IT WAS VERY QUIET

At the Council Meeting Monday Night.

GOOD BATCH OF BILLS ALLOWED.

Watermains to Be Extended—Police Department Censured—$500 Damages Wanted for a Fall on Side Walk.

There was a scant quorum present when President Hutton's gavel fell on the Northville Council's municipal desk Monday night. Ald. Burgess was enroute for Chicago, Ald. Clark had other business and Ald. Sessions was busy selling a pair of shoes. The latter arrived about 9 o'clock just in time to save losing his October salary. Some of the second ward residents wanted the water mains extended on Horton avenue. The council didn't appear to feel very favorable toward the extend but it was finally referred to the water board.

When the marshal's bill for services rendered was presented one of the aldermen said he didn't object to the bill at all, but he thought the village was getting very poor service in this line. Said that drunks and rowdies were altogether too common on our streets of late. Said he had seen one drunken man step up to the marshal and tell him "he was no good." Boys were raising the "old barry" yelling and running about the streets every night and there was no attempt made to stop it. The alderman's remarks brought a cheer from the gallery and the president remarked that he had expressed the sentiments of the entire community. All agreed that the marshal was a first rate good fellow but was too afraid of hurting some one's feelings.

The council didn't seem to "fall in" with petition of the Wing street residents, between Main and Dunlap street, for a light on the new guy-pole in middle way of the block, but they referred it to the lighting committee. The refer however was such a chilly one that it will probably never again see light.

Superintendent Clark of the U. S. fish hatchery presented a verbal petition asking that the village extend a four inch water pipe from Rogers street to the hatchery. He said that while there would be some income from it to the village, at the same time he thought the village owed this in a measure to the government as a fire protection. He said the government had expended something like $125,000 here during the past fourteen years, and though the government was not asking it, he thought the investment would be a good one. Ald. Wheeler agreed with the superintendent and said the government plant was of great value to Northville and should have our fire protection. He said if our finances were in shape to make the expenditure he would be in favor of the extension. President Dubur of the water board said the money raised for the last contracts would more than complete the work now on hand because they had been able to let the jobs for a much less price than was figured on. He was sure there would be money left, though he did not wish to be construed as committing himself just then in favor of the extension. In fact he had not looked into the matter at all yet. Superintendent Clark stated that he had figured out the cost and it would be less than $400. It was referred to the water board in the wind up.

Around the Country.

L. H. Cypher is now languishing in the Marquette prison.

A Romulus man named Post is just harvesting a second crop of ripe red strawberries.

Railroad Agent Clark of Milford has secured a wife. Miss Minnie Hale was the fair lady's name.

By sixty-one majority the Day Mfg Co. may get a $8,000 bonus to manufacture bath tubs at Milford.

Wm. Wilkins formerly of this place has traded his hotel at Holly for property near Fenton where he will move.

We can boast of better roads than any other town of our size in the county.—Clarkston Advertiser

Let's see now, about what is your size?

The Courier says we are mistaken and that "only a very few babies weigh nine pounds." We confess that editor Bear's assertion will carry more weight than ours.

A. N. Kimmis Jr., Nov's well known and popular supervisor, received the nomination for representative in the second district of Oakland county last week.

Potatoes begin to move.—Orion Review.
Yes we noticed them winking their eyes as we paid eighty cents a bushel for some last week.

The Newago Democrat, of which E. R. Reed is the editor, issued a very creditable daily during the soldiers and sailors association meeting there last week.

The prize band contest at the Milford fair is declared off. The prizes offered were too small to pay a band's expense and consequently no entries were made.

Bandits tried to hold up U. S. Mail Carrier Sprague of Farmington last week. It was a hair-breadth escape for Mr. Sprague though he equaled the emergency.

Some Chelsea young men who were put off the train last week for non-payment of car fare threw stones at the coaches and as a result they were arrested and held for trial.

Our subscription list is growing.—So. Lyon Excelsior.

So is ours—smaller. Now that isn't really the case, but it's the only way to make the item the least bit funny.

It took a So. Lyon school marm just five days to go over to Orion and back by railroad last week to attend the teachers examination. By the old stage coach method the trip would have consumed perhaps one and one-half days.

The University City of Washtenaw got one nominee for coroner and the prosecuting attorney at the republican convention held there last week. The balance of the ticket was scattered all over the county. No machine in Washtenaw, evidently.

The foot was not all dead yet. Burglars entered editor Fitch's residence at Pontiac last week, but were frightened away. Who ever heard of an editor being money.—Holly Advertiser.

Does the first sentence refer to the burglars or Editor Fitch?

One of our exchanges tells about a young man who "rowed over on his wheel." No fish story about that, eh?—A. A. Courier.

If the young man was of the double-up-like-a-jack-knife order we don't know but "rowed" is all right. Might call it "swimmed," we suppose.

Between the wind and worms all apples around Wayne will be made up into cider this fall.—Northville Record
Not so. The apples around Wayne will be made into cider "between" the press boards of Jas. Wright's cider mill.—Wayne Tidings.

That's rather a tight squeeze, but we guess it's all right.

G. W. Temple, a Romulus farmer, caught a chap removing a scraper from his barn. The fellow fled, paying no attention to pistol shots, but was finally captured. He gave his name as Louis Krupski. He had three harnesses in his possession.—Carleton Gazette.

And now Louis Krupski is in a bad scrape awaiting trial.

"Watch me letter drop," said some unknown chap at Ann Arbor last week as he dangled a ladies silver time keeper over one of the U. S. mail boxes. There was the watch running in among the letters when the carrier tapped the box next morning, and now the post-office officials want the owner to call for the same.

Tuesday we were shown a beautiful mounted specimen of a speckled trout caught in the forests of Maine by Dr. J. A. Harris. The doctor didn't think of preserving a specimen of his "catch" in that way until just a day or two before starting for his home or he might have skinned a larger and finer looking specimen. The trout he has prepared is a beauty and would be an ornament to be highly prized in any parlor.—Pontiac Times.

The Wayne Tidings and Plymouth Mail editors are calling each other blackguards, liars, etc., and all over a ball game which took place several weeks ago. If our memory serves us right, at the beginning of the ball season both editors were hugging, and patting one another on the back as they told of the general good feeling existing and the friendship to be cemented in the summer's ball games. 'Twas ever thus.

Will Meinhart, of Plymouth, picked 40 bushels of plums from one tree this year. That's the story, and we erase the interrogation point: after the story of the fisherman whose boat was swamped by the fish that jumped into it.—Commercial. And we wipe out the "astonisher" after the Washtenaw Times' account of a horse near Ypsilanti having a hole knocked through him by a meteor.—Ann Arbor Argus.

Meinhart lives right near Northville and has got the tree, plums and surroundings to back up the assertion. We don't want you two boys poking any more doubts into this plumb story.

The people of the 12th senatorial district, comprising the counties of Oakland and Macomb, are to be congratulated upon the nomination of Fred M. Warner of Farmington for this important office. Fred is one of the best known young men in Oakland county and is a hustler in every sense of the word. He commenced business for himself when he was but a boy and has made a success of everything he has since undertaken. In fact his business ability is of the highest order and will be of good service to him, should he be elected. Men of sound common sense and good business judgement are needed to make our laws and legislate for the common good. More business men and fewer politicians are what the people most need. Fred Warner seems particularly adapted to fill the bill. But few men in the district enjoy the friendship of so many people without regard to party.

E. S. WOODMAN DEAD.

The Well Known Gentleman Passed Away Wednesday.

Hon. E. S. Woodman who has been so seriously ill for some weeks past died Wednesday afternoon at his home in this village. The funeral occurs at three o'clock this afternoon at the residence, 15 Main street, Rev. Mr. Boyden assisted by Rev. Mr. Belding, officiating.

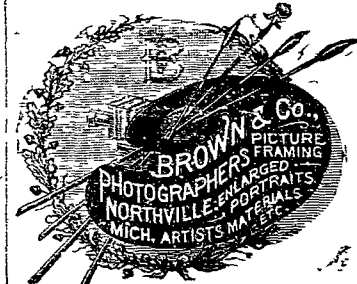

Mr. Woodman was a member of the Oakland and Wayne county bars as well as the Jefferson Co. bar New York. He was a member of the state constitutional convention of Michigan.

Deceased was born in Jefferson county, New York, Oct. 15, 1816. He came to Michigan in 1837 and settled in Novi where he resided until about twenty years ago when he moved to this village. He leaves a widow, one daughter, Mrs. Barrett of Milford, and three sons—Capt. J. H. of Ypsilanti, L. Cass of Seattle, Wash., and Charles of this place.

We copy the following from yesterday morning's Free Press:

The wonderful vitality that Mr. Woodman possessed is shown by the following incident. In January, 1893, the old gentleman was so ill that his death was expected at any moment. Notice of the seriousness of the case was sent to his son, George D., of Detroit, who in response to a request on the part of The Free Press for a short sketch of the well known Michigan lawyer sent in a few of the principal events of his father's life. In one week after writing it he, George D., was taken down and on January 22 died. His father, whose biography the son had just written, in turn wrote a short sketch of the dead son, and sent it to The Free Press.

Mrs. M. E. Paulger is again prepared to do dressmaking and plain sewing at her home, 27 Dunlap street.

THE RECORD.

F. S. NEAL, Publisher.

NORTHVILLE, MICHIGAN.

A watchmaker named Rhodes, formerly of Boston, has invented a clock which will run over a year at a single winding. The secret lies in the construction and adjustment of the escapement. The pendulum is of equal lengths above and below its axis and has its ends weighted, by means of which it is regulated. Mr. Rhodes says his idea is so capable of development that an eight-year clock is a possibility.

Pride is sometimes brought low by other means than a fall. A gentleman who paid a large sum for an officers' room on deck for an ocean voyage was inclined at first to give himself an air of superiority because of the superiority of his lodging. But a terrible storm flooded the deck for days thereafter and his pride was drowned out by a foot of water in his deck cabin; and he said, "I don't mind paying well to cross the Atlantic, but I don't like to go through it."

The eastern boundary of Alaska, which separates the United States from British territory, and is 600 miles in length, has been mapped out and determined to the satisfaction of both this country and Great Britain. When it is remembered that $60,000,000 worth of furs and salmon and $5,000,000 worth of gold and silver have been shipped since Alaska came into our possession, and consider also what this means in the future, it is gratifying to know that a vexed question has been settled. Disputes over boundaries are sometimes raised at very inopportune times.

To move the Eiffel tower from Paris to Baltimore will cost $500,000; still the managers of the Baltimore fair of 1897 say they are going to stand the expense. They are going to make the Baltimore show one of the greatest attractions on earth if they have to move over all of Paris and London, including the Thames and the famous old London bridge, to do it. Those Baltimore folks have been a long time in getting a move on themselves, but they have started now and they are an avalanche. The Eiffel tower on one of Baltimore's hills and Baltimore can tell what Washington had for breakfast.

To those people in middle life whose stomachs have grown somewhat bulky the Journal of Hygiene reads a useful lesson. Instead of advising them to deluge the stomach with all sorts of nostrums recommended to cure indigestion. It urges them to give that faithful but overworked organ a rest. Leave off the various nostrums, change an elaborate dish to one that is as simple as a little oatmeal gruel or Graham gem, and take plenty of outdoor exercise for the stomach's sake. Who, if suffering from a wounded finger, would hope to heal it by pouring over it all sorts of decoctions of which some form of alcohol was the prominent ingredient?

The Society for the Advancement of Science, which recently met in Brooklyn, has not lived in vain. Two of its members, inspired, no doubt, by the erudition that dripped from the numerous able papers read, determined to investigate the notorious Mapleton ghost that has kept the teeth of the western part of Long Island chattering for, lo, these many months. Their pursuit, aided by others, has finally developed a figure of straw, covered with a white sheet. The groans and moans and shrieks, supposed to come from this nocturnal prowler, were found to have come from the carefully concealed ghost workers. Another triumph of the Society for the Advancement of Science.

Two years ago New York was face to face with the most serious cholera scare that it has ever experienced. The experience of that unhappy period is not one to be looked back upon with pride or satisfaction; but some important lessons were learned then and have not been forgotten. The need of vigilance in guarding against the invasion of the dread-inspiring disease is not less now than at any time in the past, though with proper care in detention and inspection at ports on the other side of the ocean there is no reason why any cases of cholera should even approach our shores.

Of course, the moral obliquity of the milkman would be dense if he did nothing more than to adulterate milk with such well-water as the Montclair, N. J., milkman used not long ago. Well-water that had been contaminated with typhoid fever germs, and which resulted in one hundred cases of typhoid fever developing along one milk route in Montclair. But what shall be said of the responsibility for milk adulteration when it is remembered that as a result of it, whether impure or pure water is used, thousands of children, compelled to depend upon it as food, die annually from lack of proper nourishment, from sheer starvation?

The West is beyond the domination of the East. The seat of empire is not in New England, nor in the middle states. It passed from them long ago. Every decennial census is followed by a redistribution of seats in the national house of representatives, and each successive appointment strengthens the West as compared with the East.

The fact that a manufacturer or merchant is anxious to make known his goods to the public is regarded by most people as evidence that they possess merit.

FACES ON OUR COINS.

SOME ROMANCES OF THE NATIONAL CURRENCY.

A Tragic Face Adorns the New $1,000 Silver Certificate—Models Copied From Women in Every Walk of Life—A Washer Woman Honored.

THE MAJORITY OF people who take the time to examine the heads of handsome women that adorn the different denominations of currency and silver pieces, dollars, halves, quarters and dimes, take it for granted that the faces are not the reproduction of real life, but are ideals. In a few cases these people are right, but in the great majority they are wrong. Most of these faces are those of handsome women in various walks of life whose particular type of beauty has appealed to the designers of the plates from which the currency is struck off, and to those who prepare the moulds from which our silver coins are taken. It is the statuesque Juno-like type of beauty that generally appeals to these designers, and the subjects are not always chosen from the higher walks of life.

On bills of high denominations have appeared from time to time the faces of favored courtésans, and in one instance the model was a herculean washerwoman with the stern, strong, aggressive features of a Medusa. The treasury department has just received from the bureau of engraving and printing the first installment of the new $1,000 silver certificates and has begun putting them into circulation.

On bills of high denominations have appeared from time to time the faces of favored courtésans, and in one instance the model was a herculean washerwoman with the stern, strong, aggressive features of a Medusa. The treasury department has just received from the bureau of engraving and printing the first installment of the new $1,000 silver certificates and has begun putting them into circulation.

THE HEAD USED ON QUARTERS AND DIMES. In the right corner of the hand some certificate is the vignette of Secretary Macey, and on the left is the face and bust of an unnamed but attractive female.

As soon as the new bill was circulated around the treasury department a number of the old employees scrutinized the features of the unnamed and declared that they were familiar. No one, however, could recall the face at first. The designer and engraver was appealed to. He refused to give any information about the model further than to say she was a real flesh and blood model and not an ideal. Further questioning developed the fact that she was still in the land of the living. Europe was her abiding place.

The new bill was passed from hand to hand for some days after this. Curiosity among the treasury employees was at concert pitch, when one of the new certificates happened to come before the eyes of a retired army officer who is at present living in Washington, and who twenty years ago was recognized as one of the gayest of New York's gaybachelors.

He studied the face for a moment, then said: "Why, that's Josie Mansfield, the woman for whom Ed Stokes, the proprietor of the Hoffman house in New York, shot 'Ernie' Jim Fisk in the Grand Central hotel years ago."

Such proved to be the case. A number of photographs of the world-famous courtesan, taken when she reigned as the queen of the New York demi-monde, were unearthed. Among the number was one which served as the model for the designer. It was one of the best of the collection. In it the facial beauty of the Mansfield was shown in all its symmetry without any adornment. There was nothing theatrical about it.

The happy possessor of these $1,000 certificates can turn to it and see Josie Mansfield when Jim Fisk played the part of the infatuated Antony, and when the handsome Stokes stepped in and stole Fisk's Cleopatra.

The face is firmly though not sternly set. There is just the suggestion of a smile hovering around the corners of her lips which is strongly indicative of kindly benevolence. The hair is brushed back from the forehead and caught in a knot at the back of the head. All in all it is one of the handsomest faces that has ever appeared on a piece of currency paper.

Those who glance at the face in relief on our silver dollar of the Bland coinage will be struck with the ideality of the subject. It is not an ideal, however. The model was a Miss Williams, a school teacher, of Philadelphia.

On the new silver coins of 1892 coinage appears the head of a handsome female. The features are regular, of the Grecian type. The chin is strong and squarely moulded. The neck is truly the subject for the sculptor. The hair is drawn from the forehead a la pompadour and is caught at the crown, where rests a flat knot.

This is the face of a French washerwoman who was first seen by the designer for the French mint as she was leaning over her washtub on the bank of the River Seine.

Little difficulty was experienced in getting her to pose before the camera. She was paid 25 francs for her trouble. Some thirty photographs were taken, and, after being picked over by a committee, the one that we now see on our 1892 coins was chosen. The face was designed for the 5-franc piece. On the French coin the face looks toward the left. Our mint officers turned it toward the right and adorned the head with a spray of flowers. It is one of the prettiest models that has been seen on any coin.

PLAIN DR. ANDREWS.

President of Brown University Is Not Fond of Fine Dress.

Dr. E. Benjamin Andrews, president of Brown university, a delegate to the Brussels monetary conference and a well-known writer on social, economic and religious subjects, is rather careless about his personal appearance. He was one of the delegates to the recent big Baptist anniversary at Saratoga. As the Baptist train en route swung by a little station up in York state, the eagle-eyed operator discovered the figure of a man stowed away on the rear platform, hat pulled down over his eyes, safe from view and everything else except the curling dust and flying pebbles. So the operator wired ahead to the next station as follows: "Look out for tramp on No. 36, rear platform. Jones." The operator at the next station promptly pulled up the train and the conductor went to the rear to investigate. There was the man—a big broad-shouldered fellow, his hat pulled down over his eyes, covered with dust and so generally rough and tough looking that the conductor didn't hanker after a tackle. So he sent for the brakeman. What followed is indicated by the dispatch which Operator Jones at the back station received a few minutes after from his brother operator. Here it is: "Tramp all right. Going to the Baptist convention with a ticket. Takes his water 100 feet and is president of Brown university."

Sculptor Ball and the Seales Monument. Thomas Ball, the sculptor, has given his entire time for several years past to the great Seales Washington monument for Methuen, Mass., and not for two years to come will it be completed. The central figure, representing the father of his country standing with one hand on his sword and the other extended in benediction over the kneeling statue of Columbia, is done, but there are four colossal seated figures to be added and four busts of the leading generals of Washington's military family. This will be the most important work in Mr. Ball's artistic career.

Paris Exhibition of 1900. Thirty-six projects for what is called the Clou, or main attraction, of the Paris exhibition for 1900 have been sent in to the special sub-committee. The well-known engineer, M. Armand-Jean, proposes the offering of handsome prizes for solutions of the three problems, transmission of sight to a distance, chromophotography on paper, and electric lighting without focus, by cold light with the aid of electric undulations of great frequency. M. Flammarion, the astronomer, proposes a shaft showing the various geological epochs with their inhabitants, and also an arrangement by which the spectator would witness the revolution of the earth as if from the surface of the moon. M. Tronze, the electrician, advocates a luminous cascade falling from the upper platform of the Eiffel tower and also a luminous fountain rising to the same height. A bridge 100 meters, or 330 feet wide, is to be thrown across the Seine opposite the Invalides, and lined on either side with houses and shops like the old Pont Neuf and old London bridge.

John Quincy Adams' Fondness for Fishing. The old story, good enough to be true, is revived about the late John Quincy Adams as a disciple of the gentle art of fishing. It is told that a Quincy client of his, whose case was to be tried on a certain morning, was unable to get his counsel to go to Boston or to leave his fishing boat, except long enough to write a note to the judge, which, when presented, caused that worthy magistrate to announce to the court: "Mr. Adams is detained on important business." The note read: "DEAR JUDGE,—For the sake of old Isaac Walton, please continue my case until Friday. The smelt are biting and I can't leave."

SPEND YOUR OUTING ON THE GREAT LAKES.

Visit picturesque Mackinac Island. It will only cost you about $12.50 from Detroit; $15 from Toledo; $18 from Cleveland, for the round trip, including meals and berths. Avoid the heat and dust by traveling on the D. & C. floating palaces. The attractions of the trip to the Mackinac region are unsurpassed. The island itself is a grand romantic spot, its climate most invigorating. Two new steel passenger steamers have just been built for the upper lake route, costing $300,000 each. They are equipped with every modern convenience—annunciators, bath-rooms, etc., illuminated throughout by electricity, and are guaranteed to be the grandest, largest and safest steamers on fresh water. These steamers favorably compare with the great ocean liners in construction and speed. Four trips per week between Toledo, Detroit, Alpena, Mackinac, St. Ignace, Petoskey, Chicago, "Sooy," Marquette and Duluth. Daily between Cleveland and Put-in-Bay. The cabins, parlors and staterooms of these steamers are designed for the complete entertainment of humanity under home conditions; the palatial equipment, the luxury of the appointments, makes traveling on these steamers thoroughly enjoyable. Send for illustrated descriptive pamphlet. Address: A. A. SCHANTZ, G. F. & T. A., & C. Detroit, Mich.

MY MOTHER'S MEMORY.

There is one bright star in heaven, Ever shining in my night, God to me one guide has given, Like the sailor's beacon light. Set on every shoal and danger, Leading out its warning ray To the homeward, weary stranger, Looking for the landlocked bay. In my farthest, wildest wanderings I have turned me to that love, As a diver 'neath the water Turns to watch the light above. —John Boyle O'Reilly.

MY JO, JOHN.

BY HELEN B. MATHERS.

With the irritability of a sick mind, his thoughts flew to Pigeon-wick, and by contrast with what he actually beheld, there showed to him the warm meadow-side where he and Mary always went to look for early violets, and, vividly fresh, he seemed to smell the clear pure scent of the primroses that grew in patches in the woods, great clusters that sat in the midst of their green leaves as in baskets, and which Mary often dug up bodily and transplanted to her garden.

But all that was Mary's now—and this park was his, to come and go in as he willed, with its weeded paths, its costly flower-beds, and its smart and shabby crowd, that cared nothing for him, and only appraised him by his coat, and very little at that.

A little wind sprang up as he turned out of the park gates, and seemed to hustle him, and push him rudely about, and indeed he had a sort of half-dressed, half-furnished feeling about him, and he wondered why it was, till he remembered that this was the first time for years he had ever come into the park without Mary's hand on his arm.

He shuddered with a sudden sense of mental and physical cold, as a man may who, all wrapped in the summer warmth of home love, finds himself suddenly thrust out into the street—alone.

As he stood waiting to cross the exit from the park, a lady suddenly drew up her "rats" and accosted him. It was Lady Blanche, with a little boy on either side of her—no woman ever more sedulously flattered the domesticities in the eyes of society than did she—and there was a little soon as well as kindness in the glance she flashed upon the tall, sad-faced man.

"Did you get my note?" she said. "This afternoon, then, at five," and whirled away, leaving folks to wonder why the bare-headed chap, gazing at her, seemed to have forgotten to put on his hat.

CHAPTER III.

No. 300 Harley street was not one of those fashionable houses in which the master occupies the dressing-room, and madame entertains gentlemen at afternoon tea; nor was the one addicted to dining at his club, and the other to "doing" a little dinner and play with a friend. The house in fact, was conducted more on the lines of a country than a town one, so that when on a particular evening the clock had struck eight, and the colonel was not yet in, something like consternation reigned in the kitchen, while apprehension sat in state upstairs in the drawing-room.

Dinner was served at last, and Mary sat up to it valiantly, having got over her tears in the morning, and made, during the past hour, a little resolution that "this comforting her marvellously did her heart and mind credit."

How dull it was without him! How entirely was she at a standstill, now she had not him to nag at, and nagging with Mary was a brand-new accomplishment, and like all new acquisitions, required to be thoroughly well aired while it was fresh.

She had lately come near to positively hating him, yet she felt, tonight how infinitely better was his despondent presence than his empty chair. A little absence will sometimes serve a man in kinder stead than whole volumes of spoken excuses and repentance, and an awful thought of how she would probably dine alone for the major part of her existence (save during Tom's vacations) took the spring out of her figure and the flavor out of the food with which Fletcher, wearing an air of the deepest reproach, served her.

When she suggested that something should be kept not for his master, he acquiesced with a reserve that said as plainly as possible: "You drove him out—how can you expect him to return?" while his aggrieved eyes seemed to ask: "What have you been doing to your youngest child now? You have upset him and he will go without his dinner, and be made ill, and really, ma'am, considering the life you have led him lately, you had ought to be ashamed of yourself!"

"Our youngest child," that was the colonel's nickname, invented by Mary in a moment of hilarity, and the name had stuck to him, and the old servants knew of it, and its suitability was thoroughly recognized by everyone throughout the house.

A born student, he had been thrust, much against his will, into the army in early youth so that he found himself called upon to display those qualities in which nature had made him most deficient.

But in comparatively early middle life he was able to throw aside the trappings and habits that he abhorred, and settle down with Mary among the books that he loved, books that overflowed both the town and country houses between which they passed their time very pleasantly, and without regard to those fashionable periods for migration that governed their less fortunate neighbors.

Probably no one would have called them an ideal pair, but they had been a thoroughly comfortable one, though neither was aware of how entirely indispensable one was to the other. And now, after nearly twenty years of married life, the thread of their slow-winding happiness had broken off sharp, or rather—as Mary said to herself, it had been cut in twain by her own sharp tongue in less than a minute. But could it not be knit together again, ay, and so that the joint should be neither seen nor felt?

Mary was (that sweetest hall-mark of a noble mind) forgiving, and when Fletcher had finally shut the door on her, with a subdued sternness that said he shut her in to her own reflections, and much consolation might they bring her, she began to make excuses for her absent man until gradually all his faults dwindled, and were swallowed up in the enormity of her own.

Even Lady Blanche receded, and only that morning she had seemed to stand there in the very flesh between husband and wife! And if a woman ever has any doubt about possessing a heart, let her be really jealous. Then a long, darting skewer will run through a bit of her anatomy, and she will know.

She thought of the gradual change that had come over him of late, of how easily she had discovered that he was hiding something from her of which he was both sorry and ashamed, so that often he found it impossible to meet her eyes with those blue ones of his, that were usually guileless as a child's.

Tom used to say that to draw his father's attention to outside matters when he was engaged in abstruse meditation was like watching the dawn of reason in the eyes of a baby; first a gleam, then a slow wavering light, then partial comprehension, and finally a satisfied and clear awakening.

This absence of mind made him peculiarly liable to imposture of all descriptions, and Mary viewed his occasional visits to the city with the deepest mistrust, for if he did get an idea, poor innocent, it was pretty sure to be a wrong one, and tolerably certain to bring him to grief. These visits, however, had lately been entirely overlooked in Mary's dumfounded amazement at one day finding him tucked comfortably into Lady Blanche Jessup's ingle-nook, a cup of tea in one hand, a piece of muffin in the other and upon his comely face a look of complete satisfaction such as latterly it had never worn at home.

"John!" she gasped, but the devoted man had not even the grace to seem ashamed of himself, and presently she found that this dropping-in process had been going on a considerable time, and in telling her Lady Blanche had laughed—not triumphantly, but as if she were intensely amused at either husband or wife—possibly both.

Lady Blanche was a bit of a gambler on the stock exchange, and occasionally carried on some exceedingly risky operations, in which, or reported lied, she lost none of her own, and a great deal of her friends' money, and Mary, though not at all conversant with current chronicles of scandalousness, was aware of this and knew that her husband's pocket stood in equal danger with his heart.

And she naturally disliked and mistrusted this emphatically nineteenth century woman, with whom she had never been on terms of more than slight acquaintance, and with whom she had not an idea or taste in common while no doubt from the bottom of her soul the other despised one who could be perfectly charming and lovable, but never by any possibility "smart," that word of magic which covers with its egis every bad, wicked and outrageous act that a woman now-a-days can commit. And in thinking of her tonight, Mary could not imagine where the attraction in her lay for John Anderson.

Long as she had looked into that simple, sincere, faithful soul, she had found only reverence for good women and pity, but no contempt for bad ones, and so far as she could tell, only two human figures had loomed large through the abstraction in which he lived and they were herself and their only surviving son, Tom.

Mary took a sip of coffee, glancing uninterestedly at the letters that lay on the white cloth, then gave a cry of pleasure, for there was one from Tom, and several obvious carols of invitation, and one other letter that immediately fastened her attention, there was such an air of business, legal business, about it.

What possible business could there be for anyone to write to her about? and she knew even less of business than the "youngest child."

There was a fatherly old lawyer who attended to all the money affairs of these two babes in the wood, and managed indeed very excellently for them, and if he ever wrote, it was to the husband, not the wife, and this was not his handwriting.

And John had said this morning, he was going to his solicitors. She repeated the words over in a strange little whisper to herself and this letter was not from them, what could it be? She stretched her hand out at last, and took it. As she read its contents, a horrible, creeping feeling seemed to stir through her brain, and a coldness as of death numbed her fingers and spread upward to her heart.

She read it once, knowing what it was, but not understanding. She read it a second time without believing what it said, then came complete comprehension, and she sat as one who no longer breathed, frozen in her place.

It was from a firm of lawyers whose name she had never heard, and it was very short, very much to the purpose, and almost brutal in its plainness.

It said that Colonel Anderson had that day requested them to draw up a deed of separation between him and his wife, by which her own income and Pigeonwick were to be hers, for her separate use and maintenance, out of which were to be defrayed the expenses of Mr. Tom Anderson, now at Oxford. That the house in Harley street, with its contents, save such things that actually belonged to herself, were to belong solely to the colonel, also his income from half-pay, and all private property whatsoever. Such servants as she required, Mrs. Anderson was designed to select, and take with her to Pigeonwick, and finally she was courteously desired to make all her arrangements as speedily as possible, as Colonel Anderson had arranged to go abroad immediately.

Oh! with what cruel, what indecent haste was he hurrying to be rid of her, giving not even time to her in which to draw breath!

The humble words of prayer for forgiveness that had trembled all that day on Mary's lips were driven back and choked by the deep burning sense of injustice succeeding that first speechless anguish in her soul would he have dared to turn even a servant out so abruptly, without giving her a chance of saying forgiveness for the fault she had committed?

But a wife is an upper servant who cannot even claim the right of giving or receiving a month's warning, who has no wages, no perquisites, and is never expected to be ill, or cross or unfit for her duties from year's end to year's end.

Mary had for some time ceased to tremble, and now she rose up and walked, with the dignity that sometimes comes with a great calamity, upstairs.

It seemed to her that she stayed for hours upon hours in the dainty rooms, sweet with flowers and gay with the many gleamings of a delightful taste, and the treasures that accumulate naturally in a house that has been dwelt in many years.

There hung his portrait, as good-looking and sweet-tempered a young fellow then as ever wore the uniform of the "Pinks." Yonder were the miniatures of the children who had died, and of the little girl, over whose death John had grieved most of all, and a lock of whose hair he wore always next his heart. Mary looked at them all, with that proud anger still in her breast, and Lady Blanche's face very clear and distinct before her, and when at last she went upstairs, she was proud and angry and irreconcilable still, and it was with a sense of relief that, missing her maid, Mrs. Fletcher, she remembered she had given the woman a holiday to go into the country to see her child, remaining until the next day.

When she had got into her dressing-gown, and was brushing out her abundant, curly brown hair, she suddenly heard some one moving softly in the adjoining dressing-room, and stood still, with beating heart to listen.

It was not John, but Fletcher. She opened the door partly, and called to him.

"What are you doing, Fletcher?" she said.

"I have had a telegram from master, ma'am saying he would be very late, and I had better prepare the dressing-room for him to-night."

She shut the door softly, and went back.

Subterranean London. It gives an impressive idea what subterranean London is fast becoming to learn that on emerging from the river the new City and Waterloo line will, in its passage up Queen Victoria street, run for a part of the way underneath the low level main sewer, which in its turn runs along beneath the District Underground railway. So that at this point in the city we shall have first a busy main thoroughfare, below that a steam railway, then a huge metropolitan sewer, then an electric railway, reaching its terminus at a depth of sixty-three feet below the streets, and here it will communicate with another line—the Central London—which will lie at a depth of eighty feet.

What May It Cost in the End?

The servant girl problem is being worked out in the New Haven courts. Mrs. Hendee heard her domestic complaining about her hard work and discharged her on the spot, offering her $2, the balance of wages to the end of the week. The girl demanded a week's notice or a week's pay and refused the $2. Mrs. Hendee tucked the bill in the girl's dress and pushed her from the house. A justice has given judgment against the housekeeper for $25 and an appeal is pending.

The Frigate Bird.

Though the petrel is swift, the frigate bird is far swifter. Seamen generally believe that the frigate bird can start at daybreak with the trade winds of the coast of Africa and roost the same night upon the American shore. Whether this is a fact has not yet been conclusively determined, but it is certain that this bird is the swiftest of winged creatures, and is able to fly under favorable circumstances, 200 miles an hour.

Real Rose Trees.

At Cologne there is a rose tree which is believed to be 300 years old and has a trunk of four feet in circumference. California has one at Ventura which is now three feet in circumference at the ground. It was only planted in 1876 and now covers 2,000 feet.

NICOTINIZED NERVES. The Tobacco Habit Quickly Broken and Nerve Force Restored—A Broom to Humanity.

A number of our great and most inveterate tobacco smokers and chewers have quit the use of the filthy weed. The talismanic article that does the work is no-to-bac. The reform was started by Aaron Gorber, who was a confirmed slave for many years to the use of tobacco. He tried the use of no-to-bac, and to his great surprise and delight it cured him. Hon. C. W. Ashcom, who had been smoking for sixty years, tried no-to-bac and it cured him. Col. Samuel Stoutener, who would eat up tobacco like a cow eats hay, tried this wonderful remedy, and even Samuel, after all his years of slavery, lost the habit. J. C. Cobier, Lesley Evans, Frank Dail, George H. May, C. O. Skillington, Hanson, Robert, Frank Herschberger, John Shinn and others have since tried no-to-bac and in every case they report, not only a cure of the tobacco habit, but a wonderful improvement in their general physical and mental condition, all of which goes to show that the use of tobacco had been injurious to them in more ways than one.—From "The Press, Everett, Pa."

THE NORTHVILLE SCHOOLS.

They Are Certainly All Right and Progressive.

Any idea that may have gone abroad that pupils cannot fit themselves for the University of Michigan of any of our colleges, from the Northville school should be dispelled. The Normal, Albion and the State Agricultural college are on the diploma list and pupils can enter the University by passing the required examination. That a graduate of the Northville school can pass this examination is proven by the fact that three of our boys have just entered the University direct. They are Thad Knapp, classical; Geo. Gibson, scientific; Ralph Horton, pharmacy.

It is no fault of the Northville school that it is not on the University diploma list. It is more a matter of U of M red tape. The University will not allow its board to examine into the work of any school in order to put it on the diploma list except when three or more teachers are employed in the high school.

The Northville schools are all right and it reflects credit on the work done here when three of its graduates pass by examination direct into the greatest University in the world.

This is what a newspaper man gets for being so truthful.

A medical journal offers the following as a method to keep flies out of the house, which will do to paste up for use next summer: "Expose a little oil of bay in a saucer on a window sill, or coat your doors and windows with any color of paint you like, containing as little as four per cent. of oil of bay, which is far from expensive and can be had anywhere, and not a single fly will enter your house."

"Jack" McCullough, while some the worse for budge, made an assault on P. C. Garfield (the old man), and gave him a pounding near the savings bank Monday evening. THE NORTHVILLE SCHOOLS.
They Are Certainly All Right and Progressive.
Any idea that may have gone abroad that pupils cannot fit themselves for the University of Michigan or any of our colleges, from the Northville school should be dispelled. The Normal, Albion and the State Agricultural college are on the diploma list and pupils can enter the University by passing the required examination. That a graduate of the Northville school can pass this examination is proven by the fact that three of our boys have just entered the University direct. They are Thad Knapp, classical; Geo. Gibson, scientific; Ralph Horton, pharmacy.
It is no fault of the Northville school that it is not on the University diploma list. It is more a matter of U of M red tape. The University will not allow its board to examine into the work of any school in order to put it on the diploma list except when three or more teachers are employed in the high school.
The Northville schools are all right and it reflects credit on the work done here when three of its graduates pass by examination direct into the greatest University in the world.

Of our band at the Plymouth fair the Mail says: "The Northville band added life to the fair each day. They have made a wonderful stride since their organization and deserve the popularity they have gained."

How will the college classes which graduate in 1900 be classed? This year's class was "94" of course and next year will be "95" but "99" for 1900 would hardly be just the thing. How would "naughty-naught" do?

The band gave a delightful concert Saturday night. There was a large and enthusiastic crowd out and after an absence of two weeks the music was especially appreciable. They will be out again tomorrow night and play at the opera house front.

The Presbyterian minister was stopped on the street last week by a Northville gentleman with, "Say! how do you do? Your name is 'Neal, isn't it? You run the Record here, don't you?" and the grasp of the hand became tighter and more hearty. Mr. Belding, (we presume), felt quite complimented. This is what a newspaper man gets for being so truthful.

A medical journal offers the following as a method to keep flies out of the house, which will do to paste up for use next summer: "Expose a little oil of bay in a saucer on a window sill, or coat your doors and windows with any color of paint you like, containing as little as four per cent. of oil of bay, which is far from expensive and can be had anywhere, and not a single fly will enter your house."

"Jack" McCullough, while some the worse for budge, made an assault on P. C. Garfield (the old man), and gave him a pounding near the savings bank Monday evening. It might have been more serious had not some factory employees happened along about the time and bade "Jack," hands off. Where are the city police? It is time such disgraceful scenes in our village were squelched. Where are we at, anyway?

W. H. Drace, H. J. Taylor, Dr. P. C. Butts and G. G. Lomson, well known Rochester citizens, were here Tuesday and Wednesday making an official investigation of our water works system for their village which is about to put in the same kind of a plant. The two former gentlemen are members of the village council and the two latter of the water board. They all expressed themselves as being highly pleased with their visit and congratulated Northville people upon having one of the best water works systems in this country.

The operation requiring the amputation of Mrs. Waid's left arm an inch or two below the shoulder was successfully performed Saturday by Dr. McGraw of Detroit assisted by Drs. Swift, Burgess and Blanchard of this place. Mrs. Waid is now quite comfortable and every hope is entertained for her recovery. The case, (which we described last week,) was a peculiar one, the physicians including Dr. McGraw say they never before heard of its like. But few if any of our readers will be able to call to mind an instance previous to this, where a lady's arm was amputated.

Presbyterian notes: Next Sunday morning Mr. Belding will deliver the third sermon on Genesis, subject: "The Six Days of Creation." The fourth and last sermon on Jonah will be given in the evening. Subject: "The Spreading Sword and the Speeding Worm."—Rev's Wallace of Plymouth and Belding exchanged pulpits Sunday morning.—Rev. Mr. Belding with Rev. J. M. Patterson of Westminster church Detroit constitute the home mission committee of this Presbytery.—The parsonage is to be handsomely painted.—Attractive music next Sunday evening at the Jonah service.—Dr. Will Hart was appointed secretary of the Sunday school.—The junior YPSCE is booming.

Of the Labadie-Rowell company the Owosso Evening Argus of Sept. 19 says: "The entertainment at Salisbury's last night given by the Labadie Rowell company was good. In this particular case a prophet has honor in his own country. The audience was a large one who came out to greet their old favorite and neighbor, Miss Hattie Rowell, and her accomplished husband Francis Labadie. Miss Rowell played the character of a Cuban girl, while her husband was a Yankee from "Jonesville, state of Maine." Hubert Labadie was the villain, without which no play is now complete. The two leading parts were played by Mr. Labadie and Miss Rowell and no better acting has been seen on the Owosso stage. As a comedian Mr. Labadie has few equals. A fine addition to the company is Ernest Gamble, the basso profundo, who charms wherever he sings."

Wanted two copies of the RECORD of Sept. 7.

In purchasing or inquiring for goods please say you saw the advertisement in the RECORD.

Visitors at the Northville mills should inspect the two horse power engine being constructed for the Plymouth mill company. It is a model of neatness, and simplicity of design.

MICHIGAN MATTERS.

INTERESTING STATE NEWS OF ALL SORTS.

Prof. Estabrook, of Olivet College, One of Michigan's Leading Educators Dead.

—That Alleged Murder Still a Mystery.

—Detroit Loses the Street Car Fight.

Prominent Michigan Educator Dead.

Once more the Olivet college flag is at half-mast. Joseph Estabrook, the principal of the normal department of Olivet college, passed away. He taught his various classes until about a week before when he was taken ill, was soon confined to his bed and destined never again to rise from it. He was conscious almost to the end, and his death was most peaceful.

Prof. Estabrook was a man who unconsciously endeavored himself to the hearts of all in his wide circle of acquaintances, and Olivet in mourning his loss, outmingle his tears with the sorrow of the whole state. Teaching was his life work and his love of study kept him abreast of the times in all methods of school education. He was also a minister of the gospel, and his upright life won for him hosts of friends.

Joseph Estabrook was born at Bath, N. H., in 1820 where he obtained a common school education, but he worked his way through Oberlin College. He taught at various places for 12 years and for 14 years following was principal of the Ypsilanti public school. In 1871 he was made principal of the Ypsilanti normal school and after laboring there for nine years accepted the call to Olivet college, where he was for a salary not exceeding $1,000 a year, but he was a true minister of the gospel, and for three years superintendent of public instruction.

A Youthful Wholesale Burglar.

For some time past burglars have been at work in the small towns of Ionia county. Sheriff Montgomery arrested Bert Chapman, of Ionia, on suspicion. When searched he was armed with a .38-caliber revolver and a dirk. Sheriff Montgomery wanted to know where he had been and where he was going. Chapman said he was a young man's grand father, and found a Winchester rifle and shotgun and a trunk containing chains, rings, and other jewelry stolen from the store of Hoack & Cotter Peck, four revolvers, nine razors, together with guns stolen from Benson & Crawford's hardware store at Saranac; a kit of bugle tools, a pocketbook containing a number of rare coins, a lady's handbag, seven 1,000-mile books stolen from the D. I. & N. ticket office at Lyons and about 100 other articles. Chapman is about 20 years old, was reared in Ionia, is of respectable parentage, but owing to family troubles has been allowed to run wild.

Jury Wouldn't Believe Mrs. Hurd.

The jury in the Hurd murder case at Allegan rendered a verdict as follows: "We find that the deceased, Ira Hurd, came to his death at the village of Allegan from a gunshot wound from a revolver or gun in the hands of some person to us unknown." This verdict seems to give no credit to the story of Mrs. Hurd that she fired the shot. The jury advised that the testimony in the case be kept secret for the present, and no made recommendations as to the further investigation of the case. It has been learned on good authority that very important testimony was given to the jury, but no arrests have been made as yet.

Ex-Gov. Fitch Honored.

The Washtenaw County Bar Association at Ann Arbor honored ex-Governor Alpheus Fitch on the twentieth anniversary of his birthday with a banquet. The affair was a brilliant success. Seventy men of law sat down at a beautifully decorated table to do honor to a schoolmate of Longfellow.

The common council of Ann Arbor, the same evening performed a very nice duty. The park that is to be formed out of the old cemetery was christened Fitch park, in honor of the distinguished ex-governor.

Don't Want MacInnes Fort Abandoned.

Senator McMillan has sent a telegram to Secretary Lamont, at Washington, setting forth the reasons why in the minds of many citizens of Michigan the old fort at MacInnes should not be abandoned. The dispatches from Washington announcing that the company of the Nineteenth infantry at MacInnes will shortly depart from Fort Brady has caused a good deal of agitation among certain residents of the state, who regard the old fort (post, it should properly be termed) with veneration on account of its historical associations.

Confidence Game and High-Way Robbery.

W. N. Hillock and Bert Hillock are locked up at Port Huron, charged with highway robbery. One of the Hillocks coerced Alex. Glennie, whom he knew had received money from a mortgage, to take a walk down from the toll gate. While there, they suddenly accosted by a robber, who went through Glennie's clothes and took $63, but did not touch his companion. Hillock advised Glennie not to report the matter to the police, but he did so.

Detroit Loses the Street Railway Fight.

The long-deferred decision in the matter of the appeal of the Detroit Citizens' Street Railway company from the decision of Judge Taft, holding the company's franchise invalid, was handed down in the United States court of appeals, sitting at Cincinnati. Judge Lurion read the decision which overruled Judge Taft's former decision in favor of the city of Detroit. No dissenting opinion was filed.

Republic Mine All Night.

At a recent meeting of the board of directors of the Republic mine, held in Cleveland, it was decided to continue operations at the mine for the winter. The mine has a great amount of the finest ore on hand, which at the present time they are unable to dispose of at any profit.

Mary Smith, a Gipsy, stole a lot of silverware from a Mason house and was fined $100.

Thomas and Daniel Hastings, mere boys, charged with breaking into a freight car, were caught at Vicksburg.

KILLING DEER FOR MONEY.

Unprincipled Hunters from Other States Slaughtering Upper Peninsula Game.

An Iron Mountain correspondent says: Fully 500 hunters from other states are killing deer unlawfully in Dickinson county. These men are without the true instincts of a sportsman and hunt simply for the money there is in it. The fact of the matter is that the game laws of this state are being grossly violated. Deer are run with dogs and "shining" is indulged in regularly. Nearly two-thirds of all the deer in Michigan are found in the forests of Dickinson, Iron, Marquette, and Ontonagon counties. The residents are highly incensed at the wanton destruction of deer which is now going on. A petition is being prepared which will call the attention of Gov. Rich to the state of affairs and ask that the state game warden give more attention to the upper peninsula.

Homes and Farms Debits.

Washington. A census bulletin has been issued, giving the ownership and debt of farms and homes in Michigan. It shows that $2.99 per cent of the farms are owned, and of these 50.63 per cent are owned free of incumbrance. The debt on farms amount of $64,414,586, which is 32.33 per cent of their value. The interest rate is 7.10 per cent. Of the homes 58.49 per cent are owned, and 67.75 per cent of these are owned free of incumbrance.

NEWS OF ALL KINDS.

CLEANINGS FROM IMPORTANT PRESS DISPATCHES.

The Japanese Land 35,000 Troops on Chinese Soil—The Japanese Fleet Arriving Off Chefoo and Everything Ready for a Big "Scrap."

London. The Times publishes a dispatch from Shanghai stating that 35,000 Japanese troops have been landed on the Shan Tung coast (China) between the Yellow river and Tien Tsin. A dispatch from Chefoo says that Japanese cruisers are sighted daily off that port. It is added that the nature of their operations are unknown. But, coupled with the fact that it has already been reported that the Japanese have effected a landing to the northward of Chefoo, these movements are regarded as significant and as tending to confirm the story of the Japanese landing.

Chinese China Japan Gossip.

Dispatches from Shanghai say the disorganization of the Chinese troops in many sections as discovered by the war council is appalling. The commissariat is corrupt beyond belief. There is no clothing for the troops, food is scanty and weapons and war munitions, bought and paid for, can neither be found nor traced. The great Chinese camp between Tien Tsin and Taku is filled with raw levies and disorders rampant, although executions are frequent. The men are without rifles. Foreigners do not venture in the camp unless they are amply guarded. Most of the Europeans have gone to the coast towns for protection. Many Chinese merchants have also migrated to the coast towns, feeling that they will be more secure with the foreigners.

Remnants of the Chinese force from Ping Yang have reached Mukden. They tell doleful stories of the fight. It is reported that Tantai Shung, chief magistrate of the district, has left Tien Tsin. As it has been reported that Shung was implicated, with others, in furnishing information to Japan of the movements of the Chinese forces on land and sea, it is now believed that the fugitive Tantai will be unable to render additional assistance to the enemy.

An insurrection is said to have broken out in the province of Shang Tung. The result of the uprising or its nature are not known.

It is reported that the dowager empress heartily supports Viceroy Li Hung Chang.

Washington. The reports that the Japanese cruisers are hovering off Chefoo and that Japanese troops are being landed confirms the prediction of Japanese authorities here when the second Japanese army embarked that the invasion of China and the march on Peking would begin soon.

In diplomatic circles here it is pointed out that the British admiral's course in shadowing the Japanese ships as they approach the Chinese coast is in line with a policy of the British navy which has caused much irritation. Various British vessels having at different times shadowed the cruisers of other nations as in the Brazilian revolution they followed Da Gama's vessels and reported their movements to Peking.

A story is told of how the British ships watched the Russian fleet at Kikhoma recently and the Russian commander's ruse. Two of his vessels left hastily and a British vessel soon following, the Russians made a circuit and returned to the harbor with the British vessel close behind. As the boats came in the Russian admiral gave orders to his fleet to clear the decks and prepare for action. The British ship came to a sudden halt and the threatened broadside was averted. Later the British government demanded an explanation and received an answer which put a stop to her shadowing Russian vessels.

Official advices received from Tokio say that the Japanese government has declared lead to be contraband of war. The docks at Nagasaki Japan, are full of cruisers and ships and other vessels undergoing repairs.

The Japanese troops are rapidly approaching Mukden, the capital of the Chinese province of Manchuria. The Japanese army, which has been marching upon Mukden ever since the battle of Ping Yang recently occupied Heilou on the frontier of Manchuria, without opposition.

The Chinese government has ratified the new treaty with the United States and the papers are now on the way out from Peking.

Queen Victoria to Abolish.

New York. "Ascor" writing from London, says that Queen Victoria may abdicate the throne on November 9. The letter says:

At this present time her majesty of England and down stairs in a sort of "Jitter" is rolled about her rooms in a vehicle which resembles an enlarged baby carriage. Specialists says it is rheumatic gout. The queen has always been a good walker, and this partial disablement brings prominently to the front again the question. Will not her majesty abdicate in favor of her son the prince of Wales?

The court eavesdropper says that on the 9th of November next, the birth announcement of her majesty's retirement will be made in favor of her eldest son who will be acclaimed as Edward VII.

Queen Victoria is 73 years old an age when one can well understand she might be only too willing to free herself entirely from all trammels even of such feeble responsibility as a British monarch now possesses. The prince of Wales is 53, and therefore no longer young, and so it is about time that he had some taste of his natural heritage.

Lumber Kings Set the Forest Fires.

W. J. Littlejohn, in delivering the annual address before the Fire Underwriters' association of the northwest, at Chicago, declared that the recent forest fires had been started by lumber kings. They had taken that method, he said, of covering up their stealings, and to them was directly due the death and destruction which followed. The speech caused a sensation among the 300 members present.

The Baaque's Wire Nail Company, of Cleveland, the largest concern of the kind in the world, has closed down for an indefinite period.

HILL FOR GOVERNOR.

New York Democrats Chose David B. Hill as Their Candidate.

The Democratic state convention of New York was held at Syracuse with Senator David B. Hill as chairman. This convention was undoubtedly without a precedent in that it chose as the leading candidate a man who flatly refused to accept, and was forced to acquiesce because the convention would vote for no other man.

The proceedings were such as are common to conventions until the roll call on the nomination of a candidate for governor was taken up. Albany county named John Boyd Thatcher. Allegheny county was second, and Deleghate Reynolds arose and amidst intense silence said: "The united delegation from Allegheny county desire to place in nomination for governor their first and only choice, David B. Hill."

Then occurred one of the wildest scenes that could be imagined. Delegates jumped upon the chairs, spectators crowded into the aisles, hats were thrown heavenward, canes with ribbons waived wildly and men yelled themselves hoarse in their cheer after cheer that almost rent the frail building in twain. Senator Hill grew pale with emotion, but in an almost faint hope that he would be able to stem the tide, he poured vigorously with the gavel and cried for order.

Finally, after a further exhaustion the vast audience ceased its applause enough to allow Senator Hill's voice to be heard, and in a husky voice he said: "I am grateful to the Democracy of the Empire state for their courtesy and kindness and support in this, but I must say to you that I cannot, in the intervals of Senator Hill, manage to insist that the roll of delegates should be called. The call proceeded, being continually interrupted as before, until New York was reached. Then the Albany delegation withdrew. Thatcher's name, and amidst a greater storm Bourke Cockran leaped upon a table, and shouting Hill's name said: "All who are in favor of nominating by acclamation will say aye." There was a mighty shout, and to the same summons for those "opposed—no" there was not a voice heard. Then turning to Senator Hill he said: "Sir, the people summon you to your duty. The roll call was continued when possible, and when finished the secretary announced every vote for Senator Hill.

The other nominations were Lieutenant-governor, Daniel N. Lockwood, Buffalo, judge of the court of appeals, Judge Gaynor, Brooklyn.

The usual resolutions were adopted. The move to adjourn was carried. Senator Hill saying: "The convention that is running itself wants to adjourn—I declare it adjourned."

RULER OF CHINA DETHRONED.

That's an Unofficial Rumor From Shanghai—More China-Japan War News.

New York. A special cable to the Herald from Shanghai says: The emperor of China will very likely be dethroned in favor of Prince Kung's son, who will treat with the Japanese. Li Hung Chang has been superseded in the supreme command by Gen. Sang Tsung of the province of Hunan, who has received full powers. Li Hung Chang retires disgusted to Pao Ting Foo, the capital of the province of (H) Li.

Twenty thousand Hunan soldiers are gathering around Shanghai. Kwan the terminus of the great wall where it forms the boundary between the provinces of Chi Li and Shanghai.

Tien Tsin. It is officially announced that 5,000 Japanese troops have arrived close to Passet Bay near the Russian frontier. Passet Bay is not far from Vladivostok, the great Russian stronghold and railroad terminus in the east. It is difficult to conjecture the object of this move on the part of Japan unless it is to protect the right flank and rear of the Japanese army from a possible attack from the direction of the Russian frontier.

Then again the 5,000 men referred to might simply be reinforcements for the Japanese army now marching on Mukden. Shanghai. The anti-foreign feeling at Peking is increasing and the authorities find it difficult to repress outbreaks. The Chinese official at Peking fear that if the Japanese march upon Peking the capital will be captured as the Chinese soldiers gathered there to defend it are dissatisfied and unreliable.

The Japanese have occupied Wiju without meeting with any opposition on the part of the Chinese troops.

Little Rock, Ark., Daily Wrecked.

A terrible cyclone struck Little Rock, Ark., at 7:30 o'clock p. m., and almost devastated the business portion of the city. Several people—four at least—are known to have been killed and injured, while it is feared scores of others have met the same fate. The main portion of the business center is practically in ruins and the amount of damage is incalculable. The total property loss will probably approximate $500,000.

The cyclone was accompanied by a terrific rain storm and the stocks of goods in those business houses which were unroofed, though not otherwise wrecked, are destroyed by water. The storm struck on a hill, with fearful force, destroying the dining-room, the stable and shops, unroofing the main cell building and demolishing the warden's office. Several convicts were seriously injured, one of whom died.

Train Robbers Seize $20,000.

An east-bound Southern Pacific train was held up one and a half miles east of Maricopa, Ariz., by three men. One of the robbers at the point of revolvers, forced Engineer Holliday and Fireman Martin to descend, uncouple the engine and proceed ahead of the train for half a mile. In the meantime one masked robber entered the express car while the other stood guard outside. No shots were fired nor were the passengers alarmed while the robbery was in progress. The engineer and fireman were walked back ahead of robber No. 1 to the express car, where they arrived about the time the other two were ready to depart, having secured $20,000. All three men mounted horses, which were tied near by, and rode away. A posse was formed by Sheriff Murphy of Maricopa, and one of the robbers was shot after a long chase. The others escaped with the money.

A Mile in Less Than Two Minutes.

Flying by made a wonderful showing at Chillicothe, O. Andy McDowell was working him out, and had him hitched to a high-wheeled pneumatic wagon with a running mate. The pair scored several times and finally McDowell gave the word to those who were in the judge's stand. The gelding paced away beautifully. He went to the half in 1:00 and finished the last half in :50 1/2. The performance has excited the horsemen greatly, as it was the fastest mile ever paced.

Five Killed in a Freight Wreck.

A freight train bound for Chicago was wrecked on the Chicago & Northwestern railway at Grover's crossing, about a mile west of Woodstock, Ill. When the wrecking crew reached the spot the voice of a man was heard calling for help. It was heard protruding beneath the debris. This wrecked car was loaded with green planks, and the lumber was removed as rapidly as possible, the result being the recovery of five dead bodies, one badly injured and a boy seriously bruised and shaken up.

Fall Medicine

Is fully as important as the Spring Medicine for at this season there is great danger to health in the varying temperature, cold storms, malarial germs, and the prevalence of fevers and other serious diseases. A NEW MAN.

A NATURAL-GAS EXPERT KILLS A DISCOVERY IN CANADA.

RECIPROCITY.

Canada get the Services of our Natural-Gas Expert, and gives us, in return, a Valuable Discovery.

Natural gas has become so important a factor in the increased facilities for coal-manufacturing that many have turned from other vocations in life to study and perfect the methods of transmitting it to our finger-tips, but out of the men who have been in a great field for improvement and taken up the subject, few have been so successful and only those of peculiar adaptability can hope for success. Mr. T. J. Dracott, of Pittsburgh, Pa., one of these favored few. In the Pennsylvania oil regions he is well known, and the fame of his ability at pumping natural gas spread to Canada. He was engaged by the Ontario Gas Co., working at the city of St. John, Ontario, to pump the gas from the wells in the oil fields and while performing this operation, which he successfully accomplished, he made the discovery of a remedy which he states made a dead end well with gas and oil in life. Weigh his story in his own words: "I have been suffering with a kidney affection which is troubled me more or less for years. I had tried many of the remedies on the market for such complaints without any relief. During an engagement with the Ontario Natural Gas Co., while pumping the gas from the wells, I found the good fortune to find a cure of Dean's Kidney Pills. I procured some and commenced taking them, with the most beneficial results. I have not felt as well in years and I feel that it is all due to the agency of Dean's Kidney Pills. I pronounce them a boon to mankind and something which should be in every household. It is a new man, with an addition in life, and what you every sufferer with a kidney ailment should have in time. CONSUMPTION

TWO DISGUISES.

It was a summer morning at Newport.

The sea was like silver under the July sun; the gulls soared and dipped; the breeze blew freshly and sent the little fishing smacks flying over the waves like airy bits of thistle-down.

The two girls, however, standing on the lawn of one of those elegant villas that line that part of the town known as the "Cliffs," were too much engaged setting a dispute that had arisen between them to give up head to nature's beauties.

"It is a shame, Kate," said one of them, appealing to the other, "and you are simply the stubbornest girl I ever saw in my life! Here I've been since the first of June, planning for year coming, all sorts of things—picnics, sailing parties, balls and receptions, and now you tell me that you are going on to-morrow to bury yourself in that poky little town—East Village."

Kate Drayton laughed good-humoredly at Nell O'cott's tirade, but shook her head resolutely.

"You are good as gold, dear," said she, "as you always were, but plans are made, I only take Newport, as I said, in passing. I simply hate the place. Nell, you know it, that my wicked millions oblige me to lead, and I intend to get out of it at I can—men snuffing about me from morn till night, and night till morning, and no more among them who loves me for myself. More than that, Nell, dear, Paul Crosby comes home this summer."

"The tragic earnestness of this communication proved too much for Miss Drayton's gravity; she broke into laughter in spite of her serious vocation and disappointments."

"That tongue of yours, Kate, still lives, then?" said she, "but really, my dear, speaking frankly, why should you mind so much that your uncle Jacob, from whom by the way, all your money came—took the fad in his head of marrying you to Paul and thereby merging his own and the Crosby's into one grand whole? He was a lover of Paul's mother, I believe, when they were children together, and meant to show his fidelity to her memory by uniting her son to the niece that he loved best in the world."

"Yes," said Kate, "that is all true. Nell, but no woman with a grain of independence in her nature would willingly put herself in the way of a man who must necessarily feel himself bound, whether or no, to ask her to marry him, to marry her millions, rather, to the millions that he already possessed. My sister more fortunate than I, married for love before this money came to us. I'd do the same, my dear, or stay unmarried forevermore. Mrs. Jansen, to whom I go in Roxbury, was my old school teacher, she married a down East man, and has a lovely home there, to which she has often invited me. Moreover, she agrees to allow me to pass unquestioned for the obscure country lass that I was when she knew me. She will tell no stories, of course, and I would not ask it, but with equal certainty she will tell no tales out of school."

Nell O'cott did not give in to Kate Drayton's "foolishness," as she called it, without a gallant struggle.

But Kate was deaf to reason, and two days later was helping herself to a third light luncheon at Mrs. Jansen's bountiful spread breakfast table, and congratulating herself that three long, delightful months were still before her in the study of the details of these beautiful, far away mountains.

The weeks passed on like an enchanted dream.

To the weary society girl the dull quiet of the little country village possessed an indescribable charm, and Mr and Mrs Jansen, who had no children of their own, daily rejoiced in her cheerful presence and wondered how they had ever been able to do without her.

In fact, Kate Drayton had come like a sunbeam into the prim New England household.

With her own hands she weeded the garden and filled the vase with flowers from gurglet to cellar, bed gay scarfs on the rigid chair backs and uncompromising sofas, and looped back with gorgeous bows of a most unpunished red the stiff white curtains.

Ex-ball robes of silk, mull and satin changed under her nimble fingers to such tangles of beauty in "drawers," "splatters," "screens," and "head-rests" for parlor and chambers, and the house was never free of curious visitors feasting their eyes upon the canopy, pretty things that made the paragon gayer, they declared, than a regular church fair.

Miss Drayton was in her element, enjoying herself to the top of her bent, and filled with pride that she had had the courage of her convictions to at last enjoy herself in a rational way.

Things had been going on thus for a month, perhaps, when, having tried about everything else in the shape of amusement that the village afforded, Kate Drayton got up one morning with a fixed determination to compass a horseback ride. But, alas! the Jansen stable afforded but one nag, a poor little roan, and by the name of Meg, whose tail, tradition said, had been nibbled off by the old red calf, and that the minister was accustomed to drive on distant pastoral visits.

Happy for the success of the whim, it happened to be a stay-at-home day with the pastor, and Kate was soon installed on a borrowed side-saddle loaned by an obnoxious neighbor, and cantering blithely over the green, swelling fields.

Tired at last of Meg's bouncing gait, she turned about to retrace her steps; but just as she reached the edge of a lonely stretch of woods that skirted the village, she spied a cluster of beautiful ferns and jumped off to get them.

So far, so good! but the getting back again? It was another thing entirely. Meg was a regular war-horse in stature, the road a dead level and edged with crisp-crocks fence rails that made a very vobly horse-block for a lady to mount from. No matter, it must be done! Kate climbed carefully to the top most rail, pulled Meg into proper position, and made a spring.

Meg backed brusquely, and the fair equestrienne, with a cry of pain, landed plump on the ground with her left foot doubled under her. The pain was severe, but she sought to scramble to her feet and try it over, only to fall back again almost fainting with agony. She had sprained her ankle, and sprained it badly at that.

She looked about her. The road was one that was little traveled; not a soul was in sight—save Meg, after the mischief she had done, comfortably grazing on spruce-gum sprouts and wending her way homeward like a corpulent angel, and with the sun already low down on the horizon.

She waited awhile longer, the pain in her ankle growing sharper and sharper with every moment, calling aloud at intervals and then, at last, in utter despair and exhaustion, she, the proud heiress and city belle, sobbed piteously like a great forsaken baby. She sobbed with such abandon and hearty good-will, that she did not even hear the approaching roll of wheels around the curve of the road till the vehicle was there upon her and the driver of the buggy, a tall, well-dressed gentleman, with an unmistakable distinction of manner, leaped to her side.

A few words explained the situation; she had turned her foot in mounting; had fallen; Meg had trotted off and left her; she couldn't reach the saddle and had been afraid she would have to stay in the woods alone all night.

And she looked so pretty, pitiful and appealing, that the gentleman, who had been told that she was a great heiress, could not resist the temptation to take her to his heart and kiss away the tears, as one does with a grieved or hurt child.

"You have sprained your ankle, don't you?" he said gently, "and should get home as soon as possible. Lean on my shoulder and let me help you to the carriage."

But Kate, as we know already, was a lady of her own mind, and she refused his assistance.

"She could go that little way alone," she said.

And she stood erect, put her weight on her foot, staggered, screamed and fell—this time into the stranger's outstretched arms.

"It is useless," said he firmly, a twinkling, quickly subdued, showing himself in his blue eyes; "you cannot walk and simply must carry you—there is no other way."

And here, Kate could say "I am not a second time, he lifted her tenderly and placed her in the carriage. But really, in the limited space of this story, we cannot be expected to go into the details of that homeward drive, the reception they met, or the agony of fright into which the Jansen household had fallen when Meg trotted so suddenly up to the gate, chewing still on a gum-sprout and the saddle-empty.

The surprise and joy of the family, when shortly afterward the buggy and its freight also arrived there just in time to prevent the village from turning on for a general search, was only equaled by Kate's amazement when the master grasped warmly the hand of her companion and introduced him to her as Dr. Winthrop, old Dr. Winthrop's substitute, while he was absent in Europe.

"The people," added Mr. Jansen laughingly, "already like him so well that Dr. Gordon may stay abroad forever if he has a mind to and no one will care."

Next day, of course, and for several days afterward, it was necessary for the young doctor to call and see that the ankle was getting along all right. Then a new book was out and Miss Drayton would naturally be pleased to see it; imported fruit, too, was an excellent tonic for invalid maidens, till, what with one thing and another—a splendid bantoon, for instance, that blended wonderfully with Miss Drayton's mezzo-soprano, the young doctor was as great a favorite at the parsonage as in the village, and Kate did not make her usual complaint of this new and ardent suitor.

"But, indeed," said she, as they drove the lane together, that soft fall evening, when the summer gone, the old tale was told and she had frankly admitted that being a doctor's wife was one of the things that would make her happiest, "indeed, dear, for a young professional man, with a name and fame to make, it is exactly worldly-wise for you to take a girl for wife who has only her love to give you?"

"And is it worldly-wise, Kate dear?"

Winthrop returned, to mortgage yourself to the struggles and privations of a doctor's early career? Are you sure you are content, and that you will never regret it?"

And Kate was more than sure, as she smiled a tender little smile to herself that Dr. Winthrop did not see, and would not have understood it had he.

But such a fass and hubbub as there was when at last the news and to be told to her family. Letters and remonstrances and protests poured in by the bagful and nearly drove the little Roxton postmistress, crazy with curiosity, finally even Kate's sister, her firm ally always, lost patience and telegraphed her that "Jim" the rebel brother-in-law, would be up to reason with her by the morning train. But Kate was rock even to Jim Thornton's eloquence. Furious and helpless for Kate was his own mistress and could do as she pleased with her millions, Jim, defeated and enraged was pining the hour and growling at her as against needy adventurers, when suddenly a laughing voice said quietly behind him:

"Thanks, Jim, old boy; I ought to be much obliged."

Jim wheeled, stared first at Kate then at the doctor, for it was Kate who had spoken, and then with a long drawn whistle off blank astonishment as a sudden light seemed to dawn upon him, he dropped into a chair and began to laugh like a madman.

"Paul Crosby, as I'm a sinner!" he cried, when he could speak without choking himself; "but, man alive! it can't be possible that you are Kate's lover? Why in thunder, then, did she call you Winthrop and doctor, and make all this trouble, and not let us know at once that she had come to her senses, and was really going to do just what her uncle and the rest of us had always wanted her to do?"

"In three words," said Jim, as twelve hours later, in town he sought to make the entanglement clear to the bewildered family, "they have both been masquerading in false colors and borrowed plumes—Kate as impecunious cousin to Mrs. Jansen and Paul to try his wings at his profession as temporary substitute to a country doctor. None of them had even the other since they were children, you know; and neither of them expected to meet the other away up there in those grim

New England hills, with Kate as 'Miss Burton,' and Paul as Dr. Winthrop." It was the plainest of sallies, till I arrived to pull off the masks of our romantic millionaires."

And Jim, as he recalled the faces of the victims as they mutually explained their explanations, laughed till his eyes rolled into the soup.

Love, as usual had held the winning hand in this double game of masquerade.

WHAT THE MINERS BUY.

Queer Things Kept in the General Stores in the Coke Regions.

Every merchant is guided more or less in the purchase of his supplies by the character of his customers, but according to the New York Sun, the men who run the general stores in the coke regions of Pennsylvania have more peculiar ideas to meet than is the lot of the average storekeeper. These stores are all controlled by the owners of the mines, and it is alleged that some of them force their men to buy from them exclusively. The profits of these stores are undoubtedly large, although the prices at some of them are at least lower than they are at the usual country stores. The unique features of the wares carried in these stores are the enormous feather beds, Polish and Hungarian headresses, heavy boots for the women as well as the men, and all sorts of gaudy shawls and dress stuffs. Among the special provisions these stores supply are highly seasoned sausages and hams, such as are found in the Hungarian and Polish quarters of this town. The poles are much more extravagant than the Huns, and buy much better and higher priced goods. The Huns buy the cheapest kinds of meat, of which they make their goulashes. They do not buy very much of anything in the way of provisions, however, relying largely upon their gardens for vegetables, and occasionally killing one of their ducks, or geese. The poles, on the contrary, rely very little upon their own efforts, although they also have good gardens, but purchase the best foods that the stores have. Very few of the purchasers pay cash. Instead, they secure from their foreman tickets for various amounts. These are presented at the stores in payment for supplies, and the clerks mark on them the amounts of their purchases. When the whole value of a ticket has been contracted for it is taken up by the clerk of the store.

RICH AMERICAN ARTISTS.

Some Make $35,000 a Year, and a Number Run Into Five Figures.

Edwin J. Johnson, who has a regular income of $35,000 a year, says the Art Institute of Chicago, long the president of the academy has $30,000, while a number of men not exclusively portrait painters, such as Messrs. Chas. E. Bassford, H. C. Walker, derive a large portion of their incomes from that branch of their art. Again, there is a group of men who do not attempt portraits and whose incomes rise to a pretty figure upon the thousands. In this group stand Messrs. Inness, Gifford, Tryon, Homer, J. G. Brown, Low, La Farge, Hovey, and others, none of whose incomes will fall below $5,000, and several of which will run above $20,000. In such a classification no account is taken of our popular illustrators, men like Remond, Reinhardt, Frost, Castaigne and Stedeker, whose work in black and white brings them handsome returns. In addition there is a large number of men not so well known who receive large sums annually from the book and magazine publishers for their work in black and white, which is the most money derived from painting pictures. On the whole it would seem that our artists were a more fortunate class than a literary man, for of the latter it is said that less than twenty receive a sufficient income for their writings; some to support their families, while it may be set down as a positive fact that more than forty of the artists receive incomes of $5,000 and over.

Can Inve to Dignity.

"What is there about a carriage," exclaimed P. think rather testily, "that imbues a man who rides in with such a superabundant lance of affected dignity? I met a carriage this morning with one lone man sitting in it. It was no body but Jones, a fellow that I can slap on the back and punch in the ribs when I met him on the sidewalk; but, bless you, when he passed me in a carriage this morning he bowed slightly and with as much dignity as if he were president of a half-dozen healthy republics. Now he was in the carriage by himself—three seats around him—and he could very easily have yelled to me to join him in the ride without sacrificing his goal character. He didn't do it, however. He drove straight on without more than a sniff bow to a man; a sniff on horseback doesn't; an electric car doesn't; then there must be something in a carriage conducive to haughtiness."—Atlanta Journal.

Get Back at Him.

"Here's a Brooklyn clergyman," began my friend X's wife, indignantly, "who is reported to have said that there are no women in heaven." "He must have taken his text from Revelation," remarked her husband, cheerfully, "where it is mentioned that there was silence in heaven for the space of half an hour."

It is also mentioned," retorted his wife, "that heaven is filled with those who have come out of great tribulation, which makes me think they were pretty nearly all women who had had husbands in this life."

It is a great disadvantage to know the Bible only for purposes of quotation.—New York Press.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURALISTS.

Some Up to Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Flowing.

A sub-committee, instructed to report its suggestions on plowing to the Massachusetts state board of agriculture, submitted the following:

The importance of the proper preparation of the soil for the reception of the seed can not be too highly estimated. The correctness of this proposition will be readily admitted by those who remember the fact that such a preparation is absolutely necessary to insure paying success in the raising of any given crop. Not only is the germination of the seed affected by neglect in this matter; but the future growth of the embryo plant will also be seriously, if not disastrously, retarded by it. The laws of nature will not be annulled nor suspended to accommodate those who from ignorance neglect, or from shiftlessness fail, to obey those laws. The complete and thorough pulverization of the soil is essential in order that the tiny and tender rootlets of the growing plant may not be hindered nor baffled in their tireless search for subsistence. In this preparatory work the plow performs the initial, and in some respects, the most important part; for no succeeding operations wish harrow, cultivator, horse or hand hoe, can compensate for the failure of the plow to do its work well. The application of scientific rules and principles in the construction of this important implement, so as to secure ease in draft as well as in the holding, has made this part of the work comparatively easy and pleasant to both team and plowman. To secure first-class work (and no other will answer the purpose), three things are absolutely necessary—a good plow, that is, one well adapted to the nature of the work to be done, a well-trained and able team, and last, though by no means least in importance, a skillful plowman. The improvements in the construction of the plow that the last forty years have witnessed have been wonderful indeed. The contrast between the clumsy, ill-constructed, and unsightly wooden plow, shod with wrought iron, used forty years ago, and the trim, bright, and sharp-cutting steel plow of to-day, though great indeed, is not greater than the difference in the character of the work performed. The "cut and cover" work of former years, with, in many instances, but a precious little of either "cut or cover," has been succeeded by the well-cut, neatly turned, and properly disintegrated furrow of to-day, with the difference in ease of after-cultivation, and the ultimate results secured as widely variant.

Points on Buckwheat.

W. E. Farmer, writing in American Cultivator, says: Despite the low prices of wheat, corn and many other grains, buckwheat has sold fairly well this season, and proved remunerative to those who happened to grow it last season. Many farmers will be turning their attention from corn and wheat to oats and buckwheat this season, and a word about its culture may not be amiss just before the seeding time. If the market reports of any of the leading cities are studied they will find that there is a wide difference in the quotations of buckwheat, different qualities and varieties varying, from 1 to 2 or 3 cents per bushel. Even a cent a bushel would mean enough on products of a large farm to determine the question of profit and loss.

If the buckwheat brought to market, and thus variously rated in value, was examined by any practical farmer or grower it would not take him long to decide that there is really a great difference in the grain. Such an examination would be of benefit to every one engaged in agriculture. He would go home again and decide to raise only the finest. It is true that there are certain soils and localities that are just suited to the culture of buckwheat, and excellent grain is grown there without very much cultivation. But the far buckwheat soil can be made to produce as good grain as any that comes to market. The soil for buckwheat needs to be only medium in fertility, but the culture must be good. Virgin woodland soil is excellent for this grain. If the soil is too rich the grain does not fill well, and the stalks take all the nutriment. Buckwheat can consequently come after another crop very well without extra fertilizing. It is an excellent crop to sow on land where oats, barley or corn have been sown, but destroyed by bad weather. Such land seeded to buckwheat right away will help the owner out of his difficulty and save him from the entire loss of his crop.

The best time for sowing the crop is the last of June or the first of July. Very early vegetables can be sown on the land and harvested before it is necessary to sow the buckwheat, and two crops may thus be gathered. Good pasture or clover land may be used for the purpose, and the first crop of grass can be fed to the cattle, or harvested before it is time to sow the buckwheat. The ground should be worked over well, however, before the seed is sown, and then half a bushel of seed drilled in or sown broadcast to the acre will yield a good crop. After sowing the ground should be rolled evenly. If fertilizers are to be used it should be remembered that potash and phosphoric acid are the elements most needed. Prolonged and severe drouth in August will sometimes blast some of the flowers, but taking it all in all the crop is about as sure as any that we can raise on the farm.

Peas and Cowpeas for the North.

The value of peas as a fodder crop is just beginning to be appreciated by northern and western farmers, writes C. S. Walker in Germantown Telegraph. Until very recently the cowpeas were supposed to be fit only for southern land where the grass would not grow well. But we are now pretty well satisfied from experience that cowpeas should not be restricted to the south, but there is a real mission for them to perform in the north. But the mission is not the same probably in the two sections. In the south cowpeas are essentially for a storage crop, but in our colder climates they are more valuable for turning under as green manure. Clover and corn grow so rapidly and luxuriantly here that it will be some time before better forage plants can be obtained. Still, cowpeas can and have been cultivated in the north for forage crops with results that are highly satisfactory. The cowpeas are rapid growers, and in eighty-five days from sowing, the crop is a large one and ready for turning under. As a fertilizer this crop ranks almost equal to clover, but we have to wait eighteen months for a good crop of the latter to turn under. The cowpeas are sown early in the spring as soon as the land is warm enough for seeds, and they spring up rapidly and mature without any danger from being killed by extreme weather. In the case of clover, however, considerable risk is run, and there is danger of the whole crop being killed either in the middle of the summer or from winter cold. Besides, clover is hard to "catch" on most soils, whereas cowpeas do well on any kind of a fair soil. The contrast between the two crops for green manure is thus all in favor of the cowpeas. The vines of the cowpeas are large enough to separate the soil in which they are plowed so that they induce porosity in very thick, heavy land. The vines rot and decompose rapidly, so that within a few months after they have been turned under the green manure is almost ready to be absorbed by the plants. Two bushels of seed to the acre will yield a very large crop even in our cold states, and the vines should grow over two feet high. In the south the pea vines have considerable feeding value that nearly all farmers avail themselves of. For sheep the cowpeas might prove of considerable value in the north. We have just had it demonstrated to us at the experiment stations that there is no better food for sheep than our common garden peas. The pea vines are all rich in nutritious food, and the peas themselves contain elements that can not be supplied in any more convenient form. Those interested in raising peas for sheep should sow the field with about two bushels of the small Canada field pea with one bushel of oats to the acre. About as many peas are obtained in this way as if they were sown alone. The results are much better by mixing, for the oats will yield a fair crop after the peas have been gathered. The sheep should be fed most of the crop green, but when the vines are cured and kept for winter use they eat nearly everything up, including vines and old peas.

Importance of Thinning Crops.

I am satisfied that but few farmers know the importance of thinning. They seem to think that nothing needs thinning but corn, says L. W. Anderson in Farm and Home. One bought some raspberries of me and said:

"Come look at my vines and tell me what is the matter with them; they are a good kind, but won't bear."

I looked and saw at once. I said:

"How many stalks have you in each hill?"

He laughed and said, "About forty."

I said:

"What is the use of carrying your brains around with you if you don't use them?"

There are ten strawberry plants where should be one as a rule. One good, thrifty, well-formed blackberry or raspberry stalk is worth a dozen over-crowded, thriftless, worthless ones. I once planted a big potato whole to get big potatoes and got a big hill full of little potatoes. It would have been all the same if I had planted a big ear of corn whole in a hill and expected big corn. Potatoes should be thinned to one or two eyes before planting. Few farmers do it. To thin my crop as I ought has taken more nerve than anything I have undertaken on the farm.

THE FARM DAY—We do not look favorably upon this fourteen hours a day on the farm as the period set apart for hard labor. It is a slavish practice and never ends well. A man may occasionally in some unforeseen way get into circumstances that compel such a sacrifice for a limited time, and this is excusable, but to go deliberately about arranging one's affairs with the expectation of putting in this amount of time at manual labor in each twenty-four hours of the season is out of reason. It is not consistent with the fundamental ideas of existence. From dawn till dark is a long time in early summer. It should afford a period of rest in the middle of the day for farm laborers who begin early and late. It will pay better in the end.

BLACKBERRIES require no trimming in the spring, excepting to prevent too large a growth of fruit. For large fruit trim freely.

IF FARMERS fully appreciated the great advantage of a fruit garden few would be without one.

BLACKBERRIES should be pinched back when fifteen inches high.

Though merit often goes unrewarded, it is still true that the qualities of genuine manhood are sometimes given public recognition, and those being capable of discharging duties of high official station are placed in positions where their good judgment may be of avail to the people at large. Such is the case with Fred M. Warner, who after years of meritorious work as a prominent business man and a genial and popular citizen has received the nomination for State Senator, and, if he receives the election, will make an efficient and worthy officer.
One evening last week as Rev. and Mrs. C. E. Allen were about to retire for the night, a gentle knock was heard at the outside door. The pastor politely invited the company in and soon the table standing near by, fairly groaned being so heavily laden with the gifts bestowed, as tokens of the high esteem and appreciation in which the pastor and wife are held by their Farmington friends. Last but not least was the presentation of a pound of silver dollars to Mrs. Allen, which amounted to $17. After enjoying an hour of social and pleasant intercourse the company dispersed wishing their host and hostess a pleasant and successful conference year.

Many of the middle-aged people of Salem were in early life pupils of the late Prof. Estabrook and have learned of his death with profound regret. No one knew him but to admire his bright intellectuality and to love him for his unselfish amiability. To know him was a benediction. If he had any faults they were so covered with a pure life of good deeds as to be undiscernible. His old pupils will to end of life have

In the Record of the 14th inst. we are told that Northville is a "Gold Cure town and no saloon within four miles." Judging from the appearance of one of our citizens last Saturday you must have a near relative of the saloon in your village. Perhaps it is a twin, as they bear such a close resemblance to each other. "We have no saloon" sounds so familiar. We have heard that time after time in the WCTU reports at the district conventions. Such reports are misleading, inasmuch as people infer from this that you have no place in town where the class of goods which saloons deal in are kept.
