CHAPTER XI.—(Continued.)
"Ah," thought he, "how I know why she listens so indifferently to my happy words, and so dexterously avoids my declarations." And he sighed quite as forlornly as Walter had done.
Lady Annabel at last turned to her daughter.
"We will return home at once, my love, if you wish, and I will commission our kind friend, Viscount Somerset, to make inquiries concerning the artist. It is but proper that we should seek out your gallant preservers. I will also write to your uncle to come up from Bath to receive him. You know how eagerly he always sought after a trace of these vermin."
Walter's lips quivered while he vowed mentally the name should not stand proudly and high even in aristocratic London. So in sudden silence he watched the group pass on toward the entrance out of sight. He rose up then and strode through the crowd.
The name of Lady Annabel Collinwood arrested his attention once again. The speakers were immediately in front of him.
"Lady Annabel? Oh, so, that is the Hon. Mrs. Dacre—she that was formerly Annabel Marston, of Lancashire, a distant relative, however, of Lady Collinwood," she in the violet bonnet and gray pelisse, I mean."
A strange look of revengeful fire flashed over the gloom of Walter's face as he followed the direction given, and found the lady indicated—she that was once Annabel Marston of Lancashire.
She was a fair woman, with dark and rosy cheeks, whose beauty was so well preserved one might have easily believed her only thirty. She was talking gaily with a gentleman in uniform, and her clear, joyous laugh came musically to Walter's ears. He ground his teeth.
"She is happy, do trustees, and my wretched, ruined father sleeps in his ocean grave excluded by her from his family laud," muttered he, as like a fanatic he tore his way to the street, and hurrying to his lodgings, flung himself into a chair and dropped his head upon his hands. For a short time he sat thus, then rising, he unlocked a small box and took from thence a closely-written manuscript, which he perused attentively. Only the last of it is essential to the thread of our story.
And now, Walter, you have the key to the mysterious gainance of ray wife. The dark secret that has eaten like the Satan's yuture through my heart, building its way only with my death to your knowledge. I do not fear, my son, that you will be harsh to your father's memory. I know you will see that difficult as was my sin, it was nothing to the web of wickedness that was wound around me—the terrible stone that my life has made. Most of all you will receive consolation in knowing Tom's Bible was the means of reconciling my soul with Heaven—of bringing to my restless, sorrowful heart the peace for which it had so long sighed. We are nearing the land every day—the land which for ten long years I have known only in my dreams; but I shall never set foot upon it. Too surely has the hand of death laid hold upon me. I heard you anxiously inquiring of the ship's surgeon the other day if there was nothing to help my cough. I could have answered that he evaded. Do not grieve for me; I shall be happy—so happy to lay off this cumbersome garment of flesh, these blind eyes of doubt. For you my son, I leave a rich legacy of experience to ward you away from the rocks that shipwrecked my peace, and good name. I have no fear for your future. I know your artist name will be honorable—that the wealth I fail to leave will be more blessed word for yourself. One solemn charge only I give you—that is, to seek out, when once more you come to mingle with your countrymen in England, and speak with Annabel Marston—her name may be changed now, I flew from England the very morning after that wretched day. I have avoided all knowledge of the changes time may have brought, but you can easily find her. Tell her all that you have learned from these pages—of the utter horror that followed my arduous parting with her; of the murdered specter that strode everywhere at my side; of all the gloom, and ruin that terrible day flung upon me; and then show her how peace and forgiveness came. Give her Tom's Bible; she will find all the places marked that refer to her guilt and mine; and say to her the last message of the man she wronged so terribly was utter forgiveness, and an earnest petition that she would also seek the only fountain that can wash away such sin. Other directions you will find in another place. I am exhausted, and must rest now."
Walter read it through, as I have said, and then with a groan he said:
"Oh, my dear father, I have seen at last the woman for whose love you perished so much! She is adored and honored and happy, and you, her innocent victim, are lying in your unknown, unhonored grave!"
Presently his long, quivering sigh gave way to a more cheerful tone.
"One thing at least may comfort me, though all else be disheartening—Eleanor is unchanged. She remembers me as kindly as I should dare to ask. She is our island Elsie; for all her aristocratic relations, with I must be worthy of an entree into Lady Annabel's drawing-rooms. I must answer this flattering letter from her grace of G— I hear she is a generous patron of the arts. He may make my advancement swifter. I shall elude all Lady Annabel's inquiries until I have a position her polished brow may not frown upon."

Signor Vernon verified the proud resolves of Walter Vernon. The two island pictures had made him famous. Although they had endeavored to keep it private the story of the beautiful Lady Eleanor Collinwood as connected with them was whispered from circle to circle, and contributed undoubtedly to their popularity. Orders from the highest sources poured in upon him. Then it was he responded to Admiral Lord Collinwood's earnest invitation, and presented himself at Collinwood House. The admiral was fortunately in London, and received him with the same friendly warmth he had shown on their first meeting. Lady Annabel, too, was exceedingly kind and courteous, but Walter was instantly aware of an antagonistic feeling, despite her gentle expressions of gratitude. She alluded quietly to his own refusal to meet them before, and acknowledged that it had grieved her daughter.
When their conversation first began to flag, Lady Annabel arose with her lamplike grace of manner and said:
"Now my dear admiral, if you please you shall come to the library and have a quiet little chat with me while I send for Lady Eleanor to come down to the drawing-room. She is not at all aware of Mr. Vernon's presence; it is natural they should wish their first meeting to be without witnesses."
He smiled by cheerful acquiescence.
"A good idea and very thoughtful in you to remember it, Lady Annabel."
Five minutes Walter was left alone. He needed three times the time to calm his heart; then he heard a light, quick step without and the door opened for a graceful figure robed in sea blue satin and sparkling with jewels. Both the white hands were outstretched, and she said eagerly:
"Cruel, cruel Walter, who have you delayed so long?"
"Thea, she panted abruptly. The tall, handsome man, with his heavy whiskers and long, straight nose, who that Walter?
"The gentleman that broke over his face reassured her.
"Ah, it is certainly you—I was almost afraid. Oh, Walter, are you not as glad as I to meet again after this long interval?"
"Doubtless Walter—as glad as ever, are you not?" I mean to say that you should wait till the honors were so thick about you, but I am too happy now, and your father—he is not with you?"
She had not given him a chance to reply before, still holding her hand, he said gravely:
"My father never receded the land, Lady Eleanor—his prophecy was fulfilled."
Her ready tears showed how completely she had kept her old stature. Walter had meant to be very dignified and reserved, but with her genial, old-time manner, it was impossible; and when they parted—although no word of love had been hinted—they were Walter and Elsie, as in days gone by.
"If Lady Annabel's fate showed sign of uneasiness at Eleanor's affectionate good-bye and earnest entreaty that he should come often, there was no sign of it in the courteous words with which she echoed her daughter's invitation."
CHAPTER XII
"A FINE CONFORWARD" Walter mingled freely in the best and noblest society. He worked hard at his case, but took time enough to accept such invitations to dinners and parties, as he felt sure would give him opportunity to meet the Collinwoods. With Lady Annabel he was always reserved, even to formality. He could not pierce the imperceptible but icy veil that seemed ever hanging between them, and when one day he heard the Duke of B— saying pettishly to the admiral, who had in some way way alluded to his devotion:
"Don't jest! I beg of you! Lady Annabel is peerless lovely, but I wish she had a little of mortal frailty. She is so cold I am quite in despair." Walter could hardly sympathize with him; and yet he had seen her strangely moved from her accustomed stately dignity.
Once, when in company allusion was made to her husband's elder brother—the first Lord Collinwood—who was killed by a fall, over a precipice while on a shooting expedition. The admiral was relating the particulars to a friend, and Walter happening to glance at the Lady Annabel, beheld her pale and trembling, leaning against a pillar for support. He sprang to her assistance, when she faltered in a voice whose sharp misery haunted him through the day.
"It is nothing; I am subject to fainting attacks. Don't be alarmed, but let me get out quietly."
He assisted her to the carriage without attracting attention, and was ready to quiet Eleanor's alarm when she first noticed her mother's absence.

There was one little incident to mark the day. As he looked by Eleanor's side he drew from her bouquet a spray of jasmine.
"Ah, Lady Eleanor," said he, "do you remember how these milky stars trailed their splendor over the rocks in our old home?"
She smiled—then sighed.
"I have forgotten nothing—not the most trifling circumstance."
Then, leaning, touching lightly a diamond suspended from his watch-chain, "you have not forgotten this, nor the more precious words that accompanied it."
The blue eyes fell beneath his passionate glance—a soft rose blushed over her cheek, and the sweet lips faltered as she answered:
"Yes, I remember."
"And you will not gaiter the promise?" pursued he.
"Is that a fair question, Walter?" asked she archly, rising hastily to cross the room to speak with her uncle.
Walter's heart bounded.
"What more can I desire?" thought he. "To-morrow I will make my formal proposal both to the admiral and Lady Annabel."
But when the next day came, and eager and joyous he sought Collinwood House he found a strange change in Eleanor. She was pale and nervous with a constraint and formality that would have grieved him deeply had it not been evidently forced and unnatural. When he made known his errand he was still more astonished and grieved. Her cheek alternately flushed and paled she half rose, as if to fly from his presence, and then sinking back into her chair, faltered:
"O Walter, don't, don't! It is heart-rending for me to hear there is no hope."
"No hope!" repeated Walter, blankly.
"Surely, after your words yesterday you cannot accuse me of presumption."
She had buried her face in her hands.
"No, no—not that! O, what can I say in explanation?"
She sat for a few moments in unplayed distress, and then coming herself somewhat more cheerfully:
"It is best you should hear the truth, Walter. Had your proposal come yesterday, I should have been the happiest girl in England, to day it only adds to my misery for by my own voluntary promise I am betrothed to another."
"Another?" echoed Walter springing to his feet. "Who is it?"
"Do not try to understand it," answered she sadly, "but I must tell you the actual truth of the circumstance."
He was plotting to do to his un-muddled daughter.
"I cannot begin to attempt to soothe him, but at least one trial has been made through some terrible calamity. Suddenly Lady Annabel's sweet voice was heard without the door. As if in utter terror, Lady Eleanor fled and her husband's cold eyes to remove all traces of tears, and white-powdered hair-ils."
"It is my mother, Walter, Walter, if you love me, do not let her suspect how unhappy I am—how much it gives me to give you up!"
"To give me up? Ah," retorted Walter bitterly, "I thought as much: it is Lady Annabel's doing—he never liked me."
"You are wrong, Walter—you are unjust to her! Ah, if you could know—if you could hear as I did last night! Walter, Walter, help me bear my fate bravely—perform my duty faithfully!"
He was looking distinctly at her entering, agonized face.

A GRATEFUL PIONEER OF JACKSON, MICH., RELATES AN INTERESTING EXPERIENCE.
Near Death's Door—Intense Suffering—Given Up by Doctors, But Saved by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.
From the Industrial News, Jackson, Mich.
The readers of the Jackson Industrial News have often expressed their gratitude and satisfaction with its course in keeping them posted on all important inventions and discoveries, and it has always been our aim to publish such facts in the development of science, which may be of benefit to the ever-growing circle of industrial news readers. We were lately informed by one of our friends that Mr. Jacob Paszke, residing at 113 Union street, Jackson, Mich., who has lived in this city for over twenty-six years, and is now 67 years old, had a marvellous escape from death or at least a long lingering sickness by reading one of the descriptions of wonderful cures accomplished through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. The first practical acquaintance Mr. Paszke had with the Pink Pills was two years ago, when he suffered from a severe attack of rheumatism, and after trying other remedies and his family physician's prescriptions without avail, he tried the Pink Pills, and before using two boxes was entirely relieved.
About eight months ago Mr. Paszke caught cold, and this rheumatism returned, but much more severe and accompanied by indigestion and intense pain in the stomach. His faithful wife called in the family physician, who pronounced a case of grippe, combined with stomach trouble, and said on account of Mrs. Paszke's advanced age he could not cure him; all he could do would be to give him something to relieve his pain. Mr. Paszke was not satisfied, and tried several other remedies, but he got no relief. Of course, he had been cured of rheumatism about a year and a half previously by the use of Pink Pills, but as this was the la grippe and stomach trouble combined with his former disease, he thought he required different remedies to cure him.
The pain Mr. Paszke was suffering was something only a person having been afflicted with this combination of painful diseases can imagine. He became so sensitive that he would scream if anyone would even touch his head. At last after suffering for months and trying nearly all other remedies recommended to him, he made up his mind to at least cure his rheumatism and he began taking Pink Pills again. After the use of five boxes he felt a great relief, but that he was not relieved of his rheumatism, but the grippe and the stomach trouble had also entirely disappeared. Mr. Paszke is now enjoying perfect health and can eat any food, even four pickles, and he has no more of his old troubles, and the use of even the smallest quantity would bring on a severe attack. He advanced age, for his physician had given him up at the name of the grippe, and he had been told by Mr. Paszke, and after his cure of the grippe, continued him that the healing properties of Pink Pills are far beyond what is commonly known for them, and he thought it his duty to relate his experience, through this paper, for the benefit of suffering humanity.
Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give good color to the blood and restore exhausted nerves. Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or will be sent by mail on receipt of price, in single boxes, or by express, if desired, for $1.00 per box, and by mail, $1.00 per box, plus postage. CUNNING LITTLE ANIMALS.
Catching Mole Is an Art These Mole Traps Experience and Advertisers.
San Francisco Post. "No, boys, it isn't money that makes my pockets bulge out in that way, but it is the equivalent," remarked a gray-haired, gray-bearded rancher from Mendocino, as he took in the slack of a hay rope that did services for a belt.
"To tell you the truth, my breeches pockets and my coat pockets too, are pretty well lined with mole skins. Within the last year I have developed into a mole hunter, and it pays I have several acres in strawberries at Ukiah, and they need considerable water. I used to put in a lot of time digging little trenches and turning water this way and that, but it was disappointing to go out the next day and find that I had been irrigating a mole hill. I set watch on the little pests, and I soon learned their habits. Since then it is no trouble at all to get them."
"In the first place, I found that a mole never comes straight to the top of the ground, but always on a slant, and you will see the ground agitated for some time before he throws up his hill. If you step within twenty feet of him when he comes to the top he will instantly stop work and run. It's no use to try to catch him then."
"But a mole is the victim of habit. If he is disturbed at his work at 2 o'clock to-day he will not come back till exactly 2 o'clock to-morrow. You can set a watch by him and depend on its being right. Well, I watch around my berry patch and take the time whenever I disturb Mr. Mole. The next day when it is time for him to come back I take my station near the hole. As soon as he throws up his little mound I plant my foot behind him and close up his hole. Then all I have to do is to scoop him out of the dirt and drop him in my pocket, kicking and scratching like a good fellow. I kill him, stretch his skin on a shingle and a man here in this city pays me $1 apiece for them to make purses of."
A Singular Accident.
While Frank Faber was making some repairs under a stone crusher at Devil's Lake, Wis., a screw caught his clothes and began to draw him upward. He grabbed hold of a timber and held on while the screw continued to wind and did not let go until every stitch of clothing except his boots was removed from his body. He was only slightly injured.
