TWO MEN BADLY HURT.

One of the Globe's Dray Teams Is Rather Frisky.

While loading on some church furniture at the factory Tuesday afternoon, one of the Globe's dray teams became frightened, and breaking a line started for a run down Plymouth ave. Geo. Wicks, the driver, was thrown off and a wheel, among other things, passed over him, bruising him up severely, besides breaking a rib. One wheel of the wagon ran up one side of the iron bridge spilling out the furniture in a remarkably mixed manner. John Meyer, a Livonia farmer, was driving his team towards home at just this time and the runaway caught him at the Hanrahan works. They should have turned out and went quietly by, but they didn't. They simply jumped right on to Meyer and his wagon and for a while it looked as if he would be killed. The animals hoofs struck him on the head and shoulders in a terrible manner but he fortunately only suffered some bad bruises about the head and shoulders. The wagons were badly demolished and the furniture had to be taken back to the factory for re-shaping. Wicks is resting comfortably and it is thought he will pull through alright.

One remarkable item in the accident is the fact that this furniture was to take the place of a lot which was in a railroad wreck at Cincinnati last January and this was the last load to the depot here. This team indulged in a little smash up once before, about two weeks ago.

WILL PLAY BALL.

A Northville Boy Signs With the D. A. C's.

Don P. Yerkes, Northville's famous ball pitcher, has signed with the D. A. C's and commenced work yesterday in a game against the U. of M's. The Tribune has this to say of Don, and Harry Waite another former well known Northville boy:

"Don P. Yerkes is about twenty-five years old and is pretty near the six-foot mark. He lives in Northville, where he was born. But for all that he can sling the ball at a lively rate. He began his base ball career with the Northville club and pitched there until he went to the Agricultural College, where he played and was the captain in '88 and '87. He then went back to Northville until 1889, when he pitched for Lansing in the State League, where he made a great record for himself. Since then he played on professional ball but lots of the amateur article with the teams around the Jag Cure town. Joe Walsh knows him thoroughly and says that he is without doubt the speediest and surest pitcher in the state."

Harry Waite, the other addition to the club, was formerly of Northville but he thought better of it and has moved to Detroit. As a boy he pitched with the Northvilles and ran up against the Cass Club of Detroit, then in its prime. He was the hardest man the Cass team had to bat. In 1889 he pitched for Flint in the State League, and since then he has been playing amateur ball exclusively."

Don will accompany the D. A. C's to the world's fair where they play a game May 30th.

HAD A JOLLY GOOD TIME.

A Report of Rev. Belding's Second Pastime Evening.

Friday evening last the second "Pastime Evening" given by Rev. J. M. Belding, at the beautiful home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank N. Clark was as great a success as the reception the week previous. Amid the flash of electric lights, the hostess and Miss Mabel, assisted by Mr. Belding and Mr. Clark, received the guests and assigned each player to their table. At 8:30 the merry games began. Miss Margie Thompson proved the successful competitor in fourteen games, though Harley Johnson and Norman Collins came very near taking the evening's honors. Rollin Purdy boasted of only four successful contests and blushing received the memento for questionable playing.

Refreshments were beautifully served. The following participated in the evening's program: Geo. Bradley and wife, W. G. Yerkes and wife, Wm. Young and wife, Pliny McFarland and wife, L. Barnum and wife, Mr. Stockwell and wife, Mrs. Milo Johnson, Misses Minnie Covert, Belle Covert, Lottie Lake, Myrtle Smithman, Anna Smith, Georgie Palmer, Euma Pinkerton, Kate Buchner, Nellie Joslin, Ethel Dubuar, Harvie Root, Mattie Whipple, Minnie Smith, Precella Stoner, Margie Thompson, Messrs. Rollin Purdy, Matt McFarland, Thos Swan, Mr. Tapp, Chris. Buchner, Ed. Lapham, Harley Johnson, Ralph Horton, Norman Collins, Mr. Steif, Dr. Attridge.

A VERY THE RECORD.

STATE OF MICHIGAN
P. S. NEAL, Publisher
NORTHVILLE, MICHIGAN

Eight hundred pious pilgrims left Paris for Jerusalem two weeks ago. They started in a special train and will make the pilgrimage in comfortable style, throughout. Cardinal Langenieux, the bishop of Liege, and a number of other prelates are of the party.

A statement recently published by the authorities of Munich gives some startling information as to the increased consumption in that city of dog flesh. So great an appetite seems to have developed for that food that the authorities have thought it time to interfere for the protection of dog owners.

Boston has a Cogswell fountain, though the matter has not been bruited abroad much, owing to the local pride that is strong in that city. The fountain has just been taken from the Common and will be placed in a cemetery, where, it is believed, those who have to be near it will make no protest.

Fox-hunters who have come to the fair expecting to get some good buffalo shooting between visits to Jackson park will be disappointed. If they are distinguished and titled, however, the inhabitants of the Lake Shore drive and the South-side boulevards will vie with each other in demonstrating to them the intricacies of the Chicago system of lion-hunting.

There is still a widespread belief in the South that the meat of hogs killed during the decrease of the moon will shrink in the cooking more than the meat of animals killed when the moon is present, and there are hundreds of persons south of Mason's and Dixon's line who are careful to plant potatoes when the moon is right, lest the increase be small or none.

A book agent some time ago stopped at a house in Oakland, Cal., and asked the occupant to purchase a book. He not only refused, but "sic" his pet bulldog on the "b. a." After recovering the agent shed the man, and was recently awarded $5,000 damages by a jury. If it would have been decided cheaper for the man to have bought the book, or in fact, the agent's entire stock!

Among the amendments of the constitution of the state of California, which are to be submitted to a vote of the people at the next election, is one restricting the suffrage to persons who can read and write, with the exception of citizens who are over 65 years of age. This amendment is said to have been framed in response to a popular demand and to be certain of ratification.

The recent investigations in bacteriology will give the romancers who had already partly exhausted the use of hypnotism in the construction of plots a new piece of machinery. The heavy villain may attempt to inoculate the hero with the germs of St. Vitus' dance, sciatic rheumatism and septennial psoriasis, but just as he says "Hail" in blood-curdling tones the "hail" will be blown against his funny bone and he will sink the poisonous instrument deep into his own flesh. Then this hired girl can come in and say "Poiled" while the servants bear the wretch away to a life-long enjoyment of his own invention.

The fact that the ushers at the Craven wedding, with one exception, wore pink shirts has created a sensation among New York club men. Time was when the only club men admitted to shirts of this particular tint were the song and dance artists who clubbed themselves around the minstrel stage. Now the pink shirt has been, so to speak, taken to the bosom of the swell young man about town, and an interviewer has been assured on good authority that it is perfectly "good form." provided the collar be attached to an essential proviso, and one evidently meant to avert the possibility of such a vulgarism as a pink paper collar.

A NOVEL scheme is to be tried in Boston and its contributing rural territory this summer consisting of what Mrs. Julia Ward Howe has named "Co-operative Vacationing." It is desired to make it possible for ambitious women of the country who, unable to bear the expense of a few weeks' visit to the city during the gay winter season, to exchange courtesies with city women who are unable to pay board during a few weeks' visit to the country. The third city woman through this co-operative vacationing plan can find some kind family who will afford her a grateful shelter when the hot air of the city is almost insupportable, and in return for the courtesy she is to give the summer hostess an opportunity in the winter for an equally long time in enjoying the advantages of city life.

Turkish newspapers have received the sultan's permission to recommence publication in the morning. Orders that all journals should be afternoon issues were recently issued, because, it was surmised, morning issues required the press censor to arise too early or else sit up too late.

PADEREWSKI is said to have been seized with a nervous disorder in New York. There was nothing the matter with his nerve in Chicago when he and Theodore Thomas "had fun" with the world's fair directorate.

WOLVERINE RED MEN.

LAST OF THE WARRING TRIBE OF POTTAWATOMIES.

They Inhabit the Country of Southern Michigan and Live on a Miserable and Lazy Existence—Good Indians as a Result of Circumstances.

(Special Correspondence.)

THE COUNTRIES OF Southern Michigan have now only a few families of the once powerful tribe of Pottawatomies. These are the descendants of the band who were ever at war with the less civilized tribes of the West and who drove the eighty Illinois Indians on "Starved Rock" sat down about its base and calmly waited until the last of their victims had perished. They are pretty good Indians now, from force of circumstances. They work as much as they must, wear the clothes of civilization, drink firewater, cling to their old language and confess their sins to the good priests, for the Pottawatomies have been within the fold of the church since Father Marquette established a mission among them. For the rest, they preserve the purity of their race, and have a social habit of not understanding English when it suits them. Just now these erstwhile children of the forest are in high glee over the fact that their long-pending claim against the government has been allowed, and that the sum of $150,000 will soon be distributed among the tribe.

For over a score of years Chief Pokagon has planned, hoped and schemed to get his money. With it he hopes to put his followers where they can get enough to eat and wear—hardly a possibility now. They are as poor as poverty can be, as shiftless as hunger and necessity will allow, and aside from sympathy because of their doomed condition they hardly deserve any pity. The remnants of this once powerful and warlike tribe, who for over a century dominated Southern Michigan and around whose campfires thousands of braves clustered, now aggregate about 240 souls. This number is yearly growing less, so rapidly in fact that a few years will witness their entire extinction.

Chief Pokagon is the last of the Pottawatomie chiefs. When he goes to the "happy hunting grounds," whether have countless numbers of his ancestry, there ends all that is left of old tribal customs, chiefs, warriors and their cessation of authority. The migration of the Pottawatomies from the northwestern to the southeastern shore of Lake Michigan took place during the first decade of the eighteenth century. Twenty years later the Pottawatomies were found to have dispossessed the Miami and spread themselves over a vast area of additional territory, reaching from the vicinity of Chicago around the lake northward to the Kalamazoo River and eastward to include the valleys of that stream and the Kalamazoo. This region they held in undisputed possession for a century and a quarter, getting themselves mixed up in all the trouble that was brewing. They were the implacable enemies of the English and the loyal lovers of the French. In the French and Indian war they fought bravely for the French and were not disposed to give their territory over to English rule after peace was declared. Their hatred of the English domination made them willing and eager to enter the conspiracy originated by Pontiac and the final details of the plot were arranged in a camp of this tribe. The slaughter of the garrison at St. Joseph, which they performed in the most thorough and savage manner, was the principal exploit of the Pottawatomies in this series of hostilities. In 1794 this tribe was represented among the Indian hordes who opposed "Mad Anthony" Wayne, but returned from the battle on the Maumee humbled and crestfallen. About the commencement of the present century the United States government sought to negotiate with the Indians for land at the mouth of the St. Joseph River to establish lish a fort, but the red proprietors refused, and the location at Chicago was selected, upon which Fort Dearborn was erected in 1803. They united with the tribes under Tecumseh, and a detachment of warriors participated in the massacre of the garrison of Fort Dearborn which was marching eastward after evacuating the fort. In several other engagements during the war of 1812 the warriors from this tribe took an active part, of which the principal and last was the battle of the Thames. This was the last battle ground of the Pottawatomies. They sued for peace, retired to their villages and never raised the tomahawk again. The spirit of warfare in them was broken forever, and they had only the strength to resist an attempt to remove them beyond the Mississippi in 1833. These Indians were induced, as they claim, fraudulently to sell their reserves on Lake Michigan, which were good hunting grounds and convenient to missions. The tribes then settled in Van Buren and Cass Counties, where they now live, and they have been building small farms and others building cabins away from the roads. While this tribe did not join their fellows on the western reservations, they claimed the annuity which was due in that event. The missionaries thought their claim was good, and in the hope of securing it they mortgaged their little farms to build a church at each settlement. Other people now own the farms, but the Indians have the big wooded churches. Several small sums were received from the government until, in 1860, the Indians being in terrible straits accepted under protest the sum of $20,000 in full payment, since which time the present claim has been pending.

The money received by them in 1860 was soon spent in dissipation, and while there has since been no real suffering they have also lost a great part of their stock. While some individual members are considerably advanced in civilization, the most of them cannot speak English intelligibly, and in no household is there the common tongue. The blackest has entirely disappeared during the past few years, but some families may be seen preparing their housing by means of the wooden mortar and pestle. Chief Pokagon is about the only one of the tribe who can read and write. With him ends a family of chiefs and he bequeaths the intense ignorance and laziness of his remaining people. "It isn't natural for them to work and be as other people," he says. "Civilization kills them off. They live in huts that they keep red hot, then go out on hunting trips for a week and sleep with no shelter. Consumption takes them and there are other diseases that rage among them."

The Doll Feast in Japan. Now you shall hear of the doll feast of Japan, which, I must tell you, is not a repeat, not a great banquet for dolls, nor a big dinner for the little girls whose darlings they are.

The doll feast of Japan is a great national festival, a sort of doll fair for the first of the coming year, and to which the whole nation looks forward with pleasure. The streets of the cities are made gay with fancy booths, decorated with all the colors of the rainbow and more colors besides. In these attractive shops are displayed the dolls in their most gorgeous attire. Dolls of all ages and styles wait patiently for the delighted multitude who are sure to assemble before every booth. Altogether it is a charming and picturesque sight. The people put on their holiday clothes, and with their children go about from street to street admiring and purchasing the dolls that are just as great a delight to the little ones of Japan as are the American dolls to the little people of the United States.

A LITTLE ELEPHANT.

Although 3 Years Old It Only Weighs 200 Pounds.

(Bertha Correspondence.) In Casan's Panopticon at Berlin there has been an exhibition for the last month of a baby elephant which is the smallest of its kind ever known. It has just been brought from Sumatra by Hagenbeck and is said to be about 3 years old. Lili, this is the name to which the animal answers, is not quite 3 feet high, a little more than 3 feet long and weighs in the neighborhood of 170 pounds.

LILI AND HER KEEPER.

The Lili appears to be a very clever animal, and is now undergoing a course of mental training, of which it is expected to give proof at the Chicago Fair, where it will be shown with a number of other zoological artists, which Hagenbeck is bringing to this country.

The Independent Blouse and Bodice.

Waists and blouse corsages differing in kind and often in color from the skirts with which they are worn will be very plentiful next season. Hand-some ones are made of soft textures such as satin crepe, crepe de Chine and China silk in dark colors and also in delicate tints, especially mauve, straw, buff and deeper yellow shades, old rose, pink and ecru. For evening wear lace is used to trim. For more general uses colored embroideries, which show up well against the light background, are a favorite trimming for them. The work is placed upon the collar, bodice, cuffs and belt. Often, however, a ribbon belt confines the waist and is knotted at the left side, the blouse escaping below in a full or empire waist which droops over and conceals the top of the skirt, which may be of various materials, according to the temperature or occasion. For cool weather at the various resorts light-colored cloth skirts will be worn, a pretty Drapen cape pinked at the edges making a complete and natty toilet, which, if desired, may be enhanced by a harmoniously contrasting silk lining in the cape.

Remodeled Dress Skirts.

Dressmakers who are requested to remodel last year's skirts that are made of textiles too rich and expensive to cast aside use various methods of transforming these skirts into models now in vogue. Some cut them into bias flounces, which they put upon new bodices or those closely gored; others add double breasted in the back made of similar, matching or contrasting fabrics, and others again open the skirt down the front in directoire fashion over a gored underskirt or insert a panel which they frame in gimp or passementerie.

NETTING HUGE SALMON.

HOW THE SPORT IS CONDUCTED ON THE COLUMBIA.

Five Fun for the Netters—Big Fish Are Plentiful—Description of the Boat—Water Alive With the Beauties.

The vessel was the ordinary, trim fishing boat, and three people and an immense net filled it pretty well. In a short time we reached the place where the net was to be thrown out. The fish run with the tide, so the men must work when the tide is right, be it day or night, and we could see boats all around us, some just getting the nets out, others pulling them up and killing the fish caught in the meshes, while others were coming swiftly out from the island to begin work. As each man is paid for the fish he catches there is no law about turning out, but each starts whenever he chooses.

A smart man will be on the ground at the turn of the tide to make sure of getting the very place he considers the best fishing ground; while an idler will be half the time in getting out and at his work. It tells in the day's catch if a man is early or late.

Our boat was neither among the first or the last. We still had a fair choice of ground, and in a few minutes the fisherman was tossing the net over the side and the boatman was rowing up tide to allow the net being spread out as fast as possible. The net was over 100 feet long, and was fitted with sinkers on one edge, while the other was supplied with a line of floats. By this means it was held in position in the water, and formed a sort of fence against which the fish dashed as they swam up the stream. The meshes were rather large, and the small fish were able to swim through and continue their way up the tide, while large ones were caught by the gills.

In a few minutes the net was all paid out and the fishermen sat down to wait for the first fish to get entangled in the meshes. The boatman pulled leisurely up the stream and the row of bobbing floats strung out behind us looked like little bubbles on the surface of the calm water. Suddenly one of the bubbles was jerked down and in an instant the boat was headed for the place where it had floated a moment before. The fishermen stretched out over the side of the boat and caught the net by the float next to where the sunken one had been and pulled in the net hand over hand. A splash, a flurry of foam, and the steel-gray head of a big salmon appeared above the surface.

The man caught up a queer weapon, which I had noticed and wondered about, and struck the fish a blow with the knob of iron on one end of the bar; then turning it, he thrust the hook on the other end into the gills of the half-stunned fish, and with a pull, landed his struggling captive inside the boat. A jerk freed the net, which sank back into its place. The fish was flopping viciously about, and the man struck it again and again with his big iron club, before it succumbed to its fate. We often speak of eyes as having "no more expression than a fish's eye," but I never saw one and anger more plainly expressed than in the eyes of that first salmon.

Meanwhile the lower float had been bobbing up and down while we were killing our magnificent captive, and the boat was turned and pulled rapidly back to that end of the net. Again the fisherman ducked and caught the net; again he pulled, but this time the net did not come home so easily as he expected. Another pull and yet another before the head of the fish showed above water. He was a big fellow, bigger than the first, and a smile replaced the look of disgust on the fisherman's face as he drew back his hand to grasp his club. Just as he was about to strike the fatal blow the net was jerked from his hold. Another float but a short distance further was pulled under. There were two fish to be landed now instead of one.

The net was with difficulty raised again to the edge of the boat and the first fish was secured. He was the biggest salmon I ever saw. He must have weighed nearly a hundred pounds as he was far bigger than one which I saw weighed that touched the beam at sixty-five pounds. The monster was thrown into the boat, stunned by a blow, and the man pulled away at the second fish. That also was a very large one, but not equal to our monster. Just as the fisherman was pushing his hook down to try and catch the fish by the gills the big one just thrown into the boat gave one flop, plunged over the side, falling fair upon the arm which held the net, tore it free and both fish were gone.

The two men sat and looked at each other a moment, and I know they wished they were alone in the boat that they might find some relief for their incensed feeling in language which politeness restrained them from using before me.

A Novel Postmaster.

Newark, Del., has a postmaster and deputy postmaster, and these two have administered the office through the political changes of the past eight years. When the administration is Democratic so is the postmaster and the deputy a Republican. When the administration is Republican the Democratic postmaster and his deputy simply change places. As the change cannot be made immediately upon the inauguration of a new president, there is a period of some months when the citizens are in doubt as to which officer is postmaster and which is deputy.

THE WIND'S TRIUMPH.

"Heigho! Heigho!" cried the flakes of snow, As down from the sky they flew.
"On a moonlight night we're a pretty sight, With the clouds above so blue."
"Heigho! Heigho!" cried the noisy hail, "I can outlive you, snow!"
"I can turn your flakes into icy cakes, If such is my will, you know."
"Heigho! Heigho!" cried the angry wind, "You're too conceited today!"
So he blew a blast as he swiftly passed, And swept them all away.

Love in Lodgings.

BY FLORENCE WARDEN.

CHAPTER V.—CONTINUED.

But it is not in the nature of one brother to admit that another brother can make a favorable impression upon the fair sex.

"H'm," muttered Temple, grimly. "Lucky she didn't see you by full day light—with a malevolent glance at Cameron's black eye—or she might not have looked twice, old chap!"

Cameron, though nettled by this remark, affected to treat it with contempt, and they re-entered the house together.

Colonel Frere had grown tired of ringing the bell; Hilgred had grown tired of hearing it ring and had gone out to meet Harry. A peaceful silence reigned in the house, which the two brothers scarcely broke until the arrival of the promised domestic treasure.

CHAPTER VI.

The Lodger Grows Restive.

She was a splendid girl, the treasure! Young, though it was impossible to say how young; broad, with a breadth which suggested that in an encounter with a furniture van or a brewer's dray, it was the van or the dray which would suffer the most; there was about her an air of serene self-satisfaction which inspired her new masters with boundless confidence. Her face, which was round and pink, and flat, wore always a smile of bland superiority. To Hilgred, who habitually wore a similar smile, this expression was irritating beyond endurance; but to his brothers, it was the smile of an angel.

By an agreement, insisted on by Temple, and acquiesced in by Cameron, the former slept in a room on the second floor, in order to accentuate the fact that he had nothing to do with his brother's humiliating experience. He had also prevailed upon Cameron to take the big card out of the dining-room window, and to be content with the victims already captured. To this Cameron assented the more readily that these victims were moving restive enough to make it doubtful whether fresh responsibilities might not prove too much for him.

With the assistance of Lizer, the test of the evening passed in comparative peace; and when Temple peeped out of his window on the following morning, and saw the sun sparkling on the sea, his spirits rose, and he almost felt that it was better to be at Westclere even in these desperate circumstances, than not to be there at all. Dressing hastily, he ran down stairs, slipped out of the house, and went down to the beach for a dip. He had reached the promenade on his return, when he came face to face with the person whom, of all others, he would have preferred at that moment not to meet—Linda Frere.

She looked much, much lovelier by day than she had even looked by night, thought the poor wretch, as he noticed the richness and delicacy of her brunette complexion, and felt that he was growing purple under the glance of her eyes. She was indeed a handsome girl, tall, well-made, with clear-cut features, and an expression of bright intelligence and good humor. She bowed, and stopped to speak to him. At another time this proof that she had not altogether forgotten him would have caused him the keenest delight; now it made him wish that he had been seized with cramp, and drowned, rather than be made to face this ordeal.

But there was a worse one in store for him.

"You must let me introduce you to my father, Mr. Monk. He got the visitors' list last night, and found hardly any names he knew, while those he did find were of people he didn't like. So he has been wallowing with fear that he would be altogether dependent on my society."

"Surely he wouldn't consider that a misfortune?" said poor Temple, who had lost all his aplomb, and was as nervous as a curate at his first Penny reading.

He saw the colonel a little way off, a tall, well-groomed man, with a fresh complexion, and hair and mustache almost white. He was reading a paper, with a most unpromising frown on his face. Temple, who was for instant flight, began to make hurried excuses to Miss Frere, when her father, looking up and seeing how she was engaged, bore down upon them with rapid steps.

"Papa, this is Mr. Monk, who took so much trouble to find my bracelet, with poor mamma's portrait in it, that I lost at Lady Asland's," said Linda by way of introduction.

Although the presentation could scarcely be said to restore him to good humor, the colonel was not ungracious. But unhappily it soon proved that his satisfaction arose from the fact that he had now a new ear into which to pour his grievances. Temple asked him if he had had a dip.

"No," answered the colonel, "I never go into the sea before breakfast, in fact I object to go out before breakfast at all. But as, in the place we are staying at, it appears to be the rule not to serve any meal until two hours after one has first rung for it, my daughter suggested that we—"

"Papa," put in Linda, good-humoredly, "they do their best to make us comfortable, I'm sure."

"My dear," returned he, "that is just why we should come out and enjoy the one comfort they cannot deprive us of—the sea air."

"What I am afraid of, if I thought they had begun by doing their worst, and there was a prospect of their getting, by ever so slow degrees, to something better, I might reconcile myself to cooking which is an insult to food, to being waited on by a creature who has evidently been released too soon either from an asylum for lunatics or a home for inebriates, and above all to having to pull the bell till my arm aches without having the slightest attention being paid to it. Why, Mr. Monk, I give you my word I rang last night for a candle just fifteen times!"

Mr. Monk did not want his word; he groaned in spirit, having had the evidence of his own ears that this was true.

"Surely," suggested he, "you might find better accommodation in an hotel, or—some other house, now that you have time to look about you."

The colonel shook his head.

"I'm going to have that miserable scoundrel with the black eye up today, to explain what he meant by saying he could give the highest references."

"Highest references?" echoed poor Temple, not that he doubted Cameron's mendacity having reached this point, but because he was in too much distress of mind to concoct a more original remark.

"Yes, that is what he told me. And that there was a man-cook kept. I will have that man-cook up too, and though the creature may prove to be a man, he has already proved that he is not a cook."

"Well, papa, perhaps he will cook better to-day!"

"Perhaps, if he is not so drunk."

"Drunk!" echoed Temple faintly, but scarcely able now to keep indignation out of his tones.

"Yes," said the colonel emphatically, "the whole household last night were uproariously intoxicated. There seem to be half a dozen young blackguards about the place. We hadn't been in the house more than half an hour when one or two more arrived, and there was a row in the passage; half an hour later than that there was a set to on the stairs. When we had finished what we had to call dinner we found a fork sticking in the framework of the drawing-room door, and a broken mustard-pot on the floor just inside the bed-room."

Temple listened in discomfiture which he tried vainly to hide. His face was alternately crimson and violet, his muscles twitched, his eyes shifted from sea to shore.

"You don't know that they were all intoxicated, papa!" protested his daughter.

"My dear, if there had been one of them only partially so, I would they not have sent that one to wait upon us? Now, you could see for yourself that the creature who did wait was almost helpless. He leaned against the table, he leaned against the door, he laid the tablecloth so that it looked like the sea in a gale, and he put the crust-stand down between my knives and forks, and the plates in the center of the table!"

Temple winced.

"Perhaps," he faltered in a strangled voice, "he wasn't used to it."

"But surely," said the colonel, raising his voice to one of just indignation, "people who entrap innocent men and women to take apartments in their houses, and who profess to offer the highest references, should be used to it! I should have gone out myself to the top of the stairs to remonstrate, but Linda wouldn't let me. She had peeped down into the hall when the row first began, and I suppose she saw that they were none of them in a state to be remonstrated with."

Linda had peeped into the hall. Why that must have been, thought Temple, when Cameron had opened the door to let him in. Then she must surely have seen him. He felt ready to sink into the earth; he dared not meet her eye. And yet—no it was not possible that she should have given him just now that smiling greeting, if she had believed that he was one of the ruffians, whose misdeeds his father had been describing. His head seemed to spin round. Then he suddenly became conscious that the colonel was addressing him again.

"I hope that you have been more fortunate than we. Where are you staying?" asked he, with a sudden change to a very winning manner, as if he felt that he owed some apology for having dilated upon his own grievances so long.

Temple had to clear his throat twice before he could answer.

"In that row of houses over there," said he at last, waving his hand vaguely in the direction of the accursed "Seaview."

But this was not definite enough for the colonel. Seizing Temple by the arm, he said excitedly:

"One of those big detached houses facing the sea? Why, that is where we are, the third house. Come back with us, and show us where your diggings are."

There was no help for it. Temple, trying convulsively to keep up the conversation, dragged his doleful feet along side by side with the colonel and his daughter. At last they stood at the gate of "Seaview."

Colonel Frere looked almost as if he would have shaken his fist at the house.

"There," he cried, as if the very bricks and stucco proclaimed the guilt of its inmates. "There is the worst lodging-house in all England."

The young man affected great surprise.

"Why," he exclaimed, "that is where I am staying, too."

"You don't say so? What an extraordinary coincidence! Ha!" and the colonel's face brightened. "Then we can combine our forces. We will make our complaint together, and threaten to take proceedings against them unless they instantly procure us proper attendance and decent cooking."

"Oh," said Temple hastily, "I am afraid they wouldn't pay much attention to me. I'm here by myself, you know—and—er—I've only got a bedroom on the second floor—er—all I could get, you know, quite thankful to get anything, in fact. And—er—I'm sure they wouldn't pay any attention to me—and—er—I'm only here for a few days—and—er—it would be very awkward for me if they turned me out."

Miss Frere came to his rescue.

"Don't you see, papa, Mr. Monk couldn't speak with the same authority as you, who are here with your daughter. Don't you see—"

"I see that Mr. Monk must be very much less particular than young fellows just entering the service used to be in my time," said the colonel, very ill pleased at being disappointed in his hope of finding an ally.

And, raising his hat rather stiffly, he passed through the garden-gate with his daughter, while Temple meekly followed, hoping with all his heart that the colonel's fire would not be further roused by his being kept waiting at the door.

This fear was groundless. There was, however, another trial to be faced. The round-cheeked Lizer, on seeing the three enter together, allowed her month to open, and her features to expand into a grin of great amusement. She was about to improve the occasion by some apt comment, when Temple, entering the last, silenced her with a savage frown.

CHAPTER VII.

Cameron's Cookery.

Temple had not been in his room ten minutes, suffering all the tortures of hopeless love and of humiliation none the less bitter that it was based largely on imagination, when his youngest brother, with a rabbit in his arms, burst in upon him.

"Cameron wants you to go and buy vegetables," said he, simply.

"Vegetables? Tell him to go to Jericho with his vegetables!" roared the suffering one.

"Well, he can't till he's got them, you know. I would have gone, but he heard me talking about fustian pigeons, so he wouldn't trust me. I'm awfully sorry you're uncomfortable. Temple, but I think you ought to go. You're not the only one, you know. You're not even the only one that's in love, for Cameron's got it just as badly as you."

Temple sprang up with angry eyes. The next moment, however, he shrugged his shoulders with returning calmness.

"His cooking will choke him off. For his sure to be known sooner or later."

"Oh, but it's not Miss Frere; it's the young lady next door. He can't talk about anything else, and she's always at the windows."

"That little thing! Good gracious."

"She's very pretty," remonstrated Harry, on whom the blue-gray eyes and light brown hair of the fair "Annie" had made more impression than had the more brilliant good looks of Colonel Frere's handsome daughter.

"Yes, in a way," admitted Temple, with the sultan-like affectation of a young man when he criticizes the inferior sex. "No style, though."

Harry felt that his means of critical expression were too limited for him to have a chance in a contest of this sort. He paused, and then came quietly back to his original proposition.

"He wants you to get some vegetables. Begs here's a shilling, and you can get what you like."

Frank Editor.

The editor was very busy one day with a heap of news and editorial manuscripts before him awaiting his attention, when a long-haired young man came in.

The visitor deliberately produced some papers from his inside pocket and remarked:

"Ahem! I have here a few verses—"

"Yes, yes!" exclaimed the editor, Will you do me the favor to put them over there in that waste basket yourself? You see I'm very busy just now."—Youth's Companion.

When a Man Is at His Best.

The best half of life is in front of the man of 40 if he be anything of a man. The work he will do will be done with the hand of a master and not of a raw apprentice. The trained intellect does not "see men as trees walking," but sees everything clear and in just measure. The trained temper does not rush at work like a blind bull at a haystack, but advances with the calm and ordered pace of conscious power and deliberate determination.—Vick's Magazine.

A Lady With Sixteen Pockets.

A lady writes to say that as a daily experience she carries sixteen pockets—two in her dividing skirt, four in her waistcoat, five in her indoor jacket (which by reason of their contents weigh just five pounds seven ounces), and five in her outdoor jacket.

The Wood of the Apple Tree.

It is claimed that the best handles of small tools are made from the wood of the apple tree, which is very hard when dry and possesses a fine grain. Moreover, it is said, it does not crack easily after it has been dressed.

COMPASSES ON METAL SHIPS.

Study Necessary to Prevent Deviation—Studied by Government Officers.

The compass on board the steel and iron ships of the present day has become a department in itself, and, according to the New York Times, it has been the study of officers specially detailed for the purpose of discovering the influences on the compass and the means for correcting the consequent errors. The subject has grown in importance with the introduction of metal in building and equipping ships until to-day it is said that placing compasses on board iron and steel vessels is placing them at a disadvantage. Compensation is a partial and an unavoidable remedy for the evil; accidents and circumstances may affect the results, and it is only by careful and constant watchfulness and attention that the compass can be relied upon in the swift going iron and steel ships of the present day. This fact has led the navy department to inaugurate a system of recording a complete history of the compasses on board ships of war. When a vessel is in dock a magnetic survey of the ship will be preserved. When the vessel is ready for sea observations for deviations of standard compass are to be made, with the ship's head steered for at least four minutes, upon every point by the method of reciprocal bearings. For navigation purposes the compass error is required and is easily obtained by observation. When observations are impossible the navigator finds his compass error by means of the variation and deviation.

There are a good many things which affect the compass, and these are all studied out by two officers of the navy department, who communicate their discoveries to the officers who are to take charge of the compasses of a ship about to go into commission. One of these officers has found enough in the subject to write a work and "Practical Problems and the Compensation of the Compass," by Lieutenant Dieble, is regarded as the standard book in its line. After target practice, after remaining in a constant direction in port, or when a vessel has continued for some time on a steady course at sea, all her soft iron becomes more thoroughly saturated by the earth's magnetic force in a certain direction, and this increase of magnetic force, since it acts nearly in the direction of the needle, may not show itself by the change in the deviation so long as the ship continues on that steady course; in changing, however, this so-called retentive magnetism will show at once by a change in the deviation upon the new course. In the history of the compass which hereafter must be kept, opportunity will be taken to observe and record the effect upon the compasses of the various conditions of the dynamo, boilers, smokestacks, engines, changes in position of boats, battery, and all material which affects the compass and the proximity of other vessels. The history of the ship's compasses is to be kept in the bureau of equipment of the navy department.

A Typhoid Cure From the Tyrol.

A woman was brought to one of the New York city hospitals some weeks ago suffering from typhoid fever, but one feature of the case could not be accounted for by the diagnosis of typhoid. The woman's body was covered from head to foot with small star-shaped figures. Each was composed of a central spot no larger than a pin head, surrounded by five other spots of the same size at regular distances, from each other. Such a species of skin disease had never before come under the observation of the hospital staff, and there was nothing to be found in the books which would clear up the case. The woman was too ill to talk about it, and no light was thrown on the subject until the patient's mother came to the hospital to see her. She was an old woman, born in the Austrian Tyrol, of peasant stock. She explained how on the first day her daughter was taken sick she had made the marks which were still visible on her body, and then rubbed her with kerosene as a preventative against fever. The instrument used was a cork with five needles stuck into it.

A Mirage on the Delaware Coast.

Some fortunate persons have seen occasionally in midsummer a really perfect mirage on the Delaware coast, between the breakwater and a little water place called Rehoboth five or six miles below. Shortly after leaving Rehoboth by land one seems to see, three or four hundred yards inland from the beach, a glassy sea reflecting in its still waters the hotels at Rehoboth, the trees to the north beyond, and the spires of Lewes five miles away. So perfect is the illusion that persons who know the place can scarce disbelieve the evidence of their eyes, as the shore of the sea appears to be only a few hundred feet away. It slowly melts at one's approach, however, until only clear puddles appear in the hollows, and these, too, vanish as one draws nearer.

When Coal Was Free.

An Ohioan recalls that bituminous coal was literally free fifty or sixty years ago in the eastern part of Ohio to such persons as chose to dig it where it cropped out, and it was not uncommon to see the industrious citizen returning from some hillside, his wheelbarrow laden with enough free coal to warm him the better part of a week. This was in the days when eggs were three and ten cents a dozen in Ohio and squirrels so plentiful that farmers' lads killed them with sticks as the nimble creatures scampered along the fences.

The most manifest sign of wisdom is continued cheerfulness.

The easiest thing for a loafer to do is to find fault with busy people.

It never pays to send boys into the street to secure quiet in the parlor.

The shadow of a misfortune will generally frighten us more than the disaster itself.

If we knew how much our enemies have suffered it would no doubt make us more forgiving.

The religion that is noisy in church is sometimes very quiet in other places where it is more needed.

One of the illusions is that the present hour is not the critical, decisive hour. Write it on your heart that every day is the best day of the year.

LOCAL GLEANINGS.

Things Said and Did in the Liveliest and Prettiest Village in Michigan.

Milton Buzzell drove a well 37 feet deep on his place last week.

B. A. Wheeler sold two lots in Northside this week to Albert Shaffer.

B. A. Wheeler commenced the erection of a new house in Northside this week.

Mrs. J. H. French has been very ill for the past few days, but is now convalescent.

Ed. Shaffer, head clerk at the Park house, and Miss Jennie Jide were married at Detroit Tuesday. They will make their home at the hotel.

The annual statement of the Northville State Savings Bank will be found in another column of this issue, and it is a very creditable showing indeed for so new a bank.

The Hanrahan refrigerator company shipped a carload of refrigerators this week and have orders ahead for a carload more to go soon as they can be got out.

Please bear in mind the Gypsy festival at the opera house Saturday night. Admission, gallery 10 cents, down stairs 20 cents, children 10 cents. These low prices ought to insure a large attendance.

When in Detroit stop at the Hotel Wayne, opposite the M. C. depot, where you will be well entertained and handsomely cared for. It costs no more to stop at the best hotel in the city than the cheapest.

The Northville F. & A. M. lodge goes to Detroit next Tuesday to work the Master Mason degree for Oriental lodge Oriental lodge is Detroit's "kid glove" lodge, being the most aristocratic one in the city.

Mrs. R. H. Beal is again at Grace hospital for treatment. The character of her troubles, which was formerly supposed to be cancer, has not yet been fully determined. Her friends hope for her much improvement which is indicated by her present condition.

The Illinois Refrigerator company is a new organization at Morrison, Ill. The capital is $50,000 and E. R. Beal of this place is president of the new institution. This factory will work entirely with the western trade and in no way effect the Hanrahan factory's business here.

F. E. Beal has purchased the thirty-five acres of land just east of Dean Griswold's place on the East-line and fifty acres of the McFarland heirs on the opposite side of the road just west of J. D. Yerkes. This will make as fine an eighty-five acre farm as ever lay out of doors.

Next Sunday evening the sixth sermon on Joseph, at the Presbyterian church will cover a most interesting event in Joseph's life, of his pathetic meeting with his old sister and Jacob's appearance before Pharaoh. Subject, "How Old Art Thou?" All are cordially welcomed.

On the first page of this week will be found the report of the refrigerator bonus fund payments with the subscribers names and amounts. We again call the attention of our readers to this list of names. They are in every way worthy of your support and should receive your patronage in preference to those who lent no aid at all.

The ladies of the Presbyterian church have organized a Ladies' Aid society with the following officers: President, Miss Helen Brooks; vice president, Mrs. E. S. Horton; secretary, Mrs. B. A. Wheeler; treasurer, Mrs. Dexter White. Mrs. Mary Kellogg and Mrs. Rosa Little, together with the officers, form an executive committee.

Our dramatic company, which played the "Spy of Gettysburg" at Milford last week, are loud in their praise of Milford's hospitality. They said that the manager of the hall, the editor of the Times, the landlord of the Central house and people generally used them like lords, each striving to outdo the other. The hotel was kept open until time for the 2 a. m. train for their special benefit and the bus was ordered up and the whole party conveyed to the train free of expense. The audience that greeted them at the hall was a large one considering the rainy night and it was also an exceedingly appreciative one. The company say they didn't know that any village except Northville could entertain strangers with such gates like this. Really, Milford is getting jealous of us now.

It's new and a reminder of the kettle New Orleans and S. W. Knapp.

"Man wants but little here below." The statement causes mirth. It might have been true long ago. But now he wants the earth.

Boards wanted—Apply to J. H. French rear of Opera house.

Rev. Arnold will preach a special temperance sermon for young men at the Baptist church Sunday evening.

B. C. Stark is representing the Northville K. P. lodge at the grand lodge meeting, Detroit, this week.

The tight young man can learn of a good position open for him as grocery clerk at a good salary by applying at this office.

The Epworth League presented a fine program last Sunday evening, consisting of songs and reports of the several departments. The society now numbers 82 and are doing good work.

C. A. Dowler and Miss Eva Knapp were married last evening at the bride's home, High street, by Rev. W. T. Jaquess of Detroit. The Record extends congratulations.

About two years ago, editor Neal, of the Northville Record, moistened his hands and took hold of the paper. In his last issue, he leaves his readers to judge whether or not he has made a jam up good paper, and is evidently willing to whip the man who says he hasn't. We hasten to say that he has.

Adrian Press.

Ameal Bollatt ran on to a regular snake village on John Thompson's farm one day last week, and, after making sure he was not dreaming, commenced a slaughter. More than a hundred got away, but thirty-eight soon lay dead on the battle field, the victims of Ameal's strong right arm and a heavy stick. This is an actual fact. The count was exact even to a single snake. We have eye witnesses to swear to the occurrence as having actually taken place and this item has no connection whatever with our regular snake story which will be published some time in July.

Around The Country.

According to South Lyon and Dundee papers—farmers there have just "got through husking corn."

The Holly Advertiser has tied itself back to its former natural and commendable shape, the standard 6 column quarto. It is an improvement.

The Courier is trying to devise some means of getting rid of the Ann Arbor swill, since hogs are no longer permitted inside the city limits.

Holly schools will graduate thirteen pupils next month and the class motto will be "Not twilight, but dawn." The enrollment of the school is 300, and all the graduates are admitted into the U. of M. without examinations.

The Adrian Press, the funniest, and withal one of the best, newspapers in the state is just in its twenty-first year. May it continue on for another score of years; a market to thousands of readers weekly happy.

Plymouth's water works system is completed. Beer still sells for five cents a glass, however.—Wyandotte Herald.

This will be news we think, so far as the water works system is concerned to Plymouth people.

The Saline Observer man has had a number of large eggs handed in to him this year. Not bad to take.—Ann Arbor Courier.

The good or bad part of the take depends somewhat on the fresh or stale quality of the eggs.

The Farmington Enterprise has discovered that a Chicago world's fair cup of coffee costs, including milk and sugar, 20 cents, and an imitation ham sandwich 25 cents. Bro Bloomer says he's going if he has to mortgage the Farmington town pump.

Large strings of fish are seen wending their way through streets nowadays suspended from the arms of many fisherman, the fruit of long and weary hours spent along the banks of the Rouge.—Wayne Review.

Or five minutes at the meat market on the way home.

Oh, South Lyon is getting to be an awful bad town. The Picket tells of some fellows who lay low in the school house yard and scare the chickens out of the passers by. Not only this, but some one stole L. S. Allen's furniture store to her night and it can't be found hide nor hair of as yet.

The school board have re-engaged Prof. Smith as principal of the South Lyon schools for next year and in so doing have "made a ten strike" as the Prof. is just the man for the place. Miss Farrell and also Miss Heath have been notified that they will be retained next year.—St. Lyon Picket.

Longly following the cyclone or hurricane, the other sports have not yet decided which it was—comes the news from Ypsilanti that the society young men there, have taken to undershirts outside. The Ypsilantian is authority for this. What strange effects are sometimes produced by fright.—Adrian Press.

Editor Neal has just completed his second year as publisher of the Northville Record. He has grown fat at the business—Neal weighs about 120 pounds—but he has made some money and likewise a rattling good paper out of a once very tame sheet. He got his git-they gait by riding a bicycle and will continue to build up a good Record.—Wyandotte Herald.

About our first schooling in Michigan Newspaper business was gained in writing for Bro. Haven's paper. The Herald is not a bad paper to pattern after and while Northville can hardly expect a publication quite up to the standard of a city like Wyandotte, we shall keep a close step onto the Herald's heels.

A RECONCILIATION.

I do not know
If I were wrong or you
If I grieve you so
To think I gave you pain
That I might give you
And take it back again
I do not know
If you or I were right
Your tears have caused me woe
And if you were again
I shall grow more contrite
And covet all your pain
I do not know
Nor care which one was right
For when your dear eyes flow
I cannot speak for pain
And tears mist blind my sight
Until you smile again
So let it go—
We may have both been wrong
Or purely so
But sin is purged by pain
And royal souls are strong
To wound and heal again
—Full, Dora, in Harper's Bazar.

DORA.

The night after his stepfather Squire Halsted, whistled Harold Robling for a thing he had not done. Harold ran away. No one knew it but I and I was nobody. But I thought as much of Harold as ever a human being could think of another. And I knew that he was wronged and I felt that Mrs. Robling had done a dreadful thing when she took Squire Halsted for her second husband and let him rule her, take possession of her money and ill-use her handsome boy.

I had my share of it, too, for while Mr. Robling lived and while she was a widow I was like a daughter of the house. But no sooner had she come back from her honeymoon than all that was altered. The squire looked at me coldly and I heard him ask Mrs. Halsted who I was.

Her mother died when she was born. Mrs. Halsted said, "I took the baby to my own nursery, where Harold lay in the cradle."

"More fool you, my dear," said the squire.

"The father went away," said Mrs. Halsted, "and was lost at sea—so they said—and I kept the little girl."

"You must remember that she will need to earn her own bread," said the squire. "She is not a lady. Let the servants keep her in her part of the house and teach her her duties as waitress."

"Oh, Mr. Halsted!" cried the bride. "I cannot do that."

"My dear," said Mr. Halsted, "I am master here."

The poor lady was helpless. She had no longer any control of her own money. I was six years old, Harold the same age, and a terrible life we had of it. I was very well-used in the kitchen, but I felt cast down and degraded. I wore big crash aprons that covered me from head to foot, instead of my pretty muslin and silk dresses. I was delicate and waiting is hard work when your wrists are slender.

Mrs. Halsted did all she could for me. I used to hear her pleading with the squire to let her send me to a boarding-school to learn to be a teacher, but he called her "a little goose," and she fancied him very wise.

But for Harold I should never have known anything, as after school he used to come to me and teach me what he had learned himself.

Cook would whisper: "That's right, Master Harold. It's a good deed you are doing. God spare you. I was never taught to read myself on account of an evil-minded stepfather who put me to service before I could get schoolin', and I know the loss."

And not a servant but would have waited in my place, for they said I was too small to carry dishes, but the cruel squire would have me come in to make sure that he was obeyed.

Mrs. Halsted really felt bad about it, I know. But two little girls came soon and then a little boy, and soon she cared nothing for her own splendid boy, and why should she care for me?

But I am wandering away from the morning when Harold Robling, just eighteen that day, walked down the garden path in the gray morning light and I with him, choking down my sobs. For now the one being I loved was going away from me, perhaps forever.

It was only five o'clock and no one was up. The grass was wet with dew and there were only a few pink streaks in the sky to tell that day was coming. We did not dare to speak until we got out of hearing of the house, but then I said:

"Oh, Harold! what will you do with no money and no friends—alone in the world?"

"Many a young fellow has done the same sort of thing," Harold said. "No man with limbs and senses need starve, and I mean to make my fortune. But I'd rather work in the trenches for my daily bread than to live in Squire Halsted's house, and with a mother he has bewitched into doing what he wishes, whatever it may be. It was a crime to make a servant of you, little sister. But remember, a moment I have power in my hands all that shall be altered. I will write you, and you shall know just how I get on."

But now he had got to the point where he was to take a little market boat to New York, and I was obliged to leave him, for he did not want the squire to find out what he had done until he was fairly out of reach, and then he put his arms about my waist and kissed me.

"Good-by, little sister," he said, "good-by Dora, my pet. Keep up a good heart and never forget to answer my letters." And he was off, and I went home weeping as though my heart would break.

There was a terrible time at the house when they found out he had gone, and the squire swore he would never enter his doors again. But the squire's daughters, who hated Harold as their father did, though he was their own mother's child, said they were glad he was gone. And only I remembered him, I think, very long. A weak woman was Mrs. Halsted, and her husband had got her under his power. The way he managed her has always made me think that there must be something in magnetism or hypnotism. She seemed to have lost her sense, or to have grown mentally blind, and to lead her where he would.

Just about time I felt very ill and when I grew better the squire, knowing I was good at my needle, made a seamstress of me. I was ashamed to say why, but it was because I looked rather stylish and was called pretty, and so many questions were asked about me by guests. As a seamstress I could stay in my upper room, and work. I was so thankful for the change. Now I could read a little and be more to myself. I made the finery for the young ladies of the family and no one troubled me.

Once, indeed, a rich old gentleman, having somehow got my story from good old cook, sought me out and made me a proposition of marriage, saying that it was a shame that such an elegant woman should live as I did. But I thanked him and declined his offer. I was not unhappy now, except that I pined for news of Harold, for in all these years no word had come from him—none of those letters he had promised.

I felt sure he was not dead and it was very natural that he should forget to write, but my heart had no rest. He was 26 years old by this time and in all that time much might have happened.

My pillow was often wet with tears from thoughts of him—fancies of what he had suffered and longed to meet him, or only see him from afar but once again.

At last news came. Mrs. Halsted came running to my room, wild with joy.

"News of my boy," she said, holding a letter toward me.

"I thought you had forgotten all about him, madame," I said.

I was sorry the next moment, for she burst into tears and faltered through her sobs:

"You don't know what it is to be the wife of a man who dominates your will. I have never forgotten or ceased to regret other things." Then she wiped her eyes and said: "But, as far as Harold goes, it is all over. He has written to me. He is rich—really rich. He has made a fortune in California, and he is coming home to see me. He is in New York and will be here to-morrow. The squire is pleased; the girls are wild to see him; his little brother is delighted. She ran out of the room again, looking young and happy, and I sat down to my machine, swallowing a great lump that had risen in my throat.

He had not written to me. Well, I was only a servant, and he was a rich man now. They were rejoicing in his coming for that reason—the squire and his children. He was a very different person from the poor Harold Robling who went away.

"I expect he will give us lots of presents," I heard one of the girls say. "An older brother who is rich is a great thing to have. We must get him and make him good-natured."

"Oh, yes," said the other. "When girls have as stungy a father as we have a generous elder brother is a godsend."

And I—oh! If he returned in rage, begging his bread, I should have welcomed him. I cared for him, not for his money. And if he had returned poor it was I to whom he would have written, I knew well. But I tried to put the selfish thoughts away and rejoice for his sake that he had prospered, even if he had forgotten his little sister Dora.

The morning came. As I sat at my machine I heard the sounds below that told he had arrived. I heard his mother cry out and the squire say heartily, "Welcome home, my boy!" and his sisters squeal and giggle after a way they had. Then the great drawing room doors were closed shutting me out.

I who loved him so dearly, went back to my room alone, uncared for, wretched! I felt as though my heart would break. I could no longer keep back my tears. Half an hour passed; then some one came to the door—a servant—who told me that I was wanted in the parlor.

Trembling, quivering, feeling as I had never felt before, I obeyed the summons. I opened the drawing-room door.

The squire stood before the fire, important as usual, one hand in the breast of his coat, the other waving toward me as he uttered these words:

"Dora, I have sent for you because Master Harold has returned and wishes to meet a faithful servant of the family."

But before the words were out of his mouth Harold, handsomer and larger, but the same for all that—the very Harold that I knew—rushed forward and took both my hands and beat down and kissed me.

"I told you, sir," he said, "that I wanted to see Dora—the dearest being alive to me! Such words as you utter I cannot permit you to speak as though they were mine. You have never received any of my letters, Dora, but I have guessed why."

"I never have received a letter, Harold," I answered.

"So I thought," said he. "We will not ask who kept them from you. I have no wish to quarrel with anyone, but you were my only friend years ago when I went out into the world homeless and penniless, and I have come now to ask you to share with me the home that I can now offer you."

"Share your home, Harold?" cried the squire. "The girl is not your sister. It can't be done. It would be improper!"

"I am glad, sir, that the girl is not my sister," replied Harold, "for she is the girl I want for my wife; and here, before you all, I ask her for her heart and hand, and proud shall I be if she will give them to me."

I could not answer, but he saw all I felt in my face, and led me away with him.

There was no quarreling. People like the squire and his family never offend rich people, and I am the happiest woman living. Fireside Companion.

THE INHERITANCE TAX.

It is imposed in Nearly Every Civilized Country.

Nearly every civilized country in the world has an inheritance tax as part of its fiscal system, and in many countries Mr. Gould's estate would have paid much more than $700,000, says the Review of Reviews. In France or Italy the share of the state would have been about $1,000,000; in England nearly $3,000,000; in Ontario or Victoria more than $3,500,000. In most of the American commonwealths, on the other hand, there would have been no tax whatever, though in a few states the comparatively small bequests to the brother and sister would have been taxable, and if Mr. Gould had lived in Chicago his estate would have paid some $62,000 toward the support of the Cook county probate court.

If he had died two years ago his estate would have paid no tax in New York for it was only in 1891 that the legislature imposed the one per cent tax on direct inheritances of personal property in the case of estates exceeding $10,000 in value. Yet the estates of two or three other rich New Yorkers, who died after the introduction of the five per cent collateral inheritance tax in 1885, have contributed very respectable amounts to the state treasury. The estate of Mrs. A. T. Stewart has paid more than $300,000, and that of Henrietta A. Loxor more than $200,000, while the collateral bequests of William H. Vanderbilt have yielded $81,000. The Gould estate will certainly pay much more than any of these, though the amount cannot accurately be stated until the property has been appraised. The heirs will probably take advantage of the five per cent discount for the payment of the tax within six months, and something like $10,000 will be retained by the comptroller of New York city as his compensation for representing the state in the appraisal and for collecting the tax.

ANIMAL FRIENDSHIP.

A Wounded Elephant Is Nursed by a Buffalo Cow.

Wild elephants sometimes make devoted friends of other animals. A party of hunters in Central Africa once wounded a large bull elephant, which traveled scores of miles into the jungle after receiving the heavy bullet in his shoulder. The chase was abandoned for the time. A fortnight later the hunters came upon the same beast. He was lying on his injured side near a stream in a dense forest.

A buffalo cow was standing over the fallen monarch, gently licking the blood from the wound. Frequently she would leave him and go to the stream, and by pawing at its edge, toss a lot of water upon the rank grass within reach of the elephant's trunk. It was probably in this way that refreshing moisture had been conveyed to the fevered and suffering giant, keeping him alive.

The hunters were divided as to whether the elephant should be put out of his misery, says the Million. It was finally decided to give him a chance for his life under the nursing cow.

Several weeks later, when the party were making their way back toward the coast, they came across a lame elephant attended by a buffalo cow. The pair were not molested.

Damaged by Wind.

One of the Chicago insurance companies, says the Inter Ocean, doing a tornado business, some time ago received notice of a loss of a horse, for which the assured demanded immediate payment. While going through the customary formula regarding the death of the animal, and wondering that a windstorm did no damage but kill one horse, the company inquired in what manner the killing occurred. The assured at once wrote back that his horse had died of wind-colic, and that he wanted his pay at once to buy another. This peculiar state of affairs leads to a suggestion to companies doing a tornado and wind storm business that it might be well to insert a clause similar to those applied to electric plants (in such cases referring to electricity, of course), reading as follows: "It is hereby understood that this company is not liable for wind generated in the property of the insured."

At the Museum.

"I'm afraid I'll be murdered some day," said the tattooed man, sadly. "Why?" asked the giant. "Because I'm a marked man," said the tattooed man. And then the skeleton dude laughed so he got fat and lost his position.—Judge.

HOW THE OCEAN BECAME SALT.

An English Professor Discusses Two Theories of the Salt in Seawater.

Professor Edward Hill read a paper before the Victoria institute in London recently on "How the Waters of the Ocean Became Salt," says the Standard. From an inquiry into the character and affinities of the organic forms of past geological ages, the conclusion was justified that the waters of the ocean must have been salt from very early geological times, but it by no means followed that they were as fully saline as those of the present day. There were two ways by which they might account for the salinity of the ocean waters from very early periods of geological time. First, by supposing that the primeval waters were saturated with acid gases which were held in suspension in the vapor surrounding the incandescent globe; or, second, that the salinity resulted from a process resembling that by which salt lakes of the present day had been formed. He thought that they must concur with Dr. Sterry Hunt that from some cause or other chlorine largely abounded in the waters of the primeval ocean, as by far the greater proportion of the salts were chlorides, and chlorine was but very slightly represented in river waters at the present day.

From the examples of closed lakes they could determine the process of salinification with the utmost certainty. Throughout greater or shorter periods these lakes had been receiving the waters of rivers bringing down both mechanically suspended sediments and chemically dissolved salts, silicates and carbonates. The sediments were precipitated over the bottom of the lakes, and the water being carried off into the atmosphere in the form of vapor, as far as it entered, left behind the dissolved ingredients. These necessarily augmented in quantity, and ultimately the waters of the lakes became saturated with salts and carbonates, which were then deposited. The ocean was a closed lake of enormous magnitude, and they were thus brought to the conclusion that the saltness of the sea might have originated in very much the same way as had that of the Dead sea, Lake Oromiah, or the great Salt Lake of Utah, and many others which possessed in common the characteristic of having no outlet. When the great envelope of vapor which surrounded the incandescent globe began to condense upon its cooling surface, the resulting waters, though containing, as Dr. Sterry supposed, acid gases, were destitute of saline ingredients. The process of salinification began with the first streams which entered the seas from the bordering uplands, and this process carried on through the long ages preceding the silurian period brought the waters to a condition suited to sustain the life of forms of inhabitants representative of those which inhabited the ocean at the present day. These long ages might be supposed to include not only the archæan and æolic periods, but that during which the first crust was in course of formation over the incandescent globe.

Is Blue Really Ireland's Color?

Blue, it is claimed, is really the national color of Ireland; certainly it was, from the advent of Strongbow until quite recently. The late Sir B. Burke, Ulster, king of arms and author of "Burke's Peerage," is quoted on this point: "Azure and azure alone, has been the color of Ireland since the conquest. At the creation of the Knights of St. Patrick, when it was the object of George III. to gratify the national sensibility of Ireland, the color selected for the knights was blue. The royal Irish regiments have their facings generally blue, and never green; while the uniform of the Irish brigade in the service of France was red. About seventy years ago when the peerage of Bantry was created, one of the supporters granted was a female figure, representing Ireland—namely, a lady robed in blue and standing in front of a harp.—New York Sun.

Stop That Smoking.

The prevention of smoke from locomotives by means of steam jets has proved an inadequate resort, and this has led to the adoption of a device which, thus far, has received decided commendation. The locomotives save at the front or boiler-tube end of the box, an arch of brickwork, thirty-nine inches wide, which serves to deflect the flames and otherwise improve the efficiency of the boiler; but in addition to this usual arrangement, there are two other arches of firebrick nearer the door and about twenty-five inches apart. These arches are about ten inches wide, and have been found to economize coal as well as prevent smoke. Only one of the smaller arches is used when the firebox is very short.—New York Sun.

Housekeepers Should Remember.

The Government Chemists, after having analyzed all the principal brands of baking powder in the market, in their reports placed the "Royal" at the head of the list for strength, purity and wholesomeness; and thousands of tests all over the country have further demonstrated the fact that its qualities are, in every respect, unrivaled.

Avoid all baking powders sold with a gift or prize, or at a lower price than the Royal, as they invariably contain alum, lime or sulphuric acid, and render the food unwholesome.
