A GREAT COUNTRY.

American People Steadily Advancing In The Right Direction.

ITS GREAT PROSPERITY.

Largely Due to Its Social and Moral Condition.

The following, in substance, is the Thanksgiving sermon delivered by Rev. W. T. Jaquess at the Methodist church this morning:

"In his day the land was quiet, and Asa did that which was good and right in the eyes of the Lord." II Chron. 14: 1-2.

At last a righteous king had come to the throne and the moral degradation begun in the reign of Solomon was stayed in the rectitude of its young ruler. As we look back upon the old monarchies we scarcely can comprehend the power for good or evil exercised by the king, yet where we observe the power of a free and sovereign people, in our own land, and remember that it was all delegated to a single ruling individual then, it becomes plain. Under the regime we enjoy, as much of moral reformation hath been wrought as of old, and more, for king Asa of this day has not been idle. It is my intention to pass by the one thousand six hundred million bushels of corn; five hundred million bushels of wheat; the tons of ore and coal the past year has produced, and consider the moral causes and reasons for thanksgiving which brings us together this morning, for the nation's prosperity is much more largely the outcome of the social and moral condition of its people than their material prosperity. The nation's table is loaded down with benefits of this kind and though the ocean of national affairs has and its wave depressions as well as its crests, the general level has steadily risen.

At last in this land the laboring man hath come into his own. He no longer stands in servility at the bench, or slaves in the field, but he is, both master of his trade and himself. He receives an honest day's wages for an honest day's work, while the hours of his labor, for an increased compensation, have steadily decreased. He is better housed, better clothed and better fed, than the other children of men. Also our nation's industrial life enjoys increased prosperity and though here and there a business is held in monopoly its effect is to cheapen its commodity to the people. There is no honest hand of industry that goes unfilled and the laps of want is full to overflowing.

There never has been a time in our history where truth and right prevailed to so great a degree. Our ideals are higher; our motives are purer; the christian character is exemplified more and more in conduct, while more than ever before in human history a pure life is demanded of man. Comparisons generally are odious but this age is an exception and it can undergo contrast without fear of even equality. Vices which a hundred years ago were too common for comment now are castigated. Intemperance has lost its hold upon the people as a whole and now not one in a thousand falls beneath the banquet table or has to be conducted to his home in the small hours of the night. Indeed our land is rich in its moral conditions, and the righteous king Asa reigns throughout the land.

Let us notice the advance of reform in our day as indicated by a few of the steps recently taken forward: (1) As indicated in the religious census of our land. One third of our entire population is in organic connection with some religious body. Twenty million, one in every three, are avowed seekers of the true God. Never before has man beheld this, for though the ratio in some Catholic countries has approximated this, yet the distinction between Catholic Europe and Protestant America is vital. This means that at least one third of our population is trying to live the life presented to them through the loftiest character ever known to man. That the principals he taught are more and more being inculcated into the business and practice of our land. That our national festival is more enjoyable because seasoned with the salt of the earth is a reason for thanksgiving. (2) As indicated in a recent decision of the Supreme court, on Feb. 29th last, that "This is a christian nation." What if God's name is not in the constitution; the unwritten laws of our land are as paramount as the written and it needs no constitutional act to make this a christian nation. Our history declares it, the very springs of our being, the principals stamped upon our history all speak louder than laws. The supreme court could in wisdom decide nothing less. (3) As indicated in our late campaign. In it money played almost no part, and showed that our people are above its influences. Also of the eight candidates for the presidency and vice-presidency. All eight were avowed disciples of Christ. This is something more than mere coincidence. It is a remarkable index of the moral tone of our nation, indicative of Christ's presence in human progress. Asa reigns, and rightly did Columbus call his discovery San Salvador. (4) As indicated in the closing of the Columbian fair on the Lord's day, and to hurry on, (5) as indicated in our nation's attitude towards the lottery.

Indeed the year '92 has been replete with victories for the right, as if the people were desirous of giving one grand exhibition of our christian drift. Asa doth reign. May we not also give thanks for victories which yet await us, for there are conflicts to be fought.

Never think the victory won. Nor lay thine armor down. Thine arduous work will not be done; Till thou obtain thy crown.

namely: The passage of the anti-liquor law; the submission of the proposed 16th amendment forbidding state and church to be united and the completion of the moral defence of the world's fair by the exclusion of liquor selling in accordance with the laws of Illinois.

Thanksgiving day points above all other days to the Lord, as the God of our nation, under whose guidance the sheaf of national reform hath been gathered in, and for this we give thanks. We are awaking to the consciousness that this nation has a moral personality and is accountable to God for its influence and this accountability can never be satisfied save that Asa continues to reign.

IT WAS GOOD.

The Elocution Entertainment of Saturday Night Comes Under Just That Head.

As we predicted, (expression borrowed from the Detroit Evening News) the elocution entertainment at the opera house Saturday night, by the Northville class, was an extremely pleasing affair and the 125 people present enjoyed it. The class were at their best and were obliged to respond to encore after encore. The selections were well made and finely executed. Miss Revard, the teacher, by special request, gave two readings in a very charming manner.

THE THREE LINKERS.

An Odd Fellow's Lodge Organized Last Week.

The movement for the organization of an I. O. O. F. lodge here has been on foot for a year past and on the 16th inst. it was successfully accomplished. Carlton lodge came here the 15th to assist in the institution, but owing to sickness of Past Grand Northwood it had to be postponed until the following night when C. H. Haskins, P. G. E., of Jackson, assisted by the Plymouth lodge, did the work. There were seven charter members and nine new ones for a starter and there are a number of applicants on the books yet to go in. The following officers were elected: R. H. Beal, n. g.; C. H. Seaton, v. g.; Frank Black, ward. John Ainslie, con.; Frank Ainslie, sec.; C. L. Lyon, treas.; O. F. Carpenter, dist. deputy. They will meet Wednesday nights in Ambler's hall.

The lodge has been named Globe lodge in honor of the Globe furniture factory.

ABSOLUTELY PURE

WE ARE THANKFUL.

And We Have Much to Be Thankful for.

Today occurs the great national event, Thanksgiving day. Since the time of our forefathers, who came over in the Mayflower, thanks have been given upon a chosen day each year for blessings, both national and personal, which have been received since the preceding day of thanks. In olden times the populace were wont to spend their time in prayer and religious ceremony; in latter years it has become a day of recreation and sports. Still there is something each year which all may feel thankful for. This year the whole United States should be thankful that never in the history of this great country has business and trade been so prosperous; never have the working people been so universally employed.

Everybody should be thankful that they are living. Among the great political parties all have something to be happy for. The democrats should be thankful that they carried the election by the greatest overturning ever known. The republicans are likewise thankful that they have saved great Pennsylvania, little Vermont, and Michigan, my Michigan, from the wreck. Grover can send his thanks heavenward for the confidence the public have shown in him in electing him to the greatest gift in their power to bestow upon man, while Hoosier Ben must be thankful that he is a lawyer of considerable note and can still command a good fat fee for his advice.

The people of Northville are thankful that they have one of the prettiest, most thriving and prosperous villages in the state. They are thankful that they have had, less than $100 loss by fire the past year and that the new water works system, so nearly completed, will be one of the finest in this country. They are thankful that they have the most important government trout fish hatchery in the United States, and upon which Uncle Sam expended well towards $20,000 the past year. They are thankful that they have in their midst the largest church furniture factory in the world, giving employment to more than 200 persons. They are thankful that they now see, almost completed, their immense refrigerator factory, also the largest institution of the kind on the globe, whose wheels will commence turning within the next ten days, giving employment to probably 150 men by the time the '93 turkey is ready for the slaughter. Thankful that they have the solid Dabur factory with its fifty employees; the Ely Dowel factory with its ten or a dozen; the Tonquish; the Condensery; the carriage factory; the flowering mills; the cheese and the vinegar factories, each prospering and giving employment to a number of people. For the Gold cure and other industries. Thankful for the general healthiness of the village. For its three beautiful churches and as many energetic, bustling ministers to propound the gospel to them. And then there are hundreds of other blessings that have been lavished upon us the year past for which they are all thankful though we fail to enumerate them.

With the others, the editor is thankful that his efforts to give the people of Northville a representative paper is being more and more appreciated each week. He is thankful to see his subscription list nearly doubled the past year until it now reaches 30 round numbers 800 names. He is thankful to be able to promise, as in the past, that no efforts will be spared in the future to make the RECORD a representative of this bustling village that its residents may be proud of, and he is also thankful for the hearty support, encouragement and commendation thus far received. Once more, we are thankful as individuals; as a family; as a community; a village; a town; a county; a state and a nation.

"He that has nature in him Must indeed feel gratitude. 'Tis the Creator's primary law Linking the chain of beings to each other."

THE RECORD.

P. S. NEAL, Publisher.

NORTHVILLE, MICHIGAN

The need of the American teachers is to see teaching by those not in their ranks. We take a girl of no observation outside the limited precincts of her home and the ward school, and after a couple of years in literary rudiments make her a teacher.

There is something little short of pathetic in the way the buffalo have been effaced. But a few years ago roaming in countless thousands they were killed for the lust of slaughter, for mere wantonness. Now so scant a remnant survives that at one time it was believed not a solitary individual remained.

New singers and new writers are pressing to the front in England and in America, but in both countries they must win their way by the divine right of genius grandly exerted to win as secure a place in the hearts of the people as America's recent dead or the master singer upon whose placid brow will ever rest the laurel wreath of the Victorian age.

The latest meteor to make an enviable record tore up the bosom of Mexico to a considerable extent, exposing to the view of a truthful man a vein of silver the presence of which had never been suspected. It is not stated that the heat of the meteor was such as to smelt the ore so that the pure metal could be chopped out with an ax but this is probably the fault of the truthful man rather than of the meteor.

This girl teacher imagines that she possesses of all knowledge under the sun and that the primary public school of the United States is the bulwark of our liberties and the greatest intelligence factory on the globe. It is possible that if the girl were enabled to learn a little more about methods of teaching and if the routine of the primary grade were taken out of the beaten and stony path, the children would prefer to remain in school to going to work.

As a contrast to the silent acquiescence of the czar of all the Russians, during the recent persecutions of the Jews in his domain, is the public reprimand of the emperor of Austria, administered to the anti-Semitic members of the lower house of the Austrian diet on the occasion of their visit to the royal palace. He denounced their conduct as a scandal and a shame in the eyes of the world. Had the reigning Romanoff had the moral courage to declare himself in a similar manner civilization would not have had need to blush for the many disgraceful and brutal scenes enacted within his empire.

The greater the advertising, the lower the price of the goods or the better their quality. And when we remember that the same spirit of enterprise which leads a man to advertise liberally will also cause him to improve his goods and to adopt the latest and most perfected labor-saving devices in his factory, we shall see that not only should liberal advertising be no bar to the purchaser, but that it should be regarded as prima facie evidence that the goods are better or cheaper than those less extensively advertised. Special circumstances may modify this belief, but it is the one indicated by the law of probabilities.

In these days with scarcely any more of this globe to be discovered, men are puzzling their brains with the question whether Mars our nearest relation in the planetary system, is or is not inhabited. Before this question is answered suppose another be asked. If there be inhabitants in Mars does any one care enough about them to seek a way of benefiting them? Whoever loves the people of Mars if there be such people, has the best chance of becoming acquainted with them, just as 400 years ago it was given to the one man who cared most to spread civilization and Christianity over the world the honor of extending European influence to an unknown continent.

Four hundred years ago Columbus with a mutinous crew was traversing the unknown western sea that had for ages barred this continent from the then known world. There have been many voyages of discovery since, but it is rather remarkable that excepting that of the Mayflower, none were originated in so high a moral purpose as was this. There is evidence at least for Columbus himself, that he began his voyage with a sincere purpose to civilize and Christianize the savage nations to which he expected to come by his western journey. Crude and cruel as the Spanish mode of introducing Christianity was it perhaps fairly represented the average Christian sentiment of the 15th century.

LIES ABOUT RUSSIA

DR. TALMAGE AGAIN ASSAILS JEALOUS SLANDERERS.

Russia Watched Over America in Her Cradle, and Has Always Been Our Friend—Why Should We Believe the Falsehoods Invented by Enemies?

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Nov. 20, 1892.—The Rev. Dr. Talmage to-day fulfilled his promise that he would again speak of his visit to Russia, and correct many wrong impressions concerning that empire and its ruler. After an exposition of scripture and congregational singing, he took for his text: II Peter 2:10: "Presumptuous are they, self-willed, they are not afraid to speak evil of dignities."

Amid a most reprehensible crew, Peter here paints by one stroke the portrait of those who delight to slay at people in authority. Now, "we all have a right to criticize evil behavior, whether in high places or low, but the fact that one is high up is no proof that he ought to be brought down. It is a bad streak of human nature now, as it was in the time of the text, a bad streak of human nature that success of any kind excites the jealous antipathy of those who cannot climb the same steep. There never was a David on the throne that there was not some Absalom who wanted to get it. There never was a Christ but the world had sawed him ready to assassinate him. Out of this evil spirit grow not only individual but national and international defamation. To no country has more injustice been done than our own in days that are past. Long before Martin Chuzzlewit was printed, the literature of the world scoffed at everything American. Victor Hugo, as honest as he was unequalled in literary power, was so misinformed concerning America that he wrote: "The most singular thing is the need of whittling, with which all Americans are possessed. It is such that on Sunday they give the sailors little bits of wood because if they did not they would whittle the ship. In court, at the most critical moment, the judge, whittling, says: 'Prisoner, are you guilty?' and the accused tranquilly responds, whittling: 'I am not guilty.'"

There is no country on earth so misunderstood as Russia, and no monarch more misrepresented than its Emperor. Will it not be in the cause of justice if I try to set right the minds of those who compose this august assemblage and the minds of those to whom, on both sides of the ocean, these words shall come? If the slander of one person is wicked then the slander of 120,000,000 people is 120,000,000 times more wicked. In the name of righteousness and in behalf of civilization and for the encouragement of all those good people who have been disheartened by the scandalization of Russia, I now speak. But Russia is so vast a subject that to treat it in one discourse is like attempting to run Niagara falls over one mill wheel. Do not think that the very marked courtesies extended me last summer by the Emperor and Empress and Crown Prince of Russia have complimented me into the advocacy of that empire, for I shall present you authentic facts that will reverse your opinions if they have been antagonistic, as mine were reversed. I went last summer to Russia with as many baleful prejudices as would make an avalanche from the mountain of fabrication which has for years been heaped up against that empire. You ask, how is it possible that such appalling misrepresentations of Russia could stand? I account for it by the fact that the Russian language is to most an impassable wall. Malign the United States or malign Great Britain or Germany or France, and by the next cablegram the falsehood is exposed, for we all understand English, and many of our people are familiar with French. But the Russian language is so beautiful and so easy to those who speak it, it is to most local organs an unpronounceable tongue, and if at St. Petersburg or Moscow any anti-Russian calumny were denied, the most of the world outside of Russia would never see or hear the denial.

What are the motives for misrepresentation? Commercial interests and international jealousy. Russia is as large as all the rest of Europe put together. Remember that a nation is only a man or a woman on a big scale. Go into any neighborhood of America and ask the physician who has a small practice what he thinks of the physician who has a large practice. Ask a lawyer who has no briefs what he thinks of the lawyer who has three rooms filled with clerks trying in vain to transact the superabundant business that comes to him. Ask the minister who has a very limited audience what he thinks of the minister who has overflowing audiences. Why does not Europe like Russia? Because she has enough acreage to swallow all Europe and feel she had only half a meal. Russia is as long as North and South America put together. "But," says some one, "do you mean to charge the authors and the lecturers who have written or spoken against Russia with falsehood?" By no means. You can find in any city or nation evils innumerable if you wish to discourse about them.

It is most important that this country have right ideas concerning Russia, for, among all the nations this side of heaven, Russia is America's best friend. There has not been an hour in the last seventy-five years that the shipwreck of free institutions in America would not have called forth from all the despots of Europe and Asia a shout of gladness wide as earth and deep as perdition. But whoever else failed us, Russia never did, and whoever else was doubtful, Russia never was. Russia, then an old government, smiled on the cradle of our government while yet in its earliest infancy. Empress Catherine of Russia, in 1776 or thereabouts offered kindly interference that our thirteen colonies might not go down under the cruelties of war. Again, in 1813, Russia stretched forth toward us a merciful hand. When our dreadful civil war was raging and the two thunder clouds of Northern and Southern valor clashed, Russia practically said to the nations of Europe: "Keep your hands off and let the brave men of the North and the South settle their own troubles." I rehearsed some scenes to the Emperor last July, saying: "You were probably too young to remember the position your father took at that time," but with a radiant smile, he responded: "Oh, yes, I remember, I remember," and there was an accentuation of the words which demonstrated to me that these occurrences had often been talked of in the imperial household. I stood on New York battery, during the war, as I suppose many of you did, looking off through a magnifying glass upon a fleet of Russian ships. "What are they doing there?" I asked, and everyone asked: "What business have the Russian warships in our New York harbor?" Word came that another fleet of Russian ships was in San Francisco harbor. "What does this mean?" our rulers asked, but did not get immediate answer. In these two American harbors, the Russian fleet seemed sound asleep. Their great months of iron spoke not a word, and the Russian flag, whether floating in the air or drooping by the flag-staff, made no answer to our inquisitiveness. William H. Seward, Secretary of State, asked the Russian Minister at Washington, the meaning of those Russian ships in American waters, and got no satisfactory response. Admiral Farragut said to a Russian officer, after dining in the home of the eminent politician, Thorvald Veed, that maker and un-maker of Presidents: "What are you doing here with those Russian vessels of war?" Not until the war was over was it found out that in case of foreign intervention all the guns and the last gun of these two fleets in New York and San Francisco harbors were to open in full diapason upon any foreign ship that should dare to interfere with the rights of Americans; North and South, to settle their own controversy. But for those fleets and their presence in American waters, there can be no doubt that two of the mightiest nations of Europe would have mingled in our fight. But for those two fleets, the American government would have been to-day only a name in history. I declare before God and the nation that I believe Russia saved the United States of America. Last July I stood before a great throng of Russians in the embarrassing position of speaking to an audience the four-fifths of which could not understand my language any more than I could understand theirs. But there were two names that they thoroughly understood as well as you understand them, and the utterance of those two names brought forth an acclamation that made the City Hall of St. Petersburg quake from foundation stone to tower, and those two names were "George Washington" and "Abraham Lincoln." Now, is it not important that we should feel right toward that mighty, that God-given, friend of more than 100 years?

If the population of the rest of Europe were poured into Russia, it would be only partially occupied. After a while, America will be so well populated that the tides of emigration will go the other way, and by railroads from Russia to Behring straits—where Asia comes within thirty-six miles of joining America—millions of people will pour down through Russia and Siberia, and on down through all the regions waiting for the civilization of the next century to come and culture great harvests and build mighty cities. What the United States now are on the Western Hemisphere, Russia will be on the Eastern Hemisphere. Not only because of what Russia has been, to our republic but because of what she will be, let us cease the defamation of all that pertains to that great empire. If Russia can afford to be the friend of America, America can afford to be the friend of Russia.

But you ask, how will this Russophobia, with which so many have been bitten and poisoned, be cured? By the God of Justice blessing such books and pamphlets as are now coming out from Prof. de Brand of Washington, Mr. Horace Carter of San Francisco, Mr. Mortill of England, and by the opening of some twenty-four of the Russian authors and authorities, in some respects as brilliant as the three or four Russian authors already known—the translation of those twenty-four authors, which I am authorized from Russia to offer free of charge to any responsible American publishing house that will do them justice. Let these Russians tell their own story, for they are the only ones fully competent to do the work, as none but Americans can fully tell the story of America, and as none but Germans can fully tell the story of Germany, and none but Englishmen can fully tell the story of England, and none but Frenchmen can fully tell the story of France. Meanwhile, let the international defamation come to an end. Cease to speak evil of dignities merely because they are dignities, and of Presidents merely because they are Presidents, and of Emperors merely because they are Emperors. And may the blessing of God the Father, and God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, be upon all the members of the imperial household of Russia from the illustrious head of that family down to the Princess, 7 years of age, who came skipping into my presence in the palace of Peterhof last summer. Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will to men.

FIGHTING FOR HIS LIFE.

ATTACKED BY A PACK OF HUNGRY WOLVES.

A Thrilling Adventure in the Land of the Midnight Sun—Rapid and Effective Firing—Wolves Leave in a Hurry.

I have hunted coyotes on the Western plains and wolves in Canada and the Northwest, and I have always thought that a conflict with Siberian bloodhounds would be as terrific as any, but for real work there is nothing like a pack of starving, howling wolves. It is something beyond the imaginative ability of the American hunter. Although we were told we might possibly meet an attack, we braved the risk, however, all being well armed in case of need, as a writer in the Sportsman's Review. The officers of the Mira, carried the Mickla rifle. This is the military repeater of Norway. Morton had a four-barrel Sharps pistol while I carried a four-barrel hammerless Charles Lancaster .45-caliber pistol, one I had recently purchased while in London.

We proceeded about twenty miles without any serious incident, when just as we were crossing a little frozen creek some forty yards wide a strange sensation seemed to take possession of our deer; they shivered and trembled, and the hair on their backs stood on end. "Wolves," yelled the driver, and he began to lash the deer one of which promptly slipped on the ice, fell down and tangled himself up with the harness, thus seriously impeding our covered progress. I was on the second sled with Lieutenant Bjornstam, Mrs. Wilson and Miss Cory. "Ours," said I, (common danger makes fast friends), "send every bullet home." Just at this moment six fierce, hungry, gray wolves came galloping toward us about twenty yards away. The deer retained his footing and away we dashed.

Wolves can run as fast against the wind as with it, so can the deer, but they had a heavy sled, five people, and a foot deep of frozen, crusted snow to contend with. The hunter and began firing as the wolves gained on us. Robert and Lieutenant Thrach were firing rapidly, for the pack had been augmented, and had divided forces. We had now run about half a mile, but they only came in increased numbers on our flank. You wonder perhaps why I didn't shoot; well, I will tell you. A running wolf, while the hunter is in a dead behind trotting deer is difficult to hit. I had only 100 cartridges and knew it would be madness to waste them. If the driver would only stop, but that was impossible as he and the deer were frantic from fright.

At this moment one of the wolves jumped upon the deer's flank and was promptly killed by the Lieutenant, but this kind of game could not last long so I prepared to dismount some of our pursuers. Straddling the dashboard I pulled my Lancaster, and every time a wolf jumped for the deer I shot at it and hit hard or killed about seven. Just at this moment as we were making progress in our defense, our deer, who had hurt his hip by his fall, came to a stop, and the rear sled dashed into us. The collis on was frightful, but it was spilling us all out and the car was used was great. I called out to the driver to save the deer as we were instantly surrounded by the maddened, beautifully furred, wolves. Deer, or wolves, and as travelers were soon in a terrible predicament. The officers fired their rifles with admirable precision and rapidity, and owing to the smokeless gunpowder we could see well for hits.

Lieutenant Bjornstam wrapped robes about Miss Cory and Mrs. Wilson, and placed them between us with our backs toward them. I threw a blanket over my left shoulder, using it as a shield. My lancester in forty-eight rapid shots did not miss five once. I killed eighteen wolves, but my left leg, is fearfully lacerated, having been caught by two of the wolves. The ship doctor however, assures me I need not fear hydrophobia. He feels confident in his opinion, but as I own the fear am correspondingly doubtful. Miss Cory was caught on the horns of one of the deer and would have been instantly killed had I not promptly shot the deer. Morton fought like a true American, but his pistol closed after the seventh shot and he was forced to use one of the sled runners.

Just as I began to despair, all at once the wolves, that is those that were alive, ran away as fast as they had come. Lieutenant Bjornstam fought gallantly, and twice pulled Mrs. Wilson from the savage hold of the animals. Miss Esch chamberlain sustained a great mental shock, but Morton accomplished wonders in her restoration. We lost two guides, one driver, and three deer, but through assistance from the lapps have returned to the ship, and are in a fair way in body and mind.

There are odd similarities in the growth and improvement of great cities. As the origin of the name Gramercy park proves that one of the most delightful regions of New York was once the site of a marshy pond, so the derivation of the word "lucres" shows that the great Parisian palace occupied the site of an old tile yard and that of "scorial" shows that the Roman palace was built upon the refuse from an exhausted mine. The Ceramicus or potter's field, at Athens, became the most beautiful quarter of the city, and Washington square has undergone a similar transformation.

Like Aladdin's of old, it is indeed a "wonderful lamp," for its marvelous light is purer and brighter than gas light, softer than electric light and more cheerful than either. ### LOCAL GLEANINGS.

Things Said and Did in the Liveliest and Prettiest Village in Michigan.

Detroit put up her usual weekly murder last week.
There will be services as usual in the Baptist church Sunday.
The attention of our readers is called to Brown & Co's Christmas offer. Be sure to read it.

Water from the Globe-Gillispie fire pump is again being forced through the mains into the receptacle.
The Northville base ball nine gave a hop at the rink last night. A large number were present and it was a very enjoyable affair.

The Prohibition club will have a box social at Edward Whitaker's next week Wednesday night. Everybody invited.

The F. & P. M. are doing a rushing business these days. Special trains are passing every half hour and shippers find it difficult to obtain cars.

There will be a masquerade skate at the Princess rink, Saturday evening, Nov. 29. Frank Shaffer is manager; the Northville band furnishes the music; the admission is a dime and skates ten cents.

The reservoir was completed Monday night and it certainly is a magnificent affair. If Engineer Parker made a mistake elsewhere he made none on the reservoir and he is entitled to the credit of this fine piece of engineering.

During the visit of a well known Northville lady in Pontiac last week some of the Indian City people remarked that the Northville news appeared to be mostly deaths. Pontiac people are assured that we have the healthiest city in the world and the people who die are way along in years, from 80 to 100. People must die you know, but for a city of several thousand inhabitants there are fewer deaths by half in Northville than in Pontiac.

Sprague is coming. The citizens of Northville will be pleased to learn that Mr. Sprague, the great impersonator will again give one of his pleasing entertainments in this place. In his "David Copperfield" he held his audience spellbound and all who heard him will not fail to hear him again. He appears this time in his famous play "The Rivals" and all who miss hearing him will indeed lose a rare treat. A pleasing musical program will be given in connection. Don't forget the time and place. At the Presbyterian church, Tuesday evening, Nov. 29.

Chas. S. Stark, four and three quarters miles west on the base line, will sell at public auction next Saturday a lot of fine horses, cattle and sheep. Sale commences at one o'clock.

There are 1,009 children to draw public school money in this township this year. The amount portioned for the town at the 84 cents per capita, is $847.56. Northville, with her 402 eligible pupils, gets $337.68 of it.

The republican pole which had done duty for some years, corner Center and Main streets, has been cut down. It would detract from the appearance of the new bank building and therefore it was removed.

Rev. Clark is back from his Colorado trip and reports his brother to be convalescing. Mr. Clark speaks in glowing terms of that western country. He was on some of the highest of the lofty Rocky Mountain peaks as well as thousands of feet under the ground through tunnels where one could wade knee deep in silver ore.

Dr. Eli Woodman, an old and highly respected Farmington citizen, well and favorably known in this village, died Sunday morning. He had been ill for several months with consumption. He leaves a wife and a large circle of friends. The funeral was held from the residence yesterday conducted by the Masonic fraternity of which he was a member. A delegation from the Northville lodge was in attendance.

The Carrolls and their company in a new melodrama entitled "The Dago," occupy the stage of Whitney's opera house, Detroit, this week. The play deals with characters that are a familiar aspect of life in the great cities of America. The story concerns the abduction and subsequent trials and sufferings and adventures of a little girl, the abductor being an Italian named Carmencelli Vidette. The scenery is very fine and the play abounds in good things from start to finish. Matinee Saturday afternoon. Admission 15 to 50 cents.

The F. & P. M. railroad company contemplate being able to run into their new depot at Detroit by January 1. There will be no important changes of time and the trains will run from Plymouth junction into the city regardless of the D. L. & N. Each road will preserve its own independence and F. & P. M. tickets will not be good on D. L. & N. trains and vice versa. There has been some talk that a new union depot would be built at the crossing and the old one abandoned, but the railroad officials say they have heard of no such plans even being suggested.

The K. of P. lodge will elect officers on Thursday evening, Dec. 1.

There is a slight change in the F. & P. M. time card this week. The two afternoon trains meet here now at 2:25.

The next meeting of the W. R. C. occurs the second Wednesday in Dec. instead of Monday, as we incorrectly stated last week. Wednesday, Dec. 14, is the day.

The Misses Smith, Dress-makers, have moved into the house corner Center and Cadiz streets where they will be pleased to see all old friends, and many new ones.

Messrs. Connel and Webster are in their new quarters south side of bank building. They are both just a trifle crowded for room though the location is very nice and pleasant.

Our charges for inserting "cards of thanks" is one cent per word. We never insert them free and they should be left at the RECORD office instead of being dropped in your item box at the post-office. Local news of any description, which we are always glad to get, may be left there when more convenient.

Work on the new bank building is progressing very creditably. The officials expect to be doing business some time next month. Their new safe now under construction will be a very finely constructed one, built upon the latest improved methods, with time locks, etc., and made especially for the Northville bank. It will take 60 days to complete it.

The elocution class entertainment at the opera house Saturday night was not as liberally patronized as it should have been. It was thoroughly advertised; it was home talent; it was a first class entertainment in every way, just as we predicted; the house was thoroughly warmed and comfortable, and they certainly deserved a crowded house.

The Menu club gave a six o'clock tea at the home of Miss Alice Beal, 34 Main street, Friday night. There were sixteen present and it was the most elaborate affair held in the village this season. The table was handsomely trimmed with sunflowers and flowers and the tea was served in four courses, all the dishes used being of pure white china. The cooking, preparations, and serving, was wholly the work of the fair members of the club and the guests present speak in glowing terms of the club's proficiency in culinary art.

Silk mittens in the new varieties and styles at Miss Bovee's.

While we were fixing up some stove pipes last week, a hatchet fell from a high step ladder which we were using and in its rapid descent it came in contact with the editors forehead cutting a gash about an inch long by one-fourth deep. We shall pull through alright, but have decided it is no longer safe for a man to put up stove pipes.

We notice that one of our leading merchants seems to be getting in a tight squeeze just now and has got to raise some cash. Has "T. G." been buying too many farms lately? We don't want to lose a subscription or make any one mad, but we are bound to give the news and the public ought to know this.

In the line of a unique and instructive programs the Epworth League, on Tuesday evening, held a moot session of the Detroit Conference. Rev. Parrish took the part of the Bishop and gave an outline of a conference at work, bringing out the main features that all might profit by and remember. The principle reports of this body were read and the exercises concluded by a well rendered selection, "Reading the Appointments," by Miss Addie Spalding.

Jake Teaker has a shoulder which for some time past has had the pesky habit of coming out of joint every now and then. It was no uncommon occurrence to see Jake go through the shop any day with his shoulder out of joint looking for a ball of twine, with which to slip in his armpit, and then giving the arm a twitch, back it would come as nice as ever. While Jake was soundly sleeping, Thursday night of last week the fractious shoulder came out of joint again. Jake hunted up the old standby, the ball of twine, placed it in position, gave it the old time yank, but it was no go. The shoulder at last had refused to perform its accustomed retreat. The services of Dr. Burgess and Swift were secured and it took their combined efforts, besides a lot of chloroform, to persuade the unruly shoulder to return to its proper position. It is very distressing for Mr. Teaker though he bears it like a major.

CHAPTER VI.—CONTINUED.

Then Roden gave a great start and caught his breath. On the floor, between the center table and the writing table lay extended on its face the body of a man with outstretched arms and clenched hands. Cutting his hold on the portiere, Roden sprang forward, and going down on one knee, managed, not without difficulty, to turn the body over on its back. His first glance had shown him that the murdered man was Captain Darvill, for murdered he had been without doubt. In the struggle his waistcoat had been torn open, and just over his heart a shrapnel bullet had passed, which when Roden lifted him up, was still oozing slowly from the wound, and there, a little distance away, lay the weapon, a foreign-looking dagger with a damask-steel hilt with which the crime was doubtless accomplished. This then, was the result of the quarrel, of the beginning of which he, Bosworth, had been an unseen witness. That Darvill was stone dead, and not merely in a faint from loss of blood, there was not room for a moment's doubt. The glassy staring eyes, the blue, tightly-drawn lips, the teeth showing between them and the fast-clenched hands, told their own tale. Still, as a matter of fact, Roden felt for the pulse which beat no longer, and dabbed his sleeve with blood while satisfying himself that no fainter pulse of the heart was perceptible. They stood up, feeling sick and giddy. The terrible discovery he had just made had seemed wide enough, which he had deemed closed forever, and the first rush of thought all but swept him away. Darvill was dead and Enna was free! In those few words lay the key to everything. Fate, after its own ready fashion, had solved a problem which half an hour before to two human beings at least, had seemed incapable of solution. For the dead man it was impossible to feel one grain of pity, and Roden made no pretense to himself of doing so. Darvill had been a specious, thorough-paced scoundrel and the world would be well rid of him.

He would go back to his room and leave the inevitable discovery to others. It would be as well, he thought, to take with him the weapon by means of which Darvill had come to his end. It might, or might not, be missed from its place over the chimney-piece, but in any case its absence would not help to simplify the investigation, but rather the reverse and it seemed to Roden that whatever tended to complicate the affair would lessen the likelihood of any suspicion being directed toward Ivor. It is to be borne in mind that he had no time to argue, any feature of the case pro and con, and now that he had decided on getting away, if possible, unseen, every minute was of the utmost importance. Phipson or the colonel might enter the room at any moment. All he could do was to act on his immediate impulses, leaving after consequences to take care of themselves.

He picked up the dagger, not without a third of repulsion, replaced it in its sheath and dropped both into the side pocket of his coat. After reflection convinced him that it would have been wiser on his part to have replaced the dagger in its position over the chimney-piece instead of taking it away with him, and that, in acting as he did, he committed a blunder.

He turned up the lamp on entering his room, and then, with a sense of great surprise that barely ten minutes had elapsed from the time of his leaving the tower hall that of his return so short the time, and yet the events so momentous! A different Roden Bosworth had come back to the tower from the one who had left it a little while before. By the light of the lamp he saw, what he had not noticed before, that one sleeve of his coat and part of its facings were dabbled with blood. A tremor shook him from head to foot as he stripped off his coat and flung it from him. In one corner of the room was a washstand, at which he now proceeded to rinse his hands. While thus engaged the thought came to him: "Why should I not go off for a week on one of my sketching expeditions and so get clear away from the bother that will begin a few hours hence, and end goodness only knows when? If I'm not east, they can't call upon me, and I shan't have to get into a box and swear this, that and the other. They are used at the Croft to my sudden flights to my goings and comings without notice, so that my absence will seem nothing uncommon. Decidedly the most sensible thing I can do will be to take my sketch-book and make myself scarce until the affair has blown over, and I can come back in comfort."

His mind was made up. Having changed the clothes he had on for a suit of tweed, he stowed away a few indispensable in a knapsack and got together such sketching materials as he thought he might require, not forgetting to put his modest stock of gold into his purse. The blood-stained coat he locked up in a cupboard where he stored his old canvases and other artistic debris, and then, as if to accentuate the blunder he had already committed, he looked away the dagger in a drawer in his dressing-table, where he felt sure no mortal eye would see it till he should return. In half an hour he was ready to start.

Stay, though: there was one thing more he must not forget to do. On a half-sheet of note-paper he wrote in plain bold characters: "Gone on sketching expedition. Shall be back in about a week." He then tied the paper to the key of his door for the information of Mrs. Pink on her arrival in the morning to lay his breakfast. It was not the first missive of the kind she had found tied to the key. That done Roden took up his impedimenta, turned out his lamp, locked the door, leaving the key in it, and a moment later was in the open air. The same dull light shown from the upper half of the smoking-room window, otherwise the house on that side was shrouded in darkness. Evidently the discovery had not yet been made but not much longer could it be delayed. His heart beat a silent farewell to Enna and then he turned and went on his way.

CHAPTER VII.

The discovery and what ensued thereon.

It was the Colonel who made this discovery. On his return from visiting Farmer Drayton, where he was detained longer than he had expected, he went at once to the smoking-room in search of his guest, Phipson, who had met him in the entrance hall had told him where he would find Captain Darvill. On the discovery itself we need not dwell. The suddenness of it was enough to shake the colonel as few things in life had been able to do. A hasty examination of the body sufficed to convince him that life was extinct and must have been so for some time. Still, it was of course requisite to call in medical aid, and his first step was to send off a mounted groom to Sherristford, the nearest town, to summon both a doctor and the police. Another servant sent in search of Roden Bosworth, brought back word that his rooms were in darkness and the doors locked. There was nothing strange in that, however. Doubtless the young painter had gone out for one of his nocturnal rambles. Meanwhile the body was left in the position in which it had been found.

Both doctor and police were quickly on the ground. The body was lifted on to the center table, and then the former proceeded to make a cursory examination into the cause of death, a post-mortem would of course be requisite later on. A very short time sufficed for Dr. Davis to pronounce that the deceased had come to his death in consequence of a stab with some sharp instrument over the region of the heart and that, in all probability, death had been instantaneous. Search had already been made for the weapon, but to no purpose. After duly cautioning him, the superintendent of police took down in writing a statement volunteered by Phipson, who as far as was yet known, was the last person who had seen and spoken with the deceased. By this time it was considerably past midnight and his men having meanwhile thoroughly searched the conservatory and the shrubberies close to the house, the superintendent went back to Sherristford, leaving a couple of constables in charge of the smoking-room and its stark occupant.

Enna met her uncle at the breakfast table and greeted him with her customary good-morning kiss. "Mrs. Asplin told you last night?" he said interrogatively. She assented. "Although it might spoil your rest, I thought it best that you should know at once. It is the most shocking affair that has ever been my misfortune to have to do with. One of the strangest parts of the business is this apparent utter lack of motive for such a crime. The poor fellow's purse and jewelry are intact and beyond the overturned lamp, which might have resulted from an accident and the fact that his waistcoat was unbuttoned, there appears to be no sign of a struggle. It's all an impenetrable mystery so far, but we can only hope that the police will not be long before they light on a clue."

"He sat back in his chair with a sigh, and rubbed his glasses with his handkerchief while Enna poured out the tea. "There is one painful duty," he went on, "from which I see no means of escape, and which I must set about without delay, as soon as breakfast is over. I refer to having to break the tidings of her husband's death to Mrs. Darvill." Enna's heart seemed to cease beating for a second or two and then to go on with a bound. "I must start for London by the ten o'clock train. It is a fortunate thing that Larvill happened to mention last evening that he had engaged rooms at the Charing Cross Hotel, otherwise I should have been at a loss where to find the poor lady. I would willingly give a thousand pounds if by doing so I could escape the interview; but duty is duty all the world over, and it's no use trying to shirk it."

Breakfast if it could be called by that name, went on for a little while in silence, then the colonel, looking across the table at his niece, said: "I wish to goodness, Enna, that you would go with me. Men are such bunglers in these matters, and you could help me to break it to the poor woman. I would ask my cousin Asplin to accompany me, only she wouldn't be a bit of good as far as helping me out goes. She's a most estimable creature and kind-hearted to a degree, but she would merely get hold of Mrs. Darvill's hand—and begin to cry, and that's not at all what I want. Now, you are different. You have a manner, a way with you, and you would know just the right thing to say and do."

"If you wish it, uncle, I will go with you," said Enna, quietly. The colonel brightened visibly. In order to catch the 10 o'clock train it was requisite that they should start immediately after breakfast. As they were on the point of leaving the house the superintendent of police drove up in his gig. The colonel explained the nature of the errand which was taking him away, and Mr. Fives then informed him that he had arranged with the coroner for the holding of the inquest in the course of the afternoon.

A run of an hour and a quarter landed uncle and niece at the St. Pancras terminus. A hansom took them from the station to the Charing Cross Hotel. The colonel sent up his card, and presently he and Enna were ushered into an elegant sitting room on the first floor. The old soldier was terribly nervous and ill at ease. "I shall wonder awfully—I know I shall," he said, "but I rely upon you, my dear, to do your best to help me out. I hope the poor woman won't go into hysterics, or faint, or make a scene. A man feels so awkward and out of his element at such times."

"There was no time to say more. The door opened, and there came into the room a tall, stately woman of some thirty-five summers, or it may be a few more, whose somewhat ample proportions were habited in a rose-colored morning robe very simply made but relieved at the throat and wrists by a profusion of exquisite lace. Her hair, which had a natural ripple in it, was dead, lustreless black. Her massive features had a regularity that was almost classical; if chiselled in marble her face might well have passed for that of a somewhat mature June. Behind Mrs. Darvill's heavy half-shut lids there smouldered a strange, sinister fire which one felt might at any moment leap into a consuming flame. Her complexion was an intense clear olive almost too dark for that of a European. It was not possible the colonel asked himself, that there might be a strain several times removed, of Indian, or even of negro blood in her veins?"

She came forward, holding the colonel's card between her thumb and finger, but her eyes were bent, not on him, but curiously on Enna. "You are Colonel Berneage—the gentleman to visit whom my husband left London yesterday," she said, turning her eyes full upon him and speaking in a hard, metallic voice.

The colonel bowed slightly. "And this is my niece, Miss Lenleath," he said. Mrs. Darvill seemed as if she had not heard.

ABOUT BULLS.

Not the Animals, But the Variety Generally Referred to as "Irish." A bull may be said to be a gross contradiction or blunder in speech. It was derived from one Obadiah Bull, a lawyer in the time of Henry VIII., who was celebrated rather than famous for the blunders which fell from his lips when he pleaded before the judges.

A witty Irishman, upon being asked for the definition of a bull, said: "If you see two cows lying down alone in a field, the one standing up is sure to be a bull." Miss Edgeworth, in her essays on "Irish Bulls," gives the following: "When I first saw you, I thought it was you, but now I see it is your brother." "I met you this morning, and you did not come; I'll meet you to-morrow morning whether you come or not." "Oh, if I had stayed in that climate until now I should have been dead two years."

During the Irish rebellion an Irish paper published this item: "A man named Macarty was run over by a passenger train and killed on Wednesday. He was inured in a similar way two years ago." In 1754 the Irish house of commons issued an order to this effect: Any member unable to write may get another member to frank his letter for him, but only on condition that he certifies with his own handwriting his inability to do so.

A well-known English epitaph commences as follows: "Reader, if thou canst read." This is somewhat akin to the hand-board which reads: "The ford is dangerous when this board is covered by the water."

REMARKABLE COINCIDENCE.

How a Letter Brought Back Its Own Answer.

Among the stories of extraordinary coincidences, writes a London correspondent of the London Mercury, not the least curious is the history of a letter. A short time ago a lady in London wished to write to a friend in America, whose address she did not know. The only means she had of procuring the address was to write to a mutual friend, who also lived in America. This she accordingly did, and the letter was duly dispatched. The ship which carried the letter was wrecked and the mails for a time lost. They were eventually recovered and brought back to England, the letters now much damaged by sea water, being returned through the dead letter office to the senders. The letter in question was sent back to the lady, who naturally examined it minutely. To her surprise she found that another letter had been closely stuck to it. Holding up the two old missives to the light, she deciphered the address on the one which was stuck to her own. It was a letter addressed to the friend to whom she wished to write, and to discover whose whereabouts her own letter had been dispatched. Her letter thus literally brought back its own answer.

Large Oaks.

A Charleston lady writes: "As for large oaks there is one about forty miles from the city which is thirty-one feet in circumference near the ground and divides into five enormous branches each of which would make a tree. The tips of the branches nearly touch the ground at about thirty yards from the trunk. It is a live oak."—Meekins's Monthly.

HOW THANKSGIVING SHOULD BE OBSERVED.

It Should Not Be Merely a Feast but a Day of Thanksgiving to God for the Blessing of the Harvest.—Lillian Hale's View of the Day.

IT HAS BECOME more or less the custom of late to speak of our celebration of a special Thanksgiving day with some disdain as a great oblation of roast turkey and cranberry sauce, mince-pie and nuts and raisins, and all the rest, instead of as an offering of thanks which we ought to be glad to make; if only with pulse and water.

Those who have grown to have this feeling about the day speak of it as a day of gormandizing; reproach it with the manner of its observance, connect its existence in their minds, with a responsibility for gluttony, and are in danger of losing all lofty or sacred association with it. As a day of real thanks to a source of all beauty and joy and life, they do not give it any peculiar regard. They call it Thanksgiving day because that is its name, always has been and always will be. They do not fail to observe it, because they are conservative and want to break in on no established order of things. They sometimes go to hear a sermon in which thanks are apt to figure but little, and politics are apt to figure a good deal, but on the whole, they think of it as a remarkably good dinner day.

Yet in the relations of every-day life with one another, if from any hand one received such a blessing as life, as love, as freedom from want, as friends, as family, as the roof that shelters, the food that loads the table, to say nothing of more personal gifts or of the minor myriad of blessings, it would be a matter of the most glaring ingratitude if any due rendering of thanks were omitted; and of ingratitude if one even desired to evade acknowledgment. The person who has been entertained over night in a dull country house sends a note of thanks to the host or hostess afterward; the beggar on the street, to whom a half-dime, has been tossed, utters a meek word or makes a gesture of obligation, but those who enter into none of the interior reality of Thanksgiving day, who keep it as a matter of form and because others do, and because it makes one more holiday, and who in return for sunlight, sleep, waking joy, all the innumerable pleasures of existence, for the early and the latter rain, harvest, health, happiness, see no occasion for a season of special thank-offering, and in observing the day observe it rather in a Chinese commemoration of the ancestors, who appointed it than from the force of an irresistible motion of gratitude in their own hearts, those people are less civil than the chance guest, less decent than the sidewalk beggar, and are really almost as much to be pitied as if they had nothing at all to be thankful for. Yet the idea of the day is something so beautiful—that it is a shame the day itself should not always and everywhere be kept with such warmth and freshness of feeling as it would be if it were but just newly instituted every year. It is a day that Christian and Jew and Gentile, Mohammedan and heathen, may observe with tenderness; for each and all of these have one great benignant source of blessing beyond the world of the senses, from whom they recognize that they receive all, to whom they know is due a worship which includes thanks. And how beautiful might be the offering of this worship and these thanks when compared with the offerings of old; not smoke of sacrifice or dripping altars or curling incense, but the countless joys of the heart's rapture, of spirit seeking spirit.

And with those, and they are still a multitude, who make a real festival of the day, the return to the home and hearth of the family—the patriarch's hearth from which the new families have gone out—is like the going up of the tribes to be numbered at their great city. All over the land what glad confusion they make, what journeying, what hurrying eastward and westward, to the North, to the South! From the Pacific shores the trains are hastening, laden with travelers, sons and daughters coming back to the old home; from the Atlantic they go, carrying the older people to see the new homes that the younger ones have made; from North and South on the crossing and interlacing lines, brothers and sisters and friends hasten to each other's houses this one season in the year, perhaps this one year out of many, have been away, and fathers, whose errands have taken them into distant regions, make all haste to beat the land, all pulsing and eager and expectant of joy, heart-beats running along each line, love radiating from home to home, till one might think the very air above them would be electrified and vitalized with the human warmth! And what precious freight it has borne thus—the pearls and silks and teas and spices of the Orient, far less so—precious with all that makes life dear, for wealth may go and health may go, but those we love are not to be spared, and their price is above rubies. And should disaster befall any of these Thanksgiving trains that go thus loaded, greeted at every station by glad faces of those that give some welcome and others godspeed, delayed at every station, too, by entering and departing groups, what heart-break and what ruin follows!

Thanksgiving day, then, is a day that stands for home and humanity more than any one day of the round year. Into the other great annual festivals, with the exception of those that are purely political, the divine element enters into a much stronger degree than into this day, which is not of divine appointment, nor of the recognition of any deity event, but only of our own gratitude to heaven and need of expressing it. It might be thought by any disinterested and unprejudiced observer, say, from another planet or another universe, were such things to be conjectured, that loaded tables, good appetite, sufficient digestion, friendly faces and all that sort of thing which might be described in Sir Lucius O'Trigger's graphic words: "I hope there is no dissatisfied person here but what is content," were subjects deserving instant and spontaneous thanks upon them; although the fact is we are too prone to think that what we have is our own, won and deserved by our efforts, and due not at all to kindly Providence or heavenly permission. But if not for special providences and detailed blessings, thanks must by any intelligent mind be held due for the great laws and their operations by which these blessings have been brought into being. And in this view, let us all accept the day as another gift from heaven, and offer thanks not alone for all our separate happiness, but for Thanksgiving day itself.

Lillian Hale

THANKSGIVING OBSERVATIONS.

How the Day is Observed in Out-of-the-Way Places.

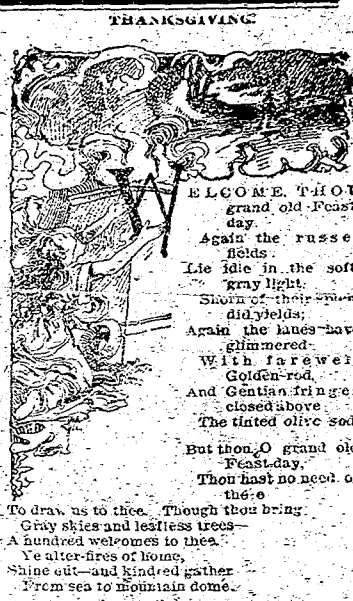

Half of the observers of Thanksgiving day do not know how the other half spend that fine old Puritan festival.

On the plains of Montana and Wyoming the cow-boys supplement their Thanksgiving dinner with the grand, mysterious mince pie, so dear to the traditions of the day. It is the chef-d'œuvre of the prairie cook, and the boys drop their lassos and revolvers to watch the operation with breathless awe and expectancy.

Another picture incidentally illustrates the perils of gossip, particularly in a case where vigilance is the price of the dinner; and the fattened goose mysteriously vanishes, stuffing and all. The women folk will no doubt do up the affairs of their neighbors to their own mutual satisfaction; but, meanwhile, "empty is the oven, goose is gone!" Truly, this festival of the last Thursday in November ought to be universal—there are so many general as well as individual reasons for giving thanks. We can be thankful that the elections are over—that Christmas is coming—that the beginning of frost is the end of yellow fever—that people have settled, or at least dropped, the question, "Is marriage a failure?" And unfortunate indeed is he that cannot at least fall back upon the stoical old maxim and be "thankful that things are no worse than they are."

The Christians Observe It.

Thanksgiving day is now celebrated by union services in all the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish churches in the United States. In the homes of citizens, without respect to religious faith or church affiliations, it is made a day of merriment and feasting, at which families long separated are reunited, and ceremonies of a social character prevail.

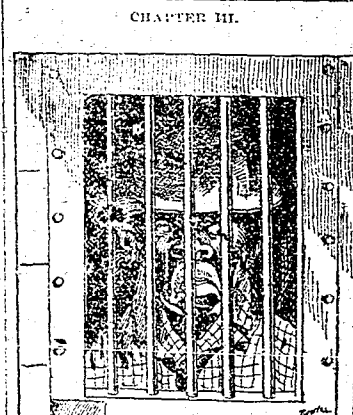

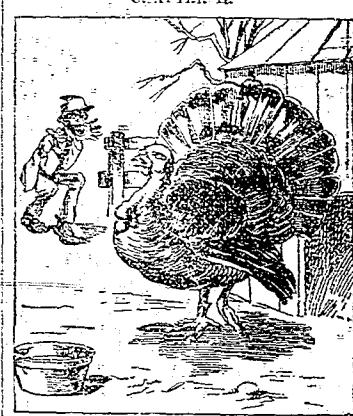

So had the grand old Feast-day. The wind swept orchard boughs. Have flung their ruddy gold and green. On the earth the mews. Are rich with grain, the fawns. Sleep near the sun's yellow ray. And all the land is glad, and greets A new Thanksgiving day.

A Good Feaster. Mr. Livermore, a negro of Goshen, Pa., recently ate at a single meal two large loaves of bread, fifteen biscuits, regulation size, two pounds of bacon, a fried chicken whole, with bread dressing with gravy thereto, two enormous glasses of butter milk, a cup of coffee, glass of sweet milk, four good-sized potatoes and a dish of cabbage, with a pan of corn bread in addition. This is his ordinary ration with breakfast and supper besides.

Vegetables and Fruit. Strawberries are fruit; so are tomatoes, melons and cucumbers. One suggested distinction between a vegetable and a fruit is that the latter may be eaten raw, while the former must be cooked, but that doesn't hold always. Technically, a fruit incloses the seeds of the plant and is matured underground; a vegetable is a vegetable.

THANKSGIVING STORY.

England's Abolished Day of Thanksgiving. England, until within the latter part of this century, had a day of Thanksgiving. The day had its origin in the discovery of the plot of Guy Fawkes to blow up the Protestant Parliament buildings. It was not an event in which all the people of England were in accord and was abolished by special request of the Queen.
