

THE NORTHVILLE RECORD.

Vol. XXV, No. 9.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 13, 1893.

$1.00 per year, in advance.

NO FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The Entire Company Have Tendered Their Resignation.

The Northville fire company have tendered their resignation to Chief Gurr. When questioned as to the reason for this step the boys say that there has been so much kicking about their bills for drilling, etc., by the village council and that this and other matters of dissatisfaction led to this result.

The whole thing apparently grows out of a misunderstanding all around and we suggest that the boys get together, unravel the tangle, keep up their past record and go ahead as of yore.

Methodist Movements

The quarterly meeting services at the Methodist church last Sabbath were among the most interesting of the kind ever enjoyed by the society. The pastor preached a short sermon in the morning on the "Crowned Christ" after which Rev. Seth Reed took charge of the communion service. Ninety persons responded to the call of the Christ "Do this in remembrance of Me." The love-feast at 6:00 p. m. was attended by more than one hundred persons and at 7:00 p. m. the church was packed to hear the presiding elder, Rev. C. T. Allen D. D. He at once won the people by his frankness and affability and the sermon was just what had been anticipated.

The Monday night social reunion was an informal but eminently successful affair. Prof. Bliss and Rev. S. Reed of this place, Clark of Plymouth and Dr. Allen spoke and then a short social followed. All enjoyed the occasion and went home with new inspiration for the work.

Wedding Bells Chime In

ROOT—CHAPMAN

August Root foreman at the U. S. fish station here and Mrs. Della Chapman were married by the Rev. W. T. Jaquess at Detroit Wednesday and immediately left for the world's fair for a wedding trip. Both are well known Northville people and get the best wishes of numerous friends. They will occupy the government residence on their return.

SHAFTOE—INGERSOLL

William Shaftoe, son of Rev. Shaftoe of Wayne, an employe of the Globe furniture company and Miss Cora Ingersoll of Farmington, for some time past a resident of this place, were married at the bride's home by the groom's father Tuesday evening. They now occupy a part of Mrs. Johnson's house, West Main street. The RECORD joins with others in extending hearty congratulations.

GREEN—LAKE

A very pretty wedding occurred at the home of Mrs. Geo. Lake, Dunlap street, at 7 p. m. Wednesday evening, the occasion being the marriage of her daughter Lottie to Mr. Will H. Green of Hillsdale. Miss Newman of Heanetta, New York acted as bridesmaid and Fred L. Green of the Hillsdale Democrat was best man. Rev. J. M. Belding performed the ceremony. The happy couple left on the 8:35 train for the world's fair to be absent some ten days. They will return here for a short visit after which they will take up their residence in Hillsdale where Mr. Green is connected with the Hillsdale Standard.

The best wishes of the RECORD and a host of friends accompany them.

BLOOM—BEATTIE

Another of those unique events for which Northville is becoming daily celebrated occurred Tuesday evening at the Beattie mansion, West Main street. It was the marriage of Mattie S. Beattie, an only child, to Mr. Chas. H. Bloom, a hustling young business man of Detroit. The radiance of the new home seemed in delightful harmony with the bright young lives that stood in sacred trust within its walls. It was a delightfully informal and "at home" affair with only a few friends from Detroit to grace the occasion. Rev. P. Ross Parrish welded the golden link by solemn and beautiful words. They left at 8:45 p. m. for a ten days outing in Chicago, after which Mrs. Bloom will be found at the Beattie home for a time.

May the beauty and charm of this Bloom abide undimmed in spite of life's scorching suns and biting frosts. Our rice chest has been drawn on heavily of late but here goes for a liberal handful after Mr. and Mrs. Bloom.

ADOPTED RESOLUTIONS.

The Council Thank Mr. Gardner in Behalf of the Village.

The village council have adopted the following very appropriate resolutions, thanking Mr. Gardner for his gift of the tower clock to the village of Northville:

WHEREAS, our worthy townsman Mr. John Gardner has exhibited his public spirit and a most generous interest in behalf of Northville by the munificent gift to the village of a magnificent tower clock, therefore;

RESOLVED, that the common council for itself and in behalf of the citizens of the village of Northville hereby express their profound appreciation of his noble action for the pleasure and benefit of the public and tender to him their hearty thanks.

RESOLVED, that this action be spread upon the records of the council and that a copy be tendered to Mr. Gardner by the clerk of the village.

Around the Country.

Dearborn now has its first newspaper the Advance.

The grand encampment I. O. O. F. camped at Pontiac this week.

Mrs. Dr. Harris, wife of a prominent Pontiac dentist, died Saturday morning.

Didn't anyone die at Romulus until further notice. The old grave yard is chuck full and its stand now between cremation or a new cemetery.

The Wayne village papers are haggling over the point, whether the M. C. trails will "run into" the new depot they are going to have or "run by it." If we remember correctly they used to run by—at about forty miles an hour.

Up in the hay mow of Foster's lively stable at Monroe last week was found enough dynamite to blow up the whole Floral City—but it didn't. Dynamite might have had not the people got a chance on it before it got a chance to "blow."

If you see a man twisting around clumsily, giving himself an ugly pinch you can make up your mind that he has recently donned a new suit of underwear that is making him—holly advertiser.

Or he is lousy, or has the seven year itch. Erate Crawford of Oxford didn't freeze to death when he was accidentally shut in the cold storage building over there the other day. On the contrary he let out enough cuss words to not only keep warm, but when, by the time he was liberated, had melted a ton of ice.

The last thing to make the Orchard Lake academy successful has now been added—a foot-ball team. No American college is complete these days without some kind of an athletic club. In fact all well regulated states in the United States have them right in the government office—a la Michigan.

The Fenton fair association were going to run their fair this year on the "canteen" system and sold the larger privilege for one hundred elegant silver dollars. Then the Independent straddled the directors' necks and they said they never said it, "But they did," says Jennings, "and I can back it."

Ernest Kuhn of Milford had reached the top-most round of the ladder, but he was not satisfied. He was in earnest in his seek for fame. He made still another stride upwards and found fame but no ladder round. Mother earth caught him as he sailed beautifully down, head upwards. He never broke even a suspender button and as soon as the lameness gets out of his walkers he's going to start at the bottom again.

Tonight will occur at Ann Arbor probably one of the greatest events in the history of the great University of Michigan. The third big "rush" of the season, which promises to be the greatest of all, between the soph's and freshman will occur. Blackened eyes and swoolen heads have all ready resulted from last week's two "rushes" and this crowning climax tonight, if all goes well, will doubtless place the student on par with the greatest statesmen of the world, their last feather in the plume of fame—ne plus ultra.

Highest of all in Leavening Power—Latest U. S. Gov't Report.

PLYMOUTH'S IMPROVEMENTS

From the Ashes of the Fire Has Risen a Monument to Her Prosperity.

The great calamity which visited Plymouth village early on the morning of April 18 last has proved a great blessing in disguise. The immense and handsome brick structures erected from the ashes of that fearful conflagration are second to none in our fair state and Plymouth people richly deserve the many congratulations now being lavished upon them and well may they be proud of the achievement.

The new blocks so far as known will be occupied as follows: The Masonic Temple on the lower floor by Bassett & Son who will put in the finest stock of furniture ever seen in Plymouth. The post office will also be in part of this building. The upper floor will of course be occupied by the Masons.

The next is Dohmstreich Bio's new store which will be occupied by them J. L. Gale, A. H. Dibble and possibly a well known Northville merchant will occupy the Coleman block. The upper floor will be used as offices and dance hall.

J. R. Rauch will take possession of Miss Kate Penniman's, mammoth double store with a complete line of crockery, groceries and ladies' and gents' furnishing goods. The upper floor will be used as a dance hall.

The National Exchange building is next to Miss Penniman's and is a very pretty piece of architecture. It is not fully settled yet who will have R. C. Safford's store as there are several parties trying to lease it. Mr. Safford wishes his store to be used for a first class dry goods store which would be a very nice thing for the village.

Geo. Hunter will soon occupy and do business on the old stand in the lower floor of O. A. Frazer's building. The second story will be used by the I. O. O. F's.

The next and last building is being built by Geo. Vandicarr who will possess it with his barber shop just as soon as it is finished.

In addition to this there are seven beautiful residences under construction with prospects for as many more. Now the village should get a hustle on itself and get the water works a running, gravel up a sandy street or two, improve that beautiful park a bit, put in electric lights and then be in keeping and in line with the individual improvements.

Nearing the End of the One Fare Rates to Chicago

October 13, 16, 18, 20, 21, 26 and 28 the D. L. & N. R. R. will sell tickets to Chicago and return at one fare for round trip, good ten days. For stations east of Grand Ledge tickets will be sold only via St. Joe and boat. From all other stations they will be sold via St. Joe and via New Buffalo (all rail). These tickets are not good in Wagner parlor and sleeping cars. GEO. DEHAVEN, G. P. A.

THANKS PEOPLE, THANKS!

OUR PLACE OF BUSINESS

We thank the people of Northville and Vicinity for their kind attendance on our opening day and their continuance since, also for their liberal patronage in the short time in which we have been in our unique Clothing House. From close-observation we are more than convinced that the people of Northville do not want cheap, shoddy stuff, and our intention and aim is to keep first-class goods, and the price will be just as low as they can be produced with a fair living profit. Our store is unquestionably the highest in town and enables the purchaser to see just what he is buying. Our prices are marked in plain figures and everybody buys from the one-price marked on the goods. Our goods are not the kind we can afford to give a house and lot with, neither do we mark them so as to sell for 1/4 or 1/2 off—they are bought right, marked right and will be sold right.

treat for Northville people to hear her.
The council have donated the use of the council room to the village band.
This is quite correct. Nothing will draw out more people from far and near than a good cornet band—such as Northville has. The weekly concerts are highly enjoyable.
The water works contractors have offered the village $500 if they will release them from further obligations relative to the reservoir leak and accept the job. The water board are not in favor of the idea and it will be laid before the council.
The mystery surrounding the pre-public convenience is "Uncle" John likeness of the public-spirited donor

Will those who have not already done so please make a run for the savings bank and pay over to Mr.
Babbitt the amount which they subscribed for the clock tower fund. Do not oblige the committee or some else to go to the trouble and expense of sending a collector out for this.

Judging from the immense crowds on the streets Saturday night and the lively music from two brass bands, to say nothing of a tent show, one would almost have believed they were in Chicago. So filled with people were the streets that it was for a time almost impossible to pass along the walks. Everybody was good natured and enjoyed it however.
Judging from the crowd of Northville people on the train Tuesday night it must have been Northville day in suggest the catchy sensationalism of the day they will be replete with the sound philosophy of every day life.

The subjects of the first three are:
"The Creed of Dirt," "A Star for My Charlot, or a Journey Through Space," and "Leagues and Vampires." Beginning Sunday morning, October 29, he will deliver the first of three sermons on "The Absurdities of Infidelity."
"Our neighbor, the Plymouth Mail," has discovered another error in our columns—a word misspelled. Now we can take a joke as well as any man living when it is so intended but so much of our neighbor's jokes in the past have been mixed with muddy fings towards the RECORD, especially in its correspondence, that we judge this to be right along the same line.
In the same issue of the Mail we find the following sentences which though the quoted words do not appear in the dictionary they are doubtless correct for our neighbor never makes a mistake you know: "Thes" cost about $10,000 "each." Roofs "ail" tarred.
Plymouth will be sure to beat "Veneice" very soon. Milford is "afflicted." Mrs. Smith is slowly "convalescing." 100 cords "chunck" wood.
Anyone with common sense will know that these are simply blunders, and in no way reflect on the capability of the Mail. Errors will be found in every newspaper published in the world—none are infallible. Leastwise the RECORD is not.

BY RIGHT OF SALVAGE.

THE ball was over, and the many diverse types of people that can be found only at a fashionable seaside resort, gradually emerged into individuality as the mass of dancers slowly disintegrated. Now that the music had ceased, the dull, steady roar of the breakers became more plainly distinguishable. Some of the participants lingered on the wide piazzas of the hotel long after the greater number had gone to the rooms or had disappeared across the broad lawn in the direction of the cottages, the sounds of animated conversation and light laughter floating back out of the darkness. A knot of men gathered on the porch around a little vision of lace and flowers, as the petted beauty rested her dimpled hands upon the railing and supported herself by rounded bare arms, upon one of which a great jeweled bracelet sparkled under the gaslight.

"Now, Miss Granby, you must, you really must give me that program as a souvenir. So fair a promise from one so fair must not be spoiled by breaking."

The young woman laughed gaily. "Careful," she replied, "somebody might see you. You don't want to be seen here, do you?"

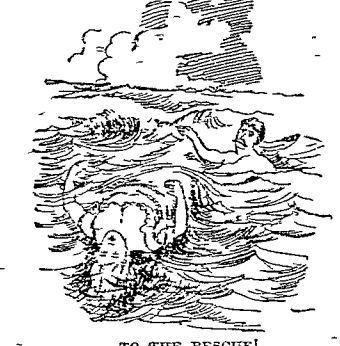

"I don't care," she replied, "I want you to bring it to me. Mr. Jones, Mr. De Funiak and Willie Watkins will go with you to keep away the ghosts."

"To hear is to obey," quoted the messenger, "but what recompense do I get for doing your behest?"

"The consciousness of a good deed well done," she replied, "and the fact that you have helped me to get away from this place."

"The consciousness of a good deed well done," she replied, "and the fact that you have helped me to get away from this place."

THE SOLDIER'S VISION.

STRANGE SIGHT SEEN IN A CHURCH IN VIRGINIA.

Aroused From His Slumber in the Shelter of the Consecrated Building to Witness the Return of a Ghostly Wedding Party to Its Old Haunts.

In the early days of the late war we were living with our family in a great country house in one of the border counties of Virginia, so called, as it was near that line of flame, the sad, fatal, fluctuating war.

Near our house was a church, a noble edifice and monument of the days gone by, when stately ladies and grand gentlemen composed its congregation. The old church, built in early colonial times, had seen the growth of our strong, young republic, and near its hallowed precincts were buried the descendants of princes, nobles and titled dames, the old cavaliers of Virginia. The wind made sad music through its sounding galleries and the raindrops splattered like tears of memory on its ruined walls. The church had been used as a barracks by passing troops in two years, who found safety from storms in its massive walls, and it could be used as a fortress of defense in sudden attack. In the swift flight of years it had fallen frequently into ruin and been again repaired, and once, while removing the rubbish, the workmen found a box hidden far back in an embrasure of the ruined tower, which contained a rich bridal garment, in a fashion of bygone years. The rare and costly fabric was blood-stained, and every evidence pointed to mysterious murder, but in answer to the questions, "Who did the deed?" "Who was the victim?" the echoes from nearly two centuries brought no reply.

One quiet night in June while we were sleeping after watching and praying for weary hours for loved ones in the army who might never return, we were startled by a knock at our front door, and on opening it a dark, determined man stood there and asked for shelter, which in a Virginia house is never refused. His uniform was dark brown, the color of dead oak leaves, his cap was knit of black and gray worsted, the color of dead moss and lichens of forest trees, his rifle was long and bright and a sheath knife glittered in his belt. As he stood in the weird light of the faintly dawning day he looked like a ghost of one of the old knights of Sherwood forest in the days of old Robin Hood, but we knew him for what he was, a Texas ranger so famous in the guerrilla warfare of the South. The color of his uniform so blended with the color of the woods that no one could suspect his presence.

After a hasty salutation he said: "I have seen strange things to-night, that make me doubt my own identity, and I have come to you, not with war stories and news of battles, but to ask the explanation of what I saw. I am acting as a scout for General Stuart and have been sent forward to obtain what information I can. I have passed quickly and quietly from one position to another, my presence not even suspected, and as night came on, tired out, I sought refuge in the old church so near you. I suppose I must have fallen asleep from utter weariness, for apparently I awoke to the sound of weird music, so plaintive and ghostly in its nature that all the superstitions I had learned from my negro nurse on the faraway old plantation possessed me at once.

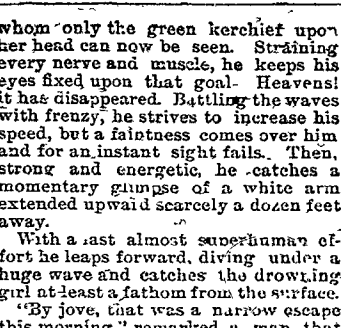

It was that wild, low strain, a wedding march or a funeral dirge, in its tones, tenderness, regret, sorrow and pity seemed blended. All at once the massive doors of the old church were swung open by unseen hands and the dim moonlight lit the old building with a ghostly light, and a phantom train of stately cavaliers and pale, lovely women entered the ancient sanctuary.

"Solemnly down the aisle the dim procession swept. I could hear the taps of the high-heeled shoes and the rustle of the ladies' trains as they passed over the old, damp stones, and the night winds toed their wayward plumes, and the low, dirge-like music kept time to their stately stepping.

"There was one among them fairer than all the rest. Surely the pearls in her golden hair and the shadowy veil had been arranged in delicate beauty by spirit hands, the soft, mournful eyes had a far-away look of grief, and at her side walked one dark and stern as midnight.

"The procession paused before the ruined chancel, and it seemed to me that bridal vows and deep sobs were mingled with low imprecations and muttered curses; the wail of a sad, low voice, a quiver and a shudder passed through the phantom and the vision mingled with the shadows of the night.

"Thoroughly aroused, I arose and went out into the moonlight; far away in the east the first rosy tints of the new morning were faintly glowing, while the sentinel stars still kept watch over the sleeping earth;

THE SOLDIER'S VISION.

STRANGE SIGHT SEEN IN A CHURCH IN VIRGINIA.

Aroused From His Slumber in the Shelter of the Consecrated Building to Witness the Return of a Ghostly Wedding Party to Its Old Haunts.

In the early days of the late war we were living with our family in a great country house in one of the border counties of Virginia, so called, as it was near that line of flame, the sad, fatal, fluctuating war.

Near our house was a church, a noble edifice and monument of the days gone by, when stately ladies and grand gentlemen composed its congregation. The old church, built in early colonial times, had seen the growth of our strong, young republic, and near its hallowed precincts were buried the descendants of princes, nobles and titled dames, the old cavaliers of Virginia. The wind made sad music through its sounding galleries and the raindrops splattered like tears of memory on its ruined walls. The church had been used as a barracks by passing troops in two years, who found safety from storms in its massive walls, and it could be used as a fortress of defense in sudden attack. In the swift flight of years it had fallen frequently into ruin and been again repaired, and once, while removing the rubbish, the workmen found a box hidden far back in an embrasure of the ruined tower, which contained a rich bridal garment, in a fashion of bygone years. The rare and costly fabric was blood-stained, and every evidence pointed to mysterious murder, but in answer to the questions, "Who did the deed?" "Who was the victim?" the echoes from nearly two centuries brought no reply.

One quiet night in June while we were sleeping after watching and praying for weary hours for loved ones in the army who might never return, we were startled by a knock at our front door, and on opening it a dark, determined man stood there and asked for shelter, which in a Virginia house is never refused. His uniform was dark brown, the color of dead oak leaves, his cap was knit of black and gray worsted, the color of dead moss and lichens of forest trees, his rifle was long and bright and a sheath knife glittered in his belt. As he stood in the weird light of the faintly dawning day he looked like a ghost of one of the old knights of Sherwood forest in the days of old Robin Hood, but we knew him for what he was, a Texas ranger so famous in the guerrilla warfare of the South. The color of his uniform so blended with the color of the woods that no one could suspect his presence.

After a hasty salutation he said: "I have seen strange things to-night, that make me doubt my own identity, and I have come to you, not with war stories and news of battles, but to ask the explanation of what I saw. I am acting as a scout for General Stuart and have been sent forward to obtain what information I can. I have passed quickly and quietly from one position to another, my presence not even suspected, and as night came on, tired out, I sought refuge in the old church so near you. I suppose I must have fallen asleep from utter weariness, for apparently I awoke to the sound of weird music, so plaintive and ghostly in its nature that all the superstitions I had learned from my negro nurse on the faraway old plantation possessed me at once.

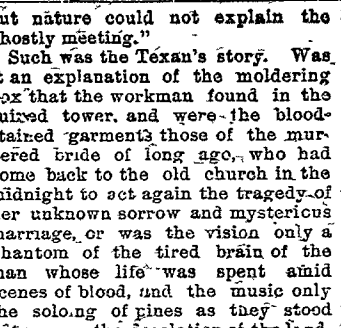

It was that wild, low strain, a wedding march or a funeral dirge, in its tones, tenderness, regret, sorrow and pity seemed blended. All at once the massive doors of the old church were swung open by unseen hands and the dim moonlight lit the old building with a ghostly light, and a phantom train of stately cavaliers and pale, lovely women entered the ancient sanctuary.

"Solemnly down the aisle the dim procession swept. I could hear the taps of the high-heeled shoes and the rustle of the ladies' trains as they passed over the old, damp stones, and the night winds toed their wayward plumes, and the low, dirge-like music kept time to their stately stepping.

"There was one among them fairer than all the rest. Surely the pearls in her golden hair and the shadowy veil had been arranged in delicate beauty by spirit hands, the soft, mournful eyes had a far-away look of grief, and at her side walked one dark and stern as midnight.

"The procession paused before the ruined chancel, and it seemed to me that bridal vows and deep sobs were mingled with low imprecations and muttered curses; the wail of a sad, low voice, a quiver and a shudder passed through the phantom and the vision mingled with the shadows of the night.

"Thoroughly aroused, I arose and went out into the moonlight; far away in the east the first rosy tints of the new morning were faintly glowing, while the sentinel stars still kept watch over the sleeping earth;
