FIRST CASUALTY AT BELL FOUNDRY

R. E. BARTON SERIOUSLY INJURED MONDAY.

Has Been Taken to Detroit Hospital for Treatment.

The first serious accident which has ever happened at the American Bell & Foundry Co.'s plant occurred Monday, R. E. Barton being the victim. He had discovered among the iron an old sickle and decided that he would sharpen up the implement for his own use. In pursuance of this plan he was engaged in grinding the sickle on a revolving wheel when it was torn from his hands by its point catching in the covering of the wheel and was hurled violently into his face, knocking him down and inflicting a deep gash in his forehead. He was alone in the room at the time and a fellow workman coming in later was startled to find him lying unconscious on the floor, bleeding profusely. He was immediately taken to the office of a physician and later removed to his home. It was found that the point of the knife had penetrated the skull, inflicting an injury of such nature as to necessitate taking him to a Detroit hospital for surgical treatment, which was done Wednesday afternoon. Many friends here hope for his speedy recovery.

ST. MARY'S SOCIETY

Brings Milford Dramatic Club to Northville.

In pursuance of the plan to build a new house of worship in Northville St. Mary's Catholic society is making constant and earnest efforts in the line of fund raising for that purpose, but is always willing to give the public something good in return for any assistance rendered. Next Monday evening, May 11, our townspeople will have a chance to enjoy a treat in the presentation by the Milford dramatic club of a very interesting drama, "The World Against Him, or A Noble Outcast," which will be put on in the Opera House at that date. The play has been given with excellent success in Milford, and will no doubt be well worth seeing, as no pains has been spared in the endeavor to bring its production up to the highest standard of amateur art. The prices have been placed at 25 cents for adults and 15 cents for children. Those desiring reserved seats can obtain them by paying ten cents extra at Murdoch's drug store. Monday evening, May 11, is the date.

ANNUAL MEETING.

Wayne Association Missionary Societies at Novi May 14.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary societies of Wayne Baptist association is to be held at Novi this year, which insures a good time all around as the hospitable citizens of that vicinity have a long established reputation for knowing just how to most successfully entertain gatherings of this kind. The date of the meeting is Thursday of next week, May 14th. An excellent program has been arranged, and the occasion will be of greatest interest and profit to missionary workers, as these meetings always are. Mrs. A. Wheaton of Jackson, state field worker in foreign missions, will give the address of the afternoon about 3:30. Rev. W. H. Bettens of Detroit will furnish the stereopticon lecture and phonographic entertainment, which, with good music, will be the evening program.

Notice to Taxpayers.

The Board of Review for the Village of Northville will meet at the store of B. A. Wheeler in said Village on Tuesday and Wednesday, May 19 and 20 1903, at 9:00 o'clock a. m. of each of said days for the purpose of reviewing the assessment roll for said Village. Taxpayers desiring themselves aggrieved may be heard at that time.

SCHOOL ENTERTAINMENT

Was a Great Success Last Friday Evening.

There was no reason to complain of any lack of attendance at the entertainment given in Princes rink last Friday evening by the primary teachers and pupils of our school, as the patrons, parents and friends turned out in numbers sufficient to fill the large room almost to overflowing. The little people fairly outdid themselves, and the four score children in their dainty costumes made a charming spectacle, looking like a mass of animated blossoms as they sat ranged tier above tier on the seats of the stage, moved with unadvised grace through the pretty drills assigned them or voiced their little songs and recitations. Both teachers and pupils deserve a high compliment for the excellence of their work, which was a credit to all concerned and a pleasure to all present.

Phillips-Starkweather.

Mr. and Mrs. Irving A. Starkweather sent out to their friends yesterday the announcement of the marriage of their daughter, Mae W. to Mr. Bert C. Phillips on Wednesday, November 19, 1902. Although Mr. and Mrs. Phillips have this stolen a march on their friends and escaped the rice and other stereotyped forms of friendly interest shown on such occasions, it is not too late for the congratulations of their many friends, in which the Record heartily joins. They will be at home after May 20th at No 50 Dunlap street.

School Notes.

[By the Superintendent.]

Class pins adorn the seniors. Estella Angell has been assigned the place as valedictorian for Class Day exercises and Shirine Tatham salutatorian.

A fine picture of Emerson has been obtained for the high school room, procured by collecting Queen Anne soap wrappers.

About seventy dollars were taken in at the May Festival. It was a pronounced success and the little people and teachers in charge won much praise.

The junior class is planning on tendering the usual reception to the seniors after graduation, and, on this account, have arranged with the Ladies' Minstrel company of Plymouth to give their popular concert at the Opera House in this village next Friday night, May 15th. Admission 15 and 25 cents, proceeds for benefit of the junior class. The young people are planning for the comfort and entertainment of all who come and hope to have a crowded house.

Kissing Out of Fashion.

The habit of kissing babies indiscriminately is now very generally condemned on sanitary grounds. But the decline of kissing seems to rest, in the main, upon the great principles of etiquette, which are superior, as everyone of intelligence must admit, to those of science. In other words, kissing has gone out of fashion.—Providence, R. I. Journal

NEWS FROM THE STATE CAPITOL

JUVENILE COURT FOR DETROIT HAS PASSED

Appropriations Mostly for Education and Charity.

The appropriation bills are now nearly all in and it is safe to say that the amount passed will not total any more than that of two years ago and the amounts are in the main for educational and charitable purposes. But few new institutions or commissions have been created and the state expenses have been kept down to the lowest possible limit.

Chief Governor Maitland has been absent nearly the entire session but President Fuller has presided in his stead in the senate with both grace and dignity.

A bill has just passed the House which provides for a juvenile court for the city of Detroit, and provides for salaries of $5,000 a year to start with for judges and clerks. The bill as presented provided that the salaries should be paid by the county of Wayne, but Mr. Neal's amendment cut out the county, of Wayne and placed the expense wholly upon the city of Detroit.

House bill No. 499 entitled "A bill to provide for the governing of the outlets and inlets of Walled Lake, in the townships of Novi and Commerce, Oakland county and to prohibit fishing in said lake in any manner, except with hook and line," was given immediate effect by the house Friday.

The committee to visit the Stillwater prison to enquire into the advisability of establishing a binder twine plant at the Jackson prison has returned and its members look with much favor upon the proposition. The appropriation to be asked for will probably be in the neighborhood of $100,000. The Stillwater institute is credited with earnings in the neighborhood of $95,000 a year.

Back Broken by Falling Slate.

Bay City, Mich., May 6.—Alexander Sardiniski, miner at the Pittsburg diggings, is lying at Mercy hospital with a broken back, having been caught under a chunk of falling slate while at work. His death is liable to occur at any time.

Acquitted of Arson.

Muskegon, Mich., May 6.—Mort Kratz, accused of burning the steamer Ida by his jealous sweetheart, Anna Trost, has been acquitted. The boat was burned in September, 1901, and the woman said he had confessed being the incendiary to her.

Fire Destroyed a School.

Three Rivers, Mich., May 6.—Fire Tuesday morning destroyed that portion of the building occupied by Professor C. H. Sage's Commercial College and Normal School, involving a heavy loss, upon which but $2,000 insurance was carried.

DEFEAT FOR COLBY BILL

SENATE ASSENT TO SUBSTITUTE BY VOTE OF 21 TO 9.

OPPOSITION TO BILL WILL HAVE HARD WORK.

HOUSE VOTE TO ESTABLISH A NEW NORMAL SCHOOL.

Lansing, Mich., May 7.—The Colby-Powell-Stone primary election reform bill, which passed the house by a vote of 79 to 13, had just nine friends in the senate. A compromise measure, giving a fair portion of primary reform, will be found to have almost twice as many friends, howbeit possibly not enough to give it effect in the upper house.

The cannonading in the upper house was begun Wednesday afternoon when Senator Charles C. Simons of Detroit, in a speech that thrilled and stilled the enemies of primary reform, told why he refused to concur in the substitute offered by the committee on elections. The ammunition was all with the friends of the Colby bill, but the strength was with the opposition. Before the vote was taken the enemies of the bill had ceased to defend themselves against the unflinching assault and sat stolidly back in their chairs conscious of their power in numbers, if not in debate. The vote on concurring in the substitute resulted as follows:

For—Baird, Cannon, Curtis, Doherty, Glasgow, Glazier, Goodell, Jones, Kelly, Latham, Moffat, Moriarty, Sovereign, Sleeper, Smith, Van Alken, Vaughn, Waterbury, Westover, Woodman and Fuller—21.
Against—Barnes, Burns, Cook, Farr, Lockaby, Scripps, Scullen, Simons, Weeks—9.

Brown and Bangham were not present.

The substitute was made the special order for Tuesday, May 12, at 3 p. m.

It is nip and tuck with the opposition in the upper house whether they will be able to have their own way or not. At least half a dozen senators who voted against the Colby bill will support a bill for the nomination of governor and members of the legislature by direct vote.

Adjournment in Sight.

This action taken by the senate at least brings the date of adjournment in sight. The important measures of the house are almost cleaned up and business could be concluded in a day or two after the primary bills are out of the way.

The senate passed the bill raising salaries of Detroit justices of the peace from $2,000 to $2,500 a year each.

By a vote of 21 yeas to 6 nays the senate passed the bill to abolish the office of chief deputy game and fish warden, now held by Charles H. Brewster of Grand Rapids. The measure is now up to the governor.

The house Wednesday afternoon by 65 to 19 voted for the establishment of a new normal school in western Michigan. The bill has passed the senate, but was amended in the house to provide that the school must be erected on a site at least twenty acres in extent. The senate must concur in the amendment before the bill goes to the governor. The state board of education is to select the location, which several western Michigan towns are trying to get. The bill carries an appropriation of $37,000.

The house, in committee of the whole, agreed to the Colby bill, providing for the choice of candidates for United States senator by a direct voting system. Colby says the bill will get at least 75 votes in the house on third reading.

Combine Michigan Weather Stations.

Washington, May 7.—Secretary Wilson has approved a recommendation of Chief Moore of the weather bureau, to combine the government weather stations at Grand Haven and Lansing, Mich., into a large station to be located at Grand Rapids. The headquarters of the climate and crop reporting service of the state also has been established at Grand Rapids. Charles F. Snyder, who has been the section observer at Lansing, has been appointed in charge at Grand Rapids. The change is made in order to give better service to southwestern Michigan. Grand Haven will be continued as a storm signal display station for marine interests.

Both Given Heavy Sentences.

Detroit, Mich., May 7.—William Alford, charged with burglary of Fireman Yungkau's house and assaulting the fireman's wife, was found guilty in Judge Phelan's court Wednesday and sentenced to serve twenty years in the Detroit house of correction. Arthur Kratz, Alford's accomplice, was sentenced to serve eight years at Jackson.

Mechanical Milker Satisfactory.

The Elgin dairy report says, in speaking of the Lawrence-Kennedy milking machine, a New Zealand invention. "So far as the experience of users has gone the results are of such a satisfactory nature as to justify the belief that at length the mechanical milker has arrived."

returned in the absence of Roworth and demanded more liquor, which was refused on the ground that they already had enough. Declaring that they would take it themselves, they forced an entrance and Trombley seized some bottles of beer. Mrs. Roworth grabbed a gun and began beating the man with it. In the fracas the weapon was discharged, taking effect in Trombley's neck, a few scattering shots hitting Schindette. Mrs. Roworth gave herself up to the authorities at Unionville.

Old-Time Stocks in England.
A recent wish expressed by a magistrate at Stratford, England, that certain prisoners could be punished by confinement in the stocks recalls the fact that at some of those instruments of punishment still exist in that country. There is one at Havering-atte-Bower, not many miles from Stratford, and another is to be found on the village green of Aldbury. Near the church at Brant Pelham is a rather notable example. The upright post was used as a whipping post and still retains the iron by which the culprit was secured while receiving his castigation. Surry, near Canterbury, has also preserved its stocks.

Material for "Hot Stuff."
A voracious chronicler of the times of Jonathan Edwards gives figures which prove a liberal consumption of fuel in the household of the great theologian. In the winter of 1740-41 the town of Northampton supplied the Edwards paragon with seventy-five loads of wood; in the next season eighty-two loads were delivered; for the succeeding winter the total was seventy-eight, and a year afterward the astonishing quantity of ninety-five loads was supplied. There was no lack of fire at the Edwards hearth. Is it wonderful, then, that he preached burning sermons?

Jim Dumps had tried some time in vain to ease an after-dinner pain
Which gnawed at him his belt below,
And filled his world with indigo.
Dyspepsia now can't bother him,
For "Force" has made him "Sunny Jim."

Make Your Money Buy Better Clothes, Mr. Man

Don't be satisfied with the ordinary sorts such as you have known in bygone days—insist upon having and get clothes that are the equal in every way of those a tailor would build to your measure.

Such clothes are possible—it's just the kind that bears the Traver label.

Took time, and lots of figuring and mighty careful inspections on our part to be able to assure you this goodness, but we accomplished it.

Black and blue Serges and fancy Cheviots of fine quality and all properly shrunk. Fast colors—money back for any that fade. Full of good tailoring, especially in the points that are not visible but count most, and finely finished into a lasting good shape. Single breasted Sack styles—none newer.

The Record is in receipt of a copy of the "anniversary edition" by which the Rochester Era celebrated its thirtieth birthday. The number, enclosed in handsome green covers and printed on fine book paper, was certainly a "beaut."

J. J. Hornbarger of Manistique is to be the new superintendent of the Northville schools. All the other teachers have been tendered a re-engagement by the school board, except Miss Knight, who has resigned her position, which has yet to be filled.

Are you observant? Are you a good guesser? If so, you will be right in it at the social at the Baptist parsonage this evening. If not, you can have a fine chance to practice in both those desirable accomplishments and have an enjoyable sociable visit besides, for the small outlay of ten cents.

Dr. G. W. MacKinnon of Oxford, who was acquitted in the Oakland county circuit court last week of the charge of manslaughter in connection with the death of Mrs. Sadie England, was formerly a resident of this place and has relatives here. He received an ovation on his return to Oxford after his acquittal.

The epidemic of rabies that seems to be all the time increasing throughout the state keeps getting nearer and nearer to this section, but Northville has not yet fallen into line and ordered the muzzling of all canines allowed to run at large. A muzzling of prevention is worth a whole lot of post-mortem treatment—and much cheaper.

The mothers' meeting held Tuesday afternoon at Mrs. Thresher's by the W. C. T. U. was very successful and pleasant, forty or more being present. The program was especially fine throughout. Everyone enjoyed the helpful talk by Mrs. Andrus, district president, and the question box was ably conducted. Dainty refreshments were served, Mrs. Thresher proving a charming hostess.

Members of the board of managers of the ladies' library association are warmly praising the King's Daughters for the tidy condition in which the latter left the library rooms after the supper last week. All traces of the least were removed in the neatest possible manner and the rooms made exquisitely neat. In very strong contrast with their state as sometimes left by those using them.

A number of Rev. W. S. Jerome's friends perpetrated a surprise on him last Saturday evening—and incidentally one on themselves—by taking possession of the parsonage to celebrate his birthday. Everything was very enjoyable for the involuntary hosts and voluntary visitors except the fact that it wasn't the "victim's" birthday, that anniversary occurring a couple of weeks later on. Better early than never.

For several seasons past the convenient access from Northville to Detroit and the beautiful and healthful location of the village have been attracting the attention of the city people to Northville as a desirable place of residence. A good many families already live there whose male members work in Detroit and this spring the demand for desirable dwellings is already greater than the visible supply.—Detroit Free Press.

The Record's society editor is feeling very sad on account of having been accused of "rather overdoing" the story of an evening call and its results last week. The S. I. thought the story was thoroughly gone and well reasoned, but had no idea that it would be considered a "hoax" and an "overdone one" at that. Unfortunately the shorthand report of the interview in which this information was obtained has been destroyed or we would hasten to rectify the error by giving the account.

Letters for the following persons are advertised at the postoffice this week:

At the business meeting of the Epworth League Tuesday evening, the pastor was engaged to give his lecture on "From Rim to Rim." This address describes a vacation trip he once took in mid-winter from Lake Superior's shore to the Gulf of Mexico, changing in a few hours from snow banks to snow balls. It also depicts New Orleans life, the old Creole section, the Mardi Gras festivities, the famous New Orleans cemeteries, the cotton market, quaint costumes and manners, the levee. This was given to a $40 house in L'Anse, and afterward in other northern towns, eliciting commendation everywhere. The date set is Tuesday evening, May 19th. Admission, 10 cents. Children accompanying parents, under eight years of age free.

Derrick Broke—Two Men Killed. Pittsburg, May 6.—By the breaking of a derrick boom at the southern end of the Mount Washington tunnel of the Washash road Tuesday afternoon two men were killed and two others fatally hurt. The dead are John Vallerio, aged 25 years, an Italian; Robert Byers, colored, aged 27. The injured are: Antonio Merdo, aged 34; I. Petros, aged 40 years. The derrick was lifting a huge tub of cement when the derrick boom broke and the tub fell on Vallerio and Byers, killing them instantly. A piece of the boom then struck the other men, injuring them.

"Aida and Martha" the First Week of Grand Opera in Detroit.

An attractive feature of the first week of Grand Opera in English by the Castle Square company at the Detroit Opera House beginning Monday night is found in the announcement that the two great sopranos of the organization, Adelaide Norwood and Gertrude Kenyon, who made so many friends during last year's opera festival, are to alternate in the title roles of Verdi's "Aida" and Flotow's "Martha." A stronger bill for the opening night could not have been arranged than that which includes Miss Norwood as Aida, the beautiful Ethiopian slave girl; Marion Ivel, the great contralto as the Egyptian princess, Amneris; Joseph Sheehan, America's greatest tenor, as the Egyptian warrior, Rhadames, and Winifred Goff as the captive Ethiopian, Amonasro. Francis J. Boyle's powerful basso will be heard in the role of the Memphis Priest and Parker Coombs will be the Egyptian King. This thrilling opera of romance and war, intrigue and mystery, written by the great Italian master for the Suez canal dedication in 1872 and witnessed by the crowned heads of Europe, has not been heard in Detroit during the present generation, principally because no opera organization carrying the necessary scenery and having the required singers has been seen in Detroit in that time. The "Aida production" is one of the most ambitious in the Castle Square repertory and promises a great treat for all music lovers.

The cast for "Martha" is equally important, for in this on Tuesday night will be heard Miss Kenyon as "Martha" and Ethel Houston DuFre as Nancy. Lloyd D'Aubigne one of the new tenors will be the Lionel, Mr. Goff the Plunkett and Francis Carrier and Sir Tristan. "Martha" will be repeated on Wednesday and Friday evenings and at the Saturday matinee and on Thursday and Saturday evenings.

From present indications the opening week is to be one of the most popular of the three weeks' season. The advance sale is the heaviest of any at the Detroit this year.

Uric Acid Makes Rheumatic Pains Without Regard to Station.

It is very democratic—Rheumatism has no respect of persons. It attacks old and young, rich and poor.

Uric acid in the blood causes all of the trouble, and until it is removed rheumatic pains will continue. As it continues and increases more or less disability will follow. We can remove the uric acid with Athlophoros, and can tell you how to keep your system free from it after you are cured.

Immediate improvement will be seen with Athlophoros. It goes directly to the seat of the trouble and dissipates the cause. You will note better circulation, greater appetite, freer bowels and a generally better feeling.

Uric acid is responsible for more physical disorders and creates more complications than most people think. You will find that your general health will be better if you can once get it out of your system. Athlophoros will do it, and one bottle will show marked improvement. It won't cost much to prove it, and we know you will be benefited. If your druggist doesn't sell it send $1 to The Athlophoros Co., New Haven, Conn.

Vindicating Spinsterhood.

To laugh at spinsterhood nowadays is to display ignorance of women, and assuredly the very last way in the world to persuade her into matrimony. It is tolerably clear that when a woman wants to marry she generally manages to achieve her object. When she prefers a "bachelor" life it may be taken as equally certain that she is best securing her own happiness and probably that of others.—Lady's Pictorial.

THE DANGER OF PNEUMONIA

Dread Disease is Declared to be Highly Contagious.

We wonder if the fact that patients and their friends ignore the contagiousness of pneumonia is often due to professional negligence, says American Medicine. An exaggerated conception of the contagiousness of tuberculosis is held by the lay world, but pneumonia is, of course, far more contagious. And patients and profession alike have not realized the new fact that the mortality of pneumonia is in some cities and parts of the country higher than that of tuberculosis.

Pneumonia is a highly contagious disease, the cause of which is a micro-organism in the sputa of those suffering from the malady, and contracted by inhaling this germ. Therefore, the same care should be taken to collect and destroy the sputa that is taken in pulmonary tuberculosis or in influenza or influenza.

BUDS AND FLOWERS OF HOME LIFE.

Paine's Celery Compound Makes and Keeps the Children Well and Strong.

Mothers Make It the Home Medicine For the Little Ones.

The children, God bless them, are the buds and flowers of our homes. Without their prattle and hearty laughter, our homes would be desolate. They should ever be carefully tended in childhood and youth, if we expect them to ripen into perfect men and women.

In the home and at school, the children have their times of ill health and suffering. We often note the pallid and bloodless cheeks, heavy eyes, nervous movements, and twitchings of limbs and muscles. They complain of headache, drowsiness, weakness, dyspepsia, and indigestion. All such symptoms and ailments mean that the seeds of disease will have a fast and firm hold, unless proper measures are taken to restore a perfect condition of health.

Thousands of wise and prudent parents have made their children happy, healthy, and vigorous by giving them nature's best cure, Paine's Celery Compound. In many severe and complicated cases, Paine's Celery Compound has restored health when the little ones were given up by physicians.

If your dear ones are not as hearty, strong, and rugged as they should be, try the health giving virtues of Paine's Celery Compound. It makes and keeps the children well.

The SOUTHERNERS

By Cyrus Townsend Brady

Author of "Waves With the Ship," "Hobenzollern," "The Quiberon Trench," etc.

Copyright, 1903, by Cyrus Townsend Brady

She had rejected him, of course. She had heaped scorn and contempt upon him. Well, from her point of view he had deserved it. She had looked at him on the porch as if she could have killed him. Had her eyes been arrows he might have been slain, so hate-venomous had been their glance. Yet he remembered that when Darrow, inspired by her mordant words, had moved forward to strike him unhesitatingly she had blindly interfered. Why that?

He sat there still with his pen idle in his hand while his shipmates wrote. Should he write to her? Would she care? Would she read what he had written? If he were alive, no; if he were dead, yes, perhaps. Well, if he survived the action matters would be as they had been before, and if he fell she might come day care for a letter from his hand. He would write to her after all.

He drew a sheet of paper before him, lifted the pen again and found himself facing another question. What should he say to her? Should he explain, should he appeal, should he justify himself? Nay, to attempt these things would be useless. Thinking deeply, he resolved what he would do.

"Take," he wrote, "whatever may be your future; dear, the memory of an affection such as comes to few women. It can neither hurt nor harm you now. And remember—he could not avoid this one sentence of exculpation—"that if I had not been true to my duty, if I had not followed the path where honor led, the affection which I ask you not to forget would have been an insult, not an honor, to any honest woman. And I beg you again to forgive that one kiss on the porch. I have not forgotten it. It seemed to me at that moment that you almost loved me. The touch of your lips has abided with me. I shall take it into eternity. The mocking bird has never sung in my ear without bringing your picture, your cheek with the color coming, the rise and fall of your bosom, your eyes shining in the darkness and looking love into mine. The song reminds me of you, Mary Annan. Ah, well, is it named the 'Mocking Bird'! This is all. I would not tire you. This is only to ask you to remember; but, whether you do or not, it is nevertheless that on the eve of a great battle, with death looking me in the face, I have told you the truth only, but not all of it. No words can frame, no paper hold, that which is in my heart. Good night, goodby, and God bless you!"

It was a brief letter, but the most different woman could not have read it unmoved. It breathed a passion that would live, and the most heedless memory could not forget it.

There was something else to be done. There were others to whom his mind turned. His mother, his sweet-faced, soft-voiced young mother! His heart had many a time quivered at the recollection that she had pleaded for him on the porch. And so he wrote to her too. There were words for Pink and Willis, appeals that they would think of him kindly and try to understand his position. Indeed he had never forgotten Willis for the impulsive yet generous action which had prevented him from leaving home without a single friendly word. He loved the boy, a man now and supporting his flag on the mighty Tennessee. There was his father too. What did the stern, implacable old man think of him now?

War is a great dispeller of animosities of one kind. Or it may have been peculiar to this particular war that it beat down hatreds and men saw things more clearly in the mist and smoke of battle than in the sunlight of peace. He wondered if, from the ramparts of Fort Morgan, his father had watched the ships with a thought of him as often as he had looked at the fort from the deck of the Hartford. When he had rowed cautiously up the channel to reconnoiter the torpedo line a few nights since, he had almost felt impelled to turn his boat into the wharf back of the fort in the bay and run to the old man and beg, if not for forgiveness, for a kindly word of greeting.

He finished the letters, inclosing Mary Annan's in the one addressed to his mother, begging her to read and deliver it, and then he abandoned himself to his thoughts. Most of the other men in the wardroom had finished their letters by this time as well. Those who had completed the task sat silent for awhile, staring at the table, loath to speak. Finally Kimberly broke the silence.

"Here, fellows," he said, "this will never do! We'll go into action in a blue funk! We don't brace up. Somebody start up a song. Now, dash it all, Whiting!" he continued, as a young ensign started to sing "Home, Sweet Home," not that, not tonight anyway. Let us have "The Bay of Biscay, O!" Give us a regular old timer. That's right," he cried as the ensign's clear voice rose in the room. "Now men, all of you, come in in the chorus," beating time. "Heave away! That's it!"

They were glad of the relief afforded by the song, which seemed to shatter the gloom and gloom which hung over them. One song started another. Presently some one told a story, and a second capped it with another. The room was filled with laughter and merriment for an hour. Presently the black steward of the wardroom came in with fort, the boy on the Tennessee and our own messmate on the Hartford. Thank God; there is good fighting blood in all of them.

The little room rang with cheers as Peyton sprang up the companion ladder with a heart so full that he could scarcely contain himself. As Yates, happy to be relieved, came tumbling down below, Peyton, leaning over the rail, heard Kimberly give the immortal toast of the navy, "Sweet hearts and wives—may the former soon be the latter and the latter always be the former."

Floyd Peyton stood on the poop deck, leaning against the Purcell rifle, still staring at the fort. A step sounded on the deck beside him, breaking his reverie. He turned to meet the admiral. The old man walked with as jaunty a step as if he had been a boy.

"Asleep or dreaming, Mr. Peyton?" he asked, smiling.

"Neither, sir; just watching Fort Morgan."

"How peaceful it looks! And you were thinking of—"

"Of my father and brother, sir; of home and mother, and Mary Annan up the bay."

The night, the silence, the loneliness, made the young man more communicative. The admiral inspired confidence and welcomed it. He had known Peyton ever since the latter graduated from the academy, and the younger man loved him with unusual affection, which the admiral reciprocated in full.

"Ah, that's her name, is it?" said the old sailor, gently and kindly. "Well, pray God that we may come through safely, and that there will be no more heartaches in homes than is absolutely necessary." He laid his firm, well-shaped hand upon the young officer's shoulder in a kindly, sympathetic touch. "Keep a bright lookout, Peyton," he said at last, "and don't hesitate to call me if anything suspicious occurs. It would not surprise me if Buchanan came out with the ram to attack us at any moment. It would disappoint me dreadfully if he did, though. I want to catch him inside how that we are ready, and finish up the whole job at one blow. Where's the ensign of the watch?"

"Forward, sir."

"When I was on the Essex, I remember, as a midshipman, just turned eleven years of age, I went to sleep lying on a gun carriage in a midwatch one night. The watch officer saw me, and instead of waking me up he actually covered me over with his jacket and let me sleep on," said the admiral remissively. "I ought to have been courteous to him, but I've always been grateful to him, and I've never forgotten his reprimand either."

"No one on watch will sleep tonight, admiral."

"No, I suppose not. There are thoughts grim enough to keep them awake now. How's the wind?"

"Little enough, sir; but what there is is from the southwest."

"That is where we want it. Looks black over there too."

"Yes, sir; I think we shall get another squall of rain."

"Well, rain or shine, we go in with the flood in the morning. I think I shall turn in now, and as soon as your watch is over do try to get a little sleep. Remember that I, that we, that the country, needs the best there is in you tomorrow."

CHAPTER XXXI.

BETTER IN THE MORNING.

A FEW days before the battle the Ivanhoe, a blockade runner, had been chased ashore under the guns of Fort Morgan, where she had been destroyed by some of the light draft gunboats of the fleet. While with a party of men from the fort, endeavoring to save some of her cargo, Beverly Annan had been struck in the abdomen by a piece of a shell. The wound was necessarily fatal. Mary Annan had been at once summoned from Mobile by telegraph and had come down to the fort on a tugboat, with Dr. Bampney and Hamilton Pleasants, now a colonel on General Maury's staff. Tempe was not allowed to come, but had remained at Annandale under the care of Mrs. Peyton and Pink.

Oh, the cruel, cruel war! It had robbed her of father and of the man who loved her; it had parted her from the man she loved, and now its ensanguined hands were reaching out to take from her the last who could transmit her honored name. And he was only a boy, a child. She might have been spared this, surely. Her eyes blurred so with tears that she could not see, yet there was a thought in all her anguish—she bated herself for its lodgment in her mind—that with every passing hour she was drawing nearer to Peyton!

As they swept past the three Confederate gunboats they saw beyond them, between them and the channel, the great, ironclad Tennessee rising above the gently tossing water like some black volcanic rock, stern, sinister, menacing, impregnable. The light smoke that curled around the top of the tall stack indicated that she had steam up, and the absence of the usual deck gear would have told a practiced eye that she was stripped for action. They passed close to her, so close that Willis Peyton on the superstructure recognized Mary Annan and her escorts and lifted and waved his cap, wondering the while what had brought them down there.

They were very near the fort now. Presently they drew up at the landing, and a few minutes' toilsome walking over the shifting sands there brought them to the cavernous mouth of the Sally port. Challenged there, they waited until the officer of the guard appeared and, recognizing them, conducted them into the fort and thence into the brick citadel proper. There General Peyton himself met them. He looked much as he had before the war—a little older, a little whiter, a little grimmer, that was all.

There was nothing but kindness in his face now, however. He had always loved Mary Annan. She had been almost like a daughter to him. Now that her own father had gone he felt like a father to her. Indeed he had hoped that he might be in that position to her some day before his boy turned his back upon the south and broke his father's heart. Ah, many a day had the old man mounted the rampart and stared at the ships, thinking of that lad who had gone away! General Peyton had loved Beverly Annan, too, for his father's and sister's sake as well as for his own, and it had grieved him sorely that the bright-faced, proud-hearted young lad should be stricken down.

"How is he?" cried the girl as soon as she saw the general.

The old man shook his head mournfully.

"Is there to chance, no hope?"

"My dear," he said, taking her hand in both his hands, "you are a soldier's sweetheart!"—she winced at that—"and you are a soldier's sister. You must bear it! The poor boy! He is giving his all for the south and that flag," he added, lifting his hat as he looked up at the tall staff with the white starred blue St. Andrew's cross stretched over its red rippling folds.

"Yes, yes," said the girl; "the war is taking everything from me—everything! But where is he?"

"In the casemate out yonder," answered the general. "We have fitted it up as a hospital. Colonel Pleasants and Dr. Bampney, after you have seen him I wish you would come over to my quarters. I want you to stay with me until—"

He stopped suddenly with a significant pause which cut the girl to the heart.

"We have no spare room in the fort to speak of," continued the old man quickly, smiling a little, "but we can fix up a shakedown for you."

"Thank you, general, anything will do for me," said Pleasants. "I am an old campaigner, you know."

"Although I am not a campaigner," said Dr. Bampney, "I am old enough for anything to do for me too. We'll be with you presently."

The casemate was not an unpleasant place. The low arches that sprang almost from the floor had been freshly whitewashed. It was all neat and clean, and the sunlight poured in through the open door. There were half a dozen cots in it. Over in one corner lay a sick soldier. The others were unoccupied save for the one occupied by Beverly Annan. The surgeon, just then coming on his rounds, stood by the foot of the bed. A tall, gaunt artilleryman sat at the head fanning the patient. The boy lay with his eyes closed, his head thrown back, motionless; a low moan broke from his lips from time to time. He was as white as death and broken with suffering.

Mary Annan and the two men walked softly over to the bed. Smoothing the hair on her throat and seemed to cheer her as she looked down at her little brother. He had been so light, so handsome, so full of spirits, and now it was all come to this. Of all the men in that garrison her boy, her boy alone, had been snatched down the lad who should have been at play at school. Now he would never play again. The impartial tokens of war and death had been laid upon him.

As she leaned over the cot in spite of herself a sob broke from her lips. The sufferer heard it and opened his eyes.

"Sister Mary," he whispered, stifling a low moan like the brave little soldier he was, "don't cry. It doesn't hurt so very much, does it, doctor? And he says—he says—I will be better—the boy bit his lip as a paroxysm of pain shook his body, to keep from crying out—better in the morning. Won't—doctor?"

"Yes, my boy," said the physician, biting his own lip in turn, "I hope so. I think so. I am sure of it."

"Who is that with you? I can't see very well, Sister Mary."

"It's Colonel Pleasants and Dr. Bampney."

"Gentlemen," said the lad—and what a gentleman he was himself, the two men thought—"I'm glad to see you. You will excuse me for not getting up? It was good of you to come down here to see me. Where is father, Mary?" he said suddenly, with a little bewildered stare. "I—I want him. Why doesn't he come too?"

The girl looked at the two men in hopeless agony. The old clergyman knelt down by the boy's bedside and took his hand in both his own.

"You will have your father in the morning, my son," he said softly, understanding, as they all did, the doctor's meaning.

"Is that you, Dr. Bampney? Father—I will see him—in the morning. Our Father—that is what you taught me—when I was a boy—in your Sunday school."

"Yes, my lad," said the old man. "Our Father."

"Say it, doctor."

The two voices, the old one leading, the other feebly following, softly uttered the eternal prayer. Pleasants covered his face with his hands. The sick soldier in the corner lifted himself upon his elbow and listened, the artilleryman rose and gave place to the woman and considerably left the casemate, and poor Mary Annan knelt, too, and buried her head in the bedclothes by her brother's side.

"That's a good prayer, doctor," said the boy after a long silence. "Oh, how this hurts me! But—I will be better—soon. Won't it?"

"Yes, my boy, better soon."

"I must bear it—too—mustn't I—because I am a soldier—a man—an Annan—bear it—for the honor of the south—for the cause—I love? Don't cry, Sister Mary! It will be all right in the morning."

He lifted his hand weakly and dropped it on her bowed head.

"Annan," said the doctor, coming into the room, "here is the general coming to see you."

"Beverly, my boy," said Colonel Peyton, looking down at him gravely and tenderly—it might have been his own son he looked upon—"how do you feel now?"

"Much the same, sir," said the boy, making a pitiful effort to salute. "It's a great honor for the general to come—visit a private, sir."

There was that in that room that leveled all distinctions of rank.

"We are not general and private now, lad. You are just the son of my dear old friend. I have come to say good—" the general hesitated a moment, "good night to you."

"I am glad—it isn't good—by, sir—I don't want to die now. I want to live and do more for the south. If I'd only got my wound—in battle, when I was doing something."

"Never mind, my boy," said the old man, "you are wounded under your flag, in the service of your country. Nothing could be more noble."

"Thank you, sir. Oh, doctor—can't you give me something so that I can get a little sleep? It hurts so. And—it hurts Sister Mary—to see me suffer."

"I will give you something," said the doctor, turning away, "and perhaps you can sleep."

"Good night, general."

The old general went to the head of the bed, hesitated a moment, stooped down and pressed his lips upon the boy's brow.

"Good night, my boy, and God bless you."

Followed by Pleasants, he walked slowly and sadly through the door and stood outside the casemate listening.

"Now, Annan," said the doctor, coming back, "drink this, and then perhaps you can get a little sleep."

"You will stay with me, Sister Mary? And you, too, Dr. Bampney?" said the boy, as he quaffed the drink.

"We will not leave you," said the clergyman quietly.

"Never again," said Mary brokenly. "You can't say that—Sister Mary. Because—when I am well—I must go on duty—once more."

"Yes, when you are well."

"Sister Mary," said the boy, after a little pause, "won't you sing me something?"

She did not think she could frame a note with her sinking heart, yet what could she do?

"What do you wish me to sing, Beverly, dear?"

"Sing me some of the songs—you used to sing."

"Which one?"

"The 'Mocking Bird.'"

God, who had given her the voice, gave her the power to use it. How she did it she could not tell. Kneeling there by the bed, she sang the old song, the song that brought up the days of the past, the song of the man who had loved her and was gone—who had died on the hills of Chickamauga—and the other man she loved on the ship beneath the alien flag. It brought back days of happiness and hours of joy, sweet dreams of the past. Low and clear and sweet as the notes of the bird the song rose in the air. Outside the casemate the two officers listened. The sentry on the ramparts stopped entranced. The men of the garrison, led by the artilleryman, crowded nearer, listening with beating hearts.

Hats were removed from heads, and heads were bowed as the music rose and fell. As the last note died away the trumpet from the ramparts sounded, retreat call and the colors came drooping gently down the staff.

Within the casemate all was silent. "That's a good song," said Beverly faintly at last. "It almost makes me forget the pain—sing more."

"A hymn this time, Beverly."

"Yes, this time—a hymn."

"What shall it be?"

"My Faith Looks Up to Thee."

That's a good—hymn—doctor—for a soldier."

"Yes, it's a good one for anybody, Beverly."

There are harder things than fighting battles—things that women have to do. To sing that hymn, to keep the throat clear and the heart down, to sing in the face of death itself, with anguish gnawing at the soul to lead a charge, to die on a field, were child's play by it. The boy listened with closed eyes and compressed lips. The woman sang with every fiber in her being vibrating with pain and grief, with despair accompanying the notes, yet she never stopped nor faltered, her voice never broke. Honor and duty bade her sing, and she inflexibly followed their behests.

Rich and full rose the rare contralto voice with its deep note of passion. Mary Annan had never sung so well before, and she would never sing so well again perhaps. The words and music of the mighty hymn rolled through the casemate and out through the circle of the fort where the officers at their wetted, listened in twilight.

"When ends his transient dream—When ends his old soldier's dream—Shall o'er me roll—Faint Saviour! then in love—Fear and distrust remove—Oh, bear me safe above—A ransomed soul!"

How still he lay, she thought as she looked down upon him—how very still! Was it over? Had so ended life's transient dream for him? Not yet. O pitiful God; not yet! She lifted her hand to her throat. No; he was speaking!

"Thank you," he murmured, rousing himself a little. "I won't ask you to sing any more—Sister Mary. You must be tired."

"I will sing more if you want me to, brother."

"No; I'm going to sleep now," he gasped out. "Do you remember how mother—used to have us—kneel—at her—knees every night? I haven't forgotten—that prayer. I always say it. We'll all say it, and then—I'll go to sleep and be better in the morning."

"Now I—lay—me—down—to—sleep. I pray—the Lord—"

The old doctor finished the prayer alone in the silence. The opiate doctor had given the boy had at last taken effect, and the sufferer, drifted out to sleep. He would be better in the morning.

Ah, how many sufferers have been cheered through long nights of pain by that sad, elusive hope—better in the morning!

A FARMER STRAIGHTENED OUT.

"A man living on a farm near here came in a short time ago completely doubled up with rheumatism. I handed him a bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm and told him to use it freely and if not satisfied after using it he need not pay a cent for it," says C. P. Rayser, of Pattons Mills, N. Y. "A few days later he walked into the store as straight as a string and handed me a dollar saying, 'give me another bottle of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. I want it in the house all the time, for it cured me.'" For sale by Geo. C. Hueston.

LIVED ON 15 CENTS A DAY.

New York Family Had Problem of Existence Down Fine.

In New York Annie Jansen, a Swede, and her two children, abandoned by the father, have been living on fifteen cents a day for five years. They had beer, too. Of her bill of fare she says:

"I buy a quart of soup-beans for six cents, a four-cent loaf of bread and five cents for beer. I make the bread last two days and manage to buy a few onions which we eat raw or make into soup. Pepper and salt can be had for a few pennies. I tried oatmeal as a substitute for beans but found it was not near as filling. By meals we had: Breakfast, sliced onions and bread; luncheon, beer, bean soup, boiled onions, bread; dinner, onion soup, boiled beans, bread, beer." The mother and children were not famished-looking over the frugal spread for so long a time.
