BEATEN AGAIN.

The Northville Club Suffers a Second Defeat.

THOSE BELLE BRANCH FARMERS

Were Too Much For Browns Colts.

About 500 people were assembled at the ball park Saturday afternoon to witness the Colts do up the Belle Branch fillers of the soil, and for several innings it looked as if Northville would have a walk away. There was undoubtedly a portion of the 500 who had paid 15 cents to see the Colts again done up and therefore the whole audience was not disappointed when the final score showed 9 to 7 in Belle Branch's favor. The day was a fine one, in fact it could have been no better and everything seemed to indicate a most interesting game. The Colts showed up in good shape during their practice and the boys from the bay fields of Belle Branch soon demonstrated that they had been doing something of late besides plowing. Northville was strengthened up, or at least supposed to be, by Wilbur of Farmington. He is a good all around man, but did no better work behind the bat than Wilson. Yerkes and Wilbur were Northville's battery and Perry and Thompson did the same work for the Farmers. Thompson is the prettiest, and we think the best, catcher that ever stood behind a Northville batter. It was just four o'clock when Umpire Stanley threw the ball to Yerkes and called the game.

For the visitors, Pierce went first to bat and got first on Wilson's dropped third strike, and 2d on a high throw ball. H. Wait struck out, Pierce stole 3d and came home on DeBree's wild throw to the plate. At this stage of the game, Yerkes shattered the knuckle of the middle finger of his left hand endeavoring to stop DeBree's high-throw ball. Thompson and P. Wait then struck out. Runs 1.

For the Colts, Wilbur struck out, Shields hit to P. Wait, who failed to field the ball, German flew out to Pierce and Shields went to 2d on Thompson's wild throw. Stewart struck out. Runs 0.

Belle Branch then went out in one, two, three order in the next two innings and Northville did the same. In the fourth, Yerkes struck out the first three men at bat and Shields started the ball a rolling for the Colts by hitting to Slater, but was thrown out at first. German and Stewart hit to H. Wait who failed to field the ball in time and when DeBree lined it out for a single they both crossed the plate and DeBree went to 3d on the throw in. Clark went to first on a grounder to Perry and DeBree came home. Webster made a hit and Clark went to 3d, Webster stole 2d, Yerkes struck out, Wilson made a hit to left field and Clark and Webster both came home. Wilson made a neat steal of 2d and came home on Wilbur's hit to center field, who went to 3d on wild throws. Shields stopped the run getting for the day by flying out to Gordon. Runs 6.

In the fifth, Gordon flew out to Wilbur, Fields hit Webster, who threw wild to 1st, and Fields went to 2d. Hood hit to Clark, who failed to field it in time to get him out, Fields going to 3d. Hood stole 2d, Pierce hit to Webster, who threw low to the plate and Fields scored. Hood came home on a wild pitch, Pierce stole 2d and came home on H. Wait's single to center. Wait stole 2d and 3d, Thompson was given his base on balls and stole 2d. P. Wait got first on Wilson's drop of 3d strike and H. Wait was caught napping at 3d. Thompson and P. Wait each stole a base, Perry hit to 1st and was out. Runs 3.

In the sixth, Slater, fanned air three times, but got 1st on Wilson's drop of the ball and high throw to 1st, and went to 2d on the error. Gordon hit to right and Slater beat the ball home, Gordon going to 3d, but was thrown out trying to steal home. Fields and Hood struck out. Runs 1.

Clark hit a grounder to Slater, made 1st on it and went to 2d on Webster's sacrifice to Perry and out at 1st. Yerkes got 1st on balls, and he and Clark both advanced a base on a passed ball, but were destined to go no farther for Wilson flew to Pierce and Wilbur struck out. Runs 0.

In the seventh, Pierce hit a grounder to Clark and beat the throw to 1st. H. Wait flew out to Clark, Pierce stole 2d and 3d and tied the score on Webster's wild throw of Thompson's hit, Thompson going to 3d and scoring on a wild pitch. P. Wait and Perry struck out. Runs 2.

The Northville's did not see first base in this inning.

In the eighth, Manager Brown thought it best to try his Farmington timber behind the bat, and Wilson was sent 2d. Both sides went out in one, two, three, order.

In the ninth, Hood hit to Clark and was thrown out at 1st. Pierce made a single, stole 2d, went to 3d on a wild throw and came home on H. Wait's hit. Wait stole 2d and 3d, Thompson got first on balls again, went to 3d on P. Wait's single and H. Wait scored. Perry went to 1st on balls, forcing H. Wait to 2d. Slater hit a liner to Yerkes, who made a very pretty one hand catch and a neat double play by throwing Perry out at 1st. The crowd nearly went wild over this play. King Ambler jumped three feet in the air and turned a double back-action hand spring; Kinney, the fruit tree man, jumped twice across the picket fence; Johnson and Waterman threw their camp stools into the lemonade barrel; Charlie Gardner jumped down from the grand stand, lighting across the shoulders of one of the park policemen; Will Tinsam gave one hoarse yell and fainted away; Dr. Jaquess stuffed his camp stool inside his coat and started to run around the bases, but was held back by a hundred friends; Doe, Hoar yelled fire; Fish Com. Clark lay flat on the ground vainly endeavoring to yell out, but not a sound could he utter and so he waved his hat; Chief of Police Adams chased thirteen small boys off the fence who had that place mounted plus 15 cents each; Will Hilborn, who was taking tickets at the gate, tore down the turnstile and knocked out all the windows in the ticket office, and so it went. Everybody yelled, the boys, the girls, the ladies, the men, old, young, little and big. When quiet once more reigned Yerkes went to bat to do or die, for it was their last chance. He fanned the air three times, Wilson made a little hit and reached first, but was thrown out in trying to steal 2d. Wilbur made a safe single and reached 3d on a high throw. He got no farther however for Shields struck out and no runs were made.

The following is the score:

	NORTHVILLE	FARMERS

Do You Wish the Finest Bread and Cake?

It is conceded that the Royal Baking Powder is the purest and strongest of all the baking powders.

The purest baking powder makes the finest, sweetest, most delicious food.

The strongest baking powder makes the lightest food.

That baking powder which is both purest and strongest makes the most digestible and wholesome food.

Why should not every housekeeper avail herself of the baking powder which will give her the best food with the least trouble?

Dr. Haines, of Rush Medical College, Consulting Chemist of the Chicago Board of Health, says: "Royal is not only the purest, but the strongest baking powder with which I am acquainted."

MURDERED IN PRISON.

A LIFE CONVICT KILLS A PRISON CONTRACTOR.

Jackson Prison the Scene of the Awful Tragedy—Other Michigan News of Importance.

An awful murder was committed at the state prison at Jackson. William Cuddy, a member of the well-known contracting firm of Phillips & Cuddy, without a moment's warning, was struck several terrible blows over the head with a hammer. He sank back unconscious and died three hours later. No one was in the room with Mr. Cuddy previous to the discovery, but Henry Blackman, a life convict, who was sent from Oakland county Jan. 30, 1879, for murder in the first degree, was employed in the shop charged to go into the room and find Blackman coming out rubbing something off his hands. The boy looked in the direction of the door and saw Cuddy sitting with his head hanging forward and blood running from a wound. The boy rushed to the door and called for the warden. He was taken to the prison hospital and an attempt made by prison physician Kinkaid to revive him, but in vain. Examination disclosed the fact that his skull had been crushed in by a blow from some blunt instrument.

Blackman was at once taken in charge and placed in a cell. He refused to say anything, but finally admitted that words had passed between them. Blackman had given the contractors a great deal of trouble heretofore and has been changed from one position to another several times in an effort to find something he would do well. Whether or not he had any previous any serious difficulty before the murder is unknown. It is said Blackman was sent to prison for the murder of his wife and family and he is said to be a surly, reckless individual and believed to be insane.

Mr. Cuddy was a young man under 35 years of age and was for many years engaged in traveling salesmen, through which he had acquired a wide acquaintance throughout the state and wherever known he was highly respected. Quiet and unassuming, he gained friends everywhere. For many years he resided in Detroit, but two years ago he moved to Jackson and purchased an interest in the iron contract with S. W. Phillips. Their partnership terminated with the old contract for contracts which expired the day of the murder, and he sold his interest to Mr. Phillips and M. G. Loenneker, intending to travel for a time and recuperate his health which had been poorly of late.

Suicide at Pontiac.

Rodney Raymond, a highly esteemed citizen of Pontiac, committed suicide at his residence by shooting himself through the heart as he lay on his bed. His health had been poor for some time, having had a stroke of paralysis recently, which undoubtedly is the cause of the act. He had a room alone, and didn't awaken any member of his family, and he was not found until morning. He was 50 years of age.

Incendiarists at Nashville.

The large three-story frame building of the Williams Fruit Evaporating company at Nashville was totally destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at $60,000, with no insurance. The fact that there have been several fires here in the past few months of peculiar origin, and that the building consumed and not been used since last fall, suggest that they have all been incendiary.

MICHIGAN STATE ITEMS.

Russell Ayers, of near Blissfield, lost his barn and crops by fire.

The estimated expense of the special session of legislature was $8,000.

Dickinson county may bond for $100,000 worth of court house and jail.

Union City is to have a "happy home" reformatory for drunkards, etc.

John Lechinski, a South Bay City boy, had both arms crushed in a mill.

J. Maurice Finn is the choice of the Marquette Democratic convention for Congress.

Elk Rapids has a batch of discontents who are going into the wilds of north-west Canada.

Ferdinand Keller, of Saginaw, received a plank from a buzz saw. He left a family.

Edgar Eaton, of Nestoria, was instantly killed by being struck by a falling plank.

Chester Allan, a prominent young man of Ypsilanti, has disappeared. No reason known.

A. A. Ellis will orate at Jackson Labor Day. Congressman O'Donnell, will also say a few words.

Curtis Ludwig's body, horribly mangled, was found on the Michigan Central tracks at Saginaw.

The steamer Susquehanna ran into and sank a steam yacht near Marine City. No particulars known.

Simon Schwin, of near Coldwater, had his brains dashed out by a falling pulley. There is no hope for him.

Judge E. D. Kinne, of Ann Arbor, who so righteously sent the blasphemous Prince Michael to the prison pen, is in Europe.

John Mitchell, of Saginaw, was tried for the larceny of three cigars and acquitted and now he sues his prosecutor for $10,000 damages.

Hubbard is what a new Midland county town is to be called. The site is now being surveyed about 10 miles from the county seat. It promises to be a good place for boomers.

The Wheeler yard at West Bay City will put 1,800 men at work on three steel steamships, a large schooner and a steel tug, to be done next season.

Well, this weather is good for the crops, anyway. This is what the weather bulletin says, adding that on a still night you can hear the corn grow.

ELLIS' LATEST.

The Attorney-General's Opinion Relative to Power of Supervisors.

Attorney-General Ellis has prepared an opinion relative to the power of the board of supervisors to divide counties into representative districts at special sessions. The attorney-general holds that the statutes requiring this to be done at a certain specified session is like the constitutional one requiring the legislature to pass apportionment acts at its next session, after each census, merely directory, and as the legislature can pass these acts at a special session, so is it valid for the supervisors to divide the counties at a special session.

If supervisors of any county are satisfied with the divisions already made, there is no need of holding a special session, as these divisions can be affirmed at the regular session. In October and notice of such action given the secretary of state.

If nothing further is done in counties where divisions have been established since the last census enumeration, the courts will hold the districts good if they are equitable as to population.

Where no action is taken by the supervisors previous to their October session, it will be assumed by the secretary of state that the districts now established are the legal districts, and notices of election will be given accordingly. This opinion was asked for by Chairman McMillan of the Republican state central committee.

WHEAT IS SHORT.

Over 1,750,000 Bushels Less Than Estimated—Other Crops.

The August crop report shows a falling off in the estimated yield of wheat in the southern counties of 1,400,000 bushels per acre as compared with the July report. There is an increase in the central counties of 40 bushels, but the average in the former section is so much greater that the total reduction in bushels is 1,750,000, making a probable total yield of 18,574,300 bushels for the state. Thirty per cent of the respondents in the southern four tiers of counties report the wheat badly shrunk and of a poor quality, and about one-sixth in the central. Oats are estimated to yield 23 bushels per acre in the southern and 32 in the central counties. Corn in the southern counties 73, central 77, and northern 80 per cent of an average crop. Potatoes 76, 78 and 61 per cent, respectively in the same localities. Hay promises 100 per cent of an average crop. No figures are given on peaches, but apples promise 24 per cent in the southern counties, in the central 52, and in the northern 56, and in the upper peninsula 100 per cent.

TWO BOYS' SAD DEATH.

Hit in an Old Ice Box and Were Dead When Found.

Earl Price and Arthur Kartz, each 8 years of age were found dead in an ice box at the house of the former's grandfather at Lansing. While the family was away, they had been playing alone and when their father returned the boys were missed and search was made and continued until 6 o'clock in the morning. The ice box was an old one, and they had evidently crawled in while playing. The cover then closed down upon them and locked with a spring clasp. The space was so limited that they were obliged to crowd in and suffocation must have ensued in a few moments.

Object to the New Apportionment.

Quite a kick is made at Osceola on the new apportionment laws passed at the special session of the legislature. Both Republicans and Democrats are exceeding in indignant complaints that the laws discriminate against them. Iosco county has a population of 12,224, but in making up the legislative district, four other counties are joined to Iosco. Roscommon, with a population of 2,023; Ogemaw, 5,583; Alcona, 5,409; Osceola, 1,904, a total population of 20,133 for the five counties, but these counties together are entitled to only one representative. St. Clair county, with a population of 32,163, and three representatives has been selected as the victim. The people of the other district think they are entitled to one of these three. A public meeting has been called at Osceola, and the matter will be taken into court.

Lake Captain Suicides.

Capt. John Goss, of the schooner Mattie Parke, of Milwaukee, committed suicide by jumping overboard from his vessel several miles north of Ludington. The boat was bound for Good Harbor from Milwaukee. No cause for his action can be ascertained. He had a wife in Milwaukee. His body was not recovered.

Osmond Card of Cleveland, O., who had been taking treatment at the springs at St. Louis, fell from third story window. Death resulted soon after.

Thomas F. McGarry, of Grand Rapids, will nominate Judge George J. McFarland at the Democratic convention. It is said the judge will have the solid fifth.

Each county in the new senatorial district comprising Hillsdale, Branch and St. Joseph has a Republican candidate for honors. They are Colonel O. A. Jones, of Hillsdale, ex-Senator C. D. Randall, of Branch, and Senator Sablin, of St. Joseph.

The forty-fourth annual union fair of the Oakland County Agricultural and Horticultural societies will be held at Pontiac September 27 to 30 inclusive. Competition is open to Lincoln, Leelanau, Genesee, Washtenaw, Livingston and Washtenaw counties.

The second annual meeting of the Michigan State Library association will be held in the Senate chamber, Lansing, September 14, at 2 o'clock. H. M. Utley, of Detroit is president of the association, and Annie F. Parsons, of Bay City, secretary.

Thomas Gaines, the ex-convict author of Jackson, is engaged on a work entitled "The Working Girl." The sale of his "Life in Prison" has met with great success.

The Schlesinger syndicate is extending its upper peninsula workings, and now has its eye on the Ludington and Hamilton mines. The latter is the deepest mine in the world.

Prohibition does not prohibit a little bit in Branch county. It is claimed there are twenty "soft drink" joints in the county, where the only difference between the new and the old-fashioned jag producers is in the name.

AROUND THE COUNTRY.

INTERESTING INCIDENTS TAKEN FROM THE WIRE.

Three Men Burned to Death by Sulphuric Acid in an Eastern Factory—Riglin, the "Baltimore Martyr" Buried.

Burned to Death by Sulphuric Acid. Four employees of the Washburn & Moen wire mill at Chatham, Mass., were horribly burned by sulphuric acid. The acid is used for cleaning copper wire and is forced into the annealing room through lead pipes. Only a small amount of acid has been pumped from the tank when suddenly one side of the iron receptacle burst outward, throwing the fluid over the four men, who were standing near it.

All were severely burned. Their clothing was eaten off and the screams uttered were heart-rending. Two of the men tore off their clothing and jumped into the river. Alkalis were administered and later the wounded men were taken to the city hospital. At the hospital the men uttered awful cries, while their wounds were being dressed. Three have since died.

Carriage Run by Electricity.

A novelty in the way of a wagon propelled by electricity has been seen on the streets of Chicago. Some time ago President J. R. McDonald of the American Battery company purchased from William Morrison, of Des Moines, a part-wagon equipped with a small three-horse power motor. Mr. McDonald fitted the wagon with two batteries and gave it a trial on the streets and boulevards, with five persons as passengers. The motor was a factory considering that the wagon was delayed at a bridge and that frequent stops were made on account of the crookedness of the streets down town. The peculiarly propelled carriage attracted attention all along its route. The wagon can easily make ten miles an hour with the present power.

Canadians Tear Down Our Flag.

A party of 18 from Youngstown, Ohio, have been camping at Port Stanley, Ont., and over their tent has been flying the union jack, the flag of their country, the stars and stripes. Some ultra-local Port Stanley residents, while the campers slept, hauled down the stars and stripes and tore it into shreds. The campers are indignant at the insult to the flag of their nation, especially as it was displayed on a par with the English flag. The affair is deeply regretted by all classes in Port Stanley.

Miglia Buried With Honors.

The body of Charles W. Miglia, the United States sailor who was killed by the mob in Valparaiso several months ago, arrived at New York City on the Pacific Mail steamship Columbia from Golens in charge of United States Consul McGarry.

The remains of the dead sailor were taken to Philadelphia, where funeral services were held. The naval and Grand Army of the Republic posts of that city participated in the ceremonies.

A Pennsylvania Girl's Revenge.

Patrick Quinn, telephone operator at Delaware Station, N. J., is lying at his home in Oxford, near there, suffering from two pistol wounds in the head and neck, inflicted by Miss Lattie Acres, of Cresco, Pa. Miss Acres, regarded Quinn as a lover, and it is said that the shooting was the outcome of his desertion of the young woman. The girl, after the shooting, took poison but recovered.

For America's Champion Sultans.

Articles of agreement have been drawn up for the double scull race between Italian and O'Connor, champions of America, and Gaudaur and Hossner. The race will be for the championship of America and $10,000 a side; distance three miles, with a turn. It will take place on or about Aug. 27. Place not yet chosen.

the liar's lot is not a happy one, even among untutored savages.

Behold, now, in the bright glare of noonday, two youthful Nimrods who had smug-gled their guns out of their homes the day previous, in order not to be detected in this sin of gunning on the Lord's day, wending their way toward the center of all their earthly hopes and ambitions—the bear trap. Their weapons were loaded with a multiplicity of bullets and slugs, and powder which made them stouter in anticipation, of the recall when they should pour their deadly messengers into the vitals of the bear.

Anticipation quickened their pace until they neared the trap, and then they found its jaws snapped together, but nothing therein. Evidently their design against big game had temporarily miscarried.

"What do you think sprung it?" asked one of the other.

"Dunno. There's hair in the teeth of it—no by gum! It's pieces of an Indian blanket. Gee, whiz! We've gone and set our trap like a couple of blamed fools in an Indian trail!"

"They'll burn out the stake and eat our livers!" gasped the other.

"Oh, dear, I wish I'd minded ma and never broke the Sabbath." Here the embryo hero began to sweat, but he was excusable. His people had moved from the East but a year or two before, and he had not yet learned the Western way of not dying until you are really dead.

His companion began to scar his surroundings with anxious interest. "We are in for a fuss with 'em, that's sure," he admitted.

The necessity for devising a manner of defense against a probable hostile demonstration was spared the boys by their immediate capture and capturing by the enemy, who rose out of the grass on every side and closed in with a rush. The absence of war paint the boys accepted as a shamefulomen. Perhaps, after all, this was a case for arbitration.

They walked under guard of the whole village to the council lodge, which had been prepared in due and ancient form for the solemnities about to take place.

The head chief arose and stated the cause under consideration and with a eye to the fairest of fair play, offered to supply an interpreter. The boys assured the court they were fully equal to the intricacies of the dialect as it was spoken.

Much oratory ensued, and through all E. Bluejay's voice was for a war of extermination against the paleface, at least a fine one, one sack of flour, ten pounds of tobacco and a ham, to put him in person as an indemnity. His alternative proposition seemed to meet with considerable favor, but the boys hardly knew how to accept, providing a truce could be arranged which would permit them to go home as the fine could make a ponderous hole in their cash account. In the event of a war of extermination they had faith to believe that the extermination would take the same old course—a very bad one for the savage.

"Let the young men of the palefaces speak," said the big Injun solemnly. And more brow-beaten-faced the two young treprobes took the floor with the air of a lecher.

He paid the valor of the warriors and the beauty of the maidens of the tribe some high and undeserved compliments, basing his remarks under this head on the speech of a candidate for the legislature which he had heard a few days before. He then proceeded to explain that the treacherous bear trap had been set under a misapprehension. Their idea had been that if the spot where it had been set was an Indian trail the wisdom and cunning of their red brother was such that he would never set a trap so transparent a device as the stupid and ferocious bear. He could probably walk into it and become the legitimate prey of the bold and cunning hunters. Several other misrepresentations slipped from the smooth tongue of the little villain, and he sat down with oratorical honors (rich upon him).

"The young man has spoken well," commented the chief, "and will some day be the medicine man of his people."

The Indians now felt thoroughly assured that Jay was even a more unaccountable fool than they had previously supposed, and on motion of the chief the boys were set at liberty. Jay delicately expressed hope that he could see their way to donating a pound of tobacco and a little bread to the red brother's order.

The art of Jay, however, was bowed down and bent.

He had hobbled out into the open with the others when the council came to an end and stood with lowered brow while a young buck went over the guns that had been taken away from the prisoners. As the youth passed him on his return, he snatched one of the weapons from his hand and looked it with a vicious gleam in his eye.

Other Indians at once stepped between Jay and the youths.

"This would I do to all the palefaces," he said, and taking aim at a man there, fired.

The gun responded with a report as respectable cannon, and as the boy's injury made him infirm on his knees, the recollection of him spinning until the back of his head reached ground.

Indian gravity could not withstand and his mishap caused a cackle in the squaws and a howl of merriment from the bucks. "The other is much more heavily charged—was loaded for bear," remarked one of the boys. "The young would oblige his Jay white whether if he won't discharge that, or not."

And the luckless wight had had enough of paleface diabolism for one and only responded with a volley of bad language in French, and

Indian and English, that would have done credit to the most finished black-guard of the age, and hobbled away to his lodge.

By the advice of their parents the boys kept out of the woods for the remainder of the season, lest Ex-cised Blinney should wreak vengeance upon them. When the village returned to the neighborhood the next season, he was not one of its population, and the bucks explained that as he could never hear the last of his adventure, he had taken his squaw and paposes and sworn a mighty oath that he would hereafter look by himself on the Niyamakagon or the Nemadji, where the small boy ceases from troubling and a warrior may smoke his pipe in peace and comfort.—Seneca, E. ### THE PEACOCK.

According to This It is a Much Abused, Long-Suffering Bird.

Who says the peacock "has ugly feet?" remarked Taxidermist Wood of the Smithsonian Institution to a Washington Star reporter. "I have read and heard that piece of nonsense ever since I was a child, and I understand that it is recorded as an ornithological truth in classical Greek and Latin. You will come across mention of it in scores of fables. To my mind it affords an illustration of the fact that most people never use their own physical senses actively, but depend for their notions of life and things upon the observation of others.

"I have just finished mounting this pair of peacocks. Is the male bird ugly?" You can see for yourself that his feet are decidedly pretty, short-shod, and rather small in proportion to his size. They are very slightly bigger than those of a turkey and are decidedly handsome. The same can be said of the hen bird, unattractive though the latter is as to her points. Whenever in the feathered kingdom the cockbird is the handsomest he does the courting, while in the comparatively unusual case where the female is more gorgeous she it is that takes the initiative in the love-making.

"It is a curious thing to observe that the male peacock in courting his chosen mate approaches her not with the brightly colored face of his feather fan toward her, but backward. Then on coming close, he wheels suddenly about with every plume trembling in the sunlight and dazzles her at once with his beauty. As for the popular misconception respecting it, I fear there can be no doubt as to how it originated. When the peacock is pointed at being naturally a wild bird, he is apt to drop his fan and scuffle away. Thus the impression was conveyed to the ignorant and he imagined his feet to be objects of attention, and as ordinarily sought to hide them. Of course, nothing could be more absurd."

HORSE TO THE RESCUE.

To Save His Mate From Drowning He Went and Secured Help.

A gentleman possessed of a span of brightly little horses, which, whether in the stable, in the field or in harness, were always together, proceeded one Lake Minnetonka on a fishing excursion. Taking them from the carriage, he tied them some rods apart, near the lake shore, and left them to their sport. Repairing to a shanty near by, the gentleman threw himself upon a floor, with the intention of dozing away the time which would elapse before the return of the fishing party engaged on the lake. But a short time passed before the sound of a horse's feet aroused his attention, and at a moment after one of the horses appeared at the shady door. The animal put his head in, gave a loud neigh and then, in a slow gallop, but suddenly under great excitement, returned toward the spot where he and his companion a few moments before appeared safely fastened.

Surprised to find the horse loose and creak with his singular conduct, the gentleman immediately followed and the other lying in the water, was startled by the halter, and with great difficulty keeping from being drowned. While efforts were being made to disengage the unfortunate horse his noble and intelligent benevolent stood by, manifesting the most solicitude and sympathy, and when his mate was fairly extricated from his perilous situation and once again safely upon solid ground, the generous creature exhibited the most unequivocal signs of satisfaction and joy.

All on Runners.

In the winter in Norway all the vehicles are sledges—the carriages, the carts and even the perambulators are on runners. Outside the town, where the road is not trodden hard, it is impossible to walk without the "whishes" of the country. These are called "ski" and are long wooden boards, measuring nearly nine feet, for all grown men. The wood for ski is cut of sawn, but split with the grain, and they never break and can bear tremendous strain.

Influence of the Hair.

French doctor has evolved the theory that the color and nature of hair have as influence on the pursuits of man. Thus, he declares that whiskered men have a tendency toward the race track and the hunt-field, men with straight black hair are apt to feel that they have a claim to the ministry, while light-haired are natural travelers and adventurers.

CHAPTER IV—CONTINUED

"Yes, I think you will find plenty of ready money standing in my name in the International Bank, and moreover in my desk is a small box of gems which are worth a great deal; whatever income you may possess now, I don't think you'll suffer by the change into my body."

"But are you not sorry to give up all this wealth?"

Dr. Roversmere laughed in an amused manner, as Dr. Adrian had asked a childish question which indeed, he had from the doctor's point of view.

"Sorry," he echoed, "sorry to exchange this weary body for an actual one—sorry to give up the gross pleasures of earth for the pure delights of the spiritual world? No, I am not sorry; the change to me will be like that of a beggar man passing suddenly from abject poverty to princely affluence."

"But reflect," said Adrian earnestly, "if I accept your offer, think of what I am—I have committed a crime. According to my own showing, I am not a good man; my soul in your body may commit many foolish actions, and yet you will be held guilty by them."

"My body will not, my soul," said Roversmere coolly. "Whatever you do, in my body will have to be expiated by your own soul, since it is your free will that acts and determines as to my personality, which you seem afraid of, harming it does not matter to me in the least—I have no relations on whom your actions in my body would, bring disgrace, and I can do what you like with my soul—I am only concerned about my soul."

"But how about your past life?"

"I have told you all my past life, but should you need to know more there are plenty of papers in my desk which will tell you every action of mine since my arrival in England, and with my Indian life you have nothing to do; no trouble will come from there; my reputation is that of a servant—a recluse, when you occupy my body, you can indulge in whatever pleasures you like, but I warn you that however virtuous your soul may be, the body is old and weak, and if you play with it you will kill it; and thus lose your city of refuge sooner than you expect, so your safety rests entirely with yourself."

"It is impossible to undo the past," said Adrian gloomily, "and although I committed the crime in a moment of passion, I will never cease to feel remorse."

"That is part of your punishment," said Roversmere seriously. "I can give you a new body but not a new soul, so whatever acts of evil you have done in your past life, the remembrance will always cling to you, and if you expiate your crime on earth by prayers and repentance in my body and in your own, it will purify your spirit for the world beyond. Now I think everything has been explained, so if you will lie down on that couch I will release my own soul and accomplish the transformation of yours into my body."

"One moment," cried Adrian, as he sat down on the couch, "how can I assign your name to checks and imitate your handwriting?"

"You will do so mechanically," said Roversmere, who was lighting a fire in a small brazier; "writing is an operation of the body, not of the soul. I cannot give you my learning, as that pertains to the soul and I take it with me, but all material knowledge I possess or physical dexterity I have acquired will be yours to use as you will—now, are you ready?"

"Yes," said Adrian, obediently lying down, "but I am engaged to marry a girl named Olive Manners—how will that affect me in your body?"

"Of course she won't know you," replied the doctor with a peculiar mien, fanning the fire which was now at red heat. "You will have to wait till you resume your own body before marrying her—but it is simply question of safety for you just now, you'd better leave love out of the question or you will lose your life, your love, and everything else."

Adrian gave a sigh of sorrow, and slightly turning his head, watched the preparations of the doctor. The fire was now burning a deep red, and the brazier was standing in the center of a ring of white powder which had been strewn around it. The doctor sat down and touched this powder with his finger, muttering some words thereupon a blue lambent flame sprang up and ran around the circle. Roversmere then cast some herbs on the fire, which he took out of a small velvet box, and raising his arms, intoned a kind of hymn in a low, soft voice. The wild music barbaric in its extreme, rose and fell like the rhythmic fall of waves on a lonely beach, and a thick white smoke curled upward from the brazier, spreading a pungent odor through the vault.

After a time Roversmere, looking strange and spectral amid the veil of smoke, paused in his chanting, and passed over to the young man and spoke solemnly:

"I am about to leave this world for that of the spirits and I leave your soul in charge of my body—make good use of it for what you do will be of your own free will and must be expiated by your own spirit. Are you ready and willing to take this burden upon you?"

"I am ready," replied Adrian slowly. "Then close your eyes," commanded Roversmere, going over to the brazier. "Farewell, and may your unblemished soul be cleansed by prayer, repentance and expiation."

Adrian closed his eyes and felt the mild odor of the smoke titillate his nostrils, while the doctor resumed his assured chant. The strange melody which sounded like the wailing of a lost spirit, seemed to reach further and further away as the senses of the young man became clouded by the fumes spreading through the apartment. Suddenly, his whole body felt convulsed with extreme pain, every muscle, every nerve seemed to be wrenched asunder, and in a paroxysm of terror he strove to cry out but was unable to do so. Fire seemed to run all through his body, burning up his physical frame, and he writhed and twisted in an agony of torture, then a thick darkness seemed to descend on his brain, and he remembered no more.

How long the thick darkness continued he did not know, for when he opened his eyes again he was lying on the floor near the brazier from whence all the fire had died away. A cold air pervaded the vault, and raising himself from the floor, Adrian saw with a sudden thrill of horror that his body, pale and still, was lying on the couch, while he himself, looking down at his limbs, saw that they were wrapped in Roversmire's dressing gown. With a cry, which did not sound like his own voice, he walked to a mirror—which was hanging on the wall and then recoiled with a shudder for the face which looked from the glass was not his own handsome countenance, but the old gray-bearded wrinkled face of Roversmire, now no longer calm and placid, but convulsed with terror and anguish.

The transformation had taken place. Adrian, in the person of Dr. Michael Roversmire, walked languidly over to the table already feeling in his limbs the difference between youth and age, and pouring out a glass of wine drank it up. Then looking at his own body lying so still on the couch, he folded the arms across the chest, lighted the candle, and after turning out the electric light, left the vault.

He soon found his way back to the room above as his hands seemed to mechanically discover the secret levers, then putting back the fire-place into its original condition, he blew out the candle and replaced it on the table, then falling on his knees prayed long and earnestly.

He was safe so far for his guilty soul, now inherited the body of Roversmire, and his outward semblance, which would have caused his arrest was safely hidden in the secret room below.

The events of the night had been terrible, and quite worn out with the anguish and misery his soul had undergone, he staggered to a couch, thrust himself down on it and was soon fast asleep.

CHAPTER V.
New Wine in an Old Bottle.

When Adrian awoke next morning he thought that the fantastic events of the night were but the outcome of some strange dream, but a single glance in the mirror soon disabused him as he saw reflected across the countenance of Dr. Michael Roversmire.

While he was seated on the couch in the disordered sitting-room, wondering what was the first step to take in his new existence, the door opened, and a pale, lean man, quietly dressed in black, appeared. This was Denham, the servant alluded to by Doctor Roversmire, and his appearance by no means impressed Adrian in a favorable manner. Tall, thin and supple, his movements seemed to have the fluidity of a serpent, and his pallid face, clean shaven and serious looking, old and cunning under a sparse crop of thin red hair, giving the young man an uneasy feeling of repulsion, similar to that provoked by the sight of a noxious animal. The shifty gray eyes habitually downcast, the thin lips twitching involuntarily at the corners and the air of self-restraint, clearly pointed to the fact that this man had a cunning nature and could by no means beverse to performing any treacherous action for the sake of money. Adrian took an immediate dislike to his physiognomy, this dislike was not lessened when he heard the soft hissing voice which issued from the thin lips.

"Have you not been in bed, sir?" asked, closing the door softly after him, and coming forward to the center of the room.

"No," replied Adrian in a dull voice, feeling it incumbent upon him to keep up the character he had assumed. "I have been engaged in sitting and just slept here for a few hours."

Denham cast a swift glance at the sitting materials lying on the desk and, nodding toward the window, let his eyes dwell doubtfully for a moment on his master's face and then broke again.

"What would you be pleased to have for breakfast, sir?"

"The same as usual," replied Adrian, who had not the slightest idea that Roversmire might have been a vegetarian, and therefore felt afraid to say anything. "Meanwhile I'll go to my room and have a bath."

"You will find everything ready, sir," answered Denham, respectfully holding the door open.

Adrian did not know where the bedroom was but did not like to ask Denham, knowing it would look curious in his eyes, so left the room, watching for chance to find it. Luckily he did not proceed very far when he came through an open door a sponge-bath filled with water, and guessing that it was Roversmire's bedroom, went inside, closing the door after him.

Left alone in the sitting room, Denham in a manner underwent a rapid change and from wearing an air of self-restraint he became as eager as any anxious one to ferret. He paced rapidly round the room, went over to the writing-desk, turned up the papers quickly with his lean fingers, marked the two arm chairs set close to one another near the table, placed the two glasses had been filled with wine, then suddenly caught thrown down the previous evening. "I knew I was right," murmured Death to himself, pouncing eagerly on the stick. "It was the voice of a stranger. Some one's been to see him. I wonder what's up; this ain't his stick!"

He looked carefully at the stick, a massive oak staff, round the top of which was a gold band, marked with the letters "A. L." which discovery seemed to afford him much satisfaction.

"I wonder who it was came," he repeated, twisting the stick round and round. "The letters of his name are 'A. L.' and he's gone off again, leaving his stick behind him. That's queer! Rum old core, my master. I can't make him out."

He went off to his own room, hid the stick safely away, returning with a self-satisfied air to lay the table. He was determined to keep his eyes open and watch the actions of Dr. Roversmire, so as to trip him up should he espy anything wrong.

Meanwhile Adrian had freshened himself with a bath and changed his clothes for some which he found in the wardrobe still, however, retaining the dressing gown, as he did not want to make too sudden a change in his outward appearance. He intended to make a close examination of all Roversmire's papers in order to get himself thoroughly conversant with the daily life of the recluse. It was curious that he should take so much trouble in learning all the tricks, manners and daily actions of his usual body, seeing that it was impossible any one could comprehend the change that had taken place. However, strikingly he altered his habits, it would be put down by every person to the well known eccentricities of the doctor. Assuming a new body as a disguise is very different from assuming a new garb, and it was this very novelty that made Adrian so painfully careful, as it seemed almost impossible to him that no one should notice the transformation.

Having finished his toilet, he returned to the sitting-room and found the table spread for breakfast consisting of milk eggs, watercress and fruit. Death was in attendance. But Adrian quickly dismissed him as he felt ill at ease under the stealthy glances which the servant bestowed upon him whenever he felt himself nosed.

FECUNDITY OF PLANTS.

Enormous Number of Seeds Yielded by Certain Trees.

In this the curious reader may find food for reflection that not in obnoxious weeds and bothersome insects alone does nature show her power to multiply to a wonderful degree. English experimenters have probably one more in the line of testing the fecundity of vegetables, and useful plants than the Americans have. The reasons for this being obvious: They must figure to economize space, whereas the American farmer can scatter a little grain over his broad acres. Recent tests made under the auspices of the Royal Philosophical society with single barley stalk, unfolded wonders which but few have ever thought possible. By steeping and watering that one plant with salt-water dissolved in rain water they managed to produce two hundred and forty-nine stalks and over eighteen hundred grains!

It has also been shown that the white elm of our bottom lands and river yields, one year with another, a very moderate estimate, too, 4,000 seed. Now, an elm ordinary lives at least a full hundred years and, consequently, in the course of comparatively short life produces nearly 2,000,000 grains, all coming from one original seed.

A single seed of an Asiatic pepper, planted on Treves grounds, Berlin, propagated a vine as large as a poppy, which in nine weeks grew to a total length of nearly 800 ft. and ripened more than 850,000 seeds.

A single plant of Turkey corn bears 100 seeds, the sunflower 4,300, the poppy 32,000 and tobacco, 70,320!

"Tommy make room for your use," is from Schubert's "Rosamunde" music, where it is given to the oboe some years ago it was alleged to have been borrowed from Hans's "Sopannah"; and that "Af the opera is" is from the melody to which Heine's "Du hast Diemmen und Parley" is sung, in Germany. But nobody has yet discovered the origin of that universal scourge, a-ra-ra-boom-de-ay."

Position and Health.

N. Naples pointed out that the attitude of the body during work has a great influence on health. The sitting position congests the digestive organs; the bent position (like that of workmen) leads to cardiac affections. The standing position imposed on shopgirls and women was productive of much suffering and disease. It should be forbidden those who are in them.

A Light in Dark Times.

A powerful lamp, which distinctly illuminates objects over half a mile away by means of a great reflector, was adopted in the French army. Soldiers, and they will, be in obituary while the enemy and all obstacles in front will be made conspicuous.

She Had a Spoon With Her.

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Hobbs, just as the guests arrived. "There are seven persons and only fifteen spoons."

"That's all right," said Hobbs, saying Harkens and Dave Fisher are gone. One spoon will do for them.

FECUNDITY OF PLANTS.

Enormous Number of Seeds Yielded by Certain Trees.

In this the curious reader may find food for reflection that not in obnoxious weeds and bothersome insects alone does nature show her power to multiply to a wonderful degree. English experimenters have probably done more in the line of testing the fecundity of vegetables, and useful plants than the Americans have, the reasons for this being obvious: They must figure to economize space, whereas the American farmer can scatter a little grain over his broad acres. Recent tests made under the auspices of the Rural Philosophical society with a single barley stalk unfolded wonders which but few have ever thought even possible. By steeping and watering that one plant with salt-peter dissolved in rain water they managed to produce two hundred and forty-nine stalks and over eighteen thousand grains!

It has also been shown that the white elm of our bottom lands and groves yields one year with another at a very moderate estimate to 30,000 seeds. Now an elm ordinarily lives at least a full hundred years, and consequently in the course of that comparatively short life produces nearly 2,000,000 grains, all coming from one original seed.

A single seed of an Asiatic pepper, when planted on Trevely grounds, Berlin, propagated a vine as large as a man's body, which in nine weeks grew to a total length of nearly 800 feet and ripened more than 800,000 seeds.

A single plant of Turkey corn bears 500 seeds, the sunflower 1,000, the
