That Is a Portion of the Title Which Frank N. Clark Now Carries.

HE'S A HIGH UP MASON.

And One of the Best Posted Fish Culture Men in the U. S.

At the annual meeting of the R. & S. M. Masons, held in Detroit last week, Frank N. Clark of this place was elected Most Illustrious Grand Master. At the annual meeting of the R. A. M. held the following day, he was elected Grand Master of the 2d Veil. Mr. Clark is one of the best posted Masons in the state and the honor conferred upon him by these grand lodges is a worthy compliment.

Frank N. Clark was born in the little hamlet of Clarkston, his father, the late N. W. Clark being the founder of the village. After attending school for some years and later the agricultural college, he taught school in Montcalm county some little time and afterwards was in the wholesale dry goods business with his father, in Clinton and Cedar Rapids, Ia. In 1870 they returned to Clarkston and started a 40-acre garden seed farm, and in the winter time, with his father, experimented in the fish culture. The first work of the state in this direction being conducted in the Clark hatchery. In 1874, with his father, he founded the Northville hatchery and in the same year did his first work for the government. Among other important U. S. fish stations under his charge at various times have been: Harve de Grace, Md.; Navy Yard station, Washington; Delaware River station, Milford, Pa.; and in charge of fish culture on the U. S. fish commission steamer, Fish Hawk, besides the one at Alpena in addition to the one here, which are in his charge at present. In 1876 he had charge of the first shipment ever made by the government of young shad to the Pacific coast. Though the facilities for transporting young fish were not what they are today, he made a very successful trip, planting 200,000 in the Sacramento river. To this plant, with others following, the rivers of that coast owe their stock of today.

When Gen. Vance of North Carolina in 1877 called on the U. S. fish commissioner for an expert to take charge of the work of fish culture in that state Mr. Clark was sent for. In 1880 the work at Northville was taken in charge by the U. S. fish com. and Mr. Clark made superintendent. The work which has been so successfully carried on from a small beginning of turning out 2,000,000 fish has increased to over 50,000,000, making it one of the most important stations in the states. In 1880 he received diplomas from the Berlin fishery exhibition for fish culture inventions shown. In 1883 he received medals for finest display of alcoholic specimens of trout. This later exhibition required a year's time in its collection and included from the eggs to 6 1/2 lb. brook trout. A similar exhibit is now in course of preparation at the Northville hatchery for exhibition at the World's fair. In 1882 the Alpena hatchery was erected under Mr. Clark's direction who has charge of that station also. In the shipment of fish eggs, Mr. Clark has been especially successful and from Northville station they have gone to almost every state in the union, and to nearly every civilized country on the globe. Until 1890, the government had only leased the grounds and buildings here. They were then purchased of Mr. Clark. Later, additional grounds were bought together with a location for a dam a mile farther west, from which water is now carried through pipes to the buildings. Something over forty new ponds, besides other improvements, have been added the past year as a result of Mr. Clark's work.

A letter, to be sure of reaching Mr. Clark, should now be addressed something like this: Frank N. Clark, M. I. G. M., G. C. R. & S. M., G. J. M., G. M. 2d V., R. A. M., Gen'l Supt U. S. Fish Hatchery for Michigan; Director Northville State Savings Bank; Corner Duulap and High street, Northville, Mich. One need hardly add Wayne county.

A HEALTHY PLACE.

No Village in the State Can Show So Good a Record.

ONLY 30 DEATHS LAST YEAR.

The Average Life is Fifty-five Years.

During last year 1892, there were but thirty deaths in the village of Northville. With a population of about 2,100 people this shows but one death to 700 people. The deaths were almost entirely among old people. The oldest was 95 years, the youngest six weeks. The average age of eighteen was 76 years. The average age of all who died, two babies less than six months, old excepted, was 55 years. One person was 95; nine were past 80, three were up in the 70's; five were up in the 60's; one in the 50's; none in the 40's; three in the 30's and three in the 20's. There was not a death between the age of 4 and 21.

The above record shows that Northville is not only the liveliest and prettiest village in Michigan, but also the healthiest. The natural surroundings, lofty hills, fine drainage, pure water, are proven as productive of good health and long life.

THAT METEOR.

They All Saw It and It Struck Within Two Miles of a Dozen Different Villages.

A large meteor was seen by many of our citizens Tuesday evening, at about 8 o'clock, lighting the sky for several seconds, and exploding with a loud report. Farmington Enterprise.

Some of our villagers saw the falling of a meteor at about seven o'clock Tuesday evening. It illuminated our streets like the powerful electric lights South Lyon is talking of having some time. So, Lyon Excelsior.

A large and brilliant meteor passed over this village Tuesday evening, illuminating the atmosphere with the brilliancy of an electric light. It passed along less than one hundred feet from the ground, and exploded and dropped into a field about two miles west. Fenton Independent.

The meteor that traversed across the sky last Tuesday evening was indeed a rare pyrotechnic display. It assumed a westerly direction and appeared to be about the size of an electric lamp globe. It separated into four pieces, each section being of a different color. So, Lyon Picket.

CLOTHES LINES AND HARNESSES

Joe M. Mear Arrested Charged With Thieving.

Joe Mear, a detective White arrested from Miller, an old man living near Phoenix Mills and Frank Zable, of Meads Mills. The former was charged with stealing some harnesses valued at $100 from Geo. Pringle of Redford. Mr. Mear is identified about $25 worth of property found in Miller's possession. Mear was charged with molesting children, etc. Both pleaded not guilty before Squire Blackwood yesterday morning. Miller's bail was fixed at $500 and he was bound over to the circuit court for trial. Zable will be tried in Justice Blackwood's court next week Friday.

White says that at Zable's house he found several trunks packed full of table linens, bedding and the like, and inside of some bed comfortable a number of horse blankets were sewed. It is said that several families in this village have identified some of the articles as missing from their clothes-lines. Both are married men with families.

CARD OF THANKS

The family of Mrs. George D. Woodman extend their sincere thanks to the many Northville friends and the Maconic order for kind remembrances in their late bereavement.

DR. BENNETT.

B. H. Bennett an old resident of Adrian, Mich. was afflicted with a severe form of chronic rheumatism and kidney trouble, attended with loss of energy and vitality.

Suffered intense and constant pain. For over 20 years had been unable to sleep without the use of an electric battery to quiet his distracted nerves. The kidney and bladder trouble were in a terrible condition, chronic constipation rendered continual use of drastic cathartics imperative. Life was a burden and a dark cloud loomed forward to the only possible release.

One treatment in accordance with Dr. Bennett's Official Philosophy and he at once improved, also the rheumatic pains were lessened. A few more treatments and he had no use for the electric battery. Appetite and sleep returned, also good digestion. The rheumatism was entirely cured. Strength was restored and his recovery has proven permanent. He is now a well man upwards of eighty years of age.

Does the medical theory of today explain how this was accomplished with out the aid of medicine? It was done by removing the fever (inflammation) which impaired the natural power which controls energies and sustains the functions of every organ of the human body.

The above cited case is only one of the many remarkable cures which Dr. Bennett is, and has been doing the past ten years in his work of treating chronic diseases. He invites all interested to call and see him and learn more of his theory and his work at the Macomber Hotel Wednesday, Feb. 1st. Free consultation in German and English.

THE RECORD.

F. S. Neal, Publisher.

NORTHVILLE, MICHIGAN

The wife of a Los Angeles man set forth his worthlessness in a long complaint. Immediately he committed a felony sufficient to land him in jail. He intended this as evidence of a broken heart, but the public, not always sentimental to a maudlin degree, accepted it as sustaining the complaint.

A New Jersey girl recently shot her favorite young man and then herself. They were engaged. She loved him very much, and doubtless took measures almost harsh to save him from being married to her. She thought he deserved a better fate and being a creature of impulse she got a gun and shot him.

As showing the rapid changes in naval construction it may be pointed out that the Maine, Yorktown and Philadelphia are three types of vessels of which the United States will build no more, although they were considered almost perfect only a few years ago. Big battle ships and armored cruisers of great speed are what the navy wants now.

The interesting discovery has been made by a French investigator that it pays the consumer to throw away his incandescent lamps after about two hundred hours' service. They will burn a good deal longer, but that is the limit of their illumination. After that time they gradually grow dim, and the fault is usually laid to the current, whereas the current may be and usually is constant.

New York is going to pull down its old city hall, which is one of the few antiquities of the town, and with an admirable piece of architecture, in order to make room for a new building, which is not likely to be a bad architectural failure, but will be full of fat contracts for the aldermen and their friends. Meantime New Yorkers will continue to go abroad when they wish to view ancient structures.

In the trial of a man for maliciously cutting the dress skirt of a fellow elevated railway passenger in New York a few days ago, a Mrs. Higgins was examined as a witness and was asked: "Why did you not inform the plaintiff when you discovered the sorry condition of her skirt?" The witness replied, "I didn't speak to Mrs. Brown because I have spoken to women on the street when they were losing their clothes and they always snubbed me. A man will at least thank you, but a woman only glares." There is food for reflection in this answer. There are some people who would rather choke than say, "Thank you."

Disciples of the bacteriological theory are now investigating the subject of tetanus to see whether or not micro-organisms are not responsible for a fellow's jaws being locked. The usual experiments upon the inevitable guinea pig have been made with satisfactory results. Is there no way by which these bacteriologists can be induced to direct their attention to the bacilli that fructify in the brain of the fashion-arbiter who is responsible for the threatened speedy invasion of that ineffable nuisance, the hoop-skirt? The bacilli that infect the brain of a man who seeks to revive the hoop-skirt are probably as big as maggots and ought to be at once extracted and chopped up with a hatchet.

The city of Berlin has grown with greater rapidity than any city in the United States. Its proportionate rate of increase has not been so great as in a few of our large cities, but none that approach it in size has developed so rapidly. Most of this growth has been made since the war with France, and the expenditure of the money France was obliged to pay as indemnity is perhaps the secret of its start. By additions of surrounding territory soon to be made Berlin's population will be nearly or quite three millions. This is next to London, Paris having not more than two and a half millions, and New York with Brooklyn and adjacent cities having about the same population as Paris.

A distinguished German physician declares this to be the age of nervousness, and thinks the civilized race is deteriorating under it. Our lunatic asylums are filling up at a frightful rate; women who should be plump and rosy, are pale and emaciated; school children, instead of being joyous, active, vigorous, are debilitated, overworked and unhappy; business men have become engines of perpetual worry and victims of insomnia; social life has become a nerve disordering whirl of excitement; cities are clamorous with the distractions of railroads, traffic, manufacture, and all bustling affairs that destroy repose and murder quiet. Everything is at high pressure. Headlong, mad activity has become the law of circumstances.

PRESIDENT DIAZ is said to own stock in all Mexican railway, telegraph, telephone and electric companies. There is consequently little danger of rival interests getting a foothold in that country while he is in a position to issue or refuse charters.

GHOST ON SENTRY GOES.

THE CORPORAL'S THRILLING TALE OF THE ZULU WAR.

Killed the Day Before in the Attack on the Commissariat Train and Returning to Guard His Sleeping Comrades.

Some of the old-timers in the British army are excellent story-tellers and the guard room, where they are wont to hold forth, is the place above all others to hear a good yarn. Here is one told by a lance corporal of the —the regiment, which had lately returned from the campaign in Zululand, in the Main Guard, —linea Curragh Camp, —.

"Of course you've heard," he said, addressing himself more particularly to a recruit who had not shared in the glories of —disasters— of that untoward war, "how two companies of our regiment were left at —to guard a part of the commissariat train, while the main body went in chase of a horde of —Zulus which we had that day encountered. Of course, too, you've heard how they failed to return as soon as was expected, and how night came on and found our little band isolated and at the mercy of thousands of the fierce enemy, who were lurking all around in the dense brush. Perhaps you know how our captain ——him— had the bags of flour the biscuit tins and wagons formed into a small breast-work around us and how at dawn the next morning, by their aid, we were enabled to beat off the attack of the enemy, who, outnumbered us ten to one; how the captain, next evening, when help was still delayed, assembled the men, telling them that the only chance he saw of rescue, was to summon assistance, that he could see no hope of any one escaping with his life through the enemy's lines, and on that account would undertake the task himself. Scores of us volunteered to go, but he wouldn't hear of it, only begging us if he felt to bear evidence of his motives, so that no misconstruction might be put on them; after handing over the command he did escape the enemy's vigilance and brought back success; how he was tried by court martial for cowardice in deserting his post and how our evidence saved him. But this you don't know, my lad, that had it not been for a ghost the success would have been too late and not a mother's son of us would have lived to hear the buzz of our brave fellows as they came in the nick of time and drove the yelling hordes before them.

As soon as the captain crept out of the square under the shade of falling night the sentries of course, were doubled. I was one of the detail for duty that night and it so happened that my second spell occurred during the two hours just previous to dawn, when an attack might be expected. Back and forward I and my rear rank man paced as silently as we could, and peering more and more anxiously into the surrounding gloom, as dawn approached. Suddenly as I turned on my beat, I saw Tommy Sarghatter as plain as I see you now, pacing in front of me. Now, Tommy had been killed the day before, and what's more, I couldn't in an ordinary way have seen any man under the circumstances. It's always darkest before dawn you know. I paused a moment fairly staggered, with the cold premonition of a pouring of me, and as I did so I saw a Zulu spring out of the darkness and drive his stabbing assegai fiercely at the phantom. I suppose he was revealed to me by the same mysterious light that showed the ghostly form of my ate comrade, but be that as it may, I saw him distinctly, and even noted a look of horrified surprise that passed over his features when he found that his weapons met with no resistance.

At a moment he paused as if petrified, and in that moment I recovered, my senses, which for the moment being had deserted me. Quickly raising my rifle I covered the savage, and as his report rang out on the still morning air the ghostly light, which had been of such service faded and disappeared. My timely shot warned our fellows and a moment had scarce elapsed each man was at his post behind our improvised ramparts, battling for dear life with a host of implacable foes which seemed to have arisen like an exhalation from the earth. Silently we struggled hand to hand and steel to steel, our rifles being of no advantage to us, for we had no chance to use them in the darkness and thought each man fought with that dogged courage, born of despair it had availed as nothing against such overwhelming odds. But help was at hand. A faint hush in the distance told us of the hurrah and nerved our flagging muscles to fresh exertions. With an answering shout we charged them once and again, as our fellows, the captain in the van, took them in rear. As they had come, so they went, vanishing like shadows in the now dispersing gloom, so that when the sun shot up like a meteor in the east nothing remained of them but their dead and dying. The captain's return saved us, but just the same had not Tommy's ghost shown me the stealthy Zulu's advance I had never fired that shot and roused my comrades, and not a man of us would have survived to tell the tale."

Better Than That. Dr. Chisholm, a canny Scot, on being introduced to a gentleman the other day, said: "Your name is French, are you?" "On the contrary," replied the new acquaintance. "Then your mother was Scotch?" "Well, yes, I should think so; she was a MacNabb!" "Ah, a MacNabb! By the way, didn't you ever hear the old Highland story of the heated argument, which the MacDonald and the MacNabb got into? No? Well, they were discussing their ancestry and MacDonald said: "I tell you, man, we are the eldest of all the clans in Scotland. We were with Noah in the ark." "Ho, ho! dianna ye ken the MacNabbs had a boat of their ain?"

CHEESE OF FOREIGN NAME. Manufactured of Excellent Quality, in —The United States.

Simple folk who pride themselves upon their gastronomic taste are sometimes heard to speak scornfully of American cheese, but perhaps in nine cases out of ten they eat, and praise as an excellent example of the foreign product, a cheese that never crossed the ocean. Camembert and Brie are the only soft cheeses that are imported in considerable quantities, and even they are manufactured in the United States.

You may buy in July a so-called Camembert cheese with an elaborate foreign label, but as a matter of fact, little if any of the imported article is sold here between May and October. Camembert usually reaches the New York market ten or twelve days from the factory, some of it spoils on the way if the weather is hot for a season. It comes over in the swift ships from Havre and what is brought in one ship is pretty well consumed before another arrives.

It is confessed that the native Camembert and Brie are not so good as the foreign article, but the cheese-makers of New York and New Jersey have come at length to produce, admirable Roquefort and good imitations of the foreign cheeses. The French cheese-makers, with the conservatism characteristic of rural Europeans, have neglected to adapt their product to the American market. The Brie cheese from abroad, for example, comes in large disks that puts it beyond any but those who consume it in large quantities, whereas the native Brie is made in small cakes that may be purchased for family use.

The sale of Grogonole cheese, which is still imported, is much smaller than it would otherwise be if made in smaller parcels. Only two or three English cheeses are now imported in large quantities, and so-called English dairy cheese is a native product. Meanwhile enormous quantities of American cheeses are exported to Great Britain. Some English cheese-makers have taken to putting up their products in jars instead of bladders in this way making them more easily procured.

The German and Swiss cheeses are imported here though less successfully than some others. As to the Italian cheeses they are made without pretense of concealment wherever there is a considerable Italian quarter, though the imitations are not liked by the Italians themselves and cheap

Italian cheeses are imported in large quantities. Parmesan is a favorite with the Italians, since it is cheap and in various ways useful. Limburger is imported here, as is Neuchâtel.

According to local tradition, says the New York Sun, the earliest maker of foreign cream cheese in this region was a Frenchman, whose first customer was a fashionable restaurant. He produced, in small quantities, almost perfect imitations of French cheeses, and delivered them to his customers himself. The manufacture of these cheeses has now so extended that many grocers make no effort to keep a stock of foreign cheese, and probably the larger portion of the cheese consumed, even in the French tables d'hôte that established the fashion of cheese eating among all sorts of New Yorkers is of native manufacture. As yet, however, the conservatism of the commercial world seems to make it necessary to stick to old names and foreign labels.

They Couldn't Wait. "I met a man on the train the other day, coming from one of the bad sections of the Southwest," remarked the drummer easily, "and sounded him as to why he was returning to Michigan."

"Don't like it down there," he said in a plaintive key.

"What's the matter with it?" "They shoot too much. Why, when I first went down there, just as regular as Saturday night came, they killed two or three people."

"Did they keep it up at that rate?" "No."

"Ah, got better after you went there, did they?"

"No, they got so they couldn't wait until Saturday night and I thought it was time to leave."—Detroit Free Press.

A Misunderstanding. "Ma la," said Mr. Fortuway. "I wish, dear, you would go down with me to-morrow and we'll select a new hat."

"Of course," said Mrs. Fortuway. "I've been noticing the new styles myself. We must pick out something recent."

"Yes, something from London." "With a fine shape." "Well-crowned." "No, trimmed with roses." "Roses?" said Mr. Fortuway; "what are you talking about?"

"Why, my new hat, weren't you?" "I course not," said Mr. Fortuway, glaring; "I was talking about my new hat."—Chicago News-Record.

Veterans of '1812. A charter has been granted in Philadelphia to the Society of the War of 1812. The society numbers among its members fifty-five veterans, scattered throughout the union. David McCoy, aged 102 is probably the oldest. He resides in San Bernardino, Cal. When he volunteered in 1812 he furnished his own gun and horse. There are several members whose age is said approaches 100 and Abram Dally, of Brooklyn, who is over 97, signed the charter without glasses in clear, legible hand.

MILK AS A FOOD.

Its Chemical Composition Makes It Suitable to Children and Invalids.

George M. Whitaker of the state dairy bureau spoke at the women's headquarters at the Mechanics' fair on "Milk as a Food and the Difficulties in the Way of Delivering It Pure and Wholesome to a Large City," says the Boston Transcript.

Milk he says is of universal use and peculiarly adapted to children and invalids because it contains in its normal condition a proper proportion of food elements in a palatable and easily digested condition. These are under normal conditions: Fat 3.7 per cent; sugar 4.7; casein 3.3.

The casein represents the muscle-forming and force-giving element. Under some circumstances milk from which the cream has been removed may be as valuable a food as whole milk. The sugar gives palatability and furnishes a prominent carbonaceous element. The fat adds an easily assimilated carbonaceous element, very valuable under some circumstances to invalids giving milk its value as a relish, in coffee, on oatmeal or with desert. It is also the most expensive element in milk.

Milk is more susceptible to change from the normal condition than any other food product. The first class of changes has been brought about by the action of breeders. By many years of attention to breeding for fat production, it is now possible to get milk which may be twice as rich as the normal. On the other hand, other breeders have paid special attention to production of large quantity, even at the expense of quality; until pure milk is sometimes produced having as low as 10 per cent of solids when the normal is 13 per cent.

A second set of causes which influence the quality of milk grows out of the ignorance or carelessness of the producer or seller. Where the persons hold the exploded idea of the value of one cow's milk for children, anything in the treatment of the cow which affects its nervous temperament may unfit it for food for very young children. Uncleanliness or neglect is often a grave source of trouble in the handling of milk, not only on account of the possibilities of the addition of visible filth, but because milk is peculiarly susceptible to odor various kinds of bacteria and disease germs. Epidemics of scarlet fever and typhoid fever have been traceable to the milk supply, unclean cans and other utensils and particularly to propagating bacteria. The third source of trouble with the milk supply is due to the criminality of those who handle it, either by adding water or removing a part of the cream.

SWEET REMINDERS.

Pretty Feminine Faces Which Mar the Artistic Value of Photographs. All these photographs are useless! They represent a summer thrown away. And yet are greatly admired. Every one says they are "so artistic."

When I took them I thought they would remind me pleasantly of the happy days. But they don't! There is a girl in every one of them. That is the defect.

Here is a view of Lake Eapy. Notice the beautiful reflection of the mountain in the water.

Also notice the girl, seated in the bow of a boat whose bow rests on the shore.

This is a scene in the woods. See how delicately the tree tops are outlined against the sky.

It is a very clear negative, but there is the girl on the stump in the foreground.

This is the finest "interior" I ever took. The hall at the "Cedars." Yes, that's the girl again just coming down the stairs and holding up her skirt with one hand.

No, she isn't always as pretty as that. She looked particularly well that day.

This is looking down the valley from Steep Rocks. How well those thunder heads come out in the deep, ominous, big, white and fleecy.

You can almost feel the electricity in the air. The lace on the girl's parasol is blurred a little. It moved in the wind.

Here I am helping her across Kasog brook, just above the old saw mill.

I gave her small brother a quarter to press the button for that picture. I wish I hadn't!

This is she and I again. In "Cozy Nook." Don't I look like a sentimental idiot?

Swamp-Root

A LAY OF THE RIALTO.

I've played the melancholy Dane, I've been a nymph as well as satyr, I've pealed the thunder, sent the rain, And ushered in many a thrayter. I've played Iago, Richelieu, Bunthorne and old Riazzi, I've supped a dozen seasons through, Announcing lords with tragic frenzy. From Texas back to Union Square I've walked, a busted constallation. One year I wore a domino hair, I've been alone a constallation. But now I'm weary of my art— An art at which I never was thriving— Which is just why this but her's cart. At three a week I'm driving. —Life.

"SOME DAY."

"Ada come with me into the library; I must—I will see you alone for a moment!" "Oh nonsense, Philip; how tire-some you are! Say what you wish to say at once. I am engaged to Lord Mordant for the next set, and I can't go away just now; they will be forming directly."

"You can excuse yourself to him; say you are fatigued. Let him find another partner, and you can sit the dance out with me. Surely I have a right to ask such a small favor?"

"You have a right to ask whatever you please, and I have an equal right to refuse, Philip. I do refuse to leave the ball-room at present, until the next set is finished."

"And then?" asked Philip Irvine eagerly, his clouded brow brightening for a moment.

"Then," repeated Ada Shirley, "well, then," her better nature prompting her to relent and please her lover by acquiescing in his wish.

"Then I may very likely have a few minutes to spare which I may bestow upon you if you are very meek and promise not to look like a horrid blue-faced ar me again!" and she looked at him with a half-winning, half-distant smile which her lover generally found irresistible, but which failed to win an answering smile just now.

"I have no wish to be a tyrant to you, Ada. You know that your happiness is my daily study, but I cannot submit to such treatment as I have received at your hands to-night."

"I do not understand you," said Ada pettishly, but at this moment Sydney Roland, a handsome young fellow of her own age and quite as poor as herself, approached and claimed her as his partner in the "Polo Quadrille" now forming, and soon in that merriest of quadrilles Ada forgot her gloomy mood, and danced recklessly, as was her wont in company, at all times, I am sorry to say.

Meanwhile Philip stood and watched her anxiously. He was a man of great wealth and talents, fifteen years her senior. He might have chosen a wife from among the noblest and fairest in the land, but he preferred to woo a laughing Ada Shirley, the eldest daughter of a country clergyman with a small stipend and large family.

No sooner was the dance ended than Philip claimed Ada's promise, and led her away from the ball-room. He was seriously angry, yet her gay childlike manners and witty tongue had almost restored his good humor, so that instead of coldly handing her a seat, as he had intended to do, he took her in his arms directly they were alone, and fondly whispered:

"Darling Ada, you are very dear to me; but why do you torment me so? If you do not care for me tell me so honestly, and I will go away and never trouble you again."

"No, no, dear Philip, don't go away! I do love you. I could never be happy now without you!"

"The loving words completed Philip's conquest. Peace was now restored, and lasted for some minutes, until at length Ada said:

"Oh, Philip, what is the time? I hear the music beginning and I promised this waltz to Sidney."

Philip's brow darkened again. Could it be possible that this girl loved him when she was so anxious to leave his society to be whirling round the room with a man of whom she knew he, her future husband, disapproved?

So now he said coldly:

"As you are so fully engaged to-night, Ada, that I cannot enjoy five minutes of your society, I may as well make my adieux at once to you and Mrs. Ainsleigh, as I shall not stay any longer."

All the pride and willfulness of Ada's nature rose against what she considered her lover's tyranny, and she answered, her tones as cold as his own:

"Very well, Philip; if you are not enjoying the ball perhaps you had better go. Anyhow do not stay an hour on my account."

"I take you at your word, Ada; but remember, if I leave you to-night because you prefer another man's society to mine, I go altogether. I will never if I can avoid it, see you again."

"As you please," Ada replied, trying to make her tones careless and steady.

Without another word he led her to the ball room. Dancing had not recommenced but a girl was singing, and the words uttered fastened themselves on Ada's mind and remained for many a weary year.

Some day, some day, I shall meet you. Love, I know not when or how. Only this, only this, that once you loved me.

Only this, I love you now!

Next day the news was spread over society that the engagement between Mr. Philip Irvine and Miss Ada Shirley had been suddenly broken off, and that the gentleman had gone abroad for an indefinite period. Bitter indeed was Ada's repentance, and sad were the days that followed.

Mrs. Ainsleigh was very angry at her folly, as she called it, and sent her back to her home in disgrace.

"I want nothing more of any young lady whom I chaperon than ladylike conduct and decorous behavior. And Ada Shirley has transgressed every rule of good breeding, and female modesty is outraged by her conduct. Not only has she driven Philip Irvine away, and made herself the laughing stock of all our circle, but she has caused a rupture between our family and the Monteiths, who are our best friends by her encouragement of Sydney's ridiculous pretensions, when she should have considered him but a foolish boy beneath her notice, remembering who had honored her with his preference, especially as Sydney had been all but engaged to Clara Monteith before she appeared on the scene. I wash my hands of such a girl."

And this terrible verdict being sent home with her, Ada's life was made unbearable by her father's unappeasable displeasure, and her mother's constant moaning over her ruined prospects.

Not one word or sign from Philip, he evidently intended the separation to be final. Not a sign, that they even remembered her existence from the crowd of friends and lovers who had flattered and petted her when she was the belle of London society. Poor Ada's life was dreary indeed!

But one lovely spring day a year after Ada was sitting busily sewing, and thinking of that happy past which could never return, when the slatternly housemaid ushered in Sydney Roland.

Ada sprang to her feet, a flush of pain and shame crimsoning her face, as her boy-lover came forward, and looking with great commiseration at her tearful eyes said:

"Ada, I consider that you treated me shamefully, and as it was all my fault I come to ask you to marry me. I shall be twenty-one next year, and my own master. I am not so rich as that old bear, but I can keep you very comfortably, and I'll do my best to make you happy."

"You are very good, Sydney," faltered Ada, "and I am very grateful to you, but I cannot marry you, and please don't call Philip an old bear!"

"Why, Ada, what now? You don't mean to tell me you care for him after his shabby treatment of you? Do you think I'd have gone and left?"

Here Sydney hesitated and stammered, as he saw Ada's eyes fixed keenly on him, but he went on hastily—"you or any girl, because she danced with another fellow, and liked a bit of fun? I should think not indeed."

"You would not have given up Clara, dear Sydney, I quite believe, and oh, if you want to do something for me, to make me a little less miserable, go and marry her now, do not think of me. You love her, in spite of your noble resolve to marry me, because you blamed yourself for my folly, and I know she still loves you. Oh, go to her, and make her happy, and give me the comfort of knowing that I have not sinned over you two, and spoil your lives as well as my own."

"You're a right down brick, Ada," responded Sydney, flushing to the roots of his hair. "I believe I am rather fond of Clara still, and since you do care for the old—I beg your pardon—for Mr. Irvine, why I'll just go back and tell Clara I'm sorry, and we shall be all right again."

He departed and in a few weeks Ada, whose real nature was pure and unselfish, was rejoiced to hear that their wedding day was fixed, and their respective families as well as themselves, reunited.

Four years had passed—years of added misfortune to the Shirley family. Philip Irvine had just returned, and sitting at his club took up the evening paper and scanned it carefully. Suddenly he dropped it with a violent start. Taking it up again, trembling with excitement, he read:

"Ada Shirley, who is accused of being concerned in a jewel robbery, with others not in custody, from the house of Mr. Grimstone, the well-known picture-dealer, was remanded till to-morrow for further evidence."

"How foolish I am! After all these years of travel and change I can not see her name without a pang. Of course, it is only an accidental coincidence—she is doubtless Mrs. Sydney Roland, and the mother of his children. I certainly thought I was cured, but it takes a long time."

Next day, the prison cell door slowly opened, and Philip Irvine stood face to face with Ada Shirley—the Ada the only woman whom he had ever loved, changed indeed, but the same to him in poverty and disgrace as when she had been the flattered belle of a London ball-room.

With a bitter cry, she shrank away from him, and covered her face.

"Darling," he murmured, bending over her and speaking with even more than his old tenderness. "I know not what has brought you here, or by what terrible series of misfortunes your life is so changed, but I see you are lonely and helpless, and I am here to be your friend. Tell me all, and let me help you."

Ada's story, sad but not uncommon, was soon told. Her father had died suddenly in his study one day; her mother, and the younger children, were with some relatives; she with two brothers had tried to get a living in London. One of them drew and painted, and she had been in the habit of taking the sketches to a dealer who disposed of them for her. Two or three weeks before this man had dared to insult her with an offer of his love, his wife being alive, though separated from him on account of his violence and jealousy, and his proposal being repulsed with scorn, he had falsely accused her of being implicated in the jewel robbery.

Nothing that love could do was left undone, and Ada was soon released from her perilous position, and declared perfectly innocent. Philip hesitated to seek her love fearing that she had really loved Roland, and not himself, until he happened to meet that young gentleman, and heard how Ada had refused him and sent him back to Clara.

So after all, Ada became Philip's loved and happy wife, and the song she had once dreaded to hear, because it reminded her of happy days in the past, she had never hoped to enjoy again, she now sings herself, and the fire-light in her eyes sends a thrill of happiness to her husband's heart as he hears her declare, "I love you now—I love you now!"

A COURT FESTIVAL.

The Manner in Which Hospitality is Observed in Vienna.

The court festivities, which were lately held in honor of the Archduchess Louise and the Son of prince, who may be her presumptive heir to the throne of Saxony, have shown all the Viennese once again how admirable are the arrangements for court pageants in the Austrian capital.

One day there is a gala performance at the opera, and the next there is a concert at court. In both these performances everything has been arranged just as it should be. Lord Brougham, attending a chapter of the Order of St. Patrick in Dublin, and seeing a herald bunting through his work, once wrote that the foolish man did not know his own foolish business. This never could be said in Vienna.

Punctually to the time appointed in any court ceremony, whatever it may be, the emperor appears cool and genial, and the audience rise at once like one man to receive him. Nor is there any crowding. Prince Hohenlohe, the grand master of the imperial household, and Prince Hün-yadt, the grand master of the ceremonies arrange between them, as to the number of seats to be disposed of, and not a seat more than the proper number is given away. All the ladies and gentlemen invited are comfortably seated, and there is no crushing of dresses or pushing into places.

Everything is so ordered that the opera gala performance or as the court concerts all the guests are quietly installed at least a quarter of an hour before the court arrives, and when the emperor comes in the general rising of ladies and gentlemen is really a striking sight.

The men wear their uniforms of their national costume, or they appear in dress clothes with their orders, and the ladies blaze with all the diamonds which they possess. The emperor comes forward composedly takes a general survey of the audience, and then takes his seat. He does not applaud himself, but by a calm bound he notifies when applause may be given by the audience.

It may be added that all persons attending the opera or court concert, or gala occasions are treated as the emperor's guests. Between the acts footmen in the richest state liveries circulate among them, bearing silver trays, loaded with ices, confectionery, lemonade and claret. There is in fact no court in Europe where hospitality is accomplished in such splendid style and in such perfect order as that of Vienna.

PAST BELIEF.

To the Russian Peasants Their Country Is All the World.

In Mr. Herbert Barry's account of things as he saw them in Russia during his residence there, he remarks upon the simplicity of the peasant character as it appears in "quiet self-sufficient little villages whose inhabitants never wander far from the place of their birth, and scarcely know the name of the nearest town."

One such village he used to visit on occasional shooting expeditions after bear and elk, which were to be found in the neighboring forests.

I always stayed at the house of one Starosta, a very old man, whose wife was still active and lively at seventy years of age. She used to interest herself vastly in the conversation that passed between me and her husband.

This man, a forester, was a remarkable character. By intelligent industry and perseverance, he had raised himself from a common serf to the management of woods greater in extent than many a German principality.

He had given his son a liberal education, and was himself a man of inquiring disposition, anxious to get information on all sorts of subjects. Our long discussions of things in general, and the world's recent history in particular, were highly amusing, if a little perplexing, to the old lady who sat and listened to them.

One morning I was sitting before the stove, talking with the forester about the British constitution, and happened to mention our gracious queen. At that moment the old lady broke into the conversation.

"You will excuse me," she said, "that I do not speak English. I hear you always talking about your Queen Victoria, now, I want to know what does she do for our emperor, because of course she lives at Petersburg?"

"At Petersburg," I said. "No, she lives in her own country—my country—England."

"What part of Russia is England?" asked the old lady.

"England is not in Russia at all. It is another country by itself."

But I could not convince her of that. She had never heard of any other country that was not Russia, and nothing would make her believe in its existence. She could not get over it for a long time, and continually repeated to her husband—

"Only fancy, his trying to tell me there is another country beside Russia!"

Those Who Come and Those Who Go.

Azel Blair of Detroit was in town this week.

Ira Lyon is just out from a two weeks sickness.

Geo. Barley and wife visited Milford relatives Sunday and Monday.

Miss Ethelwyn Dubuar is spending the week with Ypsilanti friends.

Miss Nina Chamberlin of Farmington is the guest of Miss Jessie Ely this week.

Mrs. E. Whitney of Fenton, is a guest of Mrs. C. A. Evatt for a few weeks.

Miss Sylvia Wiley is home from Detroit, where she will spend a few weeks with her parents.

Wm. Chadwick left for Lansing last week where he has a position as watch man at the reform school.

Mr. and Mrs. Chambers and daughter of Ypsilanti were guests of Chas. Fikins and wife over Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Dean of Auburn N. Y. were guests of the latter's uncle, Mr. H. M. White, over Sunday.

Chas. Booth is in attendance at the Grand Lodge F. & A. M. at Saginaw this week. Frank N. Clark is also there.

Miss Jessie Lowden is back to work in the RECORD office again after an absence of several weeks on account of sickness.

While trying to round some corners of a board, Willie Simmons made a sad mistake and rounded off the corner of his hand.

Chas. S. Brooks of Lansing and Mrs. Chas. H. McFarlin of St. Johns are spending a few days with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Brooks.

Mrs. Paize Hill of Grand Blanc, who has been on an extended visit through Vermont, New Hampshire and Massachusetts spent a few days of last week with Northville friends.

Our dealers are paying nine cents or more for pork and claim that even at that figure not enough can be obtained to supply the local trade.

Rev. J. M. Felding of St. Louis, Mo., temporarily of Detroit, will preach a sample sermon as it were, at the Presbyterian church Sunday morning and evening.

The sleigh-ride social at E. R. Reed's last evening was a decided success. Something like an hundred guests were present and they had a very enjoyable time.

In E. L. Riggs' ad last week the sale of boys short pants should have read Jan. 21 instead of February. Mr. Riggs will make the same sale for this week Saturday on account of the error in dates.

Word was received last week from Fred Reed who is with his father at Denver, Col., that he had suffered another hemorrhage. Fred had been gaining quite rapidly up to this time. It is to be hoped he will recover from his last attack.

There will be trotting and pacing races on the Dunlap street track in this village Saturday afternoon. The prizes are: 1st, $7 horse blanket; 2d, $5 cash; 3d, $3 whip. The track has been nicely leveled down and there will be large crowds to witness the fine sport.

It is rumored that a Keeley club will be started at Monroe among the Keeley graduates.—Detroit Tribune.

Inasmuch as the Mooroo graduates are, with but one exception, from the Yarnall Gold Cure, this village, we hardly see what Keeley has to do with it. There has been a Yarnall club organized here for several months and the Tribune has evidently just "caught on."

There is now enroute a whole car load of screen door wire for the J. A. Dubuar Mfg Co. of this place. This is probably the largest single shipment ever made by any wire screen factory in the country. The cost reaches nearly $2,700. It is quite evident that the manufacture of screen doors by the Dubuar company is reaching to small magnitude and it has already become one of our important industries.

The Edwin Ferry company carry their own special scenery, so that Northville people will witness just as good a play tonight for 25 and 50 cents as they would pay from one to two dollars for at Detroit. This company play, as before stated, only the cities. They play at the Detroit opera house later in the season. The prices tonight to everyone are, gallery 25 cents; down stairs everything 50 cents, except the three back rows of chairs which are 75 cents. Get your seats reserved at Hu ston's drug store without extra charge from above prices.

Realizing that many are anxious about our hall project, we thought we would say to all those interested that we are getting along well as could be expected. Our aim was to raise $350 to make the first payment on our property. We have already raised in cash and pledges $281 with a large field yet to canvass. As far as we have visited the ladies of the village, there has been a general response and nearly all seem to be anxious to help in the work. When we realize that the society our children are to mingle with, greatly depends on what we make it, we feel that we cannot be too much in earnest to keep public sentiment in sympathy with the good and pure ideas, instead of looking on the vices with favor. Several of the men of our town have volunteered to help us in our work and have donated in a commendable manner. In behalf of our ladies we thank the brethren and earnestly hope Northville still has many more such. Should any be overlooked or neglected in the canvass for funds for this object bring or send your offering to Mrs. A. W. Reed, cor. secretary, at Reed's store. We earnestly hope that every lady in Northville will have a share in this hall, be it ever so small.

The January number of The Art Amateur shows that this highly popular magazine is not only determined to maintain its high standard, but also to surpass its former excellence, during 1893. Its large and rapidly growing subscription list is proof of the strong hold it has upon public favor, and of the appreciation of the practical character of its contents. The color plates this month will give delight, whether used as adornments for the home or as copies for the student. "Holiday Gifts" by Francis C. Jones, represents a pretty girl sitting in front of an old fashioned bureau, with a lap full of gay ribbons and worsteds. "Still Life," by Victor Dangon, is a cluster of Jacqueminot roses thrown upon two books which with the flowers are reflected on the polished table. "Melody" by Lisbeth B. Comins is a plate for china painters, shows a maiden listening to the music of a harp played by a cupid.

The directions for treating the color studies and the supplement designs for wood-carving, china painting, and embroidery are as full as usual and the correspondence columns answer questions in various lines of decorative art. 25 cents a number. Montague Marks publisher, 23 Union Square.

Travelling Man Suicides at a Fenton Hotel.
—Grand Rapids Furniture Men Ask.
—Many Deaths From Many Causes.

Chose the Morphine Route.

Frank M. Hawthorn, a travelling man for Cousin Bros., cigar manufacturers, of Detroit and Monroe, committed suicide at the Hotel Roberts at Fenton. Hawthorn had been on the road only a short time and had had poor luck. This made him downcast and to relieve the melancholy he went on a "sneeze" which lasted about a week. He was discovered in his room at the hotel by one of the employees, who had heard groans issuing therefrom. During the efforts at resuscitation the man recovered sufficiently to state in broken sentences that he had purchased 20 grains of morphine and intended to kill himself. About two grains of morphine were found in a paper in his room and it is thought Hawthorn took the excessive dose, 17 to 18 grains, two hours before the suicidal act was discovered.

Hawthorn was about 35 years of age, six feet tall, weighed about 200 pounds, had dark hair, eyes and mustache, and was unmarried.

His Sweetheart Jilted Him.

Fred Peterson, a young Swede, who conducted a grocery at Carney, Mich., died in the poor house at Alpena. Death resulted from starvation. He having lived for 10 days without food or water. Persuasion and force were used to make him take nourishment, but to no avail. Peterson was a strong, robust man when he entered the hospital, weighing over 160 pounds, but at his death was a feeble, withered being of less than 100 pounds. Three months ago he wrote to his old sweetheart in Sweden and told her to come to his home in Michigan. She did so, but on her arrival she for some unknown reason refused to wed, and this led to the suicide by starvation.

Grand Rapids Furniture Men are Mad.

The Grand Rapids Furniture Men's association held a largely attended meeting to discuss the proposed exhibit at the World's Fair. Much indignation has been felt since the announcement that Grand Rapids, the leading furniture city of the world, had been awarded but 2,500 feet for its display. The total amount of space set apart for furniture is 25,000 feet. The local manufacturers had arranged to go in jointly and fix up a display which would be a credit to the whole country, but the small space assigned them knocks the plan in the head.

Mrs. Arthur Bruer, a well known and highly respected resident of Lansing, died of blood poisoning, which resulted from the application of salve to a corn on one of her feet. The salve was purchased from a peddler some three months ago, and its use was followed by an attack of erysipelas, which resulted in blood poisoning and subsequent death. Mrs. Bruer was 52 years old.

During the progress of a school sleighride given by the old Mission school in Peninsula township, Grand Traverse county, George Swaney, one of the scholars, fired off a revolver for the fun of scaring the horses, and shot his schoolmate, Wm. Ayers, in the head, young Ayers living but a few moments. Both boys were sons of prominent farmers, and were about 15 years old.

TWENTY WERE KILLED.

A FAST TRAIN PLUNGES INTO A TRAIN OF OIL TANKS.

The Train Burns, the Tanks Explode and Twenty Persons are Burned to Death in Blazing Oil. Other News.

A wreck which, in its consequences, is one of the most appalling and disastrous that has occurred in years, occurred at Wann Junction, or Alton Junction, Ill., a few miles northeast of St. Louis, Mo. The Cleveland, Cincinnati, Columbus & St. Louis, "Southwestern Limited," passenger train, consisting of an engine and four coaches, going east ran into a switch half a mile north of Wann Junction and crashed into a train consisting of seven tank cars standing there. The result was a fire and afterward an explosion, which killed eight or ten more; while fully 50 others suffered painful burns.

At the junction there are several switches and on one of them the train of oil tanks had been run to allow the passenger train to pass. The right of way. The switch had been left open and when the fast train, running 40 miles an hour, came thundering on it crashed into the tank cars. The engineer of the passenger train saw the danger, shouted to his fireman, reversed the engine, pulled on the air brakes and both jumped—a second too late, for the engine was killed and the fireman seriously injured. The crash was somewhat diminished by the engineer's thoughtfulness and bravery and not a passenger was seriously injured.

The first four tanks of oil were burst by the collision and the train was soon ablaze. Large crowds surrounded the wreck to watch the work of the fire demon when an explosion of awful proportions shook the earth. The remaining tanks had exploded with terrific force and the scene which followed was terrible in the extreme. Pieces of their iron sides were thrown far out into the adjacent fields and showering upon the assembled crowd of sightseers a mass of flaming liquid. For just one second after the noise of the explosion there was no sound save the swish of the seething oil as it forced through the air. Then there arose a confusion of agonizing appeals for help and cries of terror to which no tongue can do justice. For several minutes the panic was indescribable. Those touched by the burning oil groped about wildly, seeking in vain for relief from their torture. Almost without exception the injured were burned about the face, and had their eyesight temporarily if not permanently destroyed.

Gradually the horror of the holocaust gave way to realization of the need for quick relief for the wounded and willing hands tenderly carried the dead and injured to Wann, where they were placed in the depot and taken to Alton. When a list of the dead and wounded was taken 17 souls had left their clay and 12 more were hovering between life and death while at least 50 were seriously burned.

GREAT, GOOD MAN DEAD.

BISHOP PHILLIPS BROOKS, OF BOSTON, PASSES AWAY.

After Only a Short and Slight Illness the Noted Divine Succumbs to the Grim Reaper. Other News.

Bishop Phillips Brooks died at his residence at Boston, of heart failure induced by a fit of coughing. The demise was entirely unexpected, the bishop having been only slightly ill with pneumonia and only for a few days previous.

Phillips Brooks was born in Boston Dec. 13, 1835, and graduated from Harvard 20 years later. His theological education was secured at the seminary at Alexandria, Va., and in 1859 he was ordained, his first charge being the Church of the Advent, in Philadelphia. In 1862 he took the charge of the Holy Trinity in the same city and in 1869 went to Trinity church in Boston. Mr. Brooks was noted for his low church views, his commanding physical presence, his power for good especially among young men, and for the extraordinarily rapid delivery of his speech when preaching. He delivered many calls, including a professorship at Harvard and the office of assistant bishop of Pennsylvania, and until his appointment as the bishop of Massachusetts he preferred to remain with his Boston parish.

Mr. Brooks was regarded as one of the most brilliant orators of the Protestant Episcopal church, and also as a writer of many religious works. He published "Lectures on Preaching," "Sermons," "The Influence of Jesus," and "Baptism and Communion." As a dignitary of the Episcopal church Phillips Brooks was perhaps more widely celebrated than any other not only at home but in England, where he had experienced, courtesies and received distinctions never before vouchsafed an American clergyman who had not yet reached the rocket and lawn.

JUSTICE LAMAR DEAD.

The Supreme Bench of the United States Loses one of Its Best Judges. Associate Justice I. Q. C. Lamar died very suddenly at Macon, Ga. Although Justice Lamar had been ailing for some time his health seemed to be gaining and his death was sudden in the extreme. Heart failure is assigned as the cause of his demise.

Lucius Quintus Cincinnatus Lamar was born in Putnam county, Georgia, Sept. 1, 1825, and after his father's death was taken to Oxford, Miss., where he received a part of his education. He graduated at Emory college, Georgia, in 1847, studied law in Macon and was admitted to the bar in 1847. In 1849 he returned to Oxford, Miss., and for a year held a professorship in the University of Mississippi. He resigned and resumed the practice of law in Covington, Ga. He was elected to the legislature in 1855 and in 1857 again returned to Mississippi, and was elected to Congress as a Democrat. He served from 1857 to 1860, when he resigned to take a seat in the secession convention of his native state. He cast his fortunes with the "lost cause," and left the army with the rank of colonel after having shared in many engagements. He was again appointed a professor in the University of Mississippi and again took a seat in the House of Representatives; was elected to the Senate in March, 1877. On March 5, 1885, President Cleveland appointed Mr. Lamar secretary of the interior and after wards elevated him to a seat on the supreme bench.

SAVED BY A MIRACLE.

A Train Loaded with Passengers Falls from a 35-foot Bridge—One Man Killed. The north bound Chicago express on the Lake Erie & Western railroad was badly wrecked about one mile south of Peru, Ind. Among the 15 passengers on board the train not one escaped injury. The entire train, consisting of engine, smoking, express and chair cars, was precipitated on to the ice in the Wabash river, 35 feet below. A broken rail about 100 feet from the river bank threw the train from the track, and it continued on the ties until reaching the bridge, when the first two tiers gave way, and the entire train went down. The engine stood upright, and the cars covered it with their wreckage.

The fireman jumped, Engineer Griffin was pinned in the cab and taken out severely scalded. The wreck took fire and was burned completely. The cars were smashed to splinters. Brakeman Richard Neff was badly hurt, but managed to extricate himself from the wreck. He lighted a lantern and ran back and flagged a freight which was following. It was stopped only about 100 feet from the wreck and another smashup was averted.

It is miraculous no more were killed as the cars were hurled over stones and not a splinter of wood was saved from the fire.

Over $8,000,000. We notice, according to the published statement, that during the past year the deposits of the People's Savings Bank, of Detroit, have increased over $1,000,000, and the total footings at the close of business on January 12 were $8,022,437 14. This enormous sum of money is very largely made up of the small deposits of its savings customers, for whom the bank has been a safe and reliable depository for over 20 years. Its popularity seems to be increasing steadily, and the management is in the hands of experienced and reliable men, who are conducting its affairs in admirable shape.

DEMPSEY IS GUILTY.

The First Homestead Poisoning Case Results in a Conviction.

Pittsburg special: Hugh F. Dempsey, district-master workman of the Knights of Labor, was found guilty of administering poison with intent to commit murder. To this end has come the sensational trial for the alleged poisoning of non-union laborers in the Homestead mills at the time of the great lockout, which resulted, it is claimed, in scores of deaths and hundreds of cases of sickness. The very brought in a verdict of guilty on the first count—charging the defendant with administering poison to W. R. Griffith.

When Dempsey heard the verdict the color left his face and beads of perspiration stood out upon his forehead. With bowed head he left the courtroom in company with Attorney Porter. Once outside the doors Dempsey was surrounded by a crowd of sympathizers, prominent among whom were several members of the old advisory committee of the locked-out Homesteaders.

The extreme penalty of the crime of which Dempsey has been convicted is a fine of $500 and 10 years' imprisonment.

SLEIGH PARTY'S SAD END.

Eight People Instantly and Eight or Ten Fatally Injured by a Train.

A dreadful accident occurred at a crossing near Lonsdale, R. I., on the Providence & Worcester railroad. A sleighing party from Pawtucket returning from a dance and supper at Woodstock, was struck by a locomotive of a freight train. Eight persons were instantly killed and 16 injured. Of the injured it is feared that eight or ten will die.

It was 1:30 in the morning when the catastrophe occurred. When the sleigh arrived on the railroad crossing, the "freight" train from Worcester was within 15 feet. It struck the sleigh amidships and smashed it into fragments, sending the people flying in all directions and plowing through the wreckage and victims.

Shall Canada Join the United States?

The session of the Dominion parliament just opened at Ottawa, Ont., promises to be the most important in the history of Canada. One of the chief questions at issue is whether the political unionists to sound the feeling of the people's representatives on the question of annexation to the United States, and while it is hardly probable that a direct vote will be taken on the subject of Canada's future, the ground will be well surveyed as to what result might be expected when the question becomes a direct issue. A circular has been issued by the premier, Sir John Thompson, calling upon his supporters to rally and make, so far as in their power, the session short, sharp and decisive.

WEEKLY TRADE REVIEW.

New York, Jan. 23.—R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says: Severe weather appears to account in part for a somewhat general shrinkage in business. In many branches checking purchases and orders is comparatively easy and in supply adequate for legitimate demands. Wheat is weaker with large receipts and small exports, and it is still noteworthy that the western deliveries are inconsistent with reports of the last crop. Corn is 1c and oats 1/2c higher. Cotton fell 1/2c, but recovered a shade with large sales. Anti-option reports affecting the trade more than any change in actual supplies. Pork products are somewhat stronger; coffee advances with large sales. Money has fallen 1/2 per cent on call with large receipts from the interior. While European necessities and foreign sales of stocks have advanced, the market is not less than $4,000,000 being reported as ordered for shipment this week, and while bankers feel that such outflows may cause trouble later, they prefer to present disturbance. Indeed the confidence regarding the future of business is in all parts of the country relatively strong and general, especially in view of the interest taken in pending measures in Congress. The business failures occurring throughout the country during the past few days number 332 for the corresponding week of last year the figures were 235.

Women's Suffrage Association.

The 25th annual convention of the National American Women's Suffrage association was held at Washington. The meeting was called to order by Miss Anthony. Mrs. Shaw, the vice-president, spoke of her work in organizing local associations. Mrs. Avery, secretary, stated in her report that there now are 35 state auxiliary organizations. The National association was shown to have an active membership of 13,150. The report of Mrs. Upton, the treasurer, showed the association to be in a satisfactory financial condition.

CHAPTER XVI

"Mine Was the Hand That Dealt the Blow."

The moment I set eyes on her I felt sure that she could be no other than Miss Penleath. That she is very handsome I at once admit for I trust I am superior to that odious weakness which cannot, or will not, acknowledge the existence of good looks in other women.

Of the interview that followed, of the astounding revelation of which I was an "unseen auditor"—every word of which is burned into my memory—it needs not that I should write here in detail.

Vivian and Miss Penleath were married secretly in Scotland three years ago, separating immediately after the ceremony. He strove to impress her with the conviction that there were grave doubts as to the validity of their marriage and that, in point of fact, according to his belief, it was no marriage at all.

Miss Penleath, who to all appearance was as cold as a snow woman, having listened attentively to what he had to say, replied that before she could agree to so regard their marriage she must bring her written legal opinion to that effect—and that she, on her part, would endeavor to obtain an opinion to correspond. Should their efforts prove successful, then, of course, what had passed between them at Edinburgh would resolve itself into nothing more serious than an escapade of two foolish young people; but, on the other hand, should their marriage prove to be a legal and binding one, she should at once proceed to lay a criminal information against him. With that she left him.

When Miss Penleath entered the room I hated her when she left I admired her.

He drew a deep breath as she left the room. "Mou Dieu! what a transformation!" he said aloud. "And all this was mine—my own! And I have thrown it away for what? For forty thousand pounds which is tied up by my wife and who I hate as I did not think it was in me to hate anyone."

At these words a dumb cry broke from my heart, my limbs trembled under me, a great light shined upon my eyes and, for the first time, I saw the truth. I should have sunk to the ground. It was one of those supreme moments of which no life can hold many. When, after a little space, I came back to a sense of time and place, there was a great void at my heart. (Of my life for Vivian Darvill which had so filled my existence, nothing was left but a handful of ashes.)

When no tiny eyes look in Vivian he was in the act of crossing to a writing table on the far side of the room. Here he seated himself and made as though he were about to write. Then a thought seemed to strike him, and he lunged down his pen and pushed the paper aside. As he stood up something on the table, which had evidently been left there by some one else, caught his eye—two articles, a letter and what looked like a miniature case. He picked them up, opened the case, stared at its contents for a few moments, and then, with a gasp, replaced it on the table. Next he took the letter from its envelope, which had already been opened, and began to read it. But scarcely had he done so before I had a consciousness of the conservatory door being opened again, and of some one coming in. Next instant I had drawn back out of sight behind the clump of tropical plants. The person, a man, came forward quickly and without hesitation, as though he were familiar with the place. His footsteps making a soft pitter-patter on the asphalt, but not loud enough to be heard by any one in the room, grasping the portiere with one hand, he stood as if turned to stone his eyes fixed on Vivian. He was a young man, handsome, and of a dark complexion. There was something about him, I know not what, which put me in mind of Miss Penleath. It may be that he was her brother.

A moment later, and he sprang forward into the room, snatched the letter from Vivian's hand and struck him sharply on the face. "Cur and sneak!" he cried, "now I know you for what you are."

What followed was the work of half a minute.

At sight of the stranger a ghastly pallor overspread Vivian's face. He reeled back when struck, but only for a moment. The next he had felled the stranger to the ground by a blow from his clenched fist. The latter was on his feet in a second, and at once the two closed in a fierce struggle. Then the lamp was overturned, leaving the room lighted by a couple of wax candles only, and the next thing I made out was Vivian stretched on his back on the floor, and the stranger standing over him. Then the latter, seizing the miniature case, thrust it into his breast-pocket, and without another look at Vivian dashed back through the portiere, passing within a couple of yards of where I was standing, and made a hurried exit by the way he had come.

Vivian rose slowly to his feet with the air of a man stunned and dazed. Apparently, in falling he had struck his head against the table. The first thing he did was with a shaking hand, to pour out a quantity of neat spirit and drink it off. Impelled by some influence which I was powerless to resist, and having no conscious motive of so doing, I went slowly forward into the room.

"Vivian Darvill!" I said. "I have been a witness of your interview with Miss Penleath—with the woman who is your rightful wife. All is known to me from this hour you and I are strangers to each other."

He stared at me, drawing his breath slowly, and as if with an effort. A cold, cruel light shone in his eyes and when he spoke it was with a concentrated, venomous bitterness.

"So," he said, "you have chosen to play the spy. It is well done—very well done. I hope you are gratified by what you have heard. It is not my fault if you are not. Her I love, and shall love always. You I hate, and have hated from the first. You held over me the threat of disgrace and ruin—you forced me to go through a form of marriage, with you which I knew at the time to be a farce. Now you have your reward."

Step by step I had drawn nearer him while he was speaking; there within a yard of my hand gleamed a dagger. Hardly had the last words left his lips, before my fingers had locked themselves over its handle. One swift straight blow, and the dead was done. He lunged up his arms, his breath came in two great gasps followed by a choked, gurgling cry, his body swung half-round, and then he fell prone on his face—dead.

I flung the dagger from me, drew down my veil, and walked quietly away. I have nothing to regret, such men as Vivian Darvill have no right to live.

CHAPTER XVII

Hunted.

April 10 noon—Colonel Berridge and Miss Penleath have been and gone. The Colonel's card was brought me while I was making a pretence of breakfasting. He had come to break to me the news of my husband's death (what a mockery it was had he but known) and had brought his piece with him, probably under the supposition that I might stand in need of a woman's offices after the tidings had been told me. If such were the case, he was soon to be disabused.

Still, my heart beat a little faster than usual, and I thought it best to steady my nerves by taking a few of my "drops" before going to an interview at which both my words and looks would have to be carefully guarded.

I could see that Miss Penleath was trying to sum me up, in her mind, but I flatter myself she went away as ignorant as she came. It was not in me to let her go without one stab at her. I told her that I felt sure that in coming to see me at such a time, she had been actuated by no feeling of vulgar curiosity. Her sudden flush and the spark which shot from her eyes told me that my arrow had not failed of its mark. Ah, what a relief it was when I saw the last of her and the Colonel!

April 20—Yesterday afternoon I wrote to Vivian a brother, a Lincolnshire rector. (By the way, I am not sure that I know what a rector is except that it is some one in connection with the English church.) Early this morning I received a telegram from him, stating that he would be with me in the course of the day.

And now I have a strange thing to record. Mykes has kept me supplied with newspapers as they have come out. (Who so interested in them as I?) Yesterday what is called in England the inquest was held on Vivian's body, when astounding to relate a verdict of wilful murder was brought in against a young man of the name of Roden Bosworth.

This Roden Bosworth seems to have been a sort of protégé of the Colonel. He was an artist, and lodged in an old tower close to the house. In his rooms were found, a blood-stained coat, and, stranger of all, the very weapon with which the deed was done: while the young man himself has disappeared and goes no one knows where.

April 24—The funeral took place yesterday. It is not the custom in England for females to attend such functions, and I was glad to be spared the necessity of doing so. The rector's wife, a weak-minded, spiritless creature, was bathed in tears nearly the whole day. For my part I found not a single tear to shed. I believe they look upon me here as little better than a heathen. I shall remain a few days longer, after which I shall bid good-by to England forever.

May 2—I have changed my mind about leaving England.

I have found a very pretty cottage orney which I have taken for a term of six months. The good, well-meaning people at the rectory (in fact they are far too good for poor me) were very kind in their way, but it was a way that to me would soon have become wholly intolerable.

The Mystery Foretold.

Not half a lifetime ago a wealthy New Yorker who died recently, missed from his picture gallery two small but very valuable canvases. He suspected everybody in the house. It was said at the time that he accused one of his sons, who was a little wild of having stolen the pictures in order to raise on them money which his father had refused him for his extravagance. However, the facts remained a mystery for some years. Then an express man delivered a package at the banker's door. In it were the missing pictures, intact as they had been taken from their frames. There was no mark or sign upon them or the package to denote the source from whence their restoration proceeded. The owner was as curious now as he had been furious before. He set a detective on the matter. The pictures were traced backward, through the express office to the widow of one of the owner's most intimate and trusted friends. This man, himself a millionaire, crazed by cupidity, for he was a collector of pictures himself, had stolen them one night after he had dined with their owner.

ALL IN A WATCH.

Some of the Marvels of a Time-Piece's Mechanism.

Open your watch and look at the little wheels, springs and screws which an indispensable part of the whole wonderful machine. Notice the busy little balance wheel as it flies to and fro unceasingly, day and night, year in and year out.

This wonderful little machine is the result of hundreds of years of study and experiment. The watch carried by the average man, is composed of ninety-eight pieces, and its manufacture embraces more than 2,000 distinct and separate operations.

Some of the smallest screws are so minute that the unaided eyes cannot distinguish them from steel filings or specks of dirt. Under a powerful magnifying glass a perfect screw is revealed. The slit in the head is two one-thousandths of an inch wide. It takes 300,000 of these screws to weigh a pound, and a pound is worth $1.05.

The hair spring is a strip of the finest steel, about nine and one-half inches long, one hundredth of an inch wide, and twenty-seven ten thousandths of an inch thick. It is coiled up in spiral form and finely tempered. The process of tempering these springs was long held as a secret by the few fortunate ones possessing it and even now is not generally known.

Their manufacture requires great skill. The finished spring will be a 20,000th of an inch, but no measuring instrument has as yet been devised capable of fine enough gauging to determine as beforehand by the size of the spring what the strength of the finished spring will be.

A 0.00001 part of an inch difference in the thickness of the strip makes a difference in the running of a watch of about six minutes per hour, says the Jeweler's Review.

The value of these springs when finished and placed in watches is enormous in proportion to the material from which they are made. A comparison will give a good idea, says the New York Journal.

A ton of steel made up into hair springs when in watches is worth more than twelve and a half times the value of the same weight in pure gold. Hair spring wire weighs one-twentieth of a grain to the inch. One mile of wire weighs less than half a pound.

The balance gives five vibrations every second, 3,000 every minute, 18,000 every day and 157,680 every year. At each vibration it rotates about one and a quarter times, which makes 1,944,000 revolutions every year.

In order that we may better understand the stupendous amount of labor performed by these tiny works let us make a few comparisons. Take for instance, a locomotive with six-foot driving wheels.

Let its wheels run until they have revolved the same number of revolutions that a watch does in one year, and they will have covered a distance equal to twenty-eight complete circuits of the earth.

And this a watch does without other attention than winding once every twenty-four hours.

Parent Says.

Fond Father—Why, Tom, what have you got there—my watch?

Tom—Yes.

Fond Father—And what is that in your other hand?

Tom—The can opener. I wanted to open the watch. I blew on it several times and I'm afraid it's broke, cause it wouldn't open.—Harper's Bazar.

Of Course.

"You see it is this way. They were all three dead in love with her, and all so eligible that to settle the matter she agreed to marry the one who should guess the nearest to her age."

"And did she?"

"I don't know. I know that she married the one who guessed the lowest."—Indianapolis Journal.

Mrs. Bunting, reading from a fashion paper—There is no change in pocketbooks this season. Bunting—There hasn't been any in mine since I married you.

Here's the latest thing in thermometers," remarked the proprietor of the store. "It looks quite elaborate." "Yes. It has a spirit lamp attachment so that you can regulate it to suit yourself."

First Reporter—Charley is what I call a first-rate newspaper man. He always represents things just as they are. Second Ditto—But he isn't good for anything when it comes to representing things as they are not.

"Do you ever pray for the coming of the millennium, madam?" "Not much." "Why not?" "My husband is a professor in a college for the training of missionaries. When the millennium is here there will be no need of missionaries and my husband will have no occupation."

Indigent and Seedy Man, to severe-looking elderly lady—Please, mum, would you be kind enough to give assistance to a poor man just out of the hospital? Elderly Lady, smiling the air—Go away, you bad man. You smell so strong of rum! I can fairly taste it. "You kin mum?" "Yes, I can." "I wish I had your smell, mum."

THE CABINET.

The office of attorney general was established in 1789, but the department of justice, of which he is the executive head, dates back only to 1870. Originally the attorney general was the president's legal advisor.

The postmaster general's department was established on September 22, 1793, and the first holder of the office was Samuel Osgood of Massachusetts. Wanamaker is the first Pennsylvanian to hold that office since the establishment of the federal government.

The office of secretary of the interior was established March 3, 1819, Thomas Ewing of Ohio, being the first. Before that date the patent office was attached to the state department and the pensions and the Indians had been looked after by the war department.

The secretary of the navy is an important federal officer, but the department over which he presides was not established as a distinct branch of the government until April 30, 1793, nine years after the other important offices in this president's cabinet had been provided for. The first secretary was George Cabot.

The office of secretary of war was established on August 7, 1793. The first holder of the office was General Henry Knox of Massachusetts. During the first half century of the republic's existence New York frequently furnished the war department with its chief, but since 1815 there has been but one New York Secretary of War.

The treasury department was established on September 2, 1793. Alexander Hamilton was the first secretary of the treasury. The first Western man to hold this office was Thomas Ewing of Ohio, appointed in 1831. Since then Corwin Chase, Sherman and Foster of Ohio have served as secretary of the treasury with distinction, as did also Windom, an Ohio man appointed from another state.

The state department, with the secretary of state at its head, was established July 27, 1789, and was first called the department of foreign affairs. Its chief was known as the secretary of foreign affairs, and outranked the others. The secretary of state succeeds to the presidency in the event of the death, disability, resignation or removal of both president and vice president.

Listen to our Pant Song.

There is nothing like Kerseys for Warmth and Durability and these are two very important features to wearers of pants, and to say that I have struck it rich in Kerseys is but mildly expressing the case. Last week I inspected a big stock of clothing in Detroit that had been placed in a receiver's hands, and to my best judgement I selected the best bargain in the whole lot. Namely: A complete line of those desirable Kersey Pants. They are All-wool Half Lined, with Canvass Bottoms and every seam Warranted not to rip, being double sewed and would be sold at the regular price at $2.00 per pair, and worth it too, but as I have told you how I got them and bought them at less than the cost of manufacture, I propose to have the greatest pant sale Northville has ever seen, and the Sale price 88c per pair.

Think of it, less than the price of Common Cotton Pants. Look at the pant display in front of the Busy Big Store on Saturday and come in and see for yourself. Remnant sale still open. Don't fail to call during the remnant sale. It includes remnants in all departments. Will continue until Feb. 1st.
