BOTH WRISTS WERE BROKEN

FRED SUMP MET WITH PAINFUL ACCIDENT.

Thrown from His Wagon Near Hirsch's Shop.

Fred Sump, a well known farmer who lives a few miles west of this place, was severely injured here Tuesday forenoon. He was driving along Main street near Hirsch's blacksmith shop, when one of his horses commenced kicking and finally threw itself across the tongue of the light wagon in such a manner as to throw Mr. Sump violently out. He struck on his hands and face, breaking both wrists and receiving a serious bruise on the forehead. He was unconscious when he was picked up and taken into Dr. Henry's office, and it was at first feared that concussion of the brain would result but after the broken bones were set and the other hurts attended to, the injured man was able to be taken to his home.

SHY TWO TOES.

Roy Boynton of Wixom Victim of Hunting Accident.

Roy Boynton, son of Rev. L. D. Boynton of Wixom, has now only eight toes, as the result of a rabbit hunt in which he participated a few days ago. While watching with some companions for a chance for a shot at a rabbit, he rested the muzzle of his cocked shotgun on his foot. Of course the weapon went off and so did two of the young man's toes. On hearing the report of the gun young Boynton looked around to see who had fired the shot, several seconds elapsing before he realized that he himself was the victim of having fired the mark.

CORN HUSKER VICTIM

Shredded a Man's Arm—Will Fields Victim.

Another corn husker victim was added to the long list last week on the Davidson farm near White Lake. A young man named Fields, who was watching the operation of the shredder, undertook to assist in the work and his arm demonstrated the efficacy of the machine beyond any question. The hub was completely ground to pieces, before the machine could be stopped and the young man would have bled to death had not a level headed companion held the artery with his fingers until it could be tied. Fields was taken to Milford, where the arm was amputated near the shoulder.

Michigan is Not Like Iowa.

In his published "Church Notes" the M. E. pastor of Northville announces that "Something went wrong with the pipe organ last Sunday between the morning and evening services. The confusion resulting from that caused the prelude to the evening sermon to be overlooked." Educated as it is to a standard of morals differing from those of Burlington, Iowa, it is not likely that the cause that balked the organ there operated in the Michigan instance. When the Burlington organ wouldn't go there was an investigation, when it was found that the blower had stopped to take a drink behind the instrument—with the profound basso—Detroit Tribune.

When Do the Good Die?

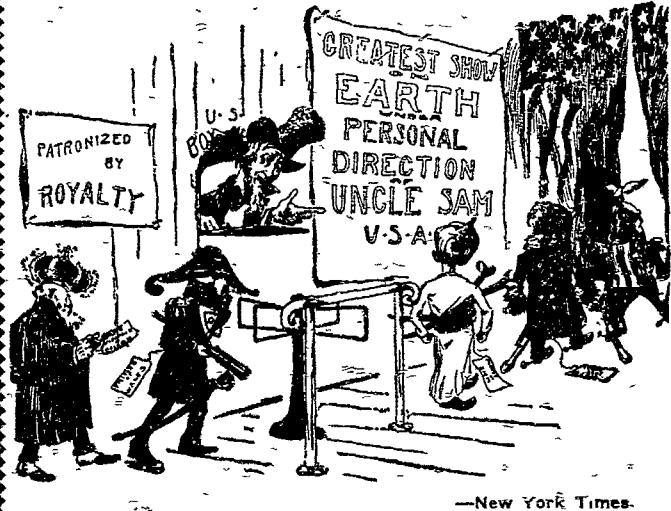

In Lenawee county lives a young man, 52 years of age, who never in his life has tasted tea, coffee or liquor of any kind, and has never used tobacco. And yet they say the good die young.—Ann Arbor Record.

And then, there is Hon. Willard Stearns, who, though "dead agin" prohibition, never tasted a drop of liquor or used tobacco in any form. As he died young yet?—Detroit Tribune.

Certainly not, but a big fellow like Willard would not be expected to get his tasters in proper working order on so small a lubricator as a "drop." Let Willard be turned loose with a black bottle containing in round numbers about one quart and see then whether he is devoid of taste or no.

The Office Will Not Be Abolished.

After five years in the Northville postoffice Mr. Hutton will retire about the first of January. The office will not be closed up, Congressman Smith having prevailed on Milo N. Johnson to take Mr. Hutton's place. Coming as he does fresh from the county treasurer's office in Detroit, Mr. Johnson takes with him the needed stock of clerical ability.—Detroit Tribune.

NORTHVILLE CROWD IN CHICAGO HOTEL FIRE

NARROW ESCAPE OF L. L. BROOKS AND PARTY.

Floyd Northrop Slid from Fourth Story on Rope.

L. L. Brooks and Northville party were in the big hotel fire at Chicago yesterday morning and had a narrow escape from cremation. Brooks knocked out fourth story window to get air to keep some of the boys alive until rescued.

Floyd Northrop slid from fourth story window on a rope and was severely injured on the hands.

It was a narrow escape all around and an experience they will all long remember.

THE AUDITORS ANNUAL PLUMS

CROWLEY AND WILDMAN LUCKY ONES.

Looks Like the Turning Down of Auditor Burt.

The County Auditors have shaken the annual plum trees and Supervisors Jack Crowley of Taylor and Ald. Wildman of Detroit stood under the right spot and each caught a juicy fat hunk of the fruit in the shape of a $600 a year poor commissionership. Crowley is a Democrat and just how he won out over Supervisor John Nash of Canton, Republican, when the board of Auditors is Republican, is still being guessed at by the backers of the losers. Wise ones are saying however that Auditor Burt has lost his influence and that Christian and Scullen are both preparing for the former's exit to private life at next spring's election, and are pulling together now to avoid giving Burt any of the patronage.

Crowley takes the place made vacant by the resignation of Register of Deeds elect Guiley and Editor Wildman of the Courier gets into C. F. Beck's shoes. These poor commissionerships are the softest snaps in the gift of the Auditors.

Remarkable Transaction in Cotton.

The biggest sale of cotton from one plantation ever made in New Orleans took place a few weeks since, when the famous "Panther Burn" crop, consisting of 4,930 bales, was sold. A sale and delivery of 4,900 bales from one plantation would be a remarkable transaction under any circumstances, but these bales were nearly twice the usual weight, averaging 900 pounds to the bale.

Too Partial to the Gutter.

The general impression regarding Zola's work seems to be that while he meant well he wasn't quite particular enough regarding the cleanliness of the tools he employed nor the locality where he did his digging.

Michigan Pensioners.

Washington, Dec. 3.—Michigan pensioners were granted Tuesday as follows: Original—James Kuhns, Boyne, $8 (war with Spain); Henry B. Briggs, Kalamazoo, $10 (war with Spain); Calvin L. Benware, Traverse City, $8 (war with Spain). Increase, pension, etc.—William Barber, Ionia, $12; J. Cassidy, Mill Creek, $12; Henry S. Much enthusiasm is manifested and last night a large class of candidates was initiated. The following officers were elected: President, W. E. Cunningham, Battle Creek; secretary, E. B. Russell, Battle Creek; treasurer, Mrs. E. A. Phillips, Muskegon Heights.

Seventeen Iron Plants Combine.

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 3.—One of the biggest deals ever made in the state of Michigan was consummated in the office of W. C. McMillan yesterday afternoon, when seventeen of the leading malleable iron concerns in the United States signed an agreement to form one big company with a capital of from $16,000,000 to $20,000,000. Yesterday's transaction was the result of over a year's work along this line and includes two Michigan concerns, the Michigan Malleable Iron company of Detroit and the Albion Malleable Iron company of Albion.

Schultz Trial Begins.

East Tawas, Mich., Dec. 3.—After the strictest examination of the members of the extra panel summoned, a jury was secured yesterday in the Schultz murder case. The defense will contend that the death of Mrs. Schultz was the result of suicide and endeavor to establish an alibi. On Sunday, Sept. 29, Mrs. Schultz was found in her home, her throat gashed with a razor. She lived thirty-six hours, and it is claimed she made an ante-mortem statement, charging her husband with the crime.

NORTHVILLE, MICH., DEC. 5, '02

Should Truancy Be Enough?

While Adamson, who was sentenced to the Industrial School for truancy, last week, was sent back for the reason that there was not sufficient evidence to warrant his commitment to the school. The local officers should secure the required amount of evidence, and send the child to the school, and not for the reason that the child is a truant, but because he would be surrounded by good influences and have the comfort of the school which is somewhat short of in his present surroundings. —Penton Independent.

It is a question whether the Independent is right in its assertion that the lad should be sent back to the Industrial School at Lansing or any girl to the Industrial School at Adrian simply for truancy, and along this line a grave question is confronting the taxpayers of the state. At the present rate of increase of sentences to the two Industrial Schools mentioned it will take an additional ten buildings every two years to care for them and that means an expenditure of upward of $30,000 to say nothing of the added cost for maintenance, etc. These institutions are no longer reformatories as we used to know them, but are great industrial schools, where the boy or girl is not only "brought under good influences," but at the same time they are well clothed, educated and taught some trade. In fact these schools have reached such a model of excellence and possessing advantages as they do not fit in with the common school that a practically place premium on truancy. In many cases it is said that parents have themselves connived to have their boys sent to the school under the truancy act because of the advantage they would thus gain, when the real medicine needed was a dose of well administered slipper. Another question to be taken into consideration along this line is, should a boy or girl be sent to these schools for truancy to mingle with those who are sent there for more serious crimes? The Record believes that the two institutions referred to are among the greatest in the state and certainly among the best managed ones, but it also believes that no boy or girl should be sent to either for simply truancy. The act should be wiped off the statute books and some other form of punishment meted out to that class of juvenile offenders. The inmates in the Lansing school are increasing in numbers to the tune of about 700 a year, until now there are about 700 boys there, and if this rate of increase is allowed to go on the question of caring for them will be a serious problem indeed whether viewed from a moral, financial or charitable standpoint.

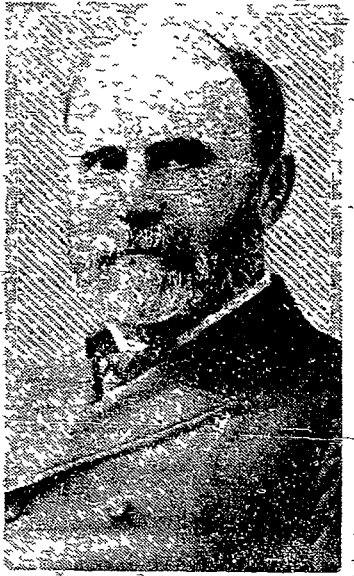

Now that the echoes and the victims of the deer hunting season have died away and most of the football games and a good many of their participants are past and gone, the deadly grind of the corn husker can again make itself heard. It's always loaded just the same as usual, but as usual there is always someone to be found who doesn't know it, and it makes no difference to the machinists whether it's corn or arms—everything goes.

LOST THREE FORTUNES.

Remarkable Career of "Deacon" White of Wall Street.

"Deacon" White, the veteran speculator who recently announced his retirement from membership in the New York Stock Exchange, has spent thirty-seven years of his life in the atmosphere of Wall Street thirty-three of them as a member of the Stock Exchange. He has made four fortunes and lost three of them, retiring with a competency of over $1,000,000, it is estimated.

A native of North Carolina, Mr. White has had a remarkable career. After graduating at Klox college he studied law, and from 1856 until he appeared in Wall Street in 1863 he practiced his profession in Des Moines.

His first business in the financial center was as a member of the banking and broking firm of Marvin & White. When this firm went out of business, he squandered his debts and joined the Stock Exchange in 1867. For thirteen years he had no partners.

In 1882 the firm of S. V. White & Co. was formed. The firm did a heavy and extremely profitable business until September, 1891, when Mr. White failed for $1,600,000. The next year was one of great distress for him, but his reputation for integrity and his known skill as an operator stood him in good stead. In January, 1892 the governing committee of the Stock Exchange granted him permission to resume business under one of the most extraordinary arrangements ever made in Wall Street. It was that his creditors, in the time of his recent, accepted his word in place of his bond for an indebtedness of more than $1,000,000 which stood absolutely unsecured except for his bare promise that he would pay his debts when he could.

He resumed business with $50,000 capital and within about a year had paid off all his debts and acquired again an independent fortune. In the panic of 1893 Mr. White was again obliged to suspend, and once more he succeeded in paying all his debts.

Mr. White has been a leading member of Plymouth church, Brooklyn, since 1866. From his church associations has come the title "Deacon," although he has never served as a deacon. Mr. White is seventy-one years of age.

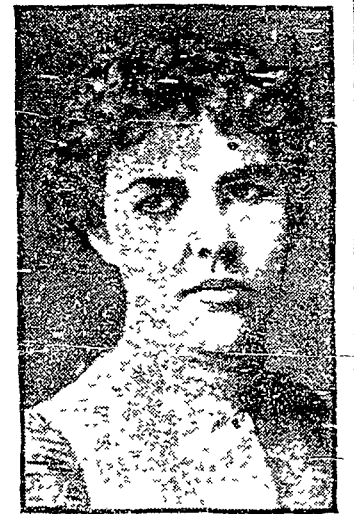

AN AUTHORESS' TROUBLES

Why "Deacon, the Oppressor" Was Withdrawn From Publication.

"Deacon, the Oppressor," the novel which was recently rejected by the publishers two hours after it had been placed on the market, is the second book by the authoress Mrs. Gertrude Potter Daniels, to meet the same fate. Some time ago her sister, Margaret Horton Potter, had a similar experience, when the entire edition and plates of "A Social Lion" were bought up and retired from circulation.

The father of these talented girls is Orrin W. Potter, the Chicago multimillionaire and steel magnate, and their mother is an aunt of the Princess Chimney.

The first work of Gertrude Potter Daniels to meet disapproval was "The Warners." It portrayed the struggle of the family of a workman and the bitter socialistic views of the authoress.

Mrs. Daniels is the wife of Julius Clark Daniels, a railroad official and son of George H. Daniels of the New York Central railroad. She at one time appeared on the stage.

Mrs. Daniels' new book bitterly attacks the trusts and will be toned down before it reappears.

Bowser Is Surprised

His Wife Turns the Tables on Him by Enacting His Role

(Copyright, 1902, by C. B. Lewis.)

MR. BOWSER had reached the office to discover that the ends of his shirt collar were frayed. He had selected that collar from the dozen beside it, and he alone was to blame, but of course he laid it to Mrs. Bowser. Three or four unpleasant things occurred in the office, and while she was twaddling away in no way accountable for them, only natural that he should lay them up against her. His luncheon wasn't as good as usual for another thing, and during the afternoon a tramp who was refused alms called him a baldheaded old miser. It was therefore with a sort of satisfaction that Mr. Bowser locked the door and took the car for home. He'd make it hot for Mrs. Bowser to even up things.

She saw him as he got off the street car. His shoulders were humped up, his head down, and he was drawing his feet. She hadn't lived with him for twenty years, to mistake those signs. He kicked open the gate as he reached it, and if the door hadn't been opened for him he would have kicked that as well. Just what he was to find fault with and begin a row he hadn't planned, but he was "franking" off his fall overcoat with a scowl on his face when Mrs. Bowser quietly observed—

"Dinner is all ready, and as soon as you have eaten I want to have a talk with you. Things can't go on this way much longer."

"You want to have a talk with me?" he queried in some astonishment as he picked up the hat he had flung down. "Yes, sir, I do."

"I suppose the cook has quit or a water pipe burst?"

"You'll find out in due time."

As he seated himself at the table Mr. Bowser suddenly remembered that he had planned revenge, and he looked of awe had begun to creep over him again, and he was wondering if Mrs. Bowser hadn't been hypnotized or gone crazy.

"The cook has given me notice," she went on after a minute, "and I shall have to get a new one. You'll say it's all my fault for treating her like a dog instead of asking her to play the piano and receive my callers. If you ran the house, a servant would stay for years and look upon the place as a paradise. Go ahead with your usual remarks."

Mr. Bowser felt a sudden weakness in his knees and sat down. He wanted to thunder back and gesticulate and pace up and down the floor, but somehow he hesitated to make a start. "And here's a butcher's bill for 50 cents," said Mrs. Bowser as she trotted it off the mantel. "I don't remember running in debt for meat, but I suppose it is all right. It's another argument for you about my reckless extravagance, and I'm waiting for you to begin. The wonder is that you haven't been driven to bankruptcy years ago. I don't remember whether this was porterhouse steak for an old tramp or mutton for our own dinner, but you can take our own view of it."

Mr. Bowser got up and sat down again. He choked and gasped and turned red and white, but he couldn't get out a word.

"And while on this subject of extravagance let me say that your bill for cigars last month was $12. During that same month you gave me money to buy two pairs of stockings at 65 cents per pair. Your child expenses alone would dress me nicely, but of course I can't find fault with your extravagance. I am the one who is galling this family over the road to the poorhouse."

"Woman!" Mr. Bowser managed to

the dinner over and turned up his nose and was about to ask if it came from a penny restaurant when Mrs. Bowser pointed her finger at him and said:

"Not a word, sir! It's the best I could do and plenty good enough."

"By thunder, woman, is this my house or some one else's?" he exclaimed as the red came to his face—

"That's a question to be settled later on. Meanwhile I want no more profanity at my table."

She spoke so quietly, but earnestly, that he was awed, and though he lost something of his appetite, he nevertheless found no fault with any of the dishes set before him. He had never seen Mrs. Bowser exactly like this before, and he was puzzled to make her out. During the last five minutes of dinner he decided that his old way was the best, and they had only passed into the sitting room when he said:

"Now, woman, are you ready to apologize to me for your language?"

"No, man, I am not," she replied as she turned on him. "If there are any apologies coming, you will make them."

"You know whom you are talking to, do you?"

"I do. Your name is Bowser."

"Yes, my name is Bowser, and I'm not used to being talked to like a hired man. Both our lawyers can be reached by telephone, and in case—"

"Yes, I know all about our lawyers, divorce, alimony and all that, and we can settle things in an hour. Here is the gas bill for last month. It is 60 cents more than for the month before. Of course you'll say that I sold or gave away the gas or burned it in the daytime to spite you. That's an old trick of yours, and I have got tired of it. If there is any gas wasted in this house, you waste it. Only two nights ago you left two burners in this room going all night."

"Holy smoke, woman!" he began as his throat choked up on him, and she cut in on him with:

"No loafish language in my presence, sir! I had to order coal today. The price was $10 per ton. You will say, of course, that my extravagance will land you in the poorhouse. Go ahead and have it over with, for I have more to say."

Mr. Bowser was silent. That feeling get out with a great effort. But while he was waiting for something more to come she said:

"When I went upstairs after breakfast this morning, I found your clothes scattered all over the room and everything topsy turvy. The next time you do that I shall throw everything out of the window. I don't propose that you shall put an hour's extra work on me."

"Such talk to me—to Bowser?" he whispered as he looked at her.

"To you and to no one else," she replied. "I want you to distinctly understand that there's a new deal on in this house. If there is any more kicking, I'm going to do it myself. As a beginning I shall ask you not to interfere with the kitchen. I know how to manage my help, while you know nothing about it. If you try to mix in, you'll hear something drop."

"And you—you are talking to me?" he stammered, with a puzzled look.

"Yes, sir, and I want you to remember every word I say. If you expect to board here this winter, there will be no dogs or chickens for the back yard. There will be no experimenting with the gas meter or water pipes. You will let the electric bells alone and keep your hands off the piano. If you bring home fire escapes, burglar alarms, patent lamps, life rafts or fog horns, they will go over the fence into the alley. If you bring home hair dyes, liver invigorators or lung pads, they will go into the stove."

"And she is talking to me—to Bowser?" he murmured as he rubbed his eyes and looked around the room.

"Yes, to you," she replied, "and I am not half through. I will leave the rest until tomorrow night, however, as I am rather tired tonight. I am now going upstairs, and you can sit here, go to your club or stand on your head on the front steps. As for a divorce, set about it as soon as you please. Good night Mr. Bowser—good night!"

"And she is Mrs. Bowser, and I am Mr. Bowser, and she talks that way!" he gasped after she had gone, and an hour later when she came softly down the stairs she found him asleep in his chair with a "where am I" expression extending from his chin clear over his bald pate to the back of his neck.

ARIZONA KICKLETS.

Breezy Items of News From a Lively Locality.

(Copyright, 1902, by C. B. Lewis.) We shall take the lecture platform this winter with three good things to hand out and are now ready to make dates. We can get away two evenings per week and hit any town within fifty miles. With twelve bullets in our guns and perfect confidence in ourselves, we hope to get away without serious trouble.

Every attempt to introduce the game of piaggino into this neighborhood has ended in somebody getting shot, and the result is that draw poker will be about the only amusement indulged in this winter. In that game shooting does not come as a surprise.

A stranger halted in front of the Kicker office on Tuesday and fired six shots at us as we stood in the door. When he had finished, we bowed our

A STRANGER FIRED SIX SHOTS AT US, acknowledged and he walked off. If he is not ashamed of such poor shooting, we are. Not one of his bullets came within a foot of us.

This is our week for lying about our circulation, and we therefore announce a gun of over half a million subscribers in the last ten days. Our bona fide circulation at the present date is close upon a billion, and the young man who acts as mailing and shipping clerk is beginning to get tired and hopes for a rest. If the rush keeps up, we may have to hire a small boy to assist in the business. Get your advertisements in early. M. QUAD.

Grip

Brought On Sciatic Rheumatism.

Nervous Prostration Followed.

Dr. Miles' Nerve Gave Back Health.

"I was laid up during the winter of '94-'95 with sciatic rheumatism and nervous prostration brought on by a severe attack of La Grippe. The rheumatic pains were so severe at times that it was impossible for me to turn in bed. I was unable to sleep. I had two of our best physicians in attendance, took all the advertised remedies for troubles of this kind but got no help whatever until I took Dr. Miles' Restorative Nerve. Six bottles restored me to health. I am better than for years; in fact an entirely relieved. I can say with a clear conscience that it was Dr. Miles' Restorative Nerve that restored me to health. When the pains of sciatic and rheumatism were most severe I secured almost immediate relief by the use of Dr. Miles' Anti-Pain Pills. I have recommended Dr. Miles' Remedies to many people."—Fred Myers, Redfield, S. D.

"I was taken with pain in my heart and under the left shoulder, with such heavy oppression, feeling in my chest that I could hardly breathe. I had palpitation so bad and my heart would throb so that it would shake my whole bed. I also had a weak, all-gone feeling in the region of my heart. My doctor treated me for liver and stomach trouble but I failed to receive any benefit until a friend recommended Dr. Miles' Heart Cure and Restorative Nerve. I used both and one box of the Anti-Pain Pills. I believe I am completely and permanently cured."—Mrs. J. W. Golding, Northville, Ind.

THEY LIVE

Crew of Steamer Hebard Are Safe On Shore.

SUFFERED AWFUL HARDSHIPS

Men Succeeded in Anchoring Lifeline on Shore. Over Which All Were Saved—Timely Aid of an Explorer Prevented Them Freezing to Death.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Dec. 3.—Like men arisen from the dead, the crew of the ill-fated steamer Charles Hebard, wrecked at Point Maguinac Sunday morning, reached Sault Ste. Marie on the tug General Tuesday afternoon. They brought with them a thrilling story of their long battle with the icy waters of Lake Superior, a fight in which death seemed for a long time likely to win the victory.

The men tell a story of the most awful hardship, which is graphically worded by Captain George D. Ryan of Detroit and Second Mate Arthur Jackson of Buffalo, as follows:

"We were bound from Duluth to Buffalo with three tows of the following order, Francomb, Aloha, Warmington. All went well until while running from Manitowish to Whitefish the wind shifted to west-northwest and came on to snow. We could not see the length of the boat and our log was frozen in, so that we soon lost all idea of our whereabouts.

Lost the Tows.

"At 11:30 Saturday night the Aloha line parted and an hour and a half later we lost the Francomb. What became of them we could not tell, for we were in trouble ourselves. We had little sea room and at 3:30 Sunday morning, in a blinding snow storm, we ran on to a bold, rocky shore about three miles above Mamaine Point and 200 yards from shore.

Fifteen minutes from the time we struck the Hebard broke in two and keeled far over, throwing her lee rail high out of the water. As soon as she struck she commenced going to pieces, for the seas broke over her. We tried to lower the yawl boat but the vessel was listed too much and the attempt failed. Then we tried the dinky and succeeded in launching her with the first and second mates on board. To reach the shore was a difficult matter, for the surf was running high between the vessel and the shore and the water was full of floating lumber.

"After several unsuccessful attempts we reached shore and made fast the end of the lifeline we had with us, to a boulder. The other end was fast to the rail of the Hebard, for by this time masts, smokestack and cabin were gone. Every wave heaved her out so that it was necessary to keep the line slack. They rigged a bora's chair and one at a time we hauled them ashore. For the most of the distance the men were under water, and everybody's clothes were frozen stiff as soon as landed.

A Brave Woman.

"We got two men ashore and then Mrs. Barnes was put in the chair and with great difficulty landed. She acted like a heroine all through, keeping cool and helping the men to the best of her ability. All the men were badly used up by knocking against the floating lumber.

"We never would have succeeded in landing all, for we were benumbed with the ice, had it not been for Oscar Carlson and Ed Smith. Carlson is in charge of an exploring company and lives in a hut out there in the wilderness, three miles from the nearest habitation. He saw the steamer ashore and came down to the beach with his son and a lot of whisky, which we poured into each other as we came ashore to revive him. He and his son also worked on the ropes with us, and after all were ashore took us to his hut and clothed and fed us until the arrival of the General. Had it not been for him our getting ashore would have been useless, for we would have frozen to death right there on the beach, for not one of us could walk, and of course had nothing to build a fire with."

Praise For Captain Ryan.

The men all speak highly of Captain Ryan, who was the last man to leave the vessel. He was exhausted and as slid down the line he lost his hold and fell into the sea. Second Mate Jackson went in after him and succeeded in bringing him ashore. The men all fear that there is no hope for the Aloha, although they will not give up yet, remembering their own experience.

THE ALOHA CREW SAFE

MEN DESERTED SCHOONER DURING THE STORM.

HAD PERILOUS TRIP FROM SHIP TO THE SHORE.

STEAMER OSSIFRAGE PICKED UP SCHOONER AND MEN.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Dec. 4.—News that the Aloha was safe in harbor, followed closely upon the announcement that the crew of the Hebard had escaped death, added to the rejoicing in marine circles and raised hopes for the missing Celtic, though nothing has been heard of her.

The Aloha was found by the steamer Ossifrage near Montreal island, deserted but still afloat. The steamer kept a sharp lookout and soon discovered the schooner's crew, which had gained a nearby shore. They had deserted the schooner, preferring to take their chances on making a landing rather than run the risk of having the vessel go to pieces beneath them. They had seen the rocks rising mountains high along the coast and realized their case was hopeless should the schooner go ashore.

A point where a landing looked possible was hailed with rejoicing, and the sailors welcomed the shore as they lowered a boat. In spite of the terrific seas, all were finally seated, and after an awful struggle the boat was beached. Rushing through spray, one assisting another, all finally reached shore nearly dead from exhaustion and exposure. Their rescue by the Ossifrage was most timely and probably saved their lives.

They were placed aboard their own craft, which was towed to Gaarguanta to await the arrival of tugs. The harbor is a safe one and the schooner will undoubtedly float there until she can be repaired. Hope for the Celtic centers in the belief that the missing boat may be discovered in shelter about the Manitoulin island.

School Notes.

[By the Superintendent.]

Our first year Latin class say they have to study pretty hard, but they enjoy the work.

Flocks of birds in the three lower rooms are headed southward.

Miss Coldren, teacher of the second grade, is quite a natural artist. Recently she placed a drawing of Santa Claus on the board that teachers and pupils recognized at once as an old time friend.

The third grade pupils have been illustrating some stories lately and their drawings show a remarkable aptitude for the art on the part of some.

Guy Filkins of the seventh grade has lately presided at the organ on the lower floor during the time of dismissal and his marches are enjoyed by all. Guy is not only clever at the organ or piano, but his school work generally has placed him in the class that teachers usually speak of as their best.

The Thanksgiving contribution of food supplies made by our pupils was a surprise to all. When the committee from the King's Daughters, who will attend to the distribution, came to remove the articles they were obliged to make two loads with the express wagon. Some of the little folks were thoughtful enough to see that certain needy people received a present from their hands and to that end directed where they would like their gifts to go or carried them there themselves. We appreciate the willingness of the King's Daughters who undertake the distribution of the supplies.

Baptist Church Notes.

[By the Pastor.]

There will be a Junior meeting Sunday evening at 6 o'clock. Miss May and Stanley have consented to act as leader. Now, Juniors, for business! I am sure you will enjoy your own services again.

The B. Y. P. U. topic for Sunday evening is part in the form of an intensely practical and suggestive question, notice and ponder well. "Do I Discriminate Others?" Mark 10:46-52 and Numbers 13:26-33. Let us give these references careful and thoughtful study.

Sunday morning the pastor will give the second sermon in his character series, "Baalim and Catech of a Religious Sentiment and a Religious Principle." In the evening "The Conversion of a Robber" will be the theme. All are cordially invited to attend these services.

The Woman's Mission Circle met with Mrs. Dart Wednesday afternoon. The program was in charge of Mrs. Thrasher and consisted of choice readings, Chinese dates, nuts to crack and music. At the conclusion of the program a surprise was awaiting those present in the form of a dainty luncheon served by Mesdames Burgess and Thrasher.

A most excellent Thanksgiving sermon was given in this church Thanksgiving morning by Rev. Bro. Jerome, and it seems a pity that there are so few who are interested in this exceedingly worthy and time-honored custom of rendering devout thanksgiving to Almighty God for mercies received. Bountiful harvests have been garnered, prosperity is visited upon us as a people and life and happiness have been meted out to us. Why this neglectfulness of God's bountiful kindness?

THE OLD FOLKS HAD IT

It was as Common in Olden Times as Now to Have Rheumatism.

Don't "grin and bear it" any longer. It's all right to bear pain heroically when you have to, but it's unnecessary in this case. If you don't believe it, tell us what we are doing for others. It's in your blood. Uric acid does it. We can drive it all out of your system. We have been at it twenty years, in a quiet way, and have made thousands of friends by doing them good.

Our doctors have discovered a secret. Athlophoros will act right on the Uric acid, and you will be surprised to see the aches and pains gradually leave you. The twinges and cricks will become less and less, and you will find yourself going about your work naturally.

You will feel brighter, happier, and as if a big load had been taken away. One bottle of Athlophoros, from your druggist, will show if it is to help you, and would be cheap at ten times the money if it relieves your suffering. Send $1 to The Athlophoros Co., New Haven, Conn., if your druggist shouldn't have it.

A SIMPLE QUESTION

Northville People Are Requested to Honestly Answer This.

Is not the word of a representative citizen of Northville more convincing than the doubtful utterances of people living everywhere else in the Union? Read this:

Mr. J. M. Ambler, living on Main street, says: "Mrs. Ambler and I used Doan's Kidney Pills, procuring them at Murdock Bros' drug store, and the treatment proved very satisfactory. We both had a lame back of a rheumatic nature and although we used several remedies we derived more benefit from a box of Doan's Kidney Pills than any other medicine we ever tried. Elastic Paper.

Ex-State Senator Arkell of New York has invented a kind of paper which will stretch to a certain extent without tearing. The Japanese crepe paper probably suggested the new elastic paper.

WEEDS

Consumption is a human seed, it is sown in the weak lungs of the young; it is sown in the lungs of the young; it is sown in the lungs of the young.

Stop for the lungs you would work hard and the world with drapery.

The Last lung fertilizer is Scott's Emulsion. Salt pork is good too, but it is very hard to digest.

The time to treat consumption is when you begin trying to hide it from yourself. Others see it, you won't.

Don't wait until you can't deceive yourself any longer. Begin with the first thought to take Scott's Emulsion. If it isn't really consumption so much the better; you will soon forget it and be better for the treatment. If it is consumption you can't expect to be cured at once, but if you will begin in time and will be rigidly regular in your treatment you will win.

Scott's Emulsion, fresh air, rest all you can, eat all you can, that's the treatment and that's the best treatment.

CHAPTER X. SWORDS CROSSED.

"WILL you go with me to the trial today, Evarest?" asked Oakfell at the conclusion of an early breakfast.

"No, brother, unless you need me or insist," Evarest replied. "I am feeling entirely out of sorts and should suffer from the excitement. If you are willing, I prefer to remain at home and take the place of Binker Wyley, who must drive with his mother to the court. But for your sake I wish you success."

"I find no fault with your choice, and thank you for your good wish," said Oakfell, who was soon flying upon his fastest horse to Marksville. Plantation affairs concerned Evarest but little that day. Riding through the fields to place himself in evidence before the squads of laborers, he plunged into the very heart of the dark Choc-taw swamp and gave himself up to thoughts blacker than its shades. He flung himself from the saddle and walked furiously to and fro through the tangled growth as the captive by a restless tramp his cage's length. He sat upon fallen trees with head buried in hands over which his long black hair fell as a pall upon expired hopes. He leaned on the patient, wondering horse, muttering curses on the conditions and persons that were the causes of his unhappiness. But in all this frenzy and wrath and mad acting he kept before him always and distinctly, as a registered oath, the purpose to possess Estelle, even at the cost of his brother's undoing should the power ever be given him.

It was the day of the great trial. The tactics of Pratjean had at length been exhausted, and now he was compelled to the combat.

Though Oakfell staid alone, he was joined by supporters at every plantation, store and settlement he passed and entered the village escorted by a numerous cavalcade of the most substantial dwellers in the lowlands. Immediately about him were Baldomero, Jewett, Valsin Mouillot and Father Grise, the last meeting the party at Masurea. But the Quillebert forces were also up and moving, and from every point of the prairie they could be seen in bunches, galloping on their big ponies, occasionally yelling "Vive Quillebert! Hurrah for Quillebert!" And already their diminutive steeds had forestalled every hitching post in the streets and about the courthouse yard, and the riders had swarmed in the cabarets, calling for absinth anisette (at Quillebert's charge) and denouncing vociferously the cursed Americans (at Quillebert's instigation). In the history of the parish no such concourse had ever filled the courtyard or tested the capacity of the courtroom. The long bladed pocketknife was in many a hand, hungrily demolishing furbark and fence board, and the ugly hump of the Colt pistol was seen under many a blouse, while not a few shotguns were observed to be carried from pony saddle to cabaret and there put out of sight. The general expectation was that blood would flow freely before the setting of the sun.

Quillebert sat at the office of Pratjean, scowling, morose, surly and deaf to his advocate's assurances of victory. He caused his witnesses to be brought to him singly and rehearsed in their expected testimony. While this was proceeding the commanding figure of Jewett was seen to emerge from the crowd in Oakfell's office and, his red whiskered face set in an expression of grave determination, walk slowly across the courtyard to Pratjean's office. The movement was quickly notified to the cabarets, which were instantly emptied of their patrons, who drew near to watch and hear what they could of his mission. Arrived in front of the little office building, Jewett stopped and called:

"Pratjean!"

"Hello!" answered the lawyer, appearing at the door.

"Step here a moment," Jewett called to have a word with you," said Jewett. "Will you not come into my office, M. Jewett? You are perfectly welcome to come inside." Pratjean assumed his most suave manner and heaved his unquiet lips.

"No, I have but a word to say and prefer to stay here in the open." And as Pratjean approached him Jewett continued: "I hear there is a good deal of devilish fool talk going on among these absinth soakers in the coffee houses. Now, I just want to give you a bit of information, and you may make use of it as you see fit. It is this: Oakfell's friends have come here prepared for anything that may happen. If a gun cracks, they are not going to pay any attention to those prairie rabbits over there, but will fill Quillebert's body so full of lead that he would furnish shot for all their papabote hunting next summer."

"M. Jewett," said Pratjean, erecting his head with an air of offended dignity, "do you mean?"

"I mean just what I have said, Pratjean, and you understand me perfectly well." And Jewett stalked back to Oakfell's office in his customary deliberate gait.

As Pratjean was turning to re-enter the office his name was again called, and, looking around, he saw Dede hurrying to him.

"Listen, Tibource," said the latter, panting. "Valsin Mouillot went to Totouri's cabinet this minute and told him if there was any trouble today he and six others would shoot at you and nobody else until you were used up."

"I will attend to him later," muttered Pratjean, the fright of this communication setting his lips to thumping violently. "Come in, Dede."

Shortly Dede and one other left the office and circulated among Quillebert's adherents, and thereafter a pent hush settled upon them.

Three women also had journeyed in from the lowlands—Mrs. Wyley, in charge of her son, to testify in behalf of Leon's freedom, Estelle Latolais, pale and anxious, accompanying her grandfather, who had been summoned as a witness on the part of Quillebert, and Laure Luneau, with the mammoth buggy and giant mule, who, with steady look and bold speech, explained her presence to be only as a partisan of Quillebert. Mrs. Wyley and Estelle were the guests of good old Mme. No-reau, mother of the clerk of court, who lived not quite a street away from the courthouse, and, nearer still, Laure figuratively flung her banner to the breeze from the "Toilette de la Gasconne," the little millinery shop of the petite and ancient Mlle. Beraud, where she received marked respect from the many who deferred to her as an granddaughter of the doctress and to whom she sought to impart some of her own courage and energy.

Among the throng were a half dozen "f. m. c.'s," as the free men of color were in those days designated, who lingered silent upon the skirts of the groups, fearing to be spoken to, yet held by intensest interest within hearing of all that was going forward.

The one person who appeared unmoved by—indeed unconscious of—the passion which surged about him was Honore Victor Tailleu, judge of the district court now and for 22 years past. Only twice had his reputation been contested and then with results most discouraging to the competitors. He was of Gascon descent and poor through disastrous speculations of his father and elder brother. His age was 57. Thirty-five years he had been a widower, his wife, the beautiful and pious Ernestine Lafont of Pointe Coupe, having died of yellow fever in their honeymoon. In commemoration of her he had ever since paid for a pew in the church at Marksville, but had never sat in it. He gave its use to poor women who could not rent pews. And her grave in the cemetery behind the church he visited daily, standing above it a brief moment with his head bowed in reverent meditation. His life was simple and studious. He read and re-read Rousseau and Paine, adored the "Corpus Juris Civilis" and "Code Napoleon" and recognized only Martin, Kent and Marshall as doctors of American law. Gentle, just and brave, he had long held the chief place in the hearts of his people. His grave is somewhere on the battlefield of Perryville, in Kentucky, in an apple orchard, it is said, but no one has ever found it.

As the judge's tall form and dark face, with kindly eyes and waving hair of iron gray, were seen moving toward the courthouse the throng gathered about him, returning his friendly greeting, and followed him, or as many as could gain entrance, into the courtroom, the raised benches of which and the aisle between being immediately occupied. It was noticed that the highland men appropriated those on the left facing the judge, the lowland men those on the right. Fifty or more, unable to get within, stood on the veranda on which the door of the apartment opened. Hundreds sat and squatted in the yard beneath the unclosed windows. The "f. m. c.'s" peered upon a portion of the fence inclosing the yard, their ponies hitched near by.

The lawyers, except those engaged in the celebrated case were already in their places within the bar. Exchanging a few pleasant words with those and briefly conferring in an undertone with the sheriff, the judge ascended the bench and ordered that the court be declared in session.

Presently Pratjean raddled briskly in accompanied by Quillebert. Dede followed, bearing a double armful of lawbooks and looking with his scared, metallic face and big, bearded eyes like a Caliban carrying fagots to the fire. Quillebert surveyed the lowlanders with a sullen glance of defiance. Pratjean nodded jerkily to the bench and bar and persons in the audience, his pursed lips and little eyes performing a tarantula dance the while. Relieving Dede of his unwelcome burden of books and arranging them on the desk before him, he seated himself and became at once absorbed in making notes of seemingly grave import.

The appearance of Oakfell was so long delayed that on the highland side it began to be whispered that he had given up the case. Quillebert caught the intimation and communicated it to his advocate. The latter hustled to his feet and, addressing the judge, said:

"May it please your honor, I move that the plaintiff be called three times from the door of the courtroom and that if at the end of the third call he do not respond in person or by attorney this suit be dismissed." And he turned to the audience a face announcing that he had disabled his opponent at the first pass. The buzz among the highlanders indicated that such was their belief.

"Mr. Sheriff," said the judge, "call Mr. Oakfell at the door."

Forcing his way through the packed aisle and veranda, the officer roared:

"Honorable Oakfell, Esq."

"Coming," answered a stentorian voice which seemed fairly to shake the building and when actually shocked one half its occupants, for it was recognized as that of Jewett, and as the whispering froze upon the lips of the Quillebert party and Pratjean's countenance confessed to a feeling that he had made a fool of himself Oakfell walked in with Jewett, Baldomero and Father Grise. He held in his hand but one volume, the civil code of Louisiana, and his companions had neither books nor documents. He satisfactorily explained his tardiness, and the judge directed the trial to proceed before him, neither party having played for the assistance of a jury.

Oakfell arose and read the petition of Leon.

"Are the parties, plaintiff and defendant, present?" inquired the judge.

"The plaintiff is present by attorney," said Oakfell.

"And the defendant is present by attorney and in person," responded Pratjean, with special emphasis on the word "in person" and a scornful glance at Oakfell which was greeted by a witherspread "Ay, ay, ay!" from the left.

"That is sufficient. Read your pleadings, gentlemen," requested the judge. Oakfell arose and read the petition of Leon. It was concise and perfectly plain, reciting merely that the plaintiff was born the slave of Fabian Queyrouze, deceased, and was inherited by the heirs of said Queyrouze, that for the period of ten years, with the knowledge of his masters, he was suffered to enjoy freedom within the state and thereby became a free man in virtue of the article 351 of the civil code; that after the expiration of said prescriptive period the defendant, Constant Quillebert, by deceit obtained control of plaintiff's person and unlawfully deprived him of his liberty until the institution of this suit, falsely claiming to be his master. The petition concluded with the prayer that the plaintiff should be judicially declared and recognized a free man and released from the custody and dominion of the defendant.

Pratjean in his turn recited in a disjointed way the answer of Quillebert. It denied that the plaintiff had ever enjoyed freedom by the permission of any person entitled to his services and asserted that, having by his own admission been born a slave and never emancipated in the manner and form provided by the laws of the state prior to 1857, he was without right to sue and stand in judgment in the courts of the state, and hence the answer prayed that the plaintiff's demand be rejected.

It was apparent to all professional minds that Pratjean's plea was drawn far more artfully and skillfully than was Oakfell's petition and opposed difficulties of a technical kind which would scarcely have been anticipated to a demand so simple as Leon's.

At the conclusion of the reading Oakfell said:

"One of my witnesses is an old lady who has never been within a court of justice and shrinks from appearing in open court before an audience composed entirely of men. I ask the consent of the other side to have her testimony taken before your honor in chambers."

"I refuse consent," snapped Pratjean, drawing the indignant glances directed upon him by the judge and every other respectable man in the courtroom. "My client has received no courtesies from the other side, and for him I insist."

"You need proceed no further, sir; the request is withdrawn," said Oakfell. At his instance Jewett left the courtroom and in a moment returned escorting Mrs. Wyley and her son Binker, on whose arm she leaned.

At first she seemed greatly agitated, and dazed by the strange surroundings, but the assuring words of the judge, the presence of her brave and devoted son and her inborn Dutch good sense soon restored her equanimity. The narration she gave of the coming of Leon to her, his life under her keeping, his intelligence by Quillebert and the latter's oral reply to the written inquiry concerning the boy's detention, was so circumstantial, direct and evidently truthful that Pratjean shrewdly realized the peril of venturing upon his favorite mode of cross examination and dismissed her with but few questions fairly and politely put. He greatly regretted he had forced her to testify in open court.

Oakfell produced the records showing the settlement of the Queyrouze estate with the French heirs, and omitting any price for Leon from the proceeds of the sale of slaves, and the deed, joined in by Quillebert, for Olive and her three children, excepting Leon from the sale.

By Father Grise and Valsin Mouillot he proved the admission of Quillebert, made at unsuspecting times, that Leon was not his slave.

On the part of Quillebert, Pratjean exhibited the inventory of the Queyrouze estate, in which the child Leon was appraised as an asset.

Jadot, Brille and Tibout testified to Leon's admissions of Quillebert's ownership of him, as they had promised over the gumbo and rum at Dede's.

The distress of Leonas Latolais was so apparent that the pity of all feeling men went to him when he was summoned to the witness chair and made to state under oath that on the day of the memorable race between the mares of Judge Elgee and Quillebert Leon said he was the slave of Quillebert and begged him (Latolais) to buy him.

In an unhappy moment he had communicated to Quillebert the jockey's application to him, and that indefatigable casemaker had by dint of persistence, wine and accommodations of card debts argued from his memory the "if" prefixed to Leon's prayer. Oakfell made no effort to replace it.

This closed the evidence for Quillebert.

There was no more striking contrast in the entire proceeding than that between the arguments of the two advocates.

Oakfell's was calm, direct, unimpassioned and devoid of appeal to the emotions. He relied solely and simply upon a lateral application of the article of the code which he thought rendered judgment in his client's favor unavoidable. From Mme. No-reau's cottage Estelle eagerly listened, catching only at times the sound of his voice, but never a distinguishable word.

Pratjean's dry, harsh voice vexed the ears of the assemblage within and rattled upon those without for an hour and a half. Laure heard every syllable, and often her pretty brown hands "at together in approval. He read copiously from French commentaries upon the impossibility of courts entertaining the pleas of persons not sui juris. He quoted numerous decisions by the state supreme court declaring emancipation necessary to clothe one born in slavery with the authority of suitor and magnified into political significance the instant cause which, he said, the pestilent abolitionists throughout the north and their secret confederates in our midst were watching with unsleeping eyes, for it was the first of a series of moves that had laid for the destruction of southern society. He warned the judge against leading the way of the law and courts of Louisiana to those enemies of the Union, those "sacred" of Caucasian civilization.

In these flights he hopped from place to place and threw his aims about in a maze of gesticulation which served his utterances as an obligate accompaniment supports a wild song of passion. Had he spoken no word his pantomime art would have conveyed an intelligible address. Indeed it is said of his class in Louisiana that if deprived of the power of gesture their speech would not be understandable to one another. His voice at times broke into falsetto tones maddening to the sensitive ear, but his oratory was effective, and it was difficult for the sheriff to suppress the applause which repeatedly broke from the left and the spellbound groups in the yard.

Oakfell was unaffected by this display. His reply was practically a repetition of his opening speech, reiterating his dependence upon the plain meaning of the article of the code. He concluded by declaring him an enemy to the state who would describe an appeal to the courts of the land for freedom as a political menace to the commonwealth.

It was 4 o'clock in the afternoon when the speeches were concluded. The judge announced that he would give his decision at 5 and left the bench.

THE OLD RELIABLE

THERE IS NO SUBSTITUTE

Suburban News.

Names do sometimes fit the calling of their owners after all. A Blissfield physician is named Treat.

No use saying anything more about second crop fruit. The Orion Review man was regaled on third crop strawberries last week.

The Fenton Independent is going to omit its "customary calendar distribution" this year, as its subscription list has become so large that it takes too many to go around making the expense too large. Why not make almanacs a feature this time? They are never out of date.

At a "talent social" last week down in Livonia the Plymouth Mall correspondent, reports that among many interesting ways in which money was earned for the occasion one lady "killed fleas on a dog at one cent per flea." That beats anything we ever heard of. Didn't the dog die?

The Hon Thad D Seeley was in town Saturday and while here a representative of the Enterprise talked with him relative to Sunday hunting and was much pleased at what Mr Seeley said—Farmington Enterprise.

The models of the Enterprise would no doubt be pleased too if they only knew what the honorable gentleman said.

The Birmingham Eclectic goes "salesladies" and "washladies" one better and refers to some of the female inhabitants of that burg as "our townsladies." Next we shall be hearing about ladykind and the lady suffrage question. And why not our gentleman, salesgentleman and washgentleman?

A man named Quick hitched his horse in front of a Holly saloon and the animal got scared and broke away, ran across the street in double quick time and hit a store, smashing a $50 plate glass window. The owner came along as Quick as possible, but it must have cost him great pain when he saw how visiting a saloon had demoralized his hitherto respectable steed.

Some genius at Fenton has started a plan for keeping things lively out there all winter. A "Flower Carnival" is to be held soon and a voting contest is on for the most popular young lady, the one getting the most votes to be queen of the carnival. There are twenty-five contestants for the honor already and a warm time is assured for the rest of the season no matter what the price of fuel may be.

Farmington farmers are going to make things hum if the vandals who have recently been cutting down valuable timber for "bee trees" don't watch out for something besides bees. Those whose fine trees have been felled without even so much as "by your leave" are waxing warm over repeated outrages of that sort, and have no honeyed words to say on the subject. The depredators will have to be careful after this or they will feel the sting of the law, and perhaps see some of the cells at Pontiac.

Bro. Stearns of the Adrian Press has been over to Tecumseh and evidently got into a nice pickle while there, judging by the following from the Press: "Preference" is the name of a game now in vogue at Tecumseh. It is very popular with young people. The boys bid for trump, and if they win out, they have the right to a preference and can kiss any girl in room. If he gets set up, then the girls make him wash his face and kiss three sour pickles." Owing to his strict temperance principles, the I'll brave the storms of Chilkoot Pass. I'll cross the plains of frozen glass. I'll leave my wife and cross the sea, Rather than be without Rocky Mountain Tea.

—Murdoch Bros.

Press man never gets set up, so well, he'd better stay away from Tecumseh after this, that's all.

The Wayne News-Letter man has "owned up" at last. We would never have suspected him for a minute either as the guilty party or an accessory before or after the fact, but there can be no other interpretation when the very first item in the News Letter's "Home Happenings" column reads "Northville has a dog poisoner." If our dog poisoner is a Wayne "Home Happening" he had better not happen up here again or there will be a chance for some doggerel obituary poetry. Sic semper parva of that sort.

Wonderland Temple Theatre—Detroit.

The Empire Vaudeville company, one of the strongest organizations now traveling, will occupy the stage at the Wonderland and Temple Theatre, Detroit next week. James J. Corbett will head the bill. The following artists will appear on the program with him: Howard's comedy ponies, Geller's troupe in famous stunts and others.

Whitney's Opera House—Detroit.

A new play is announced for a week's engagement at the Whitney beginning Dec 7th in the afternoon. It is a new sensational comedy drama entitled "Only a Shop Girl," which is a dramatization of the novel of the same name. It is in four acts which are described as scintillating, humorous, of gorgeous lavishment. The story tells of a shop girl's trials and vicissitudes when employed in the large department stores, and appeals especially to the vast army of workers employed throughout the land as salesladies. Matinee daily except Wednesday.

Lyceum Theatre—Detroit.

The attraction at the Lyceum theatre next week will be "Sweet Love," a play that is credited with having charmed large audiences in every city in which it has been presented. It is a delightful four-act pastoral play, beautifully staged and splendidly acted by Broadhurst & Currie's company headed by Otis B. Thayer and Miss Blanche Hall. Otis B. Thayer, as "Jerome Holcombe," the old New England farmer, gives a strong exhibition of character acting while Miss Hall, as "Louise," the daughter, displays remarkable ability in the line of emotional acting. Usual Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

Expected Discovery.

All sorts of wonderfully well preserved things are being unearthed in the palace of Nebuchadnezzar in Babylon. It may be possible that they will yet bring to light some of the baled hay he kept at hand to eat when the grass crop was short.

A COLD WAVE.

The forecast of sudden changes in the weather serves notice that a hoarse voice and a heavy cough may invade the sanctity of health in your own home. Cautious people have a bottle of One Minute Cough Cure always at hand. E. H. Wise, Madison, Ga., writes: "I am indebted to One Minute Cough Cure for my present good health, and probably my life." It cures Coughs, Colds, La Grippe, Bronchitis, Pneumonia and all Throat and Lung troubles. One Minute Cough Cure cuts the phlegm, draws out the inflammation, heats and soothes the mucous membranes and strengthens the lungs. Murdoch Bros.

Oil as Medicine.

In Levantine countries they say the external use of oil prevents rheumatism, gout and other kindred maladies, which are aggravated by external chills, and that the internal use of the oil removes the toxic condition of the blood which leads to the generation of these maladies.

CENTER OF FINANCE

SPLendid NEW HOME OF THE NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE.

How Its Business Has Increased in Recent Years—Membership Worth a Fortune—The Head of the Institution.

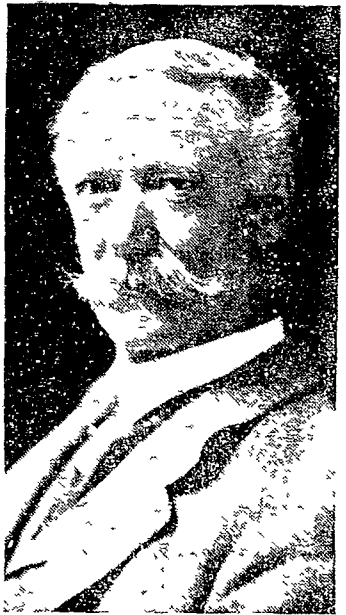

Half a block away from Wall street, nearly completed, stands the majestic new home of the New York Stock Exchange, which from the magnitude of its financial operations and its mighty influence in business affairs is destined to become one of the notable buildings of the world.

The new Stock Exchange is an immense structure, a block in length, extending from Broad street, on which it fronts, to New street, and it is 138 feet in width. It has a height of five stories, with a cornice. The effect of magnitude is enhanced by the architectural design of the building, for across its front are six immense Corinthian columns, guarding, as it were, the grand portico and supporting a broad pediment. All the exterior construction of the building is of white Georgia marble, and the interior is of white South Dover marble.

Aside from the beauty and magnitude of the structure there are two other features of it which are of special interest. One of these is the "floor" where the trading will be done, and the other is the safety deposit vault, which is one of the finest in the world.

The trading floor is to be a vast room 140 feet long from the inner face of the columns, 110 feet wide and 30 feet high. Ample opportunity for spectators to observe the busy scene on the great floor below has been provided by two broad galleries, one at either end of the room.

The vault in the basement is completed and is already used by banking and brokerage houses for depositing securities. It is a long room, in the walls of which are hundreds of safety deposit boxes of a variety of shapes and sizes. In the center of the room is a long steel cabinet and in both sides of it more boxes and lockers. The outside wall of the vault is fourteen inches thick. The exterior is a steel coat. Next to it is a wall of fireproof material, and inside of that a thick burglar proof plate of steel. Between the outer wall and the wall in which are the safety deposit boxes is a narrow passage extending entirely around the vault. In the center of each end and each side of the passageway are watchmen's signals. At night two men guard the vault. They pace continually around it through the narrow passage. They are required to "ring up" at each one of these signal boxes every fifteen minutes. This keeps the watchmen active. A further safeguard is the time lock at the front of the vault. It contains the finest and most elaborate lock mechanism made.

Rudolph Keppeler, who was elected president of the New York Stock Exchange last spring for the fifth consecutive term, has been an active and beneficial influence in that organization for more than a quarter of a century. He entered the board of governors in May, 1877, and has been identified more or less with the management of the exchange since that date. Although of German birth, Mr. Keppeler has been a resident of this country since his youth, and his business career has been developed in Wall street.

Since he became the administrative head of the Stock Exchange there has been a wonderful growth in the business of the institution. New securities aggregating in value $2,000,000,000 have been added to the stock list during the past four years, and the volume of the speculative business in the exchange has steadily increased.

Mr. Keppeler's administration is the only period in the history of the New York Stock Exchange in which daily sales of 2,000,000 shares of stock have been recorded.

With the increase of business the value of membership has advanced, until now it takes nearly $100,000 to gain admission to what has been described as the greatest financial mart in the world.

Answered as She Felt.

A somewhat formal visitor asked a little girl:

"How are you, my dear?"

"Very well, thank you," said the little girl.

"Now," continued the visitor, "you should ask me now I am."

"But I don't want to know," was the unexpected reply.

AUTHORESS AND COOK.

Mrs. Freeman, Who Is as Clever in the Kitchen as Skilful With Pen.

When Miss Mary Wilkins, the talented author, became the bride of Dr. Charles M. Freeman of Metuchen, N. J., on the 1st of last January, she caused dismay in her New England home. Miss Wilkins' home at Randolph, Mass., had become a recognized shrine to which the literary minded made pilgrimages. She was the chief figure of the town, its lioness, its foremost citizen and its pride. Her loss was a blow to the community.

Mrs. Freeman's new home at Metuchen, though outwardly unpretentious, contains much that is artistically beautiful. It is filled with rare pieces of furniture, many of which are heirlooms in Dr. Freeman's family. The house has wide porches and stands in the shade of numerous spruce, oak and elm trees.

From every window the purple hills can be seen stretching away into woodlands. It is such an ideal spot for one of artistic sensibilities that Miss Wilkins' willingness to forsake her Massachusetts home is not hard to explain. Of course she brought her own pet pieces of furniture and many other things.

Upstairs is a sunny south chamber she calls her "den." It is a colonial room fitted up with severe simplicity. The walls and carpet are moss green. The chairs and table, couch and desk are all of the style of that period of more than a century ago when in the bride's native New England idens were as prim as the chair backs of the time.

It is here that she spends much of her time now that the publishers have lured her back into literary paths. Miss Wilkins transfers her faculties directly to paper through the medium of a typewriting machine, which she operates herself, rarely changing a word. Of all the rooms in the new home, from the little blue drawing room to the shining kitchen, this colonial "den" is her favorite.

Mrs. Freeman is proud of one of her accomplishments as a housekeeper—she makes excellent cake. The pantry of the house at Metuchen she keeps well supplied with this work of her hands.

ALICE OF ENGLAND.

Princess Who May Wed the Crown Prince of Germany.

Princess Alice of England, who it is confidently believed, is to marry Frederick William Victor, crown prince of Germany, is the daughter of the late Duke of Albany, Queen Victoria's youngest son, and sister of the little Grand Duke of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha.

The princess is a particular favorite of both the emperor and the empress and is made much of by the kaiser and his consort. Without being a beauty, she is a pretty girl, clever, sunny tempered and wholesome looking. She is much like the empress at the time of the latter's marriage and is one of the closest friends of her first cousin, the young queen of Holland, whose mother, Queen Emma, is a sister of the widowed Duchess of Albany.

The princess is very popular at the court of her uncle, King Edward, whose ward she has been since her father's death. The Duchess of Albany is known to be one of the very few intimate friends of the kaiserin.

CULTURE OF DATES

HOW THE GREAT ALKALI PLAINS ARE BEING RECLAIMED.

What Irrigation and the Date Palm Are Doing For That Arid Land. Fruit That Rivals the Product of Arabia—Future of the Southwest.

Uncle Sam's fruit sharps in the department of agriculture predict that in a few years the United States will produce enough dates to supply the home demand. Already date cultivation has passed the experimental stage, and a crop of fine fruit has just been harvested at Phoenix, Ariz. This harvest has been gathered for several years, with an increase each year.

The Colorado desert, with its vast rainless regions, its intense summer heat and dry atmosphere and the readiness of irrigation in many places from the Colorado and its many Arizona tributaries, aided by the water storage to be, is destined to rank as a second Sahara in the production of dates. Neither the alkali soil nor the alkali water hinders the thrift of the date palm. It is even claimed by some good judges that the alkali promotes the growth of the tree. It does look so, for some of the most vigorous trees are seen in soil that is white with alkali. No other fruit tree could endure a single season in such soil.

The first date palms were brought to this country by the missionary fathers who accompanied the early Spanish pioneers in Mexico and California. Lower California is yet marked by aged palms of those days, but the fruit is valueless owing to the poor grade of trees.

Several more recent attempts have been made to introduce the date palm in this country, but the only success has been that of the Arizona experiment station farm. These fruited trees are of the Egyptian variety. The trees first placed at the experiment station bore fruit the fourth year, producing a large and juicy date.

It was not until the department of agriculture took up date culture with determination that any progress was made. Then it was that the University of Arizona and the experiment station farm offered to prepare a date garden for the reception of the shoots that the department of agriculture was selecting for the shipment of 1899-1900, provided the department would furnish the shoots of standard varieties from the orchards of the old world.

An agreement was made, and in 1899 a few shoots were secured from the best date orchard on the Algerian coast and sent to the university and to the experiment farm. The following year a number of shoots of the Deglet Noor

TWO ANCIENT PALMS.

(Date of Light) variety were secured south of the Atlas mountains. These, with a variety known as the Rhars, the earliest date to ripen in Biskra, were sent to the Algerian coast. Also shoots of every staple variety found in the north Algerian Sahara were added, and the whole shipment of eight tons was sent to Arizona. In less than forty days after leaving the Algerian coast the palms were in Tempe, Ariz., near Phoenix, under preparation for transplanting. Two cases of the Rhars variety were sent to California, to be in the care of the University of California.

Biskra, the land of dates in the old world, and Phoenix have the same mean temperature from May to October. Taking the two most favorable date regions in the United States—Phoenix, Ariz., and Fresno, Cal.—and comparing these two regions with Biskra, their conditions stand in the following proportions: Fresno, 7, Phoenix, 11, Biskra, 13. It is seen that Phoenix is but two points off from Biskra, "the land of dates." When Phoenix is used in this comparison, it means all of the Salt river valley and much of the surrounding Colorado desert, embracing nearly 3,000 square miles.

The date palm is not a desert plant. It will thrive in any country where the winters do not kill it. It can endure equally well the driest and the wettest climate, but it takes a dry and a very hot climate to make the tree produce good fruit. An old Arabian proverb says, "The date palm, the queen of trees, must have her feet in the running water and her head in the burning skies." This proverb is the key to successful date culture.

The United States imports annually $600,000 worth of dates. But the success of the experiments in date growing demonstrates that the end of this importation is in sight. It would seem therefore that in date culture lies the future of much of the great alkali desert of the southwest.
