all his trappings to the no small joy of the garrison.

In 1884 the then regimental goat died and to compensate the Twenty-third, for their loss, her majesty presented the regiment with two of the finest goats from a flock—the gift of the shah of Persia—in Windsor park; and since that date the sovereign has continued to supply the royal Welsh fusiliers with goats as the occasion has required.

Bees and the Horse Chestnut.

Honey bees from somewhere haunt the flowers and blossoming trees of New York especially the horse chestnuts. The blossoms of this tree have a peculiar fascination for bees of all sorts, and in regions where bees are plentiful there is a noise as of a swarm about each horse chestnut. It is an old tradition that the horse chestnut blossom contains an intoxicant which makes the honey seekers drunk and causes them to drop senseless to the ground, where they become the prey of ants.

A Nation of Coffee Drinkers.

We are a nation of coffee drinkers. During the last nine months the imports of coffee into the United States amounted to 463,187,732 pounds, an increase of upward of 100,000,000 over the imports for the same period last year. In the same time the imports of tea have decreased only from 5,600,114 pounds to 5,270,302 pounds.

THE LANGUAGE OF CHICKENS.

Queer Ways in Which Barnyard Fowls Communicate with One Another.

The piping of the newly hatched chick is well known to those interested in the hatch and waiting to care for them and the mother's assuring "cluck," "cluck" (the rallying call), is kept up as long as they need her care. As the chicks grow larger the piping is succeeded by a chirruping note. When settling to rest under the mother's feathers there is a light trilling song of satisfaction, but hearing quickly this is changed to a cry of alarm if a hand is thrust under the hen to pull out a chick. The declaration of the hen is also very decided, even if it is not accompanied with a sharp peck to enforce its meaning. A very amusing change of topics may be produced by throwing a large beetle before the chicks; not only will these utter a shout of surprise, but the hen will also give her advice in a voice that says: "Look out! be careful!" Change the subject by giving them a little alfalfa and see how quickly madam's voice changes to a note that brings up all stragglers to participate in the treat.

There seems to be a perfect accord between the notes of the hen and the understanding of her family, states the Rural New Yorker. How well the little things know a note of warning at the approach of a hawk or any other dangerous enemy; see how quickly they obey and take shelter under the mother, who keeps up her defiant declaration till danger is past. She has a word of warning also for her little wait that may perchance peep into the coop. Sometimes with the first brood in spring, the mother will be inclined to leave them before they have any confidence enough to care for themselves in which case the forelorn, wailing note piping for her, is perfectly intelligible to any one; so is also the sad piping cry of a sick chick; one accustomed to the care of the little things can almost tell if it is the cry of death. "Who could believe that the first creaking and gurgling," as heard in the voices of a broodling and a peacock would ever eliminate in that clear ringing grow which, in ancient times, when there were no clocks, summoned all good people to get ready for another day? As Gilbert White has it: "The cock has been distinguished in all ages as the countryman's clock or alarm." The poet too, compares him to a watchman: "The cock whose clarion sounds / The silent hours."

As he develops sufficient importance he sends forth notes of invitation to the gentler sex to come and share some dainty morsel or perhaps to see how nicely he can bolt it himself. No sounds made by poultry are so expressive and almost human as those made when an intruder approaches their roosts at night. Step lightly to their house and you will hear a faint, trilling noise made by the cock first, and answered by the hens. This low, drawn out, tremulous sound seems to say, "Listen! What is that strange noise? Should you approach near enough to alarm them a sharp but not instantly given as a warning of danger. Catch hold of a bird and a powerful voice which cannot be mistaken for any other sound. The former part of this nocturnal performance is very prettily described by Simeon Pease Cheney in an article "Barnyard Solos," it is given with descriptive musical notes with minute analysis. But these notes are not in one sense musical, so that a piano could imitate them. The loquacity of the cock is astonishing; if one listens attentively. When sliding up to a hen he has a cooing, whispering delivery or when he finds a good place for a nest, his fine muttering invitation to a hen is exceedingly characteristic. So is the talk of a cock asking for food when starting with their feeder to the corn-crib. The eye of the cock is continually on the alert for an enemy, so solicitous is he for the safety of his harem. The appearance of a hawk is announced in decided terms, instantly calling the attention of all the farmyard inhabitants.

The pullet when about to lay utters a very pretty cackle; if disturbed on her nest she uses an entirely different expression, but when the egg is laid what rejoicing which is chorused by all the family.

These sounds do not include all the language of poultry; there is probably a reserve for remarkable occasions. I was once a witness to one unusual demonstration: while engaged in a quiet occupation in an out building on a warm, sunny day, I heard from the poultry a very peculiar, toise, as I had never heard before. I hurried out to ascertain the cause, when I found a lot of hens all forming a circle around a live snake, coiled up, not knowing how to escape.

Columbus' Tomb.

President Adams of Cornell university believes that the investigations of the German explorer, Rudolf Cronen, leave no reasonable doubt that the remains of Christopher Columbus repose in San Domingo, whence they were removed from Spain about 1541.

His Last Words.

Herkmers: "That was sad about Charley Macgrave, who died from overexertion while tying his cravat a few days ago. Do you know what his last words were?" Tomkin-Spark: "No, what were they?" Herkmers: "I'm going home to tie no more."

Wife.—"I'm tired to death. Been having the baby's picture taken by the instantaneous process." Husband.—"How long did it take?" Wife.—"About four hours."

A man feels pretty badly scared when his heart is in his throat, but he feels a great deal more scared when his stomach is there. That is one of the signs of dyspepsia.

Mrs. Totling.—"I'm going to make me a bath robe." Mrs. Dimling.—"Are you?" Mrs. Totling.—"Yes, I have bought the loveliest piece of watered silk for the purpose."

"I say," said the old subscriber, "what has become of the man who used to get up all those presidential tickets that would be sure to win for your paper?" "We had to give him a vacation," replied the editor. "He's been taken with a lucid interval."

Miss Porker.—"And so your engagement with Mr. Baskbay is at an end. How did it happen?" Miss Lakeside.—"Why, he said he wanted to have a grand wedding, as it was an affair that comes only once in a person's life." Miss Porker (indignantly).—"The ideal!"

Mary McDonald.

We would like to say to the Meads Mills correspondent of the Record that the correspondent at Plymouth, most generally knows what he is talking about before he enters anything in these columns. As we had something else to do besides taking our umbrella and walking stick and prancing up to the water-works ditch we asked the time keeper and was told the time it would take to complete the ditch, but did not think it necessary to mention in the paper the exact time of completion as we had something of more importance to fill out our space with.
Hoping this will find you well and happy I remain "THE KID".

"Many men of many minds," is a true saying, but one thing we have found, is that nearly all men are of one mind when they have a cough or cold. They go to the nearest Drug Store and are sure to get a bottle of Hartwell's Cough Syrup, for they it is the best remedy that can be obtained.
