FOUR FINE FACTORY BUILDINGS TO BE SOLD.

Globe Furniture Co. Buildings to Go Next Wednesday.

By order of the courts all of the Globe Furniture Co's factories here will be sold at public auction next Wednesday, Aug. 27. The property has been in the hands of the receiver, F. R. Beal, for some time past and its affairs are to be wound up.

The property will be offered in six different parcels. The factory on the south side of the creek, now being used as a Sanitary wood work manufactory; the shade cloth building; the old Globe Co's offices; the building occupied by the shoe factory and the house and lot just west.

The purchase of the Sanitary wood work factory would doubtless be a good investment for a stock company could one be organized here to carry on the same business. It is making money now and could be made to do better. Whether this factory is to be closed up or not is a matter not to be too lightly considered. A good opening it is believed is here offered for local capital.

AN OLD RELIC.

Eighteenth Century Towel Owned by a Northville Lady.

Mrs. Della F. Harmon of the Northville Record, has a unique relic in the shape of a fine "birds-eye" linen towel spun and woven by her great grandmother in 1779 as a part of that lady's wedding outfit. The article is in a perfect state of preservation, and is valued not only for its great age, but from the fact that the lady who made it was a Miss Phoebe Morgan, a member of the famous colonial Morgan family of Massachusetts. She married a Howard of the American branch of the English house of Howard, of which the 1st duke of Norfolk is the head. Detroit Tribune.

Mr. Jerome Better Come Home.

A $5 bill is advertised in the Northville Record as "Lost Wednesday night, between the Gold Cure and Presbyterian parsonage." This is the first aspersion that has ever been cast on the Presbyterian clergy—Detroit Tribune.

Result of Republican Caucus.

The Republican caucus held here Saturday afternoon elected B. A. Wheeler, D. F. Griswold and W. J. Lanning delegates to the first senatorial convention, and E. K. Starkweather, Fred Tousey and S. W. Knapp delegates to the county judicial convention. The senatorial delegates will be for Fred Martindale.

Cooking Made Easy.

The Wallace Mfg. Co. of Detroit are making a new bake oven and steam cooker that is ahead of any thing yet on the market. It is called the Hilkker. It sets over a single burner and heats in two minutes. Think of it—from one-quarter to one-sixth the time—with less than one-half the average amount of gasoline. But we go further than this because after the "Hilkker" is heated, the flame beneath the oven must be reduced, when starting to bake, to at least one-half its normal capacity. It does better work in less time and at a saving of 25 per cent in fuel.

One may be seen in use in the home of the publisher of this paper any day we are going to have pie for dinner or cake for supper.

GEORGE ROSE-BADLY HURT.

Buggy Wheel Threw Him Down and Broke Nose.

George F. Rose of this place came home from Pontiac one day last week looking like a cyclone victim, all on account of an encounter with an apparently harmless vehicle and it was not an automobile either. While in attendance at the Foresters' picnic he was enjoying himself listening to the band when a buggy came along. Just for fun he grasped the spokes and attempted to stop the rig. His muscle was not equal to overcoming the momentum and he was thrown violently on his face on the pavement. He was partially stunned by the shock and was carried into a physician's office where it was found that his nose was broken and his face otherwise badly cut and bruised. He was able to return home soon after, but he hasn't really decided yet whether he is glad or sorry that he is a Forester, as if he hadn't been he probably wouldn't have been there, but neither would he have had the benefits of the organization if he had suffered the same disaster, as a non-member.

Prof. Martin Completes Special Work at Industrial School.

Prof. E. J. Martin of Northville, who has been doing special work at the Industrial school, left this afternoon for Diamond Lake, where he will spend the balance of his vacation. Mr. Martin is superintendent of schools at Northville. The management is well pleased with the work done in room B by Mr. Martin, and would have been glad to retain his services permanently. What is a loss to the institution is a gain to Northville.—Lansing Republican.

WRIT OF ERROR GRANTED.

Supreme Court Gives Andrews a New Lease of Life.

Lansing, Mich., Aug. 20.—Chief Justice Hooker and Justice Moore, sitting in chambers Tuesday granted a writ of error in the case of the People vs. Frank C. Andrews. This means that the bank wrecker may not have to go to Jackson just yet to begin his fifteen year sentence.

A formal order was made continuing Andrews in the custody of the sheriff until further proceedings are taken.

The next move will be to apply for bail. Justice Hooker intimated that all efforts to get bail in the Detroit courts should be exhausted before asking the supreme court to admit Andrews to bail. Although Judge Murphy, before whom Andrews was tried, has refused to admit him to bail, it is within the jurisdiction of any of the circuit judges to fix bail.

Detroit, Mich., Aug. 20.—The action of the supreme court in granting a writ of error in the Andrews case and also in declaring a stay of proceedings has no significance as to the merits of the case whatever, and it does not mean that any error was made in the trial.

The information that he would not have to go to prison at once was conveyed to Frank C. Andrews by Marcus Pollasky, who had a telegram from Attorney Grossbeck announcing the decision of the supreme court. "Barister" Eddie Barnett was also present when the news was given to Andrews.

The bank wrecker smiled with joy and a great sigh of relief escaped him. He stood up, shook hands with Barnett and Pollasky and was almost jubilant.

THE LAST CAMP DAY.

Governor Bliss Praised the Boys—Sham Battle Drew a Crowd.

Camp Hawley, Manistee, Mich., Aug. 20.—What is conceded on all sides to have been the most successful encampment of the Michigan National Guard in two decades ended Tuesday.

The military board will meet today to consider, among other things, the location of next year's camp. The Manistee people are very desirous of retaining the camp, and will send a delegation to the meeting. It is altogether probable that the present location will be the choice for next year.

A general order issued by the governor, in which he paid a fine tribute to the troops, was read at dress parade last evening, and another of similar tenor will be forwarded to the commander of the naval reserves.

The sham battle in the afternoon drew a big crowd of spectators. The second regiment and the independent battalion opposed the first and third regiments. Governor Bliss was opposed to the battle, fearing accidents, but finally gave his consent. Late in the afternoon the Dorothea, with the first division of Illinois naval reserves of Moline, and Adjutant Smith of Illinois aboard, reached Manistee. General Smith, Captain Tuttle of the reserves, and other officers visited the camp and were entertained at lunch.

Old Paw Paw Soldier Arrested.

Washington, Aug. 20.—Captain William H. S. Banks of Paw Paw, Mich., has been arrested here by Detroit Sheriff Chappell of Van Buren county, charged with forging the name of Benjamin Smith to a note for $300, about a year ago. He was taken to Michigan, waiving the formality of the requisition. Captain Banks protests his innocence. He is a veteran of the civil war and says he will soon get a pension of $36 a month, with a big bunch of back pay.

Chief Engineer Torrey Hurt.

Jackson, Mich., Aug. 20.—A Torrey of Detroit, chief engineer of the Michigan Central railway, was dangerously injured at 5:30 Tuesday afternoon near Albion, while riding on a gasoline car in company with two other men, by being run down by a fast freight near a curve. The men had just time to jump, but in doing so Torrey struck a rail pile and three ribs and his right arm were broken.

Little Countries in Danger.

They are already talking in Europe of the possibility of Belgium being absorbed by France as the outcome of the socialist troubles in the former country, and of the temptation that this would be to Germany to annex the Netherlands. In this era of merger it is just as difficult for the small countries to maintain themselves as it is for the small business concerns.

Disputing the Axiom.

The time came at last when Mr. Oldboy could no longer make a pretense of covering the top of his head by combing a wisp of hair up over it from one side. "This is a case," he said, looking at himself in the glass and sorrowfully surveying the wide expanse of bald crown, "in which the 'part' appears to be greater than the whole."

NORTHVILLE, MICH., AUG. 22, 1902.

Northville's Enterprises.

The attention of our readers is called to the sale of the Globe Furniture company's property which takes place here next week. It is a matter of vital interest and importance to the people of our village whether these factories are kept running or not and the outcome may depend largely upon their attitude in the matter. There is plenty of capital right here at home and this is undoubtedly an opportunity to invest it at a good paying rate of interest. There certainly should be enterprise enough here to capitalize a stock company sufficient to insure the continuation of these industries and make them local interests. The publisher of this paper has faith enough in the paying possibilities of such a concern to be willing to take an equal amount of stock with each of any fifteen or twenty other citizens who may see the wisdom of forming such an organization.

The conviction of Frank C. Andrews, while it had been confidently expected is nevertheless a relief to the general public, as it has come to be all too common that convictions in connection with frauds on so large a scale are often very difficult to secure. The public was touched in a tender spot—the sympathy of human nature for the injured—and its unqualified denunciation of the offender of the wrong will no doubt prove a valuable lesson to those who are the custodians of the financial interests of the working classes. They will no doubt, as these in this case should have done long ago look to it that those interests are guarded at every point, and that no confidence or power is vested in any one person sufficient to permit him to exercise such unchallenged control of what means every thing to those who trusted to the fidelity of men supposed to be above suspicion. The legal provisions governing bank affairs were made for use instead of ornament, and their enforcement should be made the business of the proper authorities in all instances.

Notwithstanding the great variety of comment on the senatorial question, the Record believes that no successor to the late Senator McMillan will be appointed by Governor Bliss, but that the matter will be left for the action of the coming legislature at its first meeting next January. There is no more necessity for calling a special session of the present legislature to elect a man to fill the vacancy than there is for the governor to fill it by appointment. No complications are likely to arise in congress that cannot be attended to by Mr. Burrows, and the interests of the great state of Michigan are not likely to suffer in the interim between now and the time when the newly elected legislature shall be ready to act.

THE MAN FROM MAINE

LITTLEFIELD, WHO MAY LEAD ATTACK AGAINST TRUSTS.

Has a Record as a Fighter—How He Has Fought to the Front in Congress—While as a Debater and Fearless in Support of His Convictions.

Congressman Charles E. Littlefield, the new man from Maine, as he is called, looms up as the probable leader of Mr. Roosevelt's program to enact a law to regulate and control the trusts at the next session of congress.

Should Mr. Littlefield make the onslaught, his friends say that the next session of congress will be the scene of a fight worth going to see, for he is fearless, vigorous and able.

The new man from Maine has already gained a reputation as a trust regulator. On the first day of the session just closed he introduced two bills in the house, one to amend the act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraint and declaring every contract or combination in the form of a trust or otherwise in restraint of trade to be illegal, the other requiring all corporations engaged in interstate commerce to file returns with the secretary of the treasury disclosing their true financial condition.

Littlefield went to congress three years ago as the successor of the late Nelson Dingley. He at once attracted attention by his force as a debater.

When he makes a speech on the floor of the house he is at his best. Imagine a big boned, spare fleshed Yankee about six feet tall walking up and down the aisle on the Republican side. He has long legs and long arms and a big voice. He hurries out his sentences with a force almost vicious. He appears to be always during some one to contradict him or to ask him a question. He wears a clip on both nostrils and always wears some one to knock them off. At first a few accommodations him and then wisened they had not. Now when he speaks he is generally let alone. I've been rash enough to ask an opponent what that buzz saw in the play woods of Maine.

It is true about the alleged senatorial Littlefield to be the president's spokesman on the trust question is that after Mr. Roosevelt's speech at Pittsburgh he was asked if anything were to be done in the way of trust legislation next winter. He replied that he hoped so, that Littlefield of Maine had a pretty good bill, and he supposed it would be pressed. This is the gist of the matter. Littlefield may represent the administration in the sense that his views meet the president's views, and he may not.

The president likes him because he is square and honest and fearless and independent. Attorney General Knox likes him because he is one of the few great and sound constitutional lawyers in congress.

The attitude of Mr. Littlefield on the trusts is a true index of his general makeup. He has taken hold of several other questions of magnitude since he has been a member of congress, and his personality has permeated each one to such an extent that his views had to be reckoned with by his colleagues.

His antagonism to the programme of his colleagues regarding Porto Rico was an instance of his independence of action resulting from strong conviction. He took the ground that Porto Rico was domestic territory and as such was protected from the imposition of a tariff.

The latest instance of this independent action was on the Cuban reciprocity question.

Representative Littlefield is as straightforward in private life as in public. His record is open and clear. He has been attorney general of his own state and speaker of the Maine legislature. He is still a young man and in the very prime and vigor of mental and physical life.

Mr. Littlefield has none of the minor vices, and never in his fifty-one years has he tested alcoholic beverages. He does not use tobacco in any form. If he has a fad, it is to own and drive a handsome horse. He has a fine stable at his home in Rockland, and during the past winter in Washington he took up horseback riding. Little of limb, he is the typical New Englander in figure. His home life is perfection, and none enjoys and exemplifies better than he the old fashioned New England fireside.

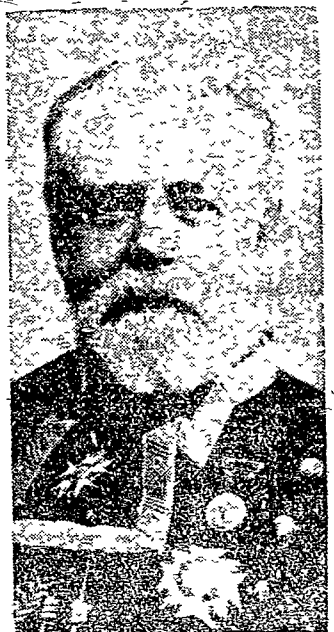

Mr. Littlefield is a lawyer by profession and a good one by practice. His friends believe that he has a great future before him and predict that he will one day be speaker of the house and perhaps president.

CERVERA AT HIS HOME.

How the Spanish Admiral Is Spending His Declining Years.

Contrary to reports recently printed in the United States, Admiral Cervera, who commanded the ill-fated Spanish fleet at the naval battle of Santiago, is not suffering from the neglect and contempt of his countrymen.

Quite the reverse, in fact, is the admiral's position in Spain. He is spending his declining years at Puerto Real.

ADMIRAL CERVERA.

A few miles distant from Cadix and spends a day at the naval club in the old city founded by the Phoenicians, where he is the object of much solicited attention and affection. Puerto Real has been nicknamed by the Spaniards the "navy's Parnassus" for at least one tenth of its inhabitants are retired naval officers.

The house on Santo Domingo street where Admiral Cervera's home although modest in size and appearance, is one of the best in the little seaport city. It wears an air of comfort and cheerfulness, even of luxury.

Here, surrounded by a numerous contingent of sons and daughters and their children, the old sea dog spends his days with his books. The den of Admiral Cervera is as neat and cozy as a ship's cabin, the flat top desk, medium sized bookcase and two or three chairs filling nearly all the available space.

The routine of his life, as recently explained by himself, consists of reading naval reports from different parts of the world, attending to correspondence, etc., which take up his morning hours. In the afternoon he visits the casino, where he meets his old comrades in arms. This is varied by occasional trips to Cadix.

The admiral draws half pay from the government and besides has quite a little fortune of his own. He owns half a dozen houses and considerable land in the township of Medina Sidonia, the home of the marquises of Cervera. The admiral's father was a wealthy man, but as he left many children the parental fortune has been so split up that none of his heirs can be considered rich. Nevertheless the admiral wants for none of the comforts of life, nor does he lack the friendship and respect of his countrymen.

BISHOP HENRY C. POTTER.

Eminent Divine, Who Will Again Assume Matrimonial Bonds.

Right Rev. Henry C. Potter, bishop of New York, has surprised his friends and the public generally by the announcement of his intention to marry again.

The bride to be is Mrs. Alfred Corning Clark, who in 1896 inherited millions on the death of her late husband, Mr. A. C. Clark of the Singer Sewing Machine company.

Bishop Potter, who is traveling in Europe, is sixty-seven years old and is a native of Schenectady, N. Y. In 1883 Rev. Dr. Potter, who had added a literary reputation to his fame as an eloquent divine, became assistant bishop of New York, next in office to his uncle, Right Rev. Dr. Horatio Potter, and four years later succeeded on his uncle's death to full episcopal honors.

Bishop Potter's wife, who was Miss Eliza R. Jacob, died suddenly June 29, 1901, leaving five daughters and one son.

TOMMY AND GRANDPA.

GRANDPA lay sleeping serenely.

Where the shade of the maples was cast. The hammock was swayed by the zephyrs. That kissed his high brow as they passed. Perhaps he was dreaming of angels. As Tommy played near him out there, flinging butterflies out of the flowers and tossing his curls in the air.

The hose was attached to the hydrant. With a full head of water turned on. And the nozzle lay harmless, unnoticed. Where the grass had grown brown on the lawn. Dear grandpa, with one leg hung over. The side of the hammock, still swayed. And the leaves fluttered gayly above him. It was eighty or so in the shade.

A smile was on grandpa's glad features. When Tommy discovered the hose. Perhaps he was dreaming of cherubs. Or beautiful fairies, who knows? But the smile disappeared when sweet Tommy.

Forgetting that grandpa was there, stood carelessly letting the water squirt forty feet up in the air.

With a yell like a grown up Comanche. De grandpa attempted to rise. The water streamed under his collar. And into his ears and his eyes. With a foot tangled up in the hammock. He leaped like a trout on the hook. And turned three flips without stopping. To pick out the course that he took.

A child who had stains on his features. Whose eyes were still tearful and red. Lay sobbing, with sad recollections. And tossing alone in his bed. His breast was overburdened with sorrow. In his heart and elsewhere he was sore. And he murmured, "I don't want to never. Go visit grandpa no more!"

—Chicago Record-Herald.

A Practical Difficulty.

He—I'd go to the end of the world with you darling. She—Yes, but have you got the car fare?—Chicago American.

Pertinent Advice.

"Doctor," she said, "did you ever lose a patient?"

"Lots of them," he replied gruffly.

"Well, I'm afraid I shouldn't be at all satisfied with you," she explained.

"I must have so much confidence in my doctor, you know, or I will be perfectly miserable, especially about the baby."

"You'd better try young Dr. Jinks in the next block," advised the old practitioner. "He's never lost a patient."

"Are you sure?"

"Positive. He's never had one to lose."—Chicago Post.

Encouragement.

When they take the beautiful woman from the wreck, she begs to be left to die.

"I have nothing to live for!" she cries.

"You are mistaken as to that," they argue gently, "for see what a swell shape the collision has battered your hat into!"

Now she opens her eyes, and it is plain that new courage has entered her heart.—Puck.

And They Never Do It.

"He would be all right," said the man who is always criticising others, "if it weren't for his fearful habit of mendacity."

"I have always regarded him as possessing the highest ideas of honor."

"Yes, but he is one of those people who are always announcing that they are going to tell you the funniest story you ever heard."—Washington Star.

Help! Help!

"You are surely not going home without police protection!" said one Pittsburgher to another, who had been marketing.

"Why not?" demanded the other, surprised.

"What! With that fine tenderloin steak you have just bought?"—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Heard in the Rain.

"I wonder how many more hours we'll have to wait for a car!" cried the lady impatiently. "This is awful!"

"And yet," added her cunning husband, who saw his opportunity, "you find fault with me for not coming home sooner from the office of nights!"—Philadelphia North American.

Comparisons.

He—My love for you, darling, is as deep and as pure as the lake at our feet.

She—Yes, and you are just as fresh.

Should Get One.

Blebs—I am all run down.

Slobbs—Why don't you get an automobile yourself?—Philadelphia Record.

Reindeer Flesh for Food.
It is stated that a strenuous attempt is being made by some enterprising Norwegians to popularize reindeer flesh as an article of diet in Europe. The experiment of raising the animals in large numbers for slaughtering purposes will be irrefragably tried. They expect to find profitable markets in France and Belgium, and will even endeavor to induce beef-eating Britons to purchase the article.

M'MILLAN'S SUCCESSOR

GENERAL ALGER WOULD ACCEPT THE NOMINATION.

KALKASKA REPUBLICANS WANT WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH.

SAGINAW COUNTY CONVENTION RESOLVES ON HANCHETT.

Detroit, Mich., Aug. 21.—General Alger is a candidate for the senatorship made vacant by the death of James McMillan. The general has issued the following formal statement:

"I will not seek the appointment or election to the office of United States senator to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator McMillan. The office and honor are too great to be thus gained. Should, however, the people of Michigan, through their legislature, see fit to elect me to that high office, I will accept it and fill it to the best of my ability."

"To the friends who have so kindly expressed a desire to have me thus chosen as their representative, I wish to tender my grateful thanks."

"R. A. ALGER."
The announcement followed a consultation of the general's political friends and advisers, and is taken to mean that a vigorous campaign will at once be instituted. His friends say that General Alger is an anti-machine candidate for United States senator against W. C. McMillan.

General Alger was asked if he had selected a campaign manager. He replied:

"No, I haven't had time to think of that. I have been too busy deciding whether or not I would be a candidate at all. The names of William Judson of Washtenaw county and Chas. S. Osborn of Sault Ste. Marie, both my friends, have been suggested, but I have selected no one to manage my campaign."

General Alger is in unusually good health and his friends say able physicians have recently pronounced him sound and good for at least ten years or more public service. He is now nearly sixty-seven years of age.

Kalkaska, Mich., Aug. 21.—At an enthusiastic meeting of the local Republicans last night a "William Alden Smith club" was organized with 150 members, and resolutions adopted urging Congressman Smith to be a candidate in the approaching election of a United States senator to succeed the late Senator McMillan. E. T. Smith was chairman of the meeting.

Saginaw, Mich., Aug. 21.—The Saginaw county Republican convention was held Wednesday. Strong resolutions were passed endorsing the present state administration and pledging the hearty support of his neighbors and friends to the election of Governor Bliss. The following resolution was unanimously adopted, amid great cheering:

"The Republicans of Saginaw county, fully appreciating the mastery ability and fidelity to Republican principles of the Hon. Benton Hanchett, do hereby present his name to the Republicans of Michigan as our choice for the office of United States senator, and request the members of the legislature from this county to use all honorable and proper means to secure his election to fill the vacancy in that office caused by the death of the late Hon. James McMillan."

The following legislative ticket was named, all renominations: For senator, John Baird. For representative, First district, Leonard Baumgartner and Andrew J. Scott, Second district, Asa Sanderson. Governor Bliss arrived from Camp Hawley last night. He made the statement that he would not appoint to the senatorial vacancy unless some now unforeseen necessity should arise.

Pontiac, Mich., Aug. 21.—There has been considerable comment among the Democrats here lately concerning the proposal of William C. Maybury's name for congress. The Post today comes out with an editorial, in which it makes the following statement:

"The Post takes pleasure in presenting the name of the Hon. William Maybury of Detroit and the Sixth district for the congressional nomination at the hands of the Democratic party."

After Bail For Andrews.
Detroit, Mich., Aug. 21.—The attorneys of Frank C. Andrews expect very soon to secure his release on bail. The attorneys for Andrews, encouraged by the stay of proceedings granted by the supreme court, will attempt to have Andrews released on a writ of habeas corpus. This motion will be argued before the supreme court and will be based upon the exceptions taken during the trial. Attorney Groesbeck said yesterday the exceptions were not of a technical nature, and he anticipated little difficulty in attaining the desired end. Among the points to be raised is the claim that the sentence is illegal because in a bailable offense the court refused to delay the sentence pending a bill of exceptions.

State League Is Dead.
Flint, Mich., Aug. 21.—Wednesday's game was Flint's last in the State league, the management having decided to drop out and play as an independent team. ENORMOUS POWER

BIG CANAL AND PLANT AT THE SOO COMPLETED.

ENERGY DEVELOPED WILL TOTAL 49,000 HORSE POWER.

POWER WILL BE USED BY MANUFACTURING PLANTS.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Aug. 20.—The Michigan Lake Superior company's water power canal now completed and ready for formal opening, represents an expenditure of more than $5,000,000, its construction consumed four years of time, and in its completion it is regarded by engineers as the most magnificent work of its kind in the world. All is ready, at the word of the president of the company, F. H. Clergue, to turn the waters of Lake Superior into the broad, smooth channel.

The canal is two and a third miles long from the mouth of the intake above the rapids to the outflow far below the entrance to the ship canals. The average width is 224 feet, and the depth is 22 feet. The intake has an area of more than 15,000 square feet, through which will flow a volume of water estimated at 30,000 cubic feet per second, with a velocity of about two feet per second, or about one and a half miles per hour. The entrance is 891 feet wide and 13 feet deep. In its excavation some 300,000 cubic yards of solid sandstone were removed.

The canal in its course through the city, crosses thirteen streets, and at the present time is spanned by five steel single span bridges. One more is under construction and others are projected by the city for the future, as business demands them.

The river front of the forebay is closed by the powerhouse, the duplicate of which can be found in the United States. It is constructed of red sandstone is 48 feet over a quarter of a mile in length is 100 feet wide and 125 feet high.

The energy to be developed by this immense engineering achievement is estimated at 40,000 actual horse power, developed by 320 turbines of the McCormack type. Four of these turbines in pairs are placed in each penstock.

All of the turbines are joined to one huge shaft of pressed steel and are housed in iron cases leaving no openings save for the passage of water.

As the rush of water passes through the turbines the wheels will revolve, in turn revolving the big shaft and thus the power will be produced to turn the dynamos sitting on the floor above.

The electrical equipment of the powerhouse consists of eighty single dynamos constructed by the Westinghouse company.

After converting the water power into electrical power, the latter will be transmitted by four wires to the doors of the various plants, which are either in course of construction or planned and which are expected to use the energy thus produced. Among other things the power will be used to light the streets of the Soo and to propel its street cars.

Completed water filling it brim full, held in check at its foot by a powerhouse of immense proportions turning the wheels of machinery sufficient to run the mills of a manufacturing city of half a million souls the great American Soo power canal stands as the achievement of the genius and daring of one man, F. H. Clergue, who saw the opportunity and enlisted the capital, employed the labor of the highest skill, and to-day sees the realization of the idea which formed in his own brain but a short four or five years ago. In the brief history of the great northwestern canal will stand as an enduring and significant monument to his memory.

Porto Rico has a strong disposition to devote itself to practical matters. An automobile line for the benefit of tourists is making regular trips across the island from San Juan to Ponce. A plan is under consideration to place powerful automobiles, drawing trailers, on the same road for freight purposes. Many fine roads are under construction in the island and the slow bull carts hitherto used to carry freight will soon disappear.

A PRETTY POSTMISTRESS NARROWLY ESCAPES DEATH.

Was Given Up to Die--Eight Doctors
Failed--Pe-ru-na Saved Her Life.

THOUSANDS of women suffer from systemic catarrh. This is sure to produce such symptoms as cold feet and hands, sick-headache, palpitation of the heart and heavy feelings in the stomach.

Then begins a series of experiments with medicine. They take medicine for sick headache. They take medicine for nervous prostration, for palpitation of the heart, for dyspepsia. None of these medicines do any good because they do not reach the cause of the complaint.

Peruna at once mitigates all these symptoms by removing the cause.

Systemic catarrh is the trouble. Systemic catarrh pervades the whole system, deranges every organ, weakens every function. No permanent cure can be expected until the systemic catarrh is removed.

This is exactly what Peruna will do.

Miss Alma Cox, Assistant Postmistress of Oregon, S. C., writes:

"I have been a great sufferer from chronic disease and dyspepsia for five years. How I suffered no tongue can tell. I tried eight or ten of the best physicians without receiving much benefit, also tried lots of patent medicines. But still I suffered with sick headache, cold feet and hands, palpitation of the heart, and such a heavy feeling in my stomach and chest. At times I would be so nervous I could not hear anyone around me. I had been given up to die.

"One day a friend sent me one of Dr. Hartman's pamphlets, and I decided to write to him. He advised Peruna and Mandolin, and after taking the medicine two weeks I felt greatly relieved. My head did not pain me any more, and my stomach was relieved of its heavy burden.

Dr. S. B. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, of Columbus, G., gives advice to women free during the summer months.

feeling. I am so thankful that I can say after using several bottles of the Peruna and Mandolin I am restored to perfect health.

"Before using your remedies I could not eat anything. I lived on barley water and Peppermint for two years. Now I can eat with pleasure. Everybody is so surprised at my improvement. Everyone says I am looking like a rose. I would advise all suffering women to take your remedies. I know if it were not for Peruna and Mandolin I would have been in my grave to-day. I cannot thank you enough for the kind advice you have given me."--MISS ALMA COX.

Senator M. C. Butler, ex-Governor of South Carolina, writes from Washington, D. C., the following:

The Old-Fashioned Way.

In the old priory church of Leominster, England, is a very interesting specimen of the old cucking or ducking stool, a universal mode of punishment formerly in vogue for the punishment of scolds, scandalmongers, and women with too long tongues. This mode of punishment dates back to Saxon times, and the Leominster specimen was the last used in England of which there is any record, in 1869.

Pleased to Be Called Handsome.

College girls are no less susceptible to compliments in regard to their personal beauty than other girls. A senior class went on an excursion up the Hudson the other day and the incident of the trip that filled them with the greatest pride and joy was not a tribute to their intellectual ability or their plane of high thinking, but a request to their chaperon "Do tell me who those fine looking girls are?" I seldom have seen that many such good looking girls together.

Harriet Withee VanKen, whose sad and sudden death in Northville was mentioned in last week's Record was born in Salem thirty-five years ago. She was married to Abram VanAllen of this place in 1891 and they lived here one year and in Detroit five years, becoming residents of Northville five years ago. She died of heart failure August 12 after an illness of only three hours. She was the mother of four little daughters, three of whom are living. She was a devoted wife and mother, an affectionate daughter and sister, a woman with a sweet kindly disposition and loved by a large circle of friends. The funeral service was held Thursday afternoon at the Lapham's church Salem, conducted by Rev W. H. Shannon of Wayne assisted by the pastor of the church, Rev. Mr. Whitney. The church was crowded with sorrowing friends. Mr and Mrs Wm Stanbro sang three beautiful hymns. Pastor Shannon took for his text, John xiv:2. "In my Father's house are many mansions" and spoke comforting words to the heart broken family. The body was laid to rest in the Lapham cemetery. The husband and three girls, father and mother, brother and sister have the sympathy of their many friends in this hour of deepest sorrow.

To My Friends.

It is with joy I tell you what Kodol did for me. I was troubled with my stomach for several months. Upon being advised to use Kodol, I did so, and words cannot tell the good it has done me. A neighbor had dyspepsia so that he had tried most everything. I told him to use Kodol. Words of gratitude have come to me from him because I recommended it—Geo. W. Fry, Viola, Iowa. Health and strength, of mind and body, depend on the stomach, and normal activity of the digestive organs. Kodol, the great reconstructive tonic, cures all stomach and bowel troubles, indigestion, dyspepsia. Kodol digests any good food you eat. Take a dose after meals. Murdock Bros.

W. B. Peebles, of Vienna, Ala., is one of the largest planters and most prominent men in the South. He runs over 500 plows on his plantations. "About five years ago," he says, "my infant daughter began cutting teeth and as is often the case her bowels became deranged and it ran into chronic dysentery. I had her treated by three of the best physicians in Pickens county but her case baffled the skill of all of them, and my baby became so weak and emaciated that she had to be nursed on a pillow. The nurse would sometimes have to change her napkin as often as twenty-five times a day. At last we got hold of a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, and by using one bottle of it she was entirely cured of her trouble. I consider it the most valuable remedy on the market for all bowel troubles. For sale by George C. Hueston.

Who Pays the Printer?

When you go around from printer to printer getting bids on a job and then giving it to the lowest bidder, you get an indifferently good job—one with no particularly good points—one that tells no goods for you, then who pays the printer?

YOU DO.

When you pick out a good printer, giving him all your work, educating him to an idea of your needs, and paying a fair price for the work you get, your printer matter (when secured at the Record Printery) necessarily creates a favorable impression for you and for what you offer, and becomes a factor in selling your goods. Then who pays the printer? Your customer.

HE DOES.

CHAPTER V.

CRAIG THOMPSON'S WISDOM.

CRAIG THOMPSON did wish to go. The fact was unprecedented in the experience that others had known of him, but it was true, and when at the close of the second day they arrived at the ranch Lisle remembered with surprise that he had never known his father to be so companionable with a stranger before, but in this case he had appeared to find much that was congenial in his tastes. It is possible that his own intense love for Lisle permitted him more readily to appreciate the good qualities of another who also loved him. It may be that he intuitively foresaw the time when Lisle would need a friend and that he discovered in Thompson the man whom he would select for that position.

Thompson's ranch adjoined Maxwell's, although 30 miles separated the buildings which the respective owners called home. In that land of magnificent distances such an interval of space was trivial, but Richard Maxwell had always isolated himself from his neighbors in a way that utterly repulsed friendly advances, so that he was known more as a ranch owner than as a man, but now he volunteered every outward demonstration that he desired to create more friendly relations with his nearest neighbor.

During the journey to the ranch Lisle's father permitted it to be understood that he preferred that no reference should be made to the Lasse duel. He seemed to have blotted it out of his memory as utterly as though it had not occurred.

At home the old life was taken up where it had been left off, and with the exception of the presence of a guest—and within the memory of Lisle an invited guest had never before been a part of the household—it was the same as it had always been. Studies were resumed at the point where they had been abandoned, occupations recommenced where they had broken off, and everything resumed its accustomed routine, for the master of Creascent and Cross never permitted anything to interfere with the rules of his daily life.

But the week of Thompson's stay came to an end, and Lisle was surprised when he remembered that during the entire time he had rarely been alone with his guest—never, in fact, except at such times as they passed upon the broad veranda, where the old frontiersman loved to sit and smoke and chat with the "kid," interspersing his stories and anecdotes with wholesome advice that was always given in his inimitably blunt and forcible manner. Lisle was often astonished by the deep learning of the strange man, whose customary disregard of correct English was at once a mixture of assumption and carelessness. The youth's intuition revealed to him that behind and beneath the rough exterior of his new friend there existed a fund of tenderness and sympathy most profound. He was like a lump of rich quartz—the intrinsic value was all there incased within the roughest and hardest of substances.

On the other hand Craig also met with surprises which puzzled him greatly, although he made no comment unless to Lisle in person. One of them came during an evening when Richard Maxwell was not present. Craig was smoking his pipe on the veranda, leaning back in one of the comfortable chairs, when he heard the piano.

"That's right, boy," he called out. "I'm in just the mood for some music. Couldn't you sing something for a change?"

There was no reply in words, but the melody—changed, and presently a superb voice, in tender contralto, floated out to him. With increasing power it swelled into the pathetic air of Asher's "Alice" until the clear high notes swept out across the starlit plain so sweetly, so purely, so longingly that Craig forgot his pipe, forgot Lisle, forgot where he was, forgot everything except a memory that the song conjured up. His head sank lower and lower upon his breast, tears stood in his eyes and he slumped unheeded upon his tightly clasped hands, and when the melody ceased he did not move. Lisle left the piano and went out to him, but Craig Thompson was not aware of his approach until he felt a touch upon his shoulder.

Then he started up with a cry as one who has been rudely awakened from a dream.

"Come here, boy," he said in a tone that shook with emotion. "I want to look at you. Who taught you that song? Who gave you that voice? What strange mixture are you?"

"Craig," said Lisle in surprise, not heeding the questions, "what is the matter? Are those tears in your eyes—tears because I sang to you?"

"Yes, they're tears. Do you think that I am ashamed of them? Men shed tears only when they are necessary to keep the heart from bursting. Mine burst long ago, but somehow I got it together again, and maybe the cement I used wears a little with time. Anyhow, that song of yours opened a seam or two in the old wound. That song brings back memories, and memories are plain things to have around if they ain't just the sort that a feller wants. Who taught you that song?"

"Nobody. I learned it myself. It came with some music that father ordered years ago. He does not like it. I never sang it to him. I have not sung it before in a long time. I do not know why I thought of it tonight."

"I do. It was just my heart speaking to yours, Lisle. Will you be offended, boy, if I tell you that you have got a voice like a woman's—just like the voice of a woman whom I used to know, the sweetest and best woman who ever lived? She was my sister, Lisle, and she used to sing that song to me. I liked it because her name was Alice, like the song. It's a good many years since I saw her, Lisle, and I don't know whether she is alive or dead. Don't you see, kid, why my callous old heart filled up with tears so that it would have burst if I hadn't shed a few?"

"I am sorry, Craig, very sorry, that I selected that song."

"Don't you be sorry; be glad. It saved me from one of my fits, for one of 'em has been coming on ever since I have been here."

"Shall I sing something else for you?"

"No; don't sing, don't play. I don't want to get the taste of that one out of my mouth. Sit here and talk with me. We won't have another evening together for a long time—maybe never."

"Why do you say that?"

"I'm going to fight out in the morning before that fit comes on. You think I am older than your father, don't you?"

"I should say that you are, by several years."

"Well, I reckon I am in some ways. It comes of having fits, I suppose; but Dick Maxwell is five years older than I am. He's 48 or thereabout, according to his say. I look about 53, but I'm only 43. Do you know what I am getting at?"

"No."

"This: I'm preaching, lad. Every one of those years that rest on my head without having come into my life was put there by a piece of scoundrelism that I committed when I was just the age that you are now, and I hadn't any more excuse for getting into it than you have now either. I don't say that you'll ever get into a place where you may be likely to do anything that ain't right, but if you do there will be time to think—there always is, for thinking is mighty quick work—and if that time ever does come you remember what I have said just now and stop long enough to hum that song over to yourself before you cut loose from the outfit and go it alone. Life ain't going to be all roses for you, Lisle Maxwell, and don't you forget it! Your father hasn't brought you up right to my way of thinking. You needn't get huffy. I ain't criticizing him. I'm analyzing you. You don't know any more about the world outside of this ranch than a hog knows about slating, and that ain't much to speak of. I've been watching you while I've been here, and there are a whole lot of things that you have got to learn between now and the time when you will have to go it alone, and nobody ever knows when that time is coming. It's just like a blamed Injun and draws a bead on your vitals from behind a bush or a rock when you ain't looking, and it's a dead shot every time. You can't throw a loop over circumstance and drag it along a willing captive, like we did that steer. It's got a way of slipping out and roping you instead, and you've got to post yourself about things so that you will be ready to keep one hand out. In just about the same way that you poked yours through the loop of Jim Cummings' rattle over in the Smoky. I don't wonder that some of the boys have said that you look like a woman. You do, and you do not. You do because you have got a tender heart, like a woman's, and it sticks out through your masculine garb just as plain as daylight when you ain't thinking. Dick Maxwell has trained you right enough as far as he has gone, for all I know, but he's a good ways from golfing far enough. I want you to make me a promise, Lisle."

"What sort of a promise, Craig?"

"You'll be 21 some day, and when the day comes that sees you that old I want you to promise that you will ride over to my ranch and see me. Will you?"

"Certainly. I will ride over a great many times in the meanwhile too, if you care to have me."

"That's all right. Of course I care to have you, but I want you to remember that promise anyhow."

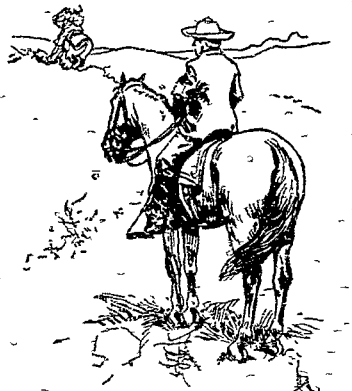

"I'll remember it."

"And now, while we've got a chance to talk, I want to say one thing more to you about women. This idea that you've got that they are abominations on the face of the earth is all wrong, if your dad did teach it to you, and some day I'll prove it to you. I've been looking through your library, and there ain't a book there that will tell you a blamed thing about them—not one. To my way of thinking you ought to have a few—even if you read 'em against the wishes of the old man. They won't hurt you any, and in my opinion they will do you a lot of good. Do you know where that old corral is down in the southwest corner of my ranch?"

"Yes."

"Well, next Sunday you ride over there. It ain't much more than a dozen miles. I'll leave some books there for you to read. Maybe I'll meet you there if you come about sundown. They will be books that will teach you something that you ought to know, and don't, and—here comes Dick. Lord! I never delivered such a long lecture before in my life. It all comes of your singing that song."

When on the following morning Lisle would have accompanied his father and Craig—for the latter was going to his own home, and the former, having an errand in that direction, rode out with him—he discovered that he was not wanted. Later, when the two men were on the point of parting, Craig Thompson swallowed his reluctance to speak upon the thoughts that were uppermost in his mind and said:

"Maybe you won't like what I say, Maxwell, but I'm going to say it whether you do or not. You ain't doing right by that kid. He's too much like a woman in some things, and he's too lanked ignorant about a lot of other things that every man and every woman on the top of God's green earth ought to know. While you're riding home just turn over, in your mind what would become of your boy if you should be killed before you get there. Good day."

"Good day," responded Maxwell, and he sat there in his saddle for an hour with his eyes fixed upon the summit of the ridge over which Craig Thompson had disappeared.

CHAPTER VI.

"I AM NOT LIKE OTHER MEN. WHY AM I NOT?"

LISLE rode to the old corral at the time that Craig had fixed. He found the books, but not his friend, and after waiting until hope of his arrival was past he turned his horse's head homeward, and after that he spent much of his time while in the house perusing his new treasures. They were simply good, wholesome stories and biographies which dealt with the noblest types of women, and to the youth they opened up a new and unexplored field which possessed a strange and unaccountable fascination for him. Craig Thompson had selected them with great care, and had he known the character of the mission work they were to perform he could not have exercised better judgment. They contained nothing that was calculated to shock the awakening faculties of Lisle Maxwell's emotional nature, but to his immature perceptions they were filled with unthinkable revelations as beautiful and profound as they were mysterious. They did what nothing else had ever done—they set him thinking—and he began to dream and wonder and surmise upon subjects and theories which never before had been permitted access to his mind. Richard Maxwell could guard against outward and visible assaults upon the fortress that he had built up around his son, but he could not contend with this subtle foe to his theories, and the battle went on under his eyes without once revealing its existence.

There was one conversation between them which rather startled the father, and possibly it had something to do with a serious incident which immediately followed it. It is true, however, that he believed that the invisible fortress that he had erected about his son was too nearly impregnable for successful assault.

"Father," said Lisle on that occasion, "I will be 19 in June."

"Yes, Lisle," was the reply. "You are almost a man grown—and still a child." Richard Maxwell sighed deeply, and his mind leaped backward over the flight of years.

"And still a child," echoed Lisle. "Will you tell me why I am still a child?"

"I mean, my son, that you are still a child to your father. You will always be that. Sons who are loved forever remain as children to their parents. It is one of the elements in the economy of creation."

Lisle was silent for several moments; then, raising his head, he said slowly: "I have in mind several things that are puzzling me. I wish that you would discuss them with me now."

"Tell me what they are," Lisle said. "I am always anxious to reason upon perplexities with you."

"I think of three, sir, each one suggested by the replies that you have already made. I will approach them one by one."

"Very well. The first, then?"

"I am still a child; not in the sense to which you refer—that is, not solely in that respect—but in every way. Why have I not matured more nearly to manhood? While I was with you in the Smoky valley I saw several young men who were younger than I am. There was something about them that is different from anything I have ever known or experienced. It was intangible, if you please, but it was nevertheless real, because I could not discover that it existed between them individually, only between them, or any one of them, and me. They were tougher, brawnier, heavier in voice, in manner, in figure, than I am. Their features were coarser—everything about them was different. Hair grows upon their faces, as it does on yours. Will you explain this difference to me?"

"Your training has been different from theirs, Lisle."

"Pardon me, sir, but I cannot understand why that should make all the difference. There were subtle differences which I have not words to explain because I do not know how to define them, but I could feel them. One day, while we were sorting our cattle, two of them sat upon their horses close beside you. I studied them, and I studied you. Afterward I rode up and took a place beside you myself, and then I studied over them again. The same difference did not manifest itself between them and you as it did between them and me or between you and me. Do I make myself understood? I mean that in some ways those strangers were more like you than I, who am your son, am like you. The same subtle something which distinguishes those young men from me does not separate them from you, and the same inexplicable difference that exists between them and me I could discover also between you and me. I am not like other men. Why am I not?"

"Am I like other men whom you know, Lisle? Am I like Craig Thompson?" asked Richard Maxwell.

"Yes, you are in the sense to which I refer—in that subtle sense which I cannot define. It is in the air you breathe, in the way you breathe it, in the unspoken understanding between you and other men, or, since you have mentioned a name, between you and Craig Thompson—an understanding in which I have no part or place."

"These subtleties, Lisle, are freaks of the imagination which result from your habits of study. Your life has been different from the lives of any other young man I ever knew. It is my love for you that has made it so. I have kept you near me and away from the world which I have repudiated. I have taught you differently, trained you differently, led you to think differently. Your manner of living, your methods of study, your isolation from strangers, have, combined, created the differences that you discover. Your imagination has emphasized and magnified them. That is all."

Lisle sighed and shook his head negatively.

"You do not or you will not understand," he said. "Your reply does not comprehend the question. It is like building a house without windows. I am your son. You are my father. Should not father and son be alike?"

"Sometimes they are very much alike; sometimes they are very different. There is no rule which governs such a condition. Step with me to the mirror. Have you forgotten how greatly we resemble each other, eliminating the difference in age?"

"No; it is true that our features are alike. Our forms are different. Frequently I see you at work without your coat. You never permit me to remove mine except here in the house. The men remove theirs and place them across their saddles. Their figures, thus disclosed, are not the same as mine. Yours is not the same as mine. I have studied myself before my own mirror. I know that I am cast in a different mold from other men. I know that you are cast in the same mold as other men. I am as different from you as the day is different from the night. Tell me truly, am I like a woman?"

"Yes, you have the best qualities of woman and the best qualities of man. Strangers see and recognize both, hence, such remarks."

"Again you fall short of a complete response to my question," sighed Lisle. "We will pass it for the present. You mentioned my parents. Who are or were they? You are one, who was the other?"

"Your mother?"

"You have always refused to speak of her to me. Will you not do so now?"

"No."

"Was not my mother—a being whom you have taught me to despise—a woman?"

"Yes."

"Does my mother live?"

"We will not discuss your mother."

"I will not urge you, father. I have learned to know that the subject is painful to you, although you will not tell me why it is so. May a child during its growth change from woman to man or from man to woman?"

"Human beings come into the world by the will of God. They live out the period of existence allotted to each of them and pass away in order to make room for others. God appoints that they shall be men or women. Humanity has no power in the selection—a newcomer is not permitted to choose between the two entities. They grow up like the sagebrush, some of them; others like the trees which I planted around this house when you were very small. You have been in our orchard with me when you have seen me prune and graft among the trees. You have seen me take a tender shoot from one—that is the child—and affix it to another of a different species; you have seen that shoot grow to maturity, just as you are growing; you have seen it bear fruit different in quality and texture, in size and in shape from the other fruit produced by that same tree."

"Yes, but what is that tree to which you attach the shoot? Is it the father or is it the mother?"

Suburban News.

The Michigan Woman's Press association has voted to have a summer cottage at Lake Orion jointly with the Sunshine Society. It looks like a very bright thought.

Durand merchants have organized a trust. They have agreed to trust their advertising exclusively to the newspapers. We trust they will find the combination profitable.

Birmingham lost the Salvation Army encampment by having the Oakland county Supervisors' picnic. There is no question as to which was most needed out there, but so it goes.

It has a card to the Wayne News-Letter man to suggest to the readers of his paper that it would be a good thing if one of Secretary Warner's popular cheese factories could be induced to locate in that village.

This is a great year for snakes—or snake stories. One comes from Milford of a man who tackled a big rattlesnake up there to-day when fourteen young snakes ran down the big one's throat and all were dispatched at one fell swoop. The story is a rattler, anyway.

Major Blanche Cox of Campus Martius and House of Correction fame escaped being mustered out of the Salvation Army one day last week by an extremely narrow margin. She fainted while swimming and sank, but was rescued by a son of Presiding Elder Bancroft of Flint.

The water battle at the Milford Gala day last week was a draw, and the $10 prize had to be divided between the "riva" fire-companies neither of which would budge before the volumes of aqua pura fired by the opposing force. Some Milford people can stand a whole lot of wetness. Probably that's the reason the "dry town" idea proved too unpopular to be retained.

Editor Harry McCracken of the Farmington Enterprise has been and went clear way off to Nova Scotia to get him a bride, the lady thus honored and honoring being Miss Belle McKenzie of Picton in that province. He will bring his newly acquired family to Farmington next month. We hope the immigration scheme will prove a success and that no international complications will result. It's quite a matter of Enterprise, anyway.

Some of the Record's exchanges are not afraid to publish a story about a spider weaving a web near Chesaning with the word "murder" in big letters across it and some more letters underneath. That spider evidently had a poor job of reconnaissance performed on it. It was no doubt a bloodthirsty villain in its previous state also. It is stated that the incident is regarded as a terrible omen. Probably it is very ominous to the flies. It might also signify that such a story is enough to kill anybody.

The ubiquitous slot machine man rather got left at Pontiac. The combination had an alphabet dial that turned out but marker name plates when you applied a nickel to the proper aperture. Some of Pontiac's embryo financiers discovered that a certain variety of washer would do the slot act to perfection with the result that a small army of kids are the exultant possessors of name plates while the slot man has a corresponding superfluity of washers. He should advertise them as "family washers" at 99 cents and there is no doubt somebody would send for them.

An exciting snake hunt took place—so 'tis said—near Whitmore Lake last week when less than 500 ratters were driven from a piece of marsh by setting the grass on fire and were slaughtered by an army of citizens. A good crop of hay had to be sacrificed to dislodge the serpents, but the owner could not cut the grass as his horses utterly refused to go into the place. A little ten year old girl named Robinson was the heroine of the battle, killing one of the biggest rattlers by jamming its head to pieces with the heel of her shoe, when the reptile coiled round her leg. She was not rattled even then. The only thing about the whole story that makes it the least bit doubtful is the fact that nobody told how many snakes were dispatched. Nice place for a summer resort over that way, anyhow.

NEW MONKEY FACTS

EXPERT GARNER REAPPEARS FROM JUNGLE WITH FULL NOTESBOOK.

Having Spent Two Years More In Africa Observing Simians He Is Sure They Have a Language—Obey Leaders Too.

Professor R. L. Garner, who made a sensation several years ago by asserting that monkeys had a language which he could understand, is again attracting the attention of scientists. Professor Garner has just returned from his second trip to Africa and is now in London where his wonderful acquaintance with the habits of our so-called "progenies" seems to bear out his claim that monkeys have a language capable of conveying ideas.

According to Professor Garner, the head of a flock of monkeys controls the clan. He can indicate them by name and send them by sound of his voice to perform certain tasks indicated by the command given.

R. L. Garner, it will be remembered by most folks, went to Africa in the late nineties to prove a theory that he entertained.

Mr. Garner is a Boston man. He claimed that the simians had an understandable language. He went to Africa and for several years lived in an iron cage in the jungles, where he was enabled to study the animal life of the tropical forests.

In 1900 he disappeared again, and after an absence of two years is again in civilization. He has been living in a jungle in the French Congo some twenty miles from the coast, and the result of his recent investigations are even more interesting than were his experiences on his first visit to the land of the monkey.

Mr. Garner says that monkeys usually travel in lards of fifty or sixty. His study of their habits has convinced him that they follow a leader, apparently selected by the company. This leader is in supreme command and issues orders for each and every occasion.

For instance, in time of trouble Mr. Garner asserts that the chief monkey by a special word designates an individual to perform a certain duty. Perhaps it is an order to change the location of the lookout or sentinel, two of which are always on duty with a band.

Mr. Garner says that the definiteness of the leader's command was unmistakable. They may not have a specific word for banana or apple, but have for fruit or other food. He has noticed a band eating palm nuts, all except one fellow who had wandered away and found some choice delicacy in the way of insects. At his call with a particular sound they would all hurry over in his direction. But if he makes approximately the same sound when he too is eating palm nuts, his neighbors will not even take the trouble to look up.

Again, the chief of the band made a curious sound, with the result that one of his followers, manifestly a sentry, posted off in one direction; then a slightly different order, and every one of the mothers and children would retreat. Another word of command, and the half grown ones would fall back. Finally the adults would be sent away one by one, and last of all the old man himself would disappear. Usually it was some particular call exactly as if he had been singled out by name. The others would not pay the slightest attention until their turn came.

Monkeys may be trained to do manual labor, says this close observer. In some of the native villages in Africa apes perform certain work. But there is one drawback. A chimpanzee had been trained to bring water and firewood. He did it well enough, but some one had to go with him every time. If he went alone to the spring, he'd bring back only, say, an eighth of a bucket of water, or if they sent him for wood he'd come back with a few little twigs about as thick as a pencil. When the children went with him, however, and "bossed" him, he was all right.

So it seems that our progenies, while they may have a language, seem to be without the memory or the brain to reason and think for themselves.

MEET OF AMERICANISTS.

Archaeology and Ethnology of New World to Be Discussed.

When the international congress of Americanists meets in New York city next October, it will be the first time that body has ever assembled in the United States.

Last fall a commission of organization, of which Morris K. Jesup was made president, issued a call to Americanists, stating that at the twelfth meeting of the congress, held at Paris in 1900, New York city had been chosen for the thirteenth meet. The meetings will begin Oct. 20 at the Museum of Natural History and continue through the week.

The subjects to be discussed at the thirteenth congress are divided into two sections: (1) "The Native Races of America, Their Origin, Distribution, History, Physical Characteristics, Languages, Inventions, Customs and Religions," and (2) "The History of the Early Contact Between America and the Old World."

The second section will be the stamping ground for those who bridge the Atlantic with a continent now obliterated from the maps and find the original home of the forefathers of Egyptians as well as Aztecs on the bottom of the sea. It will also be the section for those who are occupied in finding the origin of the American copper skins and Chinese or Japanese.

The expeditions sent out by the Messrs. Hyde, which have already supplied the Museum of Natural History with large quantities of material concerning prehistoric man in America, will doubtless report, and those also which Mr. Jesup has sent to the northwest coast of America and the northeast coast of Asia.

All persons interested in the study of the archaeology, ethnology and early history of the two Americas may become members of the international congress of Americanists by signing their wish to M. H. Saville, the general secretary of the commission on organization, at the Natural History Museum, New York city.

For those who wish to speak before the congress or merely have an article or essay printed in the proceedings it is required that the titles and an abstract of what they intend to say or publish be forwarded to the general secretary before the congress meets.

The indications are that there will be no lack of interesting matter brought before the thirteenth congress of Americanists.

TREMBLING VENICE.

Other Historic Structures May Follow the Campanile.

Following the fall of the bell tower of the famous St. Mark's church comes the information that other historic structures in Venice show a weakness of foundation that is alarming not only to the citizens of the "Queen of the Adriatic," but to the whole civilized world.

Now that the campanile lies in ruins it is asserted that another famous building, the Church of Santi Giovanni e Paolo, shows signs of settling and possible destruction.

The Church of St. John and St. Paul, popularly called San Zampolo, contains the statues of many doges and other illustrious persons, and its destruction would be little short of a calamity.

The campanile, the bell tower of St. Mark's, now a heap of ruins, was where Galilei made his observations. It was 324 feet high and 12 feet square at the base. The heap of ruins which covers the Sansovino terrace is about 100 feet high.

PEOPLE WE KNOW

They are Northville People, and What They Say is of Local Interest.

When an incident like the following occurs right here at home, it is bound to attract much of our readers. So many strange occurrences in the town of the people become skeptical. On one subject skepticism is rapidly disappearing. This is due to the actual experience of our citizens and their public utterances regarding them. The doubt must doubt no more in the face of such evidence as this. The public statement of a reputable citizen living right here at home, one whom you can see every day leaves no ground for the skeptic to stand on.

Mr. T. W. Wood, Painter and Paper Hanger of Center St., says: "My wife and I are thoroughly convinced of the curative powers of this popular remedy.
