WHY.
SHE
"Why doesn't he write?"
Cried a maiden fair,
As she toyed with her wealth
Of golden hair,
And gazed in the mirror
With a quietly air.
"Can he be faithful?"
Or he forgotten the night
When he vowed he loved me—
Why doesn't he write?"

THE REASON.
Two servants sat
In separate towns—
Two thieves, knavish,
Country crows,
With unkempt hair,
And unduly swart,
In fact, they looked
Like regular tramps.
And they tore up some letters
To sell the stamps.

THE MISADVENTURES OF JOHN NICHOLSON.
BY ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON.

CHAPTER IX.—CONTINUED.
"No doubt, no doubt," said Alexander; "but then, you see you are always on the spot to have the thing explained to you. Last night, for instance—"

"You could have wakened me last night," interrupted his father.
"Was it not some similar affair that first got John into a mess?" asked the son, skillfully evading the point.

But the father was not less adroit. "And pray, sir, how did you come and go out of the house?" he asked. "I forgot to lock the door, it seems," replied Alexander.

"I have had cause to complain of that too often," said Mr. Nicholson. "But still I do not understand. Did you keep the servants up?"

"I propose to go into all that at length after breakfast," returned Alexander. "There is the half hour gone. We must not keep Miss Mackenzie waiting."

And greatly daring he opened the door.
Even Alexander, who it must have been perceived, was on terms of comparative freedom with his parent, even Alexander had never before dared to cut short an interview in this high-handed fashion. But the truth is, the very mass of his son's delinquencies daunted the old gentleman. He was like the man with the cart of apples—this was beyond him!

That Alexander should have spoiled his table, taken his money, stayed out all night, and then coolly acknowledged all, was something undreamed of in the Nicholsonian philosophy and transcended comment. The return of the change, which the old gentleman still carried in his hand, had been a feature of imposing impudence; it had dealt him a staggering blow. Then there was the reference to John's original flight—a subject which he always kept resolutely curtained in his own mind, for he was a man who loved to have made no mistakes, and when he feared he might have made one, kept the papers sealed.

In view of all these surprises and reminders, and of his son's composed and masterful demeanor there began to creep on Mr. Nicholson a sickly misgiving. He seemed beyond his depth; if he did or said anything he might come to regret it. The young man, besides, as he had pointed out himself, was playing a generous part. And if wrong had been done—and done to one who was after and in spite of all a Nicholson—it should certainly be righted.

All things considered, monstrous as it was to be cut short in his inquiries, the old gentleman submitted, pocketed the change and followed his son into the dining room. During these few steps he once more mentally revolted, and once more, and this time finally laid down his arms; a still, small voice in his bosom having informed him authentically of a piece of news: that he was afraid of Alexander. The strange thing was that he was pleased to be afraid of him. He was proud of his son; he might be proud of him; the boy had a character and grit, and knew what he was doing.

These were his reflections as he turned the corner of the dining room door. Miss Mackenzie was in the place of honor, conjuring with a tea pot and a cozy, and behold! there was another person present, a large, portly, whiskered man of a very comfortable and respectable air, who now rose from his seat and came forward, holding out his hand.

"Good morning, father," said he.
Of the contention of feeling that ran high in Mr. Nicholson's starched bosom, no outward sign was visible; nor did he delay long to make a choice of conduct. Yet in that interval he had reviewed a great field of possibilities both past and future; whether it was possible he had not been perfectly wise in his treatment of John; whether it was possible that John was innocent; whether, if he turned John out a second time, as his outraged authority suggested, it was possible to avoid scandal; and whether, if he went to that extremity, it was possible that Alexander might rebel.

"Hum!" said Mr. Nicholson, and put his hand, limp and dead, into John's.
And then, in an embarrassed silence, all took their places; and even the paper—from which it was the old gentleman's habit to suck mortification daily, as he marked the decline of our institutions—even the paper lay furled by his side.
But presently Flora came to the rescue. She slid into the silence with a technicality, asking if John still took his old inordinate amount of sugar. Thence it was but a step to the burning question of the day; and in tones a little shaken, she commented on the interval since she had last made tea for the prodigal, and congratulated him on his return. And then addressing Mr. Nicholson, she congratulated him also in a manner that defied his ill-humor; and from that launched into the tale of John's misadventures, not without some suitable expressions.

Gradually Alexander joined; between them, whether he would or no, they forced a word or two from John; and these fell so tremulously, and spoke so eloquently of a mind oppressed with dread, that Mr. Nicholson relented. At length even he contributed a question; and before the meal was at an end all four were talking even freely.

Prayers followed, with the servants gazing at this new-comer, whom no one had admitted; and after prayers there came that moment on the clock which was the signal for Mr. Nicholson's departure.

"John," said he, "of course you will stay here. Be very careful not to excite Maria; if Miss Mackenzie thinks it desirable that you should see her, Alexander, I wish to speak to you alone." And then, when they were both in the back room, "You need not come to the office to-day," said he; "you can stay and amuse your brother, and I think it would be respectful to call on Uncle Greig. And by the bye" (this spoken with a certain dare we say?—bashfulness), "I agree to concede the principle of an allowance; and I will consult with Doctor Durie, who is quite a man of the world and has sons of his own, as to the amount. And my fine fellow, you may consider yourself in luck!" he added, with a smile.

"Thank you," said Alexander.
Before noon a detective had escorted to John his money, and brought news, sad enough in truth, but perhaps the least sad possible. Alan had been found in his own house in Regent's Terrace, under care of the terrified butler. He was quite mad, and instead of going to prison, had gone to Morningside Asylum. The murdered man, it appeared, was an evicted tenant who had for nearly a year pursued his late landlord with threats and insults; and beyond this, the cause and the details of the tragedy were lost.

When Mr. Nicholson returned from dinner they were able to put a dispatch into his hands: "John V. Nicholson, Randolph Crescent, Edinburgh—Kirkman has disappeared; police looking for him. All understood. Keep mind quite easy. Austin." Having had this explained to him, the old gentleman took down the cellar key and departed for two bottles of 1820 port. Uncle Greig dined there that day, and Cousin Robina, and by an odd chance, Mr. Macawen; and the presence of these strangers relieved what might have been otherwise a strained relation. Ere they departed the family was welded once more into a fair semblance of unity.

In the end of April John led Flora to the altar, if after that may be called which was indeed the drawing-room mantel-piece in Mr. Nicholson's house, with the Rev. Dr. Durie posted on the hearth-rug in the guise of Hymen's priest.

The last I saw of them, on a recent visit to the North, was at a dinner party in the house of my old friend, Gellatly Macbride; and after we had, in classic phrase, "rejoined the ladies," I had an opportunity to overhear Flora conversing with another married woman on the much canvassed matter of a husband's tobacco.

"Oh, yes!" said she; "I only allow Mr. Nicholson four cigars a day. Three he smokes at fixed times—after a meal, you know, my dear; and the fourth he can take when he likes with any friend."

"Bravo!" thought I to myself; "this is the wife for my friend John!"

THE END.

Life in the Dead Sea.
It has come to be a scientific axiom that the waters of the Dead Sea are absolutely destitute of any living vegetable or animal organism. A French investigator, M. Lortet, has now found that even this supposed great truth is wrong. He finds innumerable species of micro-organisms, and they are found to be of a very malevolent character. Animals inoculated die in a few days from blood-poisoning brought on through the agency of these minute bodies. The river Jordan, which is so popular with pilgrims for bathing, is said to be full of those micro-organisms to such an extent as to be absolutely unfit for bathing, and for drinking water almost perilous.—Methan's Monthly.

A Valid Argument.
"I approve, sir, of physical education in our schools, for I know that there is nothing better for boys and men than good, healthy exercise."
"There may be, and yet our fathers never spent any time at gymnastic exercises."
"I know it. And what's the consequence? Aren't they all dead to-day?"

Durability of Teak.
The great durability of teak, the most valuable of East India timbers, is one in a large measure to the presence of an essential oil in the wood, which is in only a slight degree volatile while in its original condition in the pores, though somewhat more so after being extracted.

An Impossible Event.
"They say Cholly has softening of the brain."
"I cannot conceive it possible."
"Why not?"
"Because his brain can not become any softer than it has always been."

The Argument Used

BY the makers of the second-class baking powders to induce the dealer to push them off on Royal consumers is that they cost less than Royal and afford the dealer much more profit.

But you, madam, are charged the same price for them as for the absolutely pure Royal, which is perfectly combined from the most highly refined and expensive materials. The lower cost of the others is caused by the cheap, impure materials used in them, and the haphazard way in which they are thrown together.

Do you wish to pay the price of the Royal for an inferior baking powder, made from impure goods, of 27 per cent. less strength? If you buy the other powders, insist upon having a corresponding reduction in price.

A few New York hotels and many in smaller cities have a standing rule that a call from a guest's room shall be answered by a bell boy bearing a pitcher of ice water. A New Yorker stopping with his wife and children at a Boston hotel, and forced to signal many times because of various wants, found his mantelpiece lined with nearly a dozen pitchers of ice water.

In the extreme Eastern edge of Arizona there is a great shallow salt lake in a bowl-like depression, the sink itself being some hundreds feet deep and three miles across. The basin, all the portion of it not taken up by the lake, is dazzling white, with millions upon millions of salt crystals. In the center of the lake rises what appears to be a cone-shaped volcanic peak. Should you take the trouble to ford the lake you will find a miniature lake in the middle of the peak clear as crystal.

LOCAL GLEANINGS.

Things Said and Did in the Liveliest and Prettiest Village in Michigan.

Still is the kicker sorely vexed, The weather makes his ire. He can't determine if he next Will sip or perspire.

The U. S. flag again floats daily from the staff on the school grounds.

C. A. Sessions, the shoe merchant, has a change of address this week, to which your attention is called.

President Ambler of the water board informs us that he already has half a dozen applicants from persons desirous of taking water.

Lost—Between Dr. M. A. Patterson's and U. D. Woodman's a pair of gold-bowed spectacles. Finder will be rewarded by returning them to Dr. Patterson.

The Junior League will hold a maple syrup and warm biscuit social at C. A. Hutton's next Tuesday evening, April 18. Proceeds for an organ. Admission 10 cents.

The Pigott sisters come with high recommendations from both the clergy and press of Detroit. Their entertainment at the opera house Monday night should be well patronized.

A special business meeting of the Ladies' Auxiliary Club will be held at the institute Monday evening, April 17. A full attendance is requested, as important business is to be transacted.

The first party to take water from the Northville water works system is the Park hotel. The tap was successfully accomplished by City Plumber Elliott Tuesday and a test in the hotel showed a fifty pound pressure.

The Ladies' Auxiliary Club desire to extend a vote of thanks to Mrs. Kellogg for the use of the hall, Mrs. Springer for the use of a piano and Miss Hattie Yerkes and her cousin for the very pleasant music furnished by them at our recent social.

The Mrs. Burrows entertainment at the W. C. T. U. hall tomorrow, Friday night, will be a good one. Mrs. Burrows has traveled extensively in foreign countries as well as all over the United States, and those who have witnessed her entertainments speak very highly of them.

The third quarterly meeting services of the Methodist church will occur Sabbath, April 23d. Beginning Thursday evening, Apr. 20, a four days meeting will be held, culminating in the quarterly meeting. The pastor expects to see every able-bodied member at the sacramental service and the love-feast.

On account of the large number of pupils in the first primary room of the Northville schools, the work has been divided into two divisions. Division A comes at 9 and stays till 10:30 and division B comes at 10:30 and remains until noon. In the afternoon division A 1:15 to 2:30, B 2:30 to 4:00. For this extra work Miss Gillet will receive a raise in salary of $5 per month until the end of the present term.

Stark & Harding have sold out their meat market business in the opera house block to E. K. Starkweather and Frank L. Thompson. The new firm will be known as E. L. Thompson & Co., and will carry a full line of fresh and salt meats, butter, eggs and vegetables in season. They will be ready for business about next Wednesday, or as soon as painters and carpenters are through with their work.

Of course everyone will remember "The Spy of Gettysburg" at the opera house tonight and tomorrow night. It is by home talent, selected especially for their merit and well known reputations as amateur actors and actresses. The entertainment will be void of that objectionable feature, shooting, as there is not a shot fired upon the stage. The cause is an exceedingly worthy one and should receive liberal patronage.

Alex. Tinham has sold his property near the Ambler mill pond to Fred Penn for $750.

Mr. Belding extends a very cordial welcome to the young men of Northville to be present at the Sunday evening services.

The Epworth League took charge of the evening service Sunday and presented a neat program embracing the reports of their delegates to the Pontiac and Grand Rapids conventions.

Cabbagetown at Northville, has changed its name. It voted to be called "Northside" by a large majority. Well, the northside is the right side, especially when you face the west.—Ann Arbor Courier.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Nuland and child of Bealton were nearly overcome with escaping coal gas, while they were asleep Sunday night. Monday they were in a very critical condition but are now nearly recovered.

It is stated that the government has concluded not to allow the original manuscript of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution to be taken to Chicago, for fear of the injury or loss of those precious documents.

Do not fail to see the Pigott sisters, quartette at the opera house next Monday night. These ladies are musicians, vocal and instrumental, and readers of rare ability, and we can safely guarantee a great treat for Northville people.

If the molders at the factory see a minnow run up the mill-race they get the fever for fishing and forthwith leave their sand banks, and hie away for the shady nook by the stream. The records do not show how much is the cash outlay or how many fish they catch.

A very pleasant surprise was given to Miss Kato on the evening of the 14th in honor of her birthday, the invitations being given by her three little favorites, making it more highly appreciated by her. Some beautiful presents were given and a very enjoyable evening passed.

Windsor Record: "The concert given by the Pigott Sisters in the Music Hall Monday evening, April 3, for the benefit of the organ fund, of the Methodist church, was largely attended and netted a handsome sum. The entertainment was one of the finest ever given in Windsor."

O. F. Carpenter has sold his house and lot, corner Atwater and Yerkes streets, to a Mr. Evans of Wayne, for $1,700. Mr. Carpenter will take a trip down in New York state to see if he can find a town and place there that suits him better. We hope, however, he will conclude to remain in Northville. Lovers in the Record caused the sale.

The admission to the Mrs. Custer reading will be but 35 cents. Children 25. The building will be crowded, no doubt, but arrangements will be made to care for everyone comfortably. Those who can conveniently do so, are requested to purchase tickets in advance in order to avoid, as much as possible, a jam at the doors.

Wyandotte Herald: "The singing of the Pigott Sisters of Detroit and the violin solos and recitations by Miss Lila Pigott were received with the greatest enthusiasm by the audience at the Presbyterian church last Friday night. The young ladies are musicians of undoubted ability. They will receive an ovation if they ever visit Wyandotte again."

Rev. J. M. Belding begins a series of sermons on Joseph next Sunday night, that will doubtless be of great interest to our young people. The subject for the first sermon is "Joseph the Dreamer". The following is the order of exercises:

Singing—Hymns 100, 8, 98.
Responsive reading—Psalm XIX.
Prayer.
Duet—"O Morning Land."
Singing—Hymn 208.
Scripture.
Quartette—"Speed away." "As pants the heart."
Singing—Hymn 227.
Sermon.
Singing—Hymn 232.

Yerkes Bros., the erstwhile millers at this place, took charge of their lately purchased flour mill at Milford last Saturday. The property at South Lyon is now waiting to yield a handsome income to some miller with experience and push. Who will be the next?—So. Lyon Excelsior.

We know of no millers with more "experience and push" than Yerkes Bros., and they, after sinking several thousand dollars "waiting for the yield of that handsome income," were obliged to give up this mill in despair. "Who will be the next?" (victim) to tackle So. Lyon's white elephant. An echo answers, who?

It is officially announced that the Chicago world's fair will be in readiness for visitors May 1st. It having been stated that there would be a charge for drinking water on the grounds, the management have caused it to be announced that "an abundance of drinking water, the best supplied to any great city in the world, will be provided free to all." The admission will be 50 cents, which admits to "everything within the exposition grounds except the Esquimaux village and the reproduction of the Colorado cliff dwellers. For these as well as for the special attractions on Midway Plaisance a small fee will be charged."

Mr. and Mrs. D. Shaffer were called to Detroit last week by the death of their brother-in-law.

Chas. Burch of Plymouth is holding down a chair in Peter Connell's popular tontorial parlor.

At their election last week, the W. C. T. U. people re-elected the same officers for another year.

The W. C. T. U. recently had a donation of $10 from Senator McMillan of Detroit for their new building.

A liner in the Record sold L. Charter's fruit farm. Moral: If you have anything to sell advertise it.

Lightning struck Mr. Johnson's house and John Morse's barn near Wixom last night and both were burned up.

WANTED—Lady or boy to learn the printing business. Steady employment when learned. Apply by letter to Record office.

At the annual Epworth league meeting held in Grand Rapids last week Rev. P. Ross Parrish of this place was elected one of the advisory board of laymen.

Editor Callahan of the So. Lyon Picket took off his coat and addressed the J. O. U. A. M. here last night. A large number were present from So. Lyon and Plymouth.

An exchange says, "A Bridgeport, Conn., man wears a wig that was also worn by his father, grandfather and great-grandfather in their turn." Sort of an heirloom as it were.

Special meeting of Northville fire company No. 1 will be held at the council rooms Friday evening, April 14. There will be important business to transact and all members are requested to be present.

Northville people, when in Detroit, will consult their own interests by stopping at the Wayne Hotel, opposite the M. C. depot. It is the best hotel in the city for good meals and prompt and courteous attention.

A stormy night prevented a large attendance at the Clinton Elder entertainment at the Methodist church last evening. The singing was exceedingly fine and was highly enjoyed by those present.

Sterling Bristol and Mrs. E. M. Smith of St. Johns have bought L. Charter's fruit farm, and will take possession soon. Mrs. Bristol and Mrs. Smith are sisters of Mrs. Chas. Yerkes of this place and were former residents here and the families will be warmly welcomed by Northville people.

Horace Bradley, brother of Geo. E. Bradley and Mrs. S. A. Clarkson of this place, died at his home in Ovid, Monday, aged 74 years. The funeral occurred yesterday and was attended by Geo. E. Horace Bradley, with his parents, settled near this village in 1830 and was for years a resident of the place. His mother, Mrs. Maria Bradley, still resides here, with her son George, having reached the ripe old age of 94 years.

Great men and little men;
Short men and tall;
Great men have great minds,
And small men, small;
Great minds too, great minds,
All to make a name;
So great minds get great minds—
And this is fame.

Rich men and poor men;
Rags at Riches' door;
Rich men have rich friends,
And poor men, poor;
Rich men live by poverty;
Poor men live by wealth;
So rich men get richest men—
And this is wealth.

Pretty maids and plain maids;
Maidens all, either;
Pretty maids have pretty ways
To keep maids in toiler;
For maids are weak, and men are strong;
All Cupid live above;
Then men are weak and maids are strong,
And this is love.

A MATTER OF COURSE

It was the middle of the second week after "Henley." That is how my friend Clever would fix the date, I am sure. I am not a "boating man" myself, so perhaps I ought to explain how I came to be in solitary possession of a randa that Wednesday in the latter part of July. Clever wanted it down at Datchet on the Saturday following, and was too busy to bring it down himself. Would I go to Henley and fetch it for him?

I do not know whether I ever want to see that face again. Clever says I do, and, as it was the most remarkably beautiful face I have ever seen, I suppose he is right; but I could argue to the contrary. The face was hot and flushed, and as she turned it toward me I noticed two little lines of perspiration trickling down from her temples to her cheeks. The beads had also gathered on her upper lip, which was, prettily parted from the lower by the strain of her awkward burden.

She did not see my admiration for a moment, and then her eyes flashed down upon mine, calm and gray and unfathomable, and mine dropped on to the cold lamb directly and then rose again to her dusty shoes. I was sitting on the grass just below the towpath.

She passed me and went on for ten of fifteen yards, and then paused. She seemed to be deliberating. Then she came back and threw the bundle of poppies down beside me as I rose. My hat was in the boat, so all I could do was to stand up. She did not speak at once, but regarded my lunch and then myself. The combination apparently pleased her; at all events I do not think her satisfaction attributable to the cold lamb alone; and Clever allows that I am not a vain man, especially when in the neighborhood of the river.

"I am so hot and hungry," she said quietly, without a trace of affectation or confusion. "What will you do?"

I am usually struck speechless on emergencies, but something about this girl inspired me with unwonted confidence. In spite of her disarray she seemed so self-possessed and unembarrassed that I could not feel otherwise myself.

"You need not remain hungry very long," I replied. "Everything I've got is at your service." This was comprehensive, but strictly true I can swear.

"What a strange place you have chosen!" she said, disregarding my offer.

"Well, perhaps it is," said I, "but hardly unfortunate." I added, with a readiness that amazed myself, and looked up at her face again, to find the great gray eyes fixed upon me intently, reading me through.

She did not smile; she bowed slightly and sedately in acknowledgment.

"Thank you," she said. "There is a little shade the other side of the bank in the field. Will you carry it over there for me?"

"Certainly."

The change took about three minutes, during which she sat on the edge of the randa and fanned herself with her handkerchief. When I came and told her it was ready at last, I found her looking at the book I had brought with me. It makes an ordinary man blush to be discovered with a book of poetry in his possession. I blushed, and hoped the sun-burn would hide it.

"You have been reading 'Lady Geraldine's Courtship,'" she said. "My name is Geraldine." My presence of mind began to fail me. "I always like that piece so much," she added.

Then she came and sat down on the bank in front of the cold lamb and looked at it.

"There does not seem to be very much of it," she said, and the first smile she had given me broke around her mouth. "I can eat all that myself."

"And why not?" I answered.

"What will you do?"

"Oh! there is the bread and some jam," I said. "That is quite enough. Besides, I can go on to Surly and lunch there."

"I would have gone on there and not troubled your generosity, but I have only two pence in my pocket," she said, and I should have spent a penny in crossing.

"You must allow me to ferry you over afterward," I said.

"Thank you."

As she ate up my lunch I had the opportunity of looking at her more closely. She recalled to my mind Tennyson's Maud, with her full underlip and the least little delicate aquiline curve in a sensitive nose. She was dressed in the plain blue skirt and a full white blouse tied in at the waist with a band of broad ribbon. She was tall, and her figure was as beautiful as her face, and the stately set of her head and the gracefulness of her slender neck most admirable. I am certain she wore no stays. I could not understand at all who she might be. Her hands belied the notion that she was an artist's model, as I was half inclined to think her at first, so fine and delicate were they. I had expected to be disappointed there, but I had been prejudiced; perhaps, by the coarse carder gloves.

"You like Mrs. Browning, then?" she asked suddenly.

"I do, indeed," said I.

"And 'Lady Geraldine's Courtship' particularly?"

"Particularly. That is the favorite with most people. It is so captivatingly sentimental and romantic that we can overlook the improbability of the story."

"What improbability?"

"I admit I form opinions on grounds which seem insufficient when demanded of me with such suddenness. I hesitated."

"Perhaps you consider 'Lord Walter's Wife' improbable," she went on. I had no hesitation now.

"Yes." Her eyes dwelt on mine a moment.

"Which is improbable—the lady or the man?"

"The lady," I answered.

"I have never seen such a dignity of merriment as her eyes displayed at my answer."

"You are hard upon him," she said, "and perhaps, by implication, still harder upon her. No, that's not fair. But you must believe in Lord Walter's wife in future, or at least only disbelieve in the man."

I could not quite follow her. She thought too fast for me, but I remembered what she said afterwards, and I thought over it, and I fancy that I have appreciated what she meant. At any rate I have certainly believed in the lady. Clever laughed when I told him so once, not an unkind laugh. Clever's laugh is never unkind.

She had finished her lunch, my lunch, and sat for a little while looking across the fields. I do not think she minded my looking at her; in fact I am inclined to believe that it was out of consideration for me and as a sort of recompense that she stayed to allow of my doing so.

But she turned her head towards me presently and said:

"I think I must ask you to take me over now." So I fetched my hamper and packed up my things, gathered up her poppies, and put them into the bows of the randa, and then, with an effort which disposed me to estimate the subsidence of the Thames since I landed, as at least a foot, forced the boat out on to the water and drew it in sideways.

My Lady Geraldine stepped in lightly, and sat down on the cushions. I decided that the stroke seat was the right place for me after all.

"I think I see a road coming down to the river," I said, pointing fifty yards down stream to the right bank. "Shall I land you there?"

"If you please."

I proceeded to scull her along very carefully. I was anxious not to make an exhibition of myself, and my rowing is apt to splash sometimes. In five minutes I had put her ashore without disaster.

I bound up the sheaf of poppies with the string from my hamper, having first collected them out of the bows. It was during this collection that she remarked that I need not be so very careful over one or two, and a slight smile flickered around her mouth as she said so. I have those odd poppies still, though I am not sure whether I received express permission to keep them.

She put the bundle under her left arm and her right hand into her pocket and produced a penny.

"My fare," she said, holding it out in the palm of her glove.

I hesitated a moment. I did not see why she should be particular about paying for her ferrying over in coin of the realm, considering that she had made no such return for her lunch. However, I recollected that my cold lamb was worth more than the twopenny she possessed, and was glad of it, too. I took the penny; I have the penny also still.

"As for the rest," she said, "I can only thank you, and the best way to thank you is to take your kindness as a matter of course, isn't it?"

This was a way of looking at the matter which took my fancy; it was so entirely right and kind and womanly. Why do not more women treat us so? I bowed my assent. I had nothing to say. Perhaps I looked rather downcast at parting. If I did I looked what I felt. She consoled me with another compliment.

"And I think," she added, "that, in spite of my telling you that I have two miles to walk, you will not offer to carry my poppies for me."

Not a suspicion of mockery came into her eyes as she said this. They were perfectly steady, and the words and her manner of speaking them conveyed such an expression of confidence in my readiness to appreciate and acknowledge the exact point at which my services ceased to be requisite that I could only bow my assent to this also.

My silent acquiescence seemed to please her. She drew off her right glove, though with some difficulty, for the poppies hampered her, and held her hand out to me.

"Then good-by," she said.

Our meeting had been so unconventional altogether that I felt I dared brave conventionality now without running the risk of being misunderstood. The old courtly act seemed too appropriate to the occasion to be looked upon as a liberty.

I took the tips of her fingers and bent my head down and kissed them. I gave her time to take them away, but she did not do so. On the contrary, she perceived my intention at once, and slightly raised them to meet me as I bent. Then she drew back, and, catching the skirt of her dress with the fingers I had just released, made me the most profound and wondrous curtsy. And, considering the bundles of poppies, I think you will allow that she must have been a graceful woman not to have looked the least trifle awkward over the proceeding. Her eyes just glanced again at mine as she rose, and then she turned and walked away. I did not stay to watch her to the bend of the road—I had received my dismissal—but tumbled back into the randa, and rowed off violently down stream.

I ran into the bank three times before I reached Surly. I think, on the whole, that was excusable. And at Surly I had a 4 o'clock lunch which restored me to my ordinary senses.

Clever thanked me for bringing his boat down, and I thanked Clever for allowing me to do so, and more besides. I considered myself largely indebted to Clever.

And as for her—it does a man good in these days to be trusted by a woman after such fashion, and that at a glance—Temple Bar.

A QUEER RAILROAD.

It Is Run Upon Texas Principles, But Gets There—Sometimes.

"There is some queer railroad running down in Texas," said W. A. Shaw to a Globe-Democrat man. "There is a road down in the southern part of the state fifty-three miles long whose cannon-ball covers the distance in just four hours if it has an exceptionally good run of luck. Trains are run each way three times a week. If one doesn't chance to get lost and so blockade traffic, until a hand-car trailer can be sent out for it."

"There are no telegraph or telephone stations on the road, and when a train leaves the terminal where the general offices are located the conductor is master of the situation until he gets back again. Sometimes the pneumatic tire comes off the sulky of the man employed to ride ahead and drive the cattle off the track, and the train is a week making the round trip. I rode over the road once, then walked back because I was in a hurry."

"On the trip out we picked up a drunken farmer who had laid down on the track. The conductor chanced to know him, and held the train while the trainman and baggage master carried him to his home a mile away. In about an hour the brakeman returned with an invitation from the farmer's wife for crew and passengers to come over to supper. We went, and after the repast an old cotton-field African, with a cracked fiddle, was introduced and we had a dance. The conductor then wanted to proceed, but the engineer, who was sitting up to the hilarious farmer's buxom daughter, said the fogs had rooted out several cross-ties down below the water tank, and he was apprehensive of a repetition of the Ash-tabula disaster if we attempted to run over that part of the road at night. So we stayed and danced until daylight."

"We got off after breakfast next morning, and the farmer's daughter was a passenger. She wore a sun-bonnet and carried a large tin pan. Three miles out we stopped, and the crew helped her pick wild strawberries enough to fill her pan. Then we backed up and the engineer carried the bucket of berries over to the house for her. When he got back he discovered that he was out of coal and couldn't budge. The farmer kindly donated enough fence rails to pull us out of the difficulty, and we got through, by great good luck, in just twenty-eight hours. Oh! some of those roads down there are lightning."

An Electric Locomotive.

Austria announces an electric locomotive which is to travel 125 miles an hour. The Independence Belge follows with the statement that the North Belgian company and the North France company are constructing a line for locomotives, operated by electricity, on which the journey from Brussels to Paris, about 192 miles, will be accomplished in eighty minutes, a speed of nearly 150 miles an hour. It is further stated that the trains will be running in about two months.

A Novel Charitable Device.

A Devonshire, England, landowner, who has a large sheet of water in his park, threw the skating open to all comers during the winter at a charge of sixpence or one shilling, on different days, for entrance, employed a large number of men all the time in keeping the ice clean, gave universal satisfaction, and at the end of a week had a clear balance of over $300 in hand to distribute among the poor of the district. In this way all the distress specially caused by the cold weather was more than alleviated.

A Bad Break.

Vicar, who has an unfortunate habit of saying "quite so" during conversation calls upon the bishop about some parish grievance. The bishop during the interview tells the vicar how badly he (the bishop) is being treated. (The fact is, Mr. Smith, many people seem to think I'm a perfect ass.)

Vicar, consolingly—Quite so, my lord, quite so.

East Side Cigarettes.

"Pick me out a ton of old cabbages, ten barrels of tea leaves, twenty pecks of newspapers and a hundred weight of horse hair," said the garbage contractor's new customer.

"Going to start a brandy distillery?" inquired the contractor.

"Oh, no," was the matter-of-fact reply; "I'm an east side cigarette manufacturer."—N. Y. Herald.

Bound to Satisfy Her.

"Do you tell your wife everything that you do?"

"Yes, and a good many things that I don't do."

"HOODOOED" PASSENGERS.

Seven Smokers Have an Experience on a Street Car.

When New York gets its Broadway cable cars running it may get along a little faster and perhaps derive some entertainment from contemplating the death rate, but its patient people will miss the old-fashioned pleasures of the L-out platform, the liberal distribution of adjectives along the route, and all of the other familiar peculiarities of primitive metropolitan life.

I was musing on this the other day while enjoying a smoke on the front platform of a Broadway car. It was a dreadfully cold day and the wind came whirling up Broadway like a roaring lion. But, between being cooped up in a densely packed and ill-smelling car and standing out in front with a cigar, what smoker would hesitate at the choice? There were six other desperate devotees of the weed on the platform, beside me—five of those were trying to smoke—the sixth was chewing a butt.

I've had more fun during the past two weeks. "One of the smokers" was saying, "than I ever had in my life before, and—"

The car was turning into Fourteenth street and the party on the platform caught the first full blast of wind. The hat of the speaker was whisked off like a wink and went sailing into Union Square.

"And," he continued, as if nothing had happened, "I'm going to have some more of it," and he stepped down and ran.

Everybody grabbed at his own hat instinctively, while just roaring at the other fellow, neglecting that more important instinct—to hang on going around a corner—while the driver complicated matters by bringing the brake down with such a rour that he nearly fell over the dashboard.

The two smokers nearest the steps on either side tumbled into the street, and two others hung over the iron dash in the oriental style of the saloon. Five hats parted company with their owners, two of said hats being under the horses' hoofs, the others skipping merrily across the street into the square. When I got back from the lively chase after my own title—in which I consciously assisted in amusing a large and delighted audience—the gentleman who had apparently precipitated this catastrophe had already regained his position on the platform.

"As I was saying, gentlemen, I've had more fun—"

Then I got down and walked, leaving the hoodoo to get his fan out of the rest of them.

AN EVEN-THING.

How the Two Great Jesters Met and Made Friends.

It was on Sunday. The man coming up the street carried a silver-headed cane and walked with great dignity. The man coming down the street displayed a heavy watch chain across his vest and wore a plug hat. As they met they stopped and stared at each other for a long minute. Then the one with a cane inquired:

"Strange nigger, was yo' lookin' fur anybody in dis town?"

"Strange nigger yo'self!" exclaimed the other. "What plantashun does yo' belong at?"

"Hu!"

"Hu!"

"Look, heah, nigger," continued the man with the cane, as he drew himself up; "yo' pears to be one of dem cotton pickers from de bottom lands 'dat don't know a 'stinguished gen'l'man when dey sees him. Yo' better git dem eyes open!"

"Does yo' call yo'self a 'stinguished pusson?" demanded the man with a watch chain. "Of co'se I does! I want yo' to understand, sah, dat I am de janitor of de city hall! Mebbe yo' was also a 'stinguished pusson?"

"Mebbe I was, sah! Admit me to controude myself as de janitor of de new possibills buildin'!"

"What? Am dat yo', Misser Taylor?"

"Of co'se. An yo'am Misser Johnson?"

"Sartin! Why, we's been disquainted ober to'en y'ars, an' yit we didn't know each oder when we met! Ize powerful glad to see yo', Misser Johnson. Let's fuder 'stinguish ourself by walkin' around town together and paralyzin' common trash!"

She Is All Right Now.

"You will leave me, will you?" he calmly asked.

"Yes, I will."

"When?"

"Now; right off; this minute."

"You'll go away?"

"Yes."

"I wouldn't if I were you."

"But I will, and I defy you to prevent me. I have suffered at your hands as long as I can put up with it."

"Oh, I shan't try to stop you; I'll simply report to the police that my wife has mysteriously disappeared. They will want your description, and I shall give it. You wear No. 7 shoes; you have an extra large mouth; you walk stiff in your knees; your nose turns up at the end; hair, a flaming red; eyes, rather on the quaint; voice—"

"Wretch! You wouldn't dare do that," she screamed.

"I certainly will, and the description will go in all the papers."

They glared at each other, she had a good cry, and it's all right now.

"What's the trouble, Gabriel?" said St. Peter. "Why are you groaning?"

A GLIMPSE AT PERSIA

SIGHTS IN THE LAND OF THE GREAT SHAH.

Manners and Customs of a Queer People—Women at Home and in the Street—How the Shah's Harem is Guarded by Soldiers.

PERSIA IS ATTRACTING THE ATTENTION of a great many travelers just now. All are agreed that the population is very picturesque, and the Persian women of high rank appear to merit the reputation given them by the famous singers of old time.

The women of the middle classes go about the streets swathed in garments of old time.

which make them resemble perambulating meat sacks. Over their heads is thrown a single white sash, which serves in a measure to relieve the sinister blackness.

A pair of large and dazzling black eyes, seen under this sash, when all the rest of the face is concealed by the malsack, produces a very curious effect.

In their homes, of course, the women divest themselves of these sacks and appear with their limbs and feet bare. For street wear they have a huge, baggy trouser, which completely conceals their shape, especially when a long cloak is let down over it.

The women in the harem differ in their attire from the common people only in richness. The form of the garment is the same.

The harem of the Shah has a formidable guard. Sometimes as many as 500 soldiers are on duty there at one time. The women's apartments in the Shah's palace extend over several acres.

Incalculable treasures, the result of the spoil of ages, are gathered in this place, and in the one at Kasvin, the ancient capital of Persia.

In the royal palace at Teheran there is one throne—called the Peacock

We think our city is booming. Mr. Wilcox is repairing his store, and Mr. Taylor of Northville will soon take possession.

A family by the name of Johnson have rented, and are living on, the farm known as the Wm. Ramsdell place.

Geo. Bryant has traded his farm to W. T. Johnson. In the deal, Mr. Bryant and his son-in-law, Frank Johnson comes into possession of the Johnson farm. Mr. Bryant will move at once to his new quarters.

During the storm of Friday night, the barn on the farm formerly owned by Geo. Peterhans, was struck by lightning and burned. Although it was pouring rain, the barn was so charged that in just three-quarters of an hour it was down.

One of our citizens allowed that, although he wasn't struck by lightning he was so wrought-up that it made his hair stand up. He probably won't make light of his household another time if they are a little nervous during a thunder storm. The initials of said gentleman are G. H. B.

We don't wonder that, that young man couldn't see the runaway horse that he was in pursuit of, which had come to a standstill and was in plain sight in front of Geo. Bryant's new shed, when we remember that it was Monday night.

We notice by a recent issue of the RECORD, that the Common Council of Northville have decided to order all places of business closed on the Sabbath, but evidently it hasn't gone into effect as yet judging from the style of driving and noise made by certain young men of that place while driving on our streets last Sunday afternoon.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS.

Over twelve years I was afflicted with a very serious female difficulty and for the last sixteen months was under treatment of three of the best physicians that money could employ. Under their skillful treatment I gradually grew worse until they decided they could render me no permanent help. One of my friends persuaded me to try a bottle of Dullam's Great German Uterine Tonic, and after taking three bottles, can say I am in better health than I have been for 20 years and am now sixty years old, but feel as young as at 30.
