AN ITEM OF MORE THAN TWENTY YEARS OF AGE

Relative to the Pioneers and Early History of Northville.

Written for the Record Way Back in the Seventies.

The following interesting sketch of the early days of Northville written for the Record by D. Clarkson, father of our well known townsmen, C. E. Clarkson, in 1874. The reprint of the article will doubtless prove of much interest to our present local readers.

Northville, July 12th, 1874.
To the Editor of the Record:
I have often thought that some incidents in the early settlement of this place would be interesting to your readers, and being one of the pioneers I propose to commence by giving something of the history of the first settlement here, in hopes that some one more competent will continue the subject.

In the Spring of 1831, several families, in the vicinity of Ovid, Seneca County, N. Y., concluded to emigrate to the then Territory of Michigan. They concluded to go in company, and included Robert Purdy, and family, Capt. Wm. Dunlap, and family, Henry Waldron, Samuel Blackwood, Peter Larkins, and their families, and Wm. Smith and two sisters.

As there were no railroads, then the only public conveyance being the stage coach, or canal and steamboat, they thought best to take the latter. Accordingly they made arrangements with Robert Purdy to take them on board of his annual boat, the "Shark," at Sibley's Point, Cayuga Lake, and thence to Buffalo, by the Erie canal.

About the first of May 1831, with all their baggage, and provision to last them through, they embarked on the "Shark," and having engaged a man with a span of horses for tow them to Buffalo, they started on their journey to the promised land, in search of a home; none except Mr. Purdy, having made any arrangement, purchased or had an idea of what part of the Territory they would settle in. Mr. Purdy had previously purchased some land, some five or six miles west of this place on the Base-line, near where J. K. Starks now resides, and had a piece chopped out, and the main log house put up, and came with the intention of settling there. He would of course recommend to his companions that part of the country as a desirable place to locate.

Capt. Wm. Dunlap, in addition to his own family of two girls and two boys, brought two other boys with him, whom he had taken to bring up, and help clear up the wilderness, Lewis McCormick, aged 18, and the writer, aged 14 years. The company traveled by day-time and "lay-up" nights. They were about a week reaching Buffalo. They then transferred their families and puppy dogs (of which there were several in the company), and luggage to the steamboat, "New York," for Detroit, and we said good bye to the old "Shark." Mr. Purdy having sold her to parties in Buffalo. We were nearly three days on the lake to Detroit, and many of the company were sea-sick. This was the most disagreeable part of the journey.

We landed in Detroit on the 15th day of May. Detroit then had a population of a little over 2,000. E. Woodworth kept the largest tavern in the city, called the "Steam Boat Hotel," located somewhere on Aveter street, and "Widow McMullan" kept the "Yankee Boarding House," near where the Franklin House now stands, which was in the outskirts of the town.

In Detroit Henry Waldron and family parted with the company and went towards Pontiac, where they had acquaintances, and where they located permanently. The rest of the company procured teams to bring them to the township of Plymouth, the women and smaller children riding, while the rest had to walk.

The streets in Detroit were one continual mud hole, and the roads through the country were worse if possible. We came through Spring Wells, across the River Rouge, at "Salsbury's tavern," on the Chicago road, by "Tenyck's" through the "Bucklin Woods" and across "Togish Plain" to Plymouth.

Mr. Purdy and family went to his brother's, James Purdy near Plymouth and from there to his farm and future home. Mr. Larkins settled west of Northville and cleared up the farm he now owns and lives on. Mr. Blackwood settled in Novi and remains where he first settled, an honored citizen of the town, and has raised a large family of children. Mr. Smith and sister settled, with the rest of their family who followed them, on the Base Line, west of Mr. Purdy's.

Capt. Wm. Dunlap bought of John Miller, 160 acres, being the center of the north half of section three, of which Northville is located, which was partly improved with the "Northville Mills," then a small grist mill, with a pair of rock stones, which Mr. Miller and Israel Nash had made out of a large boulder found near the site of said mill, a work of patience and perseverance, not to be thought of in these days. He moved his family into a small log house with "stick chimneys" on the outside, that stood near the mill, and commenced work in earnest.

The first thing needed was a team. So he went to Detroit and purchased out one drove of cattle, from Ohio, a yoke of oxen, and two cows; yoked the oxen to his wagon, which he brought from York state, with him, put on a load of his goods at the warehouse in Detroit, and then started on the way for home, driving the cows ahead. Oh! how the boys laughed when they saw him coming, for being a left-handed man, he made a very awkward ox-driver.

The oxen I shall never forget, for I drove them several years, and became attached to them. The oxen one was a large brindle, white face, very kind and of good disposition, the off one, a large black ox, very heavy, before and light behind, resembling a buffalo more than an ox, and of an ugly disposition. They made a very serviceable team in logging and plowing the new grounds. We commenced work immediately, putting in some corn and repairing the grist mill. We planted six acres of corn on the west side of the road, or where is now Center street, from where, Mrs. Wheeler's millinery store now stands north to Dr. Heston's and went to Wigg street, the 6th day of June, and it rained and yielded well.

In a few weeks after settling Lewis McCormick, the young man before spoken of, was taken sick with chills and fever and in a few days died. Dr. Emery attended him and everything that could be, was done to help him. He was the first one buried in the place. His grave was located south of the road, back of where Waterman's meat market now stands, and afterwards removed to the dog cemetery.

The country was very new then and settlers few and far between. Daniel J. Cady lived in a log house near where the Cady hotel now stands. Pius Tafft was on the Tafft farm; Chauncey Reynolds on the Base line west; grand-father Joseph Yerkes east on the line; H. B. Bradley a mile south and John Welch farther east. Hiram Robinson owned the farm and saw-mill south and A. B. Markham next on the south.

There was no village here then. Northville had not been thought of. Father Hickox had a little shop and turning lathe, near the mill, and repaired and made, spinning wheels, grain cradles, rakes, etc.

J. M. Mead and his brother Samuel had a board shanty on the corner right where Hingerford's store now stands, and kept goods and groceries to sell to the few settlers who came to mill.

Lewis Clark lived in a log house south of the Cady hotel corner. He was a very zealous Methodist; a very loud praying man and could be heard all over the neighborhood.

Settlers came very fast. Every day some new comers were heard of. Daniel Johnson started a blacksmith shop near the mill, and soon after some of our neighbors and acquaintances from Seneca Co., N. Y., settled in the vicinity. Robert Blackwood, Clinton Johnson, Jas. DeMott, M. Hughton, and others.

People came here to trade, and for lumber, and this began to be a business centre. Mr. Sterling sold his farm (now the C. T. Leonard farm) to J. DeMott and came here and built the first public house or tavern. The same house is now owned and occupied by Capt. Dunlap.

A post-office was established here, and J. M. Mead filled the position of post-master—the first one here. The postage on letters was then twenty-five cents.

The citizens held a meeting in Mead's store to decide on a name for the place and "Northville" was the name decided upon.

Instead of popping, Houzel rose and began pacing to and from the glowing chamber.

"No word from the chivalier?" asked Andreas presently.

Houzel shook his head gloomily, while the other added: "If no has fallen, master, Mademoiselle Blanche will be an orphan."

"Yes, you are right. She has only her father."

"Let me see," muttered Andreas, glancing sidly at the other as he spoke.

"She is 18 in January. The fifth is her life day. Yes, nearly 18 years old."

"Old enough to marry, master," suggested Andreas.

"You are a fool," said the young man in a tone so savage that the old man almost started from his seat.

"Who talks of marrying? Mademoiselle Blanche is a child. Perhaps she will never marry."

"You are right," said Andreas. "She is a saint!"

"Go to! She is the only of Grandpère and the chivalier's only child; no saint, but a peerless young lady. Yet, as you say, should anything happen to the old chivalier she will be alone."

"Had, very well," murmured Andreas, in his pet phrases. "She will have no one to protect her."

"She will 'protect' me!" returned Houzel, in the former, savage way.

"No, no! You will be her guardian, not her protector."

"You mean that I am not her equal?" demanded the young man, adding, while the other coughed apologetically: "Well, you are right; I am her father's servant and heir. For the world!"

When day broke, Houzel was at his post, watching the chateau. Before the sun was visible in the heavens Blanche came forth, and found him leaning against a tree, his eyes upon the terrace.

"Here again, Houzel? You are like my shadow, and wherever I turn I find you."

"Your pardon, mademoiselle," he replied. "I am watching the German prisoner."

"Surely that does not concern you. Besides he has given his parole."

That Winter Night.

BY ROBERT BUCHANAN.

Slowly and gloomily the man carried the prisoner along his woodland path, across the gardens, and up the steps of the terrace.

The door stood wide open, with the female servants clustering timidly on the threshold.

To their astonishment, Blanche made no reply, but signalled the man to push on into the hall. She led the way and they followed her to a large bedroom on the first floor, communicating by a folding door with a small sitting-room, elegantly fitted up as a study, and containing, in addition to the other furniture, a small harmonium.

Here the cavalier had sat and studied or played upon the instrument of which he was very fond. Sometimes Blanche had played him, or sitting at his feet, read to him aloud.

The countrymen withdrew, and the wounded man was left alone in the bedroom with the doctor and the old housekeeper. Blanche waited in the adjoining room, still Dr. Huot, opening the folding doors, signalled her to enter.

Approaching the bedside, she saw the German lying, still insensible in the bed. One arm was extended on the coverlet, the other hidden. The mud and blood had been washed from his face, leaving it pale and distinct in all its lines; the look of pain had faded, and the breathing, though still laborious, was softer and more subdued.

Blanche stood looking at him for some moments in silent pity, then she turned to the doctor, and said, in a low voice: "Doctor, is he much hurt?—Are you sure he will recover?"

"Of course, if he is looked after. I have extracted the bullet, and carefully dressed the wound."

"Then he will not die?"

"Not he. Unfortunately, I cannot remain; one own wounded man requires my attention, and the man must take his chance."

"Doctor, I will watch him," said Blanche. "Quietly tell me what to do."

"You, mademoiselle! Impossible! It is no task for you. I have given you the best of my instructions, and she will do her best."

"If my father were wounded, would I suffer another's hands to tend him? No, doctor; my hands is here. Diane Ferrero is old and feeble; I am strong and young. As I would have some tender German...

the mark, he said, answering the question on his face. "That fellow will be on his legs in a day or two, and then you will be rid of him, I hope."

The doctor's prediction turned out perfectly correct. Within three days the German rose from his bed and descended the stairs. He looked pale and worn, and carried his left arm in a sling, but otherwise was a handsome fellow.

Standing bare-headed at the porch, he quietly smoked his pipe and surveyed the country prospect around him. As he did so he became conscious of a powerful figure seated some fifty yards from the chateau, leaning on a fowling-piece and regarding him intently. Descending the steps, the German was approaching him, when Houzel (for it was he), spring to his feet and waved him back with an angry gesture.

"What is the matter, my friend?" asked the officer, quietly, in the French tongue.

Houzel's only reply was a scowl of strange dislike; but when the other made a fresh movement toward him, the keeper again ordered him back.

"I see," he muttered in German. "I am a prisoner, after all, and this surly dog is my Centauros."

"Turning somewhat feebly toward the chateau, he came face to face with Blanche, who was descending the terrace. He saluted her with deep respect. She bowed to him nervously, and was passing by, when his voice arrested her.

"Do not think me impertinent, fraulein; but may I speak to you?" "I should like to thank you for the great service you have done me."

"Do not speak of it, monsieur," she replied. "I have only done what my father would have done, had he been here."

"Your father is from home, fraulein?"

"Yes; he is with the army."

"May God bring him back to you safe! He should be a proud and happy man, to have so good and beautiful a daughter."

He glanced round as he spoke, and met the eyes of Houzel, who had retreated himself, and was straining his ears to catch the words of the conversation.

my father were here, he would do as there done. Hubert go to the kitchen—go all of you."

Muttering among themselves, the servants raised. Houzel kept his position, leaning against the porch, and looking on in silence.

"As for you, Houzel, you should know better. You are better educated, and should have more compassion."

"You have not seen what I have seen. The villages burned down, the people plundered; the land made desolate by the wild beasts of the field, and should be shot down without mercy."

And should I have my father's place, then, turning suddenly and encountering the eyes of his young mistress, he added regretfully: "Forgive me, mademoiselle. I know I have made you angry. But I shall be close at hand in case you need protection."

"How foolish you are! Protection—your wounded man who perhaps will die!"

"I hope so," returned Houzel. "So long as breath lasts, these vermin are dangerous."

Next morning Dr. Huot looked in, full of excitement.

"Sharp work last night, mademoiselle," he said, as he entered the bedroom. "We have beaten back the reconnoitering party of the Germans."

The wounded man sat propped up with pillows, wide awake, and submitted quietly and without a murmur while the doctor made his examination.

"Come, it is not so bad as I thought," muttered Huot.

"You thought me a dead man, monsieur?" said the German, with a grave smile.

"Well, after all, I have to thank you and your lady for this house for my life. Your countrymen were inclined to finish me last night."

"Affair!" said Huot, struggling his shoulders.

"I suppose I must consider myself a prisoner," pronounced the German.

"Certainly, and that reminds me of the commanding officer of the district, insists on removing you under guard, unless you give your parole not to attempt to escape, or to communicate with the enemy."

"Just so?" returned the German, wearily. "You have my parole."

Blanche followed the doctor to the door.

The doctor's prediction turned out perfectly correct. Within three days the German rose from his bed and descended the stairs. He looked pale and worn, and carried his left arm in a sling, but otherwise was a handsome fellow.

Standing bare-headed at the porch, he quietly smoked his pipe and surveyed the country prospect around him. As he did so he became conscious of a powerful figure seated some fifty yards from the chateau, leaning on a fowling-piece and regarding him intently. Descending the steps, the German was approaching him, when Houzel (for it was he), spring to his feet and waved him back with an angry gesture.

"What is the matter, my friend?" asked the officer, quietly, in the French tongue.

Houzel's only reply was a scowl of strange dislike; but when the other made a fresh movement toward him, the keeper again ordered him back.

"I see," he muttered in German. "I am a prisoner, after all, and this surly dog is my Centauros."

"Turning somewhat feebly toward the chateau, he came face to face with Blanche, who was descending the terrace. He saluted her with deep respect. She bowed to him nervously, and was passing by, when his voice arrested her.

Brighton is having the dickens own time with alleged mad dogs. Every time a Brighton dog does not run out and scare some one's horse or nip a passing footman's leg in the usual way it is noted as a "queer antic" on the dog's part and he is considered a hydrophobic and summarily killed. A Brighton dog in order to live must do just as other dogs do.

Editor Jim Stocum, of Holly who fell down at the recent village election, takes his defeat philosophically. He says an editor is always unpopular. "One man was mad because he bought a red cow, and Jim didn't mention it. Another fairly raved because he told the editor that his baby said 'Da, da' when only 11 months old, and Jim never published a word of it. He was too d—stuck up. The prohibitionists said that Jim favored the saloons. A saloon man was mad because Mr. Stocum was in favor of enforcing the laws. One man said that no bald-headed man should be president of Holly; another man was mad because we were not red-headed; another thought we felt too big in a stone house and more honors would spoil us. The A.P.A. were mad because Ed McGinnis helped us. Another was mad because we were not Irish, and it is surprising that someone didn't kick because the last baby at the stone house was a girl instead of a boy."—Detroit Evening News.

EXTRA!

HOYT NOMINAT'D

AT THE REPUBLICAN CAUCUS THIS AFTERNOON.

It Took One Ballot to Decide the Contest.

Nichols Nominated for Township Clerk.

The republican town caucus was called to order here about 3:00 o'clock this afternoon and immediately adjourned to the rink to accommodate the unusual large crowd. It was one of the largest caucuses held here for years, the importance of the occasion centering on the nomination for supervisor, there being three candidates in the field for that office, W. H. Hoyt, W. P. Johnson and Wm. Ambler, and the prospect for a sharp struggle was in store.

L. C. Sherwood was elected chairman and W. H. Hutton secretary of the convention. The township committee elected was W. H. Hutton, Chas. Coldron and J. M. Collier.

For supervisor the first ballot resulted as follows: Hoyt-165, Johnson 41, Ambler 3. On motion Mr. Hoyt was declared the unanimous choice of the convention.

For clerk, Crauson received 63, Nichols 131, Hunter 2.

The treasurer vote was a close one. H. Holms received 2, P. B. Wolfbeck 119, S. J. Kaapp 126.

E. P. Lombard was nominated for justice and the balance of the officers were nominated by acclamation as follows: School Inspector, Chas. L. DuLuar, commiss'ner, Frank H. Johnson, drain com., G. P. Bentou; bd. of review, E. K. Starkweather; constables, F. N. Perrin, W. H. Brigham, Melvin Wik, John Hood.

A meeting of the Salem Baptist Young People's Union the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased our Heavenly Father to take from our midst one who was every way worthy of our respect and regard, brother Frank Bennett, of the Baptist Young People's Union of the Baptist church of Salem, realizing that in his death we have lost a faithful, earnest member, and wishing to show our love for him, and our sympathy for the grieving friends, therefore be it

Resolved, That in our sorrow for the loss of a dear member, we find consolation in the knowledge that it is well with him for whom we mourned.

Resolved, That while we mourn with those bereaved, we would point them to the Savior whom he delighted to serve.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent for publication to the Christian Herald, the Detroit Courier and the Northville Record, and a copy forwarded to the relatives of the deceased, and that they be placed upon the records of this society.

Millan Leader: Bro. Neal of the Northville Record, was elected village clerk Monday by a good big majority. Editors are usually good runners. (That's another lie. Bro. Neal was handsomely snowed under by his opponent.)

Wayne Review: The woman's edition of the Northville Record proved a bigger success than they had any expectation it would—they clearing nearly $200. The money has been turned over to the ladies' library association.

McCully Bros. will serve refreshments on the European plan for the "Owl" club farewell party next week. The vacant store in the Kellogg building will be secured for this purpose.

W. H. Hutton has sold his Cady street residence to Phil Porter. Mr. Hutton will move into Mr. Hirsch's tenant house for the present. John Arnsou has purchased Mr. Porter's residence.

It is safe to say that never in its history did Northville ever wind up her year's business with over $2,000 balance in her treasury. It will soon be time to start that sinking fund, gentlemen.

The hard times, or alleged hard times, whichever is correct, has driven nearly every opera troupe off the road this past winter which was in the habit of making stops at villages of the size of Northville.

The attention of farmers and others is particularly called to the superior class, and unique style, of auction bills issued at the RECORD office. These, together with the notices in the RECORD, are what draw the crowd.

Delray Herald: Neal of the Northville Record was on the citizens' ticket for clerk, but he worked hard for the other man, and, of course, the other man, W. H. Nichols, was elected. Whatever Neal undertakes goes through humming, and it is therefore not surprising that he elected his man.

Wait till the spring break-up comes and Northville will have an exhibition one of the worst and meanest streets, from Center street to the depot on Main street, to be found in the Peninsula state. It will resemble a mortar bed and won't dry up before the 1st of July. Just make a note of it and then petition the council to procure a stone crusher.

One of the largest crowds ever seen at an auction sale was that at John Thompson's Wednesday. Every thing sold at very satisfactory prices. This demonstrates what the unique auction bills, and a good notice in the RECORD will do. Inferior bills and no notice in the RECORD will not draw the crowd, and the mistake loses many a dollar to the farmer.

The readings given Monday evening in the Baptist church by Miss Sheldon was a rare treat to those present. There was a pleasing variety in her selections and the rendering was characterized by that simplicity which is nearest to nature and the highest art. She has a pleasing presence and excellent command of voice and is first class in all her efforts. It is hoped that she will repeat her visit.

The "Owl" club will wind up their season of pleasure with a grand ball to be given next week Friday night. About 200 invitations will be issued to friends of the "club" who are not members. It will be a very select and brilliant occasion and those fortunate enough to receive invitations will doubtless make an extraordinary effort to be present. The bill will be fifty cents, just enough to cover the extra expense.

Richardson's society hall seemed to be on fire Tuesday night about 12 o'clock. To passers by, brilliant flames seemed to be consuming the whole inside of the building and Mr. Richardson, who was yet at work in his store across the street, was quickly notified. Before the fire alarm was given however it was discovered that one of the secret societies was doing some initiatory work within the hall and the goat was probably tangled up in one of the arc lights.

Practically, every village election held in the state where six trustees (three for two years and three for one year) were not elected was illegal, but there were so many of them in this boat that the legislature will (or has by this time perhaps) pass a special act making all village elections held on March 11 legal, no matter whether three or six trustees were elected. Had Northville been the only one of half a dozen or so, a new election would have been required, but fortunately she was in the swim.

Change of Publication Day. Until the Robins nest again, or at least until warm weather is well established, the RECORD will be published Thursday afternoons. The papers will be put in the post-office here at 5 o'clock, if no accidents occur, on that day. This change cannot be considered permanent by any means but is brought about by the trouble experienced in getting our cylinder press warm enough to get the edition off promptly Friday mornings.

The Presbyterian young people had a delightful social Tuesday evening.

Second session on the reformation Sunday morning at the Presbyterian church. Harry Jamison of the Union depot ticket office Detroit will doubtless sing in the evening.

A Plymouth young man put up his watch on the new lottery plan of paying the amount in cents represented by the number drawn. The stipulation was that the lucky man at the final draw should treat the unfortunate. A Northville lady drew the time piece and she point-blank refused to "treat."

Milford Times: About sixty-five members of the Masonic order of Milford joined others of the fraternity from Detroit, Clarkston, Commerce and other towns, in sharing the hospitality of their Northville brethren Monday evening. They were met at the depot by the Northville band and lodge and they can't say too much about the royal entertainment they received at the hands of the Northville fraternity. About 250 Masons were present and the Milford Lodge exemplified work in the third degree. The Milfordites went to Northville about six o'clock on the pony engine and returned about 2 a. m. on the same special car.

Mr. White is the name of a man down in Washington who draws pay for the title of superintendent of the mail service. A few months ago he issued an order directing that all postal clerks should live on the line of the road on which their run was made. A committee of the postal clerks' association waited on congress and got them to attach a "rider" to the Sunday service bill. It unanimously passed both houses and Mr. White was madder than ever. The order of Mr. White is no more, but very few clerks will dare to brave White's wrath by not complying with his orders.

A TALE OF THE DEEP.

I always had trouble with the compasses of the Sarah Jane (old-time skipper). I could never find out what was the matter with the old compasses, and no one could. My private opinion is that it should be swung for adjustment every morning at eight bells, you would have found her from three to six points out before the afternoon watch was over. I can tell you it's no joke shorting a few thousand dollars unless you know whether you are to allow two and a quarter or ten and a quarter. It was all right in fine weather, when I could sight a star and get my bearings; but why, but in thick weather, you may guess, it used to make my flesh creep when we were getting into soundings, or ought to be, and I couldn't for the life of me say exactly where we were.

Arthur, we cleared at San Jose all right, and the old hooker for Belmont nose trying her compasses as near as could be guessed, with an allowance for the usual extra drift. We were running fairly light, very different from the trip out, when I thought those heavy lads would break her before our eyes. It was all right, if it had been for the compasses we should have been as fit as fiddle.

I gave orders to regulate the compass card by the standard which was half-way up the mizzenmast. Adjusting that was the most trustworthy compass we had aboard, and even from observations. But as it happened, we made more easting than should have done, and gradually worked south of our proper course. In the end, it wasn't been that ten days out we got into a regular snorter of a gale, west-north-west, with a sea running up that would have swamped us if we had been on the trip out. I'm not the skipper of a big ocean liner, so I didn't take the town of San Jose, but I did take the old Sarah Jane had a chance, and she was forward for that, and I didn't want to have her decks swept at every set. So I just ran for it, working through the stowher, like a longshoreman, and even then getting nasty, after the tail rail that nearly popped her.

To cut this part of my yarn short, we drove before the sea for two days and nights, and the third day, though the teeth of the gale seemed to be drawn, it suddenly came on as black as pitch after noon, and kept so right up to nightfall. We could do nothing but snort through it for all we were worth, and you may guess my feelings, with engines at full speed ahead and a following gale in weather that you could cut it with a knife.

It would be some time in the first day-ward that there was a sudden fair, and the engines stopped. I went for the engine room, but there was no one there, and I was obliged to go up to the engine room to do any speaking. Up took the engineer to the bridge, and he told me that something was amiss. He pursued the propeller was fouled. I hadn't fairly taken in his words before the second mate was at my elbow.

"We are in about the biggest mess you'll ever get into," he yelled. "There's wreckage all around us. Seems to be a whole lot of things wrong. We've been in it for hours, and no matter how long we were." I jumped for the rail and looked over the side. It was still pitch dark, but the water was phosphorescent, and I could just make out what masses of tangled wreckage and wreckage floating by and scraping up against our sides. We were still moving, but with our engines stopped, and that would be our next, I think like to guess.

"What's ailed us into something like this?" I called back to the two mates, and they gave an answering yell. The sea was rolling down in lumps at a time, and we seemed to be losing our way, for which I was glad, because the old Sarah Jane wasn't in trim for running down the hulk, to which all this stuff belonged, and the engines being stopped, we had no further control over her. Every minute I expected to hear the sickening crash, and our bows were in against a timber-ship or a cargo of iron rails.

All this time the wreckage was coming by like a procession, and we were buffeting about in it like a drunken man against lamp-posts. Then, at a light, it seemed the sea dropped to a light swell though the wind was still whistling overhead. I couldn't make it out at all. It was for all the world as if some one had pulled up the hand of our watch, and the ship had stopped, and she simply rolled lumps on a bed of snow, with scarcely a sound except the scraping of the mess all round our sides, and the gurgle of water under the bows and counter, and a small whistling wind through our top-liner.

Just then the lookout on the bows called me.

"Steamer right ahead, sir!"

"Can you sight her?" I called back.

"No sir, but she's coming up fast!"

CHICKEN IN PATAGONIA.

Down in Punta Arenas, a port on Terra del Fuego island, there is much enthusiasm over the sheep industry. A manager for a French company, owning something over 100,000 sheep, with the necessary horses, and that they made three francs about 600 on every head, clear of all expenses, from the sale of wool alone. The increase of the lambs averaged about 40 per cent of the ewes, and this was an additional profit. When told that estimate made up the coast called for 300 per cent increase, he replied that that could be had only when labor was abundant, and that he cared for the lambs, he would first drop them. The lamb at birth does not know anything, not even its own mother. Such helpless beings need great care, though after a week or so they require no more attention. The long-wooled varieties of sheep are in favor there. A common ewe will weigh from 160 to 180 pounds in the fall. The lowest average of wool shorn is said to be 7 pounds a sheep. A printed table of statistics, which the manager carried showed that the average yield in 1889 in all the Argentine was 4.4 pounds, while that of the United States was exactly that of the lowest yield of any other country. His range was considered poorer than the average, but it had sustained two sheep per acre (two and a half acres).

The one feature of which Patagonia sheep are liable is the scab, which is spread by dipping them in various kinds of baths. The expense for both running from $50 to $70 per year for every 1,000 sheep. The greatest expense is for the killing of panthers. A common night's work of a panther is the killing of sheep to the value of $100 gold. Every shepherd, therefore, carries a carbine, and must be supplied with all the cartridges he wants. These rifles sell for less money in Punta Arenas stores than in New York gun shops, but the annual expense for rifles and cartridges on some ranches runs up to hundreds of dollars.

Wolves and species of wild cat make havoc with the young lambs, and of these must be exterminated, too. What with hunting down vermin and looking after the sheep to keep them on the range and to dip them for the scab, the French manager has to employ a man for every 2,500 sheep in his flock. On the whole, his flock, numbering a little over 100,000 sheep, cost the company 200,000 francs about $40,000 per year, while the sale of the last clip yielded 500,000 francs (about $100,000), and the price would be a very poor business man, while after starting with a good outfit and 1,000 ewes on the Patagonia range, did not attain an income of $20,000 gold a year at the end of ten years.

Culture of the Human Intestine.

No American citizen, as a rule, possesses more voluminous intestinal tracts than their French congeners, and it is, how far is cooking responsible for the difference? It is, of course, notorious that French cooking is the best in the world; has this fact any bearing upon the personal small caliber of the French bowels? Digestion being made easy, so to speak, is it the cause of a partial arrest of development in the intestine? Is there also a difference as regards length of the intestine? It is a question of which I am not qualified to speak, but I am sure that it is a product of civilization dependent to a great extent upon knives and forks. Has the human race any reason to dread and abhor the dissection of a complex and elaborate anatomy? Finally, and by way of closure to this other dietary and dietary dissection, physiological mistake.—Lancel.

A White Cat With a White Tail.

Mr. William H. Ogil, of No. 717 Montgomery street, is the owner of a white cat with a white tail. Mrs. Ogil showed the cat to a reporter of the Sun yesterday. The cat had included, she noticed, a single hair of any other color than white, or at least the minutest inspection failed to discover any. The cat is a great pet with Mr. Ogil's family, but he can seem to consider it a curiosity, until Mr. Ogil read the letter published recently in the Sun, which was written by Mr. E. A. Craig of Lynchburg, Va., and in which the writer asks the question: "Did you ever see a cat with a white tail?" Mr. Craig writes that he has been looking for such a cat for the last fifty years. He says he saw many white cats, except that their tails of a part of the tails were of some other color. Mr. Craig should take a look at Mr. Ogil's pet.—Baltimore Sun.

The French Society Against the Abuse of Tobacco pipes, with regard to the first time in its history France has a president who is a confirmed smoker. M. Felix Faure, it is said, smokes several cigars every day. Mr. Faure had a detestation of tobacco which was almost fanatical. Marshal MacMahon had been a great smoker, but he finally gave up smoking after an illness which he had long before he became president. Similarly, M. Grevy, in the days of his youth had devoted himself to smoking, to the coloring of his complexion, but he abandoned the practice of it on his election. M. Carnot not only did not smoke, but he was a teetotaler. The French Society, finally, M. Casimir Perier was not really a smoker, for he never smoked a pipe, and he would have been almost immediately.—London Daily News.

Hard to Please.

When the editor got for his Christmas "A gold collar button." "Well, but he's satisfied." "No. Now he wants a shirt."—Atlanta Constitution.

A pickpocket has been arrested for getting his hand into a woman's dress pocket. His ruthless shattering of a time-honored tradition merits no light punishment.

A Pleasant Revelation.

Stranger—Zuni; Domercotter, now you have cut my chin a second time. If you can't share better than that you will lose your customers pretty quick. Barber's Apprentice—Not at all! I am not allowed to shave the regular customers yet. I only share strangers!—Elleguide-Blatter.

SERVED IN TWO WARS.

THE GRIP ALMOST WON WHERE THE BULLET FAILED.

Our Sympathies Always Ralisted to the Favorites of the Veterans.

From Woodstock, Va., Herold. There is an old soldier in Woodstock, Va., who served in the war with Mexico and in the war of the rebellion. He has been in the army for over 50 years, and he has seen more of the world than most of us. He is now 80 years old, and he is still in good health. He has a great deal of experience, and he has a great deal of wisdom. He is a true veteran, and he is a true patriot.
