THIRD DISTRICT REP. CONVENTION

IT NOMINATED MR. NEAL HERE MONDAY.

End of Interesting Contest of Several Months' Duration.

The third representative convention was held here Monday and it was largely and enthusiastically attended and passed off very harmoniously. Wm. H. Hoyt of Plymouth was made chairman and J. R. Taylor of Romulus secretary. Thirty-five of the 36 delegates were present. The committee appointed on credentials was W. E. Markham, F. S. Prouty and John Dicks. Resolutions, Wm. Locke, W. H. Bradshaw, Wm. Blakely. Per organization and order of business, Jas. Cody, Frank Riggs, S. K. Cole.

Mr. Neal's name was placed in nomination by C. L. Gubnar of this place. Mr. Ostrander of Livonia presented P. B. Whitbeck's and Walter Stokes of Trenton did likewise for Geo. D. Jones. Delegate Markham for the Plymouth delegation and Delegate Blakely for the Huron delegation seconded the nomination of Mr. Neal and Arthur Flowers seconded Mr. Jones nomination. Neal was nominated on the first ballot, receiving 26 votes, Whitbeck 5, Jones 4. Neal's nomination was then made unanimous, and the three candidates were invited to the platform where they made a few remarks. Remarks were also made by Senator "Pop" Goodell of Canton and Rep. I. Roy Waterbury of Oakland.

The committee on resolutions made a report commending the administration of the various state offices and laid particular stress upon the "business-like and decidedly popular administration of the office of Secretary of State by our bustling neighbor, Hon. Fred M. Warner of Farmington." The committee came near adding "and our governor in 1904." For some reason the representative nomination this year has attracted great interest in this district and even the contest for state delegates has in most of the townships been put in the shade in comparison of quantity of delegates and of the attendance at the primaries. It is safe to say that two years from now, when a U. S. senator is to be elected as a side attraction there will be a candidate from about six different towns in the field and if this year is any criterion, the campaign of 1904 promises to be a hammer indeed.

CONFIDENCE MEN IN TOWN.

After Charles Angell and Borrowed Perrin's Horses.

A couple of strangers, who had been hanging around some of the farmers' homes in this vicinity "looking up lost relatives" have proved to be three card montemen. They tried to get some money out of C. P. Angell, who lives a short distance from town, but did not succeed in "entertaining" an Angell unaware.

They pretended, of course, to be strangers to each other in the interest of their scheme to fleece the farmers who may prove unwary. On Monday each of the fellows hired a horse and buggy at Perrin's livery, where they had before obtained and paid for rigs. They did not return, and Mr. Perrin received word later that one of his horses was at Whitmore Lake. He found the animal had been driven until tired out and left the rascals taking the other rig and going on some distance farther, where they left the outfit, made for the railroad, and departed for parts unknown.

INTO GERMANY AND MEXICO

Phillips & Co. Sold Laundry Machinery This Week.

Wm. Phillips & Co., Northville's well known laundry machinery manufacturers and dealers, received orders for machinery this week from Mexico City, Mexico, and Hamburg, Germany. That this firm sells laundry machinery in nearly every country on the globe certainly speaks well for one of Northville's industries and especially for Mr. Phillips who personally manages the industry.

$50 Verdict for Tapp.

Judge Webster rendered a verdict yesterday morning for $50 in favor of Richard Tapp against the Detroit United Railway Company because the latter allowed one of its electric cars to run over and kill three of Mr. Tapp's cows and injure two others on the night of August 25 last year. The company claimed extenuating circumstances because of a dark and gloomy night but the witnesses for the plaintiff testified quite to the contrary. The case will be appealed. Geo. Yeikes appeared for Mr. Tapp.

At Starkweather Park.

There was a big crowd at Starkweather Park yesterday and some good races were seen, a full account of which will be given next week. The ball game was won by the Northville team—15 to 16.

HIRAM THAYER

DIED TUESDAY

WAS ONE OF WAYNE COUNTY'S PIONEERS

He Had Held Several Prominent Offices of Trust.

After an illness of more than a year Hiram B. Thayer of this township died at his home five miles southwest of here Tuesday night. He was born Jan. 8, 1832, on the farm where he had lived all these years and where he so peacefully passed away. He was one of the town's best known, most influential and highly respected citizens and his loss will be universally regretted.

In 1855 Mr. Thayer was united in marriage with Almira J. Wheeler, who died some three years ago. Of that union were born Wm. W. Thayer of Detroit, Mrs. Elizabeth Haskell of Ludington and Rufus Thayer of Colorado Springs.

Hiram Thayer had faithfully filled many public offices. In 1875-6 he was deputized county clerk of this county and he served two years, 1877-79, as county auditor. He held the office of supervisor of the township of Plymouth before this town was divided, and had been justice of the peace for years and years. He had been loyal to every trust imposed upon him and in his declining years enjoyed the manifest regard of his neighbors as well as being surrounded by all the comforts of life and the care of children and grandchildren and the thoughts of a well spent life. Although feeble bodily and unable to carry special out-land, he retained his mental faculties to the last. The funeral will be held this afternoon.

THE CYCLONE OF LAST WEEK

AS VIEWED BY ONE OF THE RECORD'S STAFF.

Played Havoc With Buildings, Trees, and Fences in Oakland.

The most disastrous storm that ever visited this section swept across the country just north of Northville Thursday afternoon leaving wreck and ruin to mark its pathway, traces of which will not be effaced for many years to come. The path of the storm appears to have been from one to five miles wide and according to some accounts seems to have been a sort of "double header," two currents apparently branching off in different directions and then converging with disastrous effect. The general direction was from north-west to southeast as indicated by the way the most of the fallen timber lies, but in many instances trees only a short distance apart have fallen in opposite directions.

Of the buildings wrecked or damaged by the storm within a few miles of Northville, those of Alonzo Sessions in the western part of Novi were first struck, his barn being badly demolished and Mr. Sessions who was in one of them, was somewhat injured. The home of Cass Sanford a short distance away was almost wrecked, not a building on the place escaping, and Jonah Sanford's barn a mile east was also wrecked.

A barn on William R. Turner's farm was reduced to kindling wood, one of his orchards completely destroyed and his fences scattered over acres of land.

The big new basement barn just erected by Carl Sallow to replace the one burned last winter was lifted from its foundations and looks as if some giant had held it up and dropped it to the earth. The large structure stands leaning, twisted and broken, an awe inspiring witness to the awful power of the mysterious forces of the storm.

barn, one of the finest in the town is simply a flattened pile of debris, as is a smaller barn on L. L. Brooks' farm. Winamills, outbuildings and fences lie scattered in every direction, while the damage to shade trees, timber and orchards cannot be even approximately estimated as yet.

On George Yerkes' farm was one of the finest 25 acre tracts of original timber in this section of Michigan. Fifteen acres of it is an invaluable mass of wreckage. (Mr. Yerkes' maple sugar orchard of 25) a magnificent tree less than 200 ft. in height standing. Carl Salvo, Lee West, Seymour Brown, Richmond Simmons, John Shaw and many others whose names the record has not learned also lost a lot of valuable timber.

At Novi village the Baptist church sheds were torn to pieces. A part of Mrs. Bloomer's house unroofed, the cemetery fence destroyed and a large number of monuments blown down and broken and many chimneys torn from the houses, and orchards uprooted to an alarming extent.

Among some of the more peculiar incidents it is noted that in a tract of woods of about ten acres on the farm of Perry Lamb and Emmet Hammon were fifteen head of cattle belonging to Lamb and to George Dandison. A hundred and fifty or two hundred trees were blown down and not one of the cattle injured, while half a mile away William Dodge's only cow was killed by the falling of a tree under which she had taken shelter. A heavily loaded apple tree on Christian Brunner's place was uprooted and carried some distance and set upright against the side of the house. On two large maple trees growing from the same roots and standing almost against each other one was torn off half way to the top and the other left standing, much mutilated.

A hundred more instances of loss and damage might be enumerated, but space is limited. The wash house at the farm of Mrs. J. M. Ambler was blown down and much damage done to trees in the village. The United Railway was pulled off business for several hours by the storm. At the Latham woods a dozen big trees were blown on the track. Northville was just out of the direct path of the tornado and although the storm was terrifying here, some damage to shade trees was done, but all our share in its effects.

A SIMPLE QUESTION.

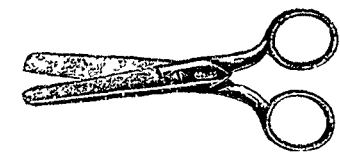

Northville People Are Requested to Honestly Answer This.

Is not the word of a representative citizen of Northville more convincing than the doubtful utterances of people living elsewhere in the nation?

Mr. J. M. Ambler, school janitor, living on Main street, says: "Mrs. Ambler and I used Doan's Kidney Pills procuring them at Murdoch Bros. drug store, and the treatment proved very satisfactory. We both had a lame back of a rheumatic nature and although we used several remedies we derived more benefit from a box of Doan's Kidney Pills than any other medicine we ever tried. We do not hesitate to endorse so valuable a remedy."

Improvement.

Pinchbeck—Ah doctor! I see you continue your visits to my neighbor, Guffinger. How is he, by the way, this morning?

Doctor—I am glad to be able to report a noticeable improvement in his case.

Pinchbeck—Indeed? Is he able to do anything yet?

Doctor—Yes, indeed. He was able to pay his bill yesterday, and that's a marked improvement as compared to the bulk of my patients.—Richmond Dispatch.

No Consideration.

Husband—Where is the hammer?

Wife—You had it yesterday.

"I'm not asking where it was yesterday."

"You had it yesterday, and no one else has had it since."

"Huh! Well, if you had the least bit of consideration for my feelings you would have used that hammer for something or other after I got through with it, and then you would know where it is."—N. Y. Weekly.

Her Successful Scheme.

"It seems to me," he remarked, usually, "that you have succeeded in cutting down the household expenses a little recently."

"Yes," she replied, "I am saving something on the wages of the servant. You see, I made a rule that the value of everything she broke should be deducted from her wages, and, as matters now stand, she will have to work four weeks for nothing to clear up her indebtedness."—Chicago Post.

What He Was Fined For.

Editor—Who sent in this item about that last hailstorm?

Subeditor—Young Jenkins, of Po-tomac, Why?

Editor—Why, he says some of the hailstones were as large as canary birds' eggs. That chap is too honest to be a reporter—just drop him a line and offer him the position of cashier in this establishment.—Puck.

Then She Forgave Him.

"It's all your fault," he pleaded, after he had stolen the kiss.

"Mine," she cried indignantly.

"Have I done anything to deserve such liberties?"

"Not directly," he answered, "but you shouldn't be so irresistibly attractive."

Thus we learn the value of diplomacy, for he got another.—Chicago Post.

This Excuse.

He—I know I'm late, but I couldn't help it. You see, I was detained a couple of hours by an old friend who had just got back to town after a long absence. I had to tell him all I knew.

She (snappishly)—I don't see why that should have kept you so long.—Tit-Bits.

Hash's Only Rival.

"In your vermiform appendix," the surgeon told him, after the operation was over, "we found, strange to say, a small brass tack."

"That proves I was right," feebly answered the sick man, "when I said it was something I had eaten in mince pie."—Chicago Tribune.

Hoot, Mon.

"Gracious!" exclaimed the fair tourist, as she caught the first glimpse of a Scotchman in kilts. "don't you think he is barefaced to appear in public in such a garb?"

"No," smiled her escort. "I think he is barefaced."—Chicago Daily News.

Its Value to Her.

"I don't see why Miss Olden sues him for breach of promise. She knows he isn't worth anything."

"No, but it's worth a good deal to her, no doubt, to have a chance to let people know that she has really had a proposal."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Floor Walker—I'm sorry, madam, but I can't exchange this hat for you.

Mrs. Smyth—But my husband doesn't like it.

Two Points of View.

"Even the beautiful flowers soon wither and fade," said the pessimist.

"Which is a fortunate thing for the florists," rejoined the optimist.—Chicago Daily News.

Money No Obstacle.

"But I am worth a million in my own right," talked she, sadly, for she had read that many men abhor the thought of marrying rich women.

"I love you for all that," he cried, earnestly.—Town Topics.

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

The "Wizard" Has Another.

"It is now up to the manufacturers of automobiles to produce a cheap carriage," said Thomas A. Edison the other day. "I have, after three years of hard work, solved the problem of an electrical storage battery which can be used for long distance work and which will wear out three or four automobiles before it will succumb itself." In Mr. Edison's new battery a combination of steel and nickel suspended in an alkaline solution takes the place of lead and makes a much lighter battery than the one at present used. The batteries now used will run more than forty miles without recharging, while Mr. Edison claims that his batteries have already shown a capacity of 100 miles. On this point the "wizard" said:

nation of steel and nickel suspended in an alkaline solution takes the place of lead and makes a much lighter battery than the one at present used. The batteries now used will run more than forty miles without recharging, while Mr. Edison claims that his batteries have already shown a capacity of 100 miles. On this point the "wizard" said:

"I am going to start an automobile out for an endurance test of 5,000 miles. I shall make five separate tests of this kind with different machines, and if I do not produce a battery that will last for more than 5,000 miles I won't sell a single one of them."

How Nevins Went West.

Thomas Nevins, the "American Irishman" who proposes according to the papers, to introduce Irish granite as a paving material into Great Britain, thus displacing Scotch stone, is from East Orange, N. J., and not from Chicago, as the dispatches had it. And his last enterprise is exactly what might be expected from him, since it was in the building of roads in East Orange that he won the big fortune that enabled him a few years ago to go back to Ireland and buy the castle which he has been more than three score years ago.

Nevins is a picture-que figure. His rise in life was not assisted by the culture that is secured in the schools, and when he landed in New York about half a century ago he had no money at all. He didn't get on well in the city, and one day he asked an acquaintance what he had better do. In the words of Horace Greeley the acquaintance said, "Go west, young man." So Nevins decided to strike out for the setting sun. He had no idea how far "west" he ought to go, and he started via a ferry boat for the shores of New Jersey. Landed at Hoboken, he took up his journey on foot. When he got to East Orange, he met a man who offered him a job as a stable boy. Then he took note of the badness of the Jersey roads. Later he got some one to back him in an attempt to improve them. Today the roads about East Orange are as fine as any in America and finer than most. Nevins never went farther west than East Orange, so to speak, until he had made a good beginning in the raising of the millions that now are his.

Don't Fear Ship Combine.

At the annual meeting of the London Chamber of Commerce held May 28 Lord Brassey, the presiding officer, presented an address which dealt mainly with the shipping question. In discussing the ship combination of which J. P. Morgan is the head Lord Brassey said: "Let us not lose our national dignity in unavailing and groundless alarm. Our position as a maritime nation is assured beyond the reach of competition, and we shall hold our position against all comers because we build ships more cheaply and with or without foreign crews sail them more cheaply than any of our rivals." Lord Brassey admitted, however, that British shipbuilders must look to their laurels in the construction of ocean grey-hounds.

Sam Clemens' Few Maxims.

Mark Twain has added two new maxims to the world's already valuable collection. They are as follows: "We ought never to do wrong when people are looking" and "No real gentleman will tell the naked truth in the presence of ladies."

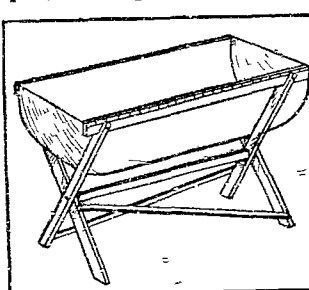

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

Beating Off the Moth.

Moth-protection is much more than just accomplished when a garment is brushed free from dust, stains, spots and any soil removed and every fold and seam scanned closely for a deposit of moth eggs. If it can be made sure that none of the latter is in the garment, it is easy and cheap to keep them out. Immediately on finishing the cleansing and inspecting treatment slip the garment into a bag made of calico or muslin that will hold it easily and that has not the smallest break or tear. Close the opening by running the ends together in the sewing-machine and lay away on a shelf or in a trunk, as preferred. A housekeeper who has kept blankets, furs and clothing year in and year out in this way gives this as her advice after her long and successful experience. "Sometimes," she says, "I dip a cloth in turpentine and drop it in the bag with my blankets, and I always go over the closet shelves or the trunk or the bureau drawer in which I pack away this bagged clothing, etc., with a brush dipped in turpentine. Moths won't eat cotton or linen, and if you are very careful to keep them out of the garment till it is into the bag they are out for the summer. Don't use muslin for the bags. It is too silky. Use any clean firm cotton or linen material. Old pillowcases that are not broken or worn through anywhere are useful for the purpose. Many things accumulate in the house that may be used—light elastic dress hangings, faded chamber, percale or linen dress shirts and the like. I have such articles ripped and washed and made into straight bags of various sizes. These accumulate in my linen closet ready for the spring packing away."

Baby's Bathing.

I have thoroughly enjoyed giving our baby her bath since her father made a bathtub on legs, so that I can sit in my low rocker and bathe her without straining my back in the least. I have her basket, an extra large one, containing all I need, on a chair by my side, and when I dress her I take her on my lap, which is covered with a large flannel upon. The tub is made of a piece of rubber sheeting 30 inches wide and 14 yards long. At each corner I folded the edges together for five inches and then folded that point back even with the edge of the end, so that on each end the two points are folded toward the center. I oversewed a piece of strong cotton belting two ty inches long to the edge on each end to keep the folds in place. The frame is made of four cross legs thirty inches long. At the top are two bars thirty six inches long, to which the sides of rubber and the ends of the cotton belting are firmly tacked. Where the legs cross they are pivoted by a long screw to a heavy central bar thirty-six inches long, so that the tub can be folded like a camp stool and be put away in a very small space. To make it more steady two other bars are used. Each is screwed at one end to the leg near the pivot and extends diagonally down to a point near the end of the leg. One is on each side, slanting in opposite directions.—Cor Good Housekeeping.

BABY'S FATHER MADE IT.

Strawberry Shortcake.

Whatever recipe is used for shortcake it should be torn apart rather than cut, for a knife used on warm bread will make it heavy. A nice way is to roll the dough thin and butter the sides that rest together, and then pull them apart when ready to spread the berries. The dough cut out into biscuits makes nice individual shortcakes for dessert. The noted cook, Mrs. Lincoln, advocates that way. Here is her recipe: One pint of sifted flour, one scant half teaspoonful of salt, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one-quarter cupful of butter and one cupful of sour milk. Personally I prefer my shortcake sweetened a little, say half a cupful of sugar to the above recipe.

Here is a recipe with baking powder: One pint of flour, sifted, with a heaping teaspoonful of baking powder. Rub in a level tablespoonful of butter. Mix with about one-half pint of milk. Do not roll, but flatten out with the hands to about three-quarters of an inch thick. Bake eighteen or twenty minutes.

Painted Floors.

A painted floor cannot be recommended without reserve. The paint wears off quickly, and it is very difficult to keep the floor looking clean. Still, that a floor must be well painted the surface must first be made smooth, nail holes and cracks being filled with putty. Then paint with the best floor paint to be procured. The floor needs to be cleaned every morning by use of a broom covered with a bag. Then it should be wiped up with a damp cloth wrung out of clear warm water. Soap removes the paint.

For Condensed Milk Can.

A late invention seen at the house furnishing counters is an article which serves the triple purpose of opening, holding and pouring out a can of condensed milk. It is a jar of nickel plate, the cover fitted with a sharp edge that cuts through the tin, a lip at one side affording the easy flow of the contents of the can.

Still a Good Chance.

"Do you think there is any hope?" asked the disconsolate lover.

"Hope!" repeated the wise sister.

"Of course there is."

"But she told me," persisted the disconsolate lover, "that she never wanted to see my face again when we had our last quarrel."

"She didn't mean it," asserted the wise sister. "I know she didn't mean it. When I was there to-day your photograph still stood on her dresser. Until that disappears there is no reason to despair."—Chicago Post.

Responding to the suggestion of the official board, Treasurer John Dolph read a financial report to the congregation last Sunday morning and gave a short exhortation, which was followed by some remarks from the pastor relative to the finances of the church. Some of our people are doing nobly in their generous support of the church and it is to be hoped that all will do their share before the end of the year.

GREAT DAIRY YEAR
Cheese Industry Especially in Prosperous Condition.
Inquiry among many cheese manufacturers establishes the fact that this promises to be the best year in the last ten; demand is large and prices high.
Fred M. Warner of Farmington who is one of the largest cheese manufacturers in Michigan, says: "I have been in the business the past fourteen years and believe this will certainly be the banner one in my factories. I am turning out over one hundred cheese a day, but the demand keeps me sold up very close and the prices in May and June are higher than at any time since I have been in the business, in fact prospects are very bright for high prices for cheese all the year. At present I have over four hundred retail grocers using my make of cheese which gives a steady market for me at all times. I have orders already booked that will take nearly all of my out-put for the next six weeks."
In one day last week Mr. Warner received orders for over 2,000 boxes cheese at prices two cents per pound higher than one year ago. This is certainly good news for the two hundred farmers who haul milk to his various factories as their demands will be proportionately higher. There is one thing certain, the management of his factories is all that can be asked for, as can be readily proven by inquiry of any of his patrons who have dealt with him for years and on the other hand he aims to sell only the best trade, grocers who appreciate and want a uniform A 1 cheese.

NO WEATHER BUREAU

Rheumatics Can Tell by Their Aches When a Storm is Coming.

Rheumatics save barometers, but it is like sticking knives into them when change of weather comes.
 When nature waves her danger flag it is an acute evidence of the disease and a cry for help. She cannot free herself from this ionic acid, but convulsively tries to throw it off as the stomach tries to eject a poison.
 If you do not help nature you will have to suffer. You have suffered. There's no need. Athiophors can stop the pain and free you from this weather-vane track. Athiophors acts directly on the ionic acid like a May day on an ice field—it will drive your Rheumatism away, no matter what kind of Rheumatism or Neuralgia you may have. Sciatica and Lumbago both come from ionic acid and will respond quickly to the action of Athiophors—it will soothe and quiet you—you can prove it easily. If your druggist doesn't keep it send $1 to The Athiophors Co., New Haven, Conn. It is dearest to know help is so near. You will find it still pleasanter to be without aches and pains

Another Opportunity.
 A Certain Man, having read somewhere that Opportunity knocks only once at each one's door, concluded to sit up all night for fear he would miss the call. So while he was sitting near his door there came a heavy knock thereon.
 When he opened the door a stranger seized him and beat him all up and took his money and garments and chided him for being so busy.
 "But," said the Man, "thinking to excuse himself, 'I thought it was Opportunity who knocked.'"
 "So it was," responded the Other.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE KIDNAPING OF MME. DU BARRY.

His conversation was interrupted by another step and a heavy German voice: "Well, Monsieur Mein Herr," said the voice, "I did that job well. Is it not so?"

"Yes, but you must not come here. You must keep away from us," replied Casparin.

"Ho! That is not so easy. Then where am I to get the money on which to live? I must no longer be seen in the streets of the prince! I am not to see you! What then, the river?"

"Go to the devil!" growled Casparin. "It is most fortunate that there are French gentlemen to help me. I would not want a band of German-aid. But come. You did my bidding that time and duped the two Americans almost as well as I duped one. I will pay you as I agreed, but stipulate that you depart. Leave Paris, and do not go to Denesia."

"Oh, then, that is not bad," said the German, rattling a well filled purse. "There is Germany."

"Yes. So there, for God's sake," said Casparin, and the other laughed. Between Buckford and Wallace and the four members of this band there were many scores to be settled. But just then Buckford was at a most serious disadvantage.

"I must now leave you," said Vandal. "I have business with Mme. du Barry."

"Then you need not hurry, for Mme. du Barry is in the room beneath this lying down with a severe headache," said Casparin. "Lately come with me, and I can promise you an afternoon of real amusement."

"I accept," said Vandal. "The Prince Casparin is admittedly a connoisseur in pleasure—and beauty."

"But what about that meddling," asked Robello, "that supposed suicide that Reber insisted on employing to do some work which we should trust to no one? What about him?"

"I did what I thought was best," said Reber doggedly. "I saw the fellow about to jump into the Seine. Men

MME. DU BARRY'S face became whiter still. It was evident in a moment to Buckford that there were subjects the mention of which she dreaded even more than that of the missing prisoner.

"Oh, monsieur, have mercy!" she wailed. "I am but a poor, weak woman."

"Madame," said Buckford sternly, "your history is one of crime. I should even when I look at you and think of the misery you have caused in this world."

"Alas! It is not all true. I am not so bad as they say."

"Heaven! If you were but half as bad! Oh, Madame, I assure you you know you well, but even the police do not think you are quite as bad as your enemies would declare."

"Enemies! My enemies! Have I enemies, then, who denounce me to the police?"

Buckford laughed easily. He saw now that he was gaining ground. "Enemies! Madame, I have learned more in three days from your friends than I ever hoped to know."

"My friends! Name them! Tell me one secret of mine which my friends told the police, and I will assist you in any work you want—that is, monsieur, of course, with an eye to my own safety."

Better and better.

"Why," said Buckford, "do you happen to know a M. Vandal? Well, I got from his own lips a portion of the story of the murder that was committed in your house last night."

"Men Dieu! That Vandal! And he is to become my husband?"

Buckford laughed long and low—a threatening, insinuating laugh. "My dear madame," he said, "pardon my rudeness, do, but it seems incomprehensible that a woman of your intelligence should be so easily gulled. Vandal to become your husband! Why, it was but a short time ago I overheard a conversation between him and your other friend—shall I call him simply Casparin?—about a young girl of Denesia he was to marry."

"Vandal!"

"No other. It was as a reward for service done for Casparin. The girl is young and beautiful."

"Oh, oh! This is too much! It is well sometimes to receive visits from the police. They learn everything."

"We do that, indeed," said Buckford. "And M. Reber? You know him well?"

"Reber! That fool! He muddles things. He got a fool of an American mixed up in an affair that—"

"I know—the prisoner who escaped and came to your house."

"Alas, he did come, I admit, monsieur! But I swear I do not know at the present time where he is."

Buckford leaned forward and in his most impressive manner said: "But I know, madame. The plans of your friends have not all succeeded. I have been through your house, madame, and the prisoner is gone."

Madame heaved a great sigh of relief. "Good! Then I am not under arrest."

"Not for that."

"Oh, oh! Then I am still—I am—"

"Madame listen to me. We do not start out with only one charge in our guns. We are ready at any moment to turn from one quest to another, as circumstances demand. I came here to find that prisoner. I learn that he is gone. Now, I have other matters to attend to, and it will be greatly to your advantage, madame, to follow my advice."

"I am ready, monsieur," said Mme. du Barry, with a shiver. It was impossible to foretell what advice this inscrutable agent of police might give her. But there was that murder in her house, and how many other crimes there is no guessing.

"Madame, you are a true French woman, I believe."

"Ah! Am I not! All for the honor of France?"

"Ah, France is indeed safe when her honor rests in such hands! Then know, madame, that this Casparin, who assumes a title to which he has no right, is really a spy in the service of Germany."

"Mon Dieu! Is it so?" Then Vandal said: "Quite true, madame. M. Vandal is acting in accord with a spy and of course is subject to the law."

"Then seize him, monsieur! Oh, that serpentlike scoundrel! He claimed, monsieur, that he loved me."

"I wonder that he did not, madame. It would have been one virtue among his hideous faults."

"Oh, but you cannot know half! They would have killed that prisoner too. But then that makes little difference to him. You—oh, I forgot, monsieur, that I was talking to one of the police."

"So it has leaked out, has it? Have you the papers handy, madame? I left home early and have had little time to read this morning. There may be something in the papers to change my plans."

Eager to please, this agent of police, who held she knew not how many secrets against her, Mme. du Barry had around the room and brought him that morning's copies of two papers.

Sitting near the door, so that the woman could not escape, Buckford found the articles referring to his escape from the depot and read them with a certain grim satisfaction and yet with dismay.

It was evident from the tone of the article in each paper that it had been practically decided that he was guilty of the murder of M. de Bullion. The articles had evidently been inspired by the spiteful police authorities who could not forgive an American for escaping from their celebrated Palais de Justice.

The connection of M. Monroe, the rich American, with the case was dwelt upon at length. His successful hoodwinking of Magistrate M. Senecal, his appearance at the depot in disguise, the entire plot as it appeared to the police—it was all in print.

An interview was published in which the American minister expressed his hope that his countryman was innocent. But these were nothing said about any vigorous effort in his behalf.

It was hinted that Buckford, desperate as he was known to be, having been benefited by M. Monroe's courage and interest, had murdered him and robbed him to gain money to effect his escape from France and also leave behind no one who knew the secret of his manner of escape.

When Buckford read this, his lips pressed together white and thin.

A reward was offered for the recapture of the prisoner, dead or alive. He would not escape again. The police would see to that.

As Buckford read and digested this article the whole force of the awful truth came upon him.

He was suspected now of two murders.

His escape from the Palais de Justice had so exasperated the authorities that he felt sure no appeal to them would lead to a search for the truth. Even if he was not executed for the murder of M. de Bullion, he would certainly suffer at the hands of the vengeful police.

The position of the American representative left no great hope that his country would act vigorously in his behalf. And he knew that nothing except the most vigorous action would avail anything.

The reward offered for his recapture was so large that no matter to whom he might show himself in Paris he was almost certain to be turned over to the police.

Monroe was the only friend he could have trusted, and Monroe was dead, and he was accused of murdering him.

He might, with a stupendous nerve and confidence in French justice, go to the prefecture and tell the whole story. But he had already told two stories at the prefecture, and both had been doubted. He had no wish to try again.

There was but one thing open to him—escape from France.

Then there came to him a longing for revenge, a great thirst for the punishment of the men who had brought this terrible disaster upon him.

And with this sentiment was mingled a strong desire still to aid the Prince of Denesia, his American wife and the beautiful Princess Marie.

In his own extremely he did not forget them.

How was he to manage to accomplish his own safety, evade the Paris police, bring the conspirators against the prince to grief, wreak just vengeance upon his own tormentors and finally secure such proof of his own innocence as would forever free him from the charges now lodged against him at the Palais de Justice?

With a watchful eye on the tigerish Mme. du Barry he pondered this momentous problem.

He could not go to America. Even if he reached there in disguise he could never resume communication with members of his family. And in America he could neither punish his own enemies nor defeat those of the prince.

He recalled the conversation on the upper floor. The quartet of rascals intended to follow the prince to Denesia.

If he could reach Denesia, he might, with God and fortune on his side, reach the prince in time to save him, punish his own enemies, and, with the assistance of so powerful an ally as the ruler of Denesia would be, he might reestablish his integrity with the Parisian authorities.

To Mme. du Barry, sitting there panting with fear lest this police agent should, after all, turn on her and carry her off to the dreaded Palais de Justice, there was nothing unusual in the manner of the man who sat near her reading.

He seemed merely to be perusing an article containing police news of more than ordinary interest.

He did not act like a man who was reading his own death warrant.

His smile was not that of a man who was trying to cheat the guillotine of a victim.

"Madame," he said, laying the papers aside, "there is much in these articles that is of great importance to me, though to one not connected with the police they would seem simple enough. I find that my plans must be changed at once. I had thought of in-" stalling you to take a drive with me to the prefecture to see—"

"Mon Dieu! I would never return!"

"But now I think of making a bargain with you. You already know how familiar I am with your affairs. I could, if I wished, place you in a cell within two hours. But on condition that you obey me implicitly I will forgive you longer and a more complete version of my plans."

"Ah, monsieur! I thank you from my heart."

"Yes, you thank me for the agreement?"

"Of course, monsieur! What else could I think of doing?"

"Good, then. Now listen. I can tell you reading these articles that the escape of the prisoner, the presence of Casparin in Paris, and a great plot against the security of France, are interwoven; hence, as you can perceive, madame, it is important to seize at once the conspirators against our government. When we have them, we shall have no difficulty in securing the American. Now for your part. You, madame, are a woman of splendid proportions. I think your garments would about fit me. So prepare me a complete outfit of clothing, and let it be of the newest you have."

"Ha, ha! Oh, is that trifling service all that monsieur requires? Indeed, monsieur could have my entire wardrobe for his generosity. I will transform monsieur into a fine madame in the time."

She laughed gleefully as she spoke. She turned to a closet at one end of the room to bring the required garments.

"First, let me examine the chest," said Buckford.

He unlocked himself that there was no hidden exit.

In leaving his chair and going to the door of the chest he missed witnessing a peculiar, indescribable smile that played for the moment on the face of Mme. du Barry.

In Mme. du Barry's mind there were flashing thoughts almost as rapidly as had been the case with Buckford's.

She had at no time doubted that he was an agent of police. She lived day and night in dread of these persecutors of her kind. She did not doubt his story that he had searched her house and found the prisoner gone.

But she did doubt his story that Vandal was intending to desert her. She had been Vandal's friend too long to doubt him now.

She cared little for Casparin, Reber or Robello. But she must save Vandal, her lover.

She was smiling at the simplicity of this agent of police. He was going to wear one of her dresses and track Vandal. She could describe the dress to Vandal, and the police agent would fall a victim to his own trap.

She took a new and somewhat gay gown from the wardrobe. At some new and convincing thought her face twitched with ill disguised mirth. Buckford saw this.

At his command she continued to bring forth various portions of a woman's complete outfit.

He took off his own shoes and put on a pair of Mme. du Barry's, which fitted very well, though pretty tight for a young man who loved comfort.

"Never mind," he said. "It will give me a mending gait."

Mme. du Barry laughed.

"Now, madame, a small calice, if you have one."

Mme. du Barry had almost everything. She produced a calice.

Into this Buckford packed his coat, rest and such small items as collars, scarf, cuffs all of which he still wore, as they had not been taken from him in the depot. They were, to be sure, much soiled and bedraggled. But he did not know when he might need them before he could purchase more, and he could easily wash them and iron them, not as a laundry sends them home, but at least clean.

Over his trousers he put Mme. du Barry's skirts. He then added a woman's vest front and a waist and fastened Mme. du Barry's little silk tie at his throat.

One thing was in his favor. He had neither beard nor mustache.

A slight growth of hair could be seen on his lip but no more than Mme. du Barry's own.

Wayne wants a brass band and a meeting has been held in the interest of the movement. A good band is tabu commended in any town.

The Higgins school, Detroit, is to have a brass band. The school board will furnish and own the instruments and provide a tutor for the young tooters.

H. N. Hicks, a farmer near Ann Arbor is 85 years of age but that doesn't hinder him from working his farm with out help and driving to town every day with a load of milk.

The much advertised seventeen year locusts have appeared near Milford, but the specimen brought to the Times office was as harmless as a dove and it wasn't caged up, either.

A Wayne man has recently sold a pair of eighteen year old horses that were not broken until they were twelve years old. "Gee! it must have been a bit of a job to break twelve year old colts."

In the midst of safety we are in danger. Matt Wilcox, the well known show man lost a finger at Durand one day last week by the too sudden and emphatic shutting of the door of a police car.

Mrs. Solo tried to poison herself at Delray the other day, but a trio of doctors, a quartet of neighbors and a host of nurses frustrated the attempt, and although she was so low she will have to recover.

It is among the probabilities that the Milford fair will be soon, est this year, owing to results of various adverse conditions last year. If only the directors could arrange to get insured against wet weather every thing would be all right.

Two prominent Walled Lake women got into a hair-pulling scramble Sunday over the relative value of the husband of one of the combatants and tempers and spring hats were torn off as demolished in the attempt to settle the question.

Spirits told John Frank where to find some money some time ago. Last week he found an old fashioned 25 cent gold piece—Wayne News Letter.

Farmington township has paid $115 in two months for sheep killed by dogs. The Enterprise man figures that this would be $600 a year. If he knew just how many dogs are owned in the township and how many of them embarked in the sheep deal he could find out the approximate value of Farmington's canine stock by a little more mathematics.

One of the best jokes of the season is on some would be burglars at Holly. They broke a lock and removed a pane of glass in an unsuccessful effort to get into a building when they had just stepped around to the front they could have walked right in as one of the big plate glass windows was out temporarily. It must have been a painful discovery when they realized the situation.

An Ysland clergyman preached Sunday on "The Art of Trusting." The grocery dealers and the merchants of his congregation would probably rather have had some instruction in the art of how to do business without trusting. The Oakland Palace would also be interested in the latter subject, judging from its strenuous appeal last week to delinquent subscribers.

A letter was made of a piece of stone taken from the summit of Mt. Annapurna, the highest mountain in the world. It was presented to the king by a British officer.

Spring Fever. Spring fever is another name for biliousness. It is more serious than most people think. A torpid liver and inactive bowels mean a poisoned system. If neglected serious illness may follow such symptoms. DeWitt's Little Early Risers remove all danger by stimulating the liver, opening the bowels and cleansing the system of impurities. Safe pills. Never gripe. "I have taken DeWitt's Little Early Risers for torpid liver every spring for years," writes R. M. Everly, Mountville, W. Va. "They do me more good than anything I have ever tried." TESTIMONY ALL IN.

Famous Jones Murder Case in Detroit. Nearly Ended.

Detroit, Mich., June 18.—For a period covering two weeks the trial of William Jones, for the murder of George Haywood, has been dragging in the city courts. But yesterday afternoon saw the conclusion of testimony taking.

The sentiment of the people is about evenly divided, and without a doubt the endeavor to convict Jones on evidence which is purely circumstantial, has attracted the attention of the people of the community more than any similar trial which has occurred in many years.

Before adjournment yesterday the recorder told the attorneys to have ready in the morning their requests for instructions. It is understood that Prosecuting Attorney Hunt will open for the people. He will be followed by Mr. Monaghan for the defense, and Mr. Grosbeck will close for the people. They will follow the charge to the jury by Recorder Murphy and then the jury will decide the fate of William M. Jones.

MOTTO.

"We rise by the things that are under our feet. By what we have mastered of good or gain. By the hopes despoiled and the passions slain. And the conquered ills that we daily meet."—Longfellow.

A fine picture of Longfellow has recently been procured for the fourth grade as a result of collecting soap wrappers. We commend the pupils for their effort.

Through the kindness of Glenn Richardson grades one and two had the pleasure of a musical treat last Tuesday afternoon. His zonophone furnished the music.

Through the kindness of pupils and parents the teachers desks during the week have been liberally supplied with the most beautiful and fragrant flowers of the season.

Last Friday afternoon grade four enjoyed a treat from their teacher, Miss Wallin. She had prepared some ice cream and waters and at the close of school invited her grade to partake of the delicacies.

We wish to express our appreciation of the liberal use we have enjoyed of these columns during the year. It has been a great source of pleasure to us to furnish the school notes and we trust those who have read them from time to time have not found them tedious.

The beautiful weather of this week has favored the carrying out of our program as announced in last week's issue and school has closed under the most favorable and satisfactory conditions. Only sixteen out of an enrollment of three hundred eighty failed to receive promotion certificates and that was due to lack of diligence or irregular attendance.

A recent letter from Commissioner Post states that five more of our eighth grade pupils are entitled to diplomas on account of successfully passing the eighth grade examination. That makes a diploma for every set of papers sent from our school, ten in number. The last five to receive diplomas are Ruth Hinman, Maud Wilkins, Lora Bristol, Pearl Perry and Bessie Jackson.

Fears Not Realized.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a tea spoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. We believe thoroughly in advertising. To prove it we are going to use this space for our own purposes. We have advertising space to sell, and we know it will pay a good return upon the price we charge for it if it is properly used. Our paper goes into the best homes in this community. It has been going week after week and year after year until each issue is welcomed as an old friend of the family.

The news it brings is news of neighbors, of personal affairs in which all have more or less of a common interest. If one of our readers called upon you, a merchant, you would do the best you could to convince him that what you had for sale was the best he could buy. You would show him the new things you had got in recently. You would tell him why he should have them and why they were better than he could procure elsewhere. You probably would make a sale.

Your effort, however, would be confined to one person.

You could tell the same story just as effectively to every reader of this paper in each issue.

You do not believe it would have the same effect?

If you told the story in the same way it would. We are ready to do our part to prove it. Do you care to try it?
