Can Monkeys Think?

"That the monkey possesses intelligence to a remarkable degree is probably true," said a hotel proprietor who has a small menagerie on his premises. I believe, however, that much of the intelligence with which he is credited is due to his love of mimicry. The other day two young mer, with two girls, were at the monkey's cage, feeding him with peanuts. One of the girls was chewing gum, and one of the men suggested that she give the mon-key some, expecting that, if he took it in his mouth, it would stick to his teeth and ne would make sorry work of trying to chew it. The girl at once parted with the sweet morsel that she was so industriously chewing, extending it toward the cage. The monkey grabbed it instantly and put it in his mouth, but, instead of chewing it or attempting to, began pulling it out in small ribbons as children are frequently seen to do.

When I smoked one side for a few minutes, he would turn squarely around, to have the other side treated in the same way. Then he sat up directly in front of me and received the smoke squarely in the face and neck. I don't know whether he held his breath, but he did not cough, sneeze, or wirce a particle. A zood many dairymen think it not good plan to have the cows eatingwhile being milked. It depends largely as to how the cows have been trained Cows that are accustomed to eating and if they fall after a certain time to while being milked, are not so much inrelease them will bring them a poisoned clined to give down them milk as freely unless so fed. The cow is an animal Dampness in dairy houses should be ing her young, and in a little while studiously avoided. Dampness pro-brought them some worms. She con- duces fungoid growth, not only devel oping but increasing organic germs; al days without seeming to pay much and there are, when the conditions are attention to the persons about But on favorable, countless invisible germs Sunday came the tragic ending that floating in the air to attack the milk demonstrated the theory relative to and spoil it and the butter. -Then-beware of damp floors. -A little lime scattered around, or placed in a box in the dairy house, will absorb a large quantidied. If the butter does come in the churn in less time than 30 minutes it is at the expense of quality.

It is one thing to make a large yield of butter; it is another thing to make such butter as will command the highest market price

When milk is set in open pans, the comperatore of the dairy room should be 69 degrees. In summer hat weather the temperature in a large per cent of Southern dally housed is away up yander, from 70 degrees up. The conseuence is that the fills sours before the cream is all mised, and much but ter is lost. Again, the quality of the latter is second or third class. Work, steady faithful work, with head and hands and heart, is the key him, to pay his way.—New York World. sidered judgment. We must know that why those in other kinds of business succeed is that they take advantage of every circumstance that can -be brought to favor them We know that greatest economy and in the utmost activity of exchange that the possibility of great success lies, and the farmer must not only work with all his mind and with all his strength but he must work for the love of money, and as only the love of money can make him work. In manufactures, the helpless men have become the operatives, in trade they are the broken down clerks, in farming they are the hand to mouth farmers who count for fust so much as their labor is worth and no more. We can do nothing for them but try to help them to sufficient energy to wake up and help themselves. --Xuon.

At each end or the plat-form is a rest six inches high upon which the roosts rest. They are movable, so that they can be taken out and the only hymn known to have been out back in a few minutes. The roosts written by an American Indian. It are strips one by three, all on a level. I are strips one by three, all on a level. Ithink this width the best, as a fowl, when on the perch, sits with its breast ited England in 1766 to raise funds for bone on the roost. And for young an Indian school, and secured £10,000 chicks, I know a small round perch will make the breast-bone crooked, and in raising fancy poultry, this must be guarded against, as it can and must be considered a deformity when passed on by an expert in judging poultry. At Muncle, Ind., a peculiar case of After having tay perches arranged as ual cost it would be shown that the rerolled it into a compact hall between thievery was reported at police head-described above. Meen the floor well-littered with clean straw, keep the hens at work and feed cut green bone freely, and the hens will repay the positryman for his extra care, by keeping the eggbasket well-filled .- E. G. McCormack in Farmer's Review.

Chicken Cnolers. This has been quite prevalent in this neighborhood. I think it is caused more largely by want of sharp grit; causing indigestion, than, from any thing else, and also by taking cold and catin trozen and rotting regetables and fruit. If we discect a chicken that has died of the cholera, we often find constipation, hard lumps in the intes tines, large livers and galls so large they look as if they would burst. After they get past eating it is difficult to do them good, because the food remains in the crop for days, unless liquid medicines are given.

Prevention is better than cure. It is safe to keep plenty of gravel or pounded crockery where the hens can get it at all times. My poultry has always been more apt to have cholera when they get retting and frozen vegetables all they can eat. I often have to keep it from them all I can.—Mrs. L. C. Axtell, in Farmer's Review.

Handy Bens' Nests.

The accompanying illustrations show an easily constructed and very excelent movable hen's nest and also a device that permits the eggs to be gathered from outside the henhouse. The nest boxes have no backs and are hung by books against the wall, as seen in Fig. 1. They can be taken down and emptied in a moment, in this way avoiding all chance of harboring vermin. The opening in front should be just large enough for a hearto enter. An alighting pole may be placed in front of the nests. If there is a passage-way at one side of the fowl house, or a runm adjoining it, the nests can be hung against the partition and the eggs gathered from the outside without going into the pen. Let round holes be cut behind each nest in the partition and these openings covered by a slide as suggested in Fig. 2. The same arrangement could be used upon the outer wall of a hen house standing by itself.—Australasian.

Sell the Culls. There is no stock that does so much for land buth in keeping it fertile and free from weeds as sheep. Each fall the flock should be well-looked over and those not worth keeping culled out and sold. Good breeding sheep should, however, be carefully preserved, for the time will urely come and at no distant day when the farmer who has been just as painsaking in the management of his flock during these times of depression as in the past will, when the better days come, have be flack in good condition and will be making money long before his neighbor can get in shape. there is no farmer but can keep a ow sheep with very little expense and can show a small margin of profit asid? from the good the sheep will do the farm, if he will exercise care in the nanagement and weed out each the weakitugs and these that are growmg old and unprofitable.- Ex.

Farm Pairy Products - Hairying is in improver of the farm and a conserver of ferm lexulity The transportagion of preducts is a burden to the farm. In consequence of this, bulky products have a very small value on the farm. Dairying comes in as a great promoter of economy in marketing products. Condensing bulky products for mathet is necessary to success. Hay, stalks and grain should be transformed into meat and milk 'Animals or flesh are transported with greater ease and at a less cost than the hay, stalks and grain. The dairy products are still a greater condensation of these products. It is therefore a very important question what farm products to sell, and the study of the plant food in the various products essential.—Ex

Good Game .-- A farmer" relates that few "years ago he shot three quails on his farm. His wife knowing his fondness for such sport, persuaded him to come to the house and have his supper before going further. "All right," he said, "Pli dress these birds and we'll have them for supper." His wife remarked upon the fullness of the craws of the birds, and on opening one it was found to be packed full of chinch bugs. Out of curiosity they counted and found over 400 chinch bugs in the craw of one quail. Said the farmer: "I just cleaned up that gun and have not shot a bird since. No farmer should kill any bird that kills bugs."

Butter Prices - Concerning this subect, American Creamery says: The general run of makers and dealers seem to think that we may look for sherp advance in prices very soon. We hope so but confess that we have but little faith in any decided advance in prices. The last two years experience has proven that the price of many articles are not much affected by the law of supply People must have the ability to buy or they must -go without, and they have done a lot of the latter. We do not look for high prices till they shall be gained in common with other products by an equitable rise of prices all round.

Cheap Meat.-It must not be overlooked that the largest proportion of the meat sold off the farm, in the shape of turkeys, geese and ducks, cost the farmer little or nothing; and if some ceipts are nearly all profit, and this should encourage him to increase his stock. Hens pay best as producers of eggs, and ducks are also excellent poultry are produced from turkeys and seese, as they can sipport or droi a large part con-
