PREPARING FOR RAINY WEATHER

STATE FAIR PEOPLE DOING IT THIS YEAR.

Promise Good for Better Attrac- tions Than Ever Before.

The executive committee of the State Fair association has already commenced business. Last week the fair grounds were thoroughly inspected from end to end and every building carefully gone over. Despite the fact that the state society spent several thousand dollars last year they decided to go on with the improvements again this year. It was decided to build under walls, do some grading and make provision for another wet week, in case the fair should encounter one this year, and if it again rains all the week the fair people will be prepared for it.

Last year but two nurseries made exhibits. Mr. Jacobs has charge of the privileges this year and all the nurseries desiring to exhibit will be taken care of and the indications are they will make big exhibits.

H. E. Carle, head of the good roads movement in Michigan, has been engaged to be at the fair and build a section of stone road. Mr. Carle was here last year but the rain prevented the carrying out of his part of the program. The stone road will be started at the big gates and will extend on into the grounds.

The premium list is now all disposed of, the $5,000 special premiums in Michigan live stock being retained the same as during the past two years with the exception that several more premiums have been added. A class for coach teams and one for teams suitable for the departments has also been added.

Secretary Butterfield has already begun the work of booking special attractions for the fair and he states that the specials will be in every way equal or perhaps ahead of those of past years. One feature of the race track will be the farmers' race. Contestants are obliged to hitch their horses to a four wheeled rig on the track walk a mile and then trot or pace a mile. Entries to this race promise to be very numerous. The first prize will be a handsome harness, the second a Galloway robe and the third a pair of blankets.

It is stated that the United Railway will build the loop track across Thorpe street this year and thus afford the transportation facilities required.

Jurors' Excursion.

The annual Wayne county jurors' excursion will take place June 22. It will be the usual good time to the "Flats." All jurors and ex-jurors and their friends are invited. Notify J. W. Loughheed, register of deeds office, Detroit, you intend to go.

Teachers' Examinations for Wayne County 1903.

Teachers' examinations for Wayne county will be held at the Wayne County Building, 1315 1/2 Room, as follows:

Third Thursday of June.
Third Thursday of August.
Third Thursday of October.

Co. Bd. of School Examiners.

EIGHT DAY INSTITUTE.

Pontiac Will Have One in August 3 to 12.

County Commissioner of Schools Elliot of Oakland county is already making arrangements for the eight day institute which will be held in Pontiac for Oakland county teachers from August 3 to 12 inclusive. This institute will be conducted along the most modern lines and will be followed by a general examination of applicants for all grades of certificates. Mr. Elliott is making great preparations and expects it to be a big success.

COMMENCEMENT TIME IS HERE.

EIGHTH GRADE EXERCISES NEXT WEEK.

Baccalaureate Sunday Evening Commencement on Tuesday.

The Record Printery has issued some unique and very handsome invitations for the graduating class of 1903, Northville high school, whose members are Misses Charlotte Farrell, Shible Tibbitt and Lillian Angell, and Messrs Raymond Holcomb and Edwin Perrin.

The baccalaureate sermon is to be preached by Rev. O. M. Fletcher this year, and will be given in the Methodist church Sunday evening.

The graduating class is taking a new departure this year, and holds both class day and commencement exercises. The first will take place in the Methodist church on Tuesday evening of next week and the latter on Wednesday evening, when Hon. H. R. Fattengill will deliver an address on "Our Inheritance." The Junior class will tender the usual reception to the Seniors Thursday evening in Princess rink.

The Eighth grade exercises, which always excite nearly as much interest among Northville people as those of the high school, are to be given in the Presbyterian church on Friday evening of next week.

There Are Others.

A Northville citizen, who last fall might have realized a fair profit for his bunch of onions, of which he had 200 bushels, recently drew the entire lot into a field and there spread them to fertilize the soil. As the balm from the Northville bouquet bears in on the nostrils of the U. S. court for the western district of Michigan, he is presumed to take an inspiring snuff and congratulate himself as not the only bulb speculator who held for a "raise" and raised only a smell.—Detroit Tribune

Document Not Authentic.

A Baltimore man claims to have the original death warrant of Charles I. of England. It is written on thin parchment, but has the misfortune to be dated Jan. 24, 1638, while Charles I. was not beheaded until Jan. 30, 1649.

MILFORD'S GALA DAY

All Roads Will Lead There Next Wednesday.

Next week Wednesday, June 17, Milford is to inaugurate the Gala Day season of 1903 by a big affair in that line which will be a hard pace maker for those which may come after. Three bands, one of them the famous "Hobo band" will furnish the music and a lady aeronaut, Mlle. Louise Gaston, is to make two balloon ascensions with parachute drop accompaniment. Then there are also all kinds of the regulation games and sports, including water battles and horse races, an out of door moving picture exhibition, Pillsbury's Plantation show company and other attractions too numerous to specify. And besides it's all free gratis to the spectators.

Try a 15 cent liner in the Record—they bring results.

Lee McCollister of Detroit performed the ceremony in the presence of about one hundred guests. # GRAUSTARK

We have a good one for our readers now—GRAUSTARK, THE STORY OF A LOVE BEHIND A THRONE, BY GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON.

¶ Marie Bankhead Owen, reviewing the story in the Bookworm, says: A practical bookman has just said, "no book since Trilby has taken so great a hold on the popular fancy as Graustark."

¶ Being a story of love behind a throne, it teems with scenes of adventure and impassioned romance.

¶ The author, George Barr McCutcheon, himself an American, has given the reader a noble example of an ideal American as hero.

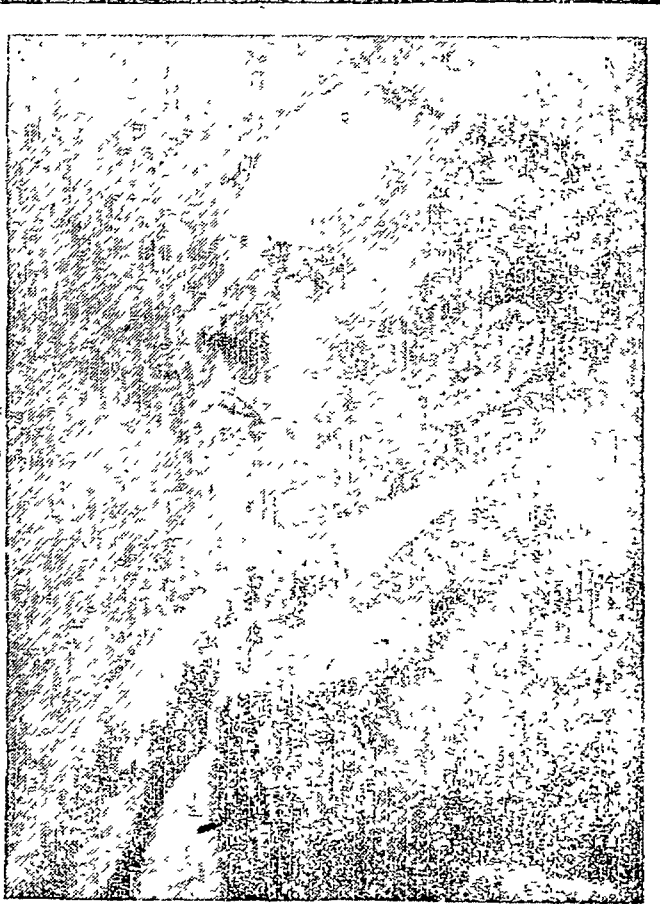

¶ The plot is thrilling and well sustained, the story being told in vivid, terse English.

¶ The motive of the story is the love of a man and a woman, and what that love emboldens them to venture, to dare, to renounce, to endure!

¶ It is beyond the province of the reviewer to reduce the plot of a masterpiece of fiction to a compressed summary of the story. A zealous story reader delights in the discovery of what happened next as well as to revel in the style and the literary atmosphere.

¶ I would as soon be given a glass of skimmed milk or a squeezed lemon as a book of fiction accompanied with a synopsis of its contents. Graustark I leave therefore to the pleasure of the prospective reader.

The story will begin in a few days, and we believe you will thoroughly enjoy it. Of one thing we are sure—a more thrilling romance you have never read.

GEORGE BARR McCUTCHEON

—Author of "Graustark," Our Next Serial Story

Never since Anthony Hope's "Prisoner of Zenda" romanticized romantic literature has a story appeared so replete in blended love and episode, so thrilling and at the same time so tender in its heart passages as Graustark.—NEW YORK WORLD

ADJOURNMENT NEAR

Session of the Legislature Will Come to a Final End on Thursday Next.

PRIMARY ELECTION IMBROGLIO

Little Hope for the Enactment of Any Kind of a Law—Bunder Twine Plant Bill

Session, June 9.—By the time this letter is read the present session of the Michigan legislature, so far as the transaction of business is concerned, will be at an end. The two houses, after a number of sporadic attempts to get together, finally decided late last week to cease doing business at high noon tomorrow and bring the session to a final end next week Thursday. The interval is allowed for closing up the business done during the rush incident to the last hours of the active session, preparing and printing bills for presentation to the governor, and clearing the clerks' desks generally.

The house would not agree to any proposition providing for adjournment until it was fully satisfied that there was positively no hope of securing the passage of a significant primary election bill. After the failure of the conference committee to agree on a bill, and two or three other various schemes were discussed with a view to framing a bill, it was decided to accept the two weeks but all to no purpose. The house sent a request to the senate for a conference committee but was not successful. The senate refused to accept the request that it was proposed that the senate should be asked to accept the purpose of the bill.

Upper House Forced to Act.—The withdrawal of the bill from the senate for the purpose of the lower house, which was the subject of the bill, was the subject of the bill. The senate was forced to act on the bill. The senate was forced to act on the bill. The senate was forced to act on the bill.

First Michigan.—The family of Judge Edward H. Hurd, who died Thursday afternoon with the grand jury, E. & M. in charge. The body will be taken to the court house. Here it will be placed in the case of the General County. A detail from the Grand Jury will stand guard for the three hours during which the body will lie in state. The remains will be taken to St. Paul's Episcopal church, where the services will be conducted by Rev. Mr. Mac Duff.

E. F. Johnson Honored.—Washington, June 10.—The president has appointed E. F. Johnson as associate justice of the supreme court of the Philippines to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Fletcher D. Wood. Mr. Johnson has been connected with the judiciary of the Philippines for the past five years and prior to his appointment was a member of the highest court of the Philippine Islands.

New Theory to Fire Mystery.—Battle Creek, Mich., June 10.—A new theory has been advanced in the battle creek fire mystery—that some one set the blaze after stealing one of the barrels of kerosene. There were 14 barrels in the store when the barnmaster retired and of these only one escaped. It should have been 13 barrels in the store but the police have made a mistake. Aged Editor Dead.—Grand Rapids, Mich., June 10.—Aaron B. Turner, former editor and proprietor of the old Grand Rapids Eagle, whose critical illness has been noted, died Tuesday, aged 81 years. The immediate cause of death was a stroke of apoplexy. He had been several weeks ago, in which he sustained a fractured hip. The funeral arrangements have not been announced.

Aroused Storm of Criticism.—Ypsilanti, Mich., June 10.—The statement by the Ypsilanti board of trustees that the business men of the city at the Presbyterian church to be a man race was once very low in intelligence, lower even than the rest, and that the bible only dates back 6,000 years, has aroused a storm of criticism and the class must close their discussion on evolution next Sunday.

ature, but the bill was passed nevertheless. It is believed to be the judgment of the legal department of the state that the provisions of the bill clearly violate the constitutional prohibition against the state taking any part in the work of future improvements. Doubtless an early test of this question will be made.

After a fight which lasted almost the entire session the bill amending the registration law, has passed and been signed by the governor. The new act amends the old law in several particulars but principally in that it requires every applicant for a license to practice medicine in Michigan to pass an examination before the state board of examiners. The fact that an applicant may have diplomas from a half dozen medical colleges will not save him from this examination. This feature of the bill was attacked with considerable vigor. Another important feature of the new law is one that provides for the revocation of the license of any doctor who resorts to questionable or more properly speak "suggestive" advertising.

State Prison Board.—After November next, the membership of the state prison board will be reduced and the pay of the members increased, the bill mentioned in my last letter having been passed by both houses. There is no doubt that it will have the governor's approval. It is believed that the new plan will result in more effective and painstaking investigation of applications for pardon.

Public officials throughout the state who are required by law to give bonds for the faithful performance of their duties will be interested in a bill now before the governor and which will probably become a law. It provides for the giving of surety companies' bonds and for the payment by the municipality interested of the premium charged for such bonds.

The people of the state will not have a chance to vote next year on the proposition to amend the constitution so as to provide for paying members of the legislature an official salary instead of per diem. The house passed the necessary resolution today. The annual salary of $750 but the senate cut this to $500 and then killed the measure on the 4th day. This fact has been a sore point of contention for the past ten years or more.

Supreme Court Membership.—The chief justice left for the north last week for the important bill which seeks to increase the membership of the supreme court from five to eight. The bill was introduced last week and was reported by the house. It was subsequently referred to the judiciary committee and the committee subsequently called upon the clerk of the court for a statement showing the number of cases pending in the court during the past year. This is doubtless desired for the purpose of showing whether or not the work of the court has increased during the past few years, since the membership of the court had been increased from four to five. The fact that the number of cases pending in the court during the past year was 1,000, and that the number of cases pending in the court during the past year was 1,000, is a fact which is of great importance.

In the Monogram Business.—Although the project to erect a monument and statue in honor of the state of Michigan, in the expense of $250,000, has been effectively killed by the legislature, the project to erect a monument in the state of Michigan, in the expense of $250,000, has been effectively killed by the legislature.

Interurban Electric Lines.—Hereafter the interurban electric lines will not be so thoroughly a law unto themselves as they have been in the past, the governor having signed the bill giving the commissioner of railroads police power over them.

While the failure of the binding time bill to become a law will eliminate a large item that threatened to find its way into the tax levies of this year and next, the appropriations of the present legislature will be quite heavy in the aggregate. That they are no heavier than the necessities of the state demands is no doubt true. Michigan is growing rapidly and the intelligent people of the commonwealth will understand that its expenditures will necessarily keep pace with its growth and development.

Hearing so many people praising Doan's Kidney Pills I decided to get her a box and procure them at Murdock Bros' drug store. I trusted that the remedy would do her some good, but I was not prepared for the great benefit which it soon brought. It was only a short time until the pain or aching went away. ## HIS LAST HOPE REALIZED.

(From the Sentinel, Gebo Mont.)

In the first opening of Oklahoma to settlers in 1889 the editor of this paper was among the many seekers after fortune who made the big race one fine day in April. During his traveling about and afterwards his camping upon his claim he encountered much bad water, which, together with the severe heat, gave him a very severe diarrhoea which it seemed almost impossible to check and a long time the case became to him a mystery to solve. One day one of his neighbors brought him one small bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and he tried it. A big dose was taken and he was told to repeat it in a few minutes. In great agony he did so and the effect was wonderful. The pain was soon relieved and within an hour the patient was taking his first solid sleep for a fortnight. "What one little bottle would do a complete cure and he cannot be but feel grateful. The reason for having it sooner being I had not met this time. For the sake of C. H. Hueston."

Where No Wheels Can Be Used.

In the whole of the Madeira Islands there are no wheeled vehicles, for the roads are too rough and mountainous. There are a few heavy sledges drawn by bullocks, but the favorite modes of locomotion are hammocks slung on poles and borne by natives and basket sledges. The latter are used for descending the mountains and are skillfully guided by a runner behind.

Paine's Celery Compound CURES RHEUMATISM.

Rheumatism, which does its terrible work in the muscles, joints, and tissues, is caused by uric acid which gathers in the blood. To get rid of this poisonous acid, which produces the irritations, pains, agonies, inflammations, and swellings peculiar to rheumatism, Paine's Celery Compound should be used without delay. No other medicine gives such prompt, cheering, and happy results. It is the only medicine that prevents a return of the dreaded disease. Paine's Celery Compound braces the nerves, the blood is quickly cleared of all irritating poisons, tissue and muscle are built up, and the digestive organs perfectly toned. Do not treat with indifference the slightest rheumatic symptoms; the early use of Paine's Celery Compound will save you weeks and months of suffering. Mr. S. D. Conway, St. Louis, Mo., was permanently cured by Paine's Celery Compound after repeated failures with other medicines and physicians; he says:—

"I am 64 years of age, and have lived in St. Louis 27 years, and all this time with the exception of three years, I have served in the Engineers' Department as Inspector. Last winter I contracted rheumatism and was laid up. I tried all remedies and doctors, but all failed until I struck Paine's Celery Compound, which has made a permanent cure in my case. I have recommended it to many, and they have used it with the same result."

CHAPTER XL.

HOW BOYD PEYTON CAME HOME AGAIN.

SWIFTLY up the bay sped the little steamer, the white flag at the fore, the stars and stripes aft. Silently under the awning sat two men by the stretcher on which Boyd Peyton lay, Willis and the assistant surgeon. Past the guard boats, past the obstructions, up to the wharf at the foot of Government street they came. Long since the news had spread that a boat flying the Union flag and under a flag of truce was coming up the bay. By the time the Loyal tied-up at the wharf a great crowd of people had assembled, mostly women and children and old men. At the wharf were several officers from General Maury's staff. Willis Peyton was the first man to step ashore. His face was white and haggard. He could hardly serve himself for the ordeal through which he was about to pass.

"My heavens, it's Willis Peyton!" cried a voice in the crowd. "You come from Fort Morgan, sir?" asked Colonel Craighead, General Maury's chief of staff.

"No, sir; from the Tennessee."

"And the battle?"

"The Union ships passed the forts, captured the Selma, sank the Gaines—"

"And the Tennessee?"

"Engaged, the Union fleet, single handed, after the passage and was captured after being battered into a helpless wreck."

"She surrendered, then?"

"Yes, sir."

"Why are you here, Mr. Peyton?"

"I am a prisoner of war on parole."

"And you came?"

"To bring the body of my brother home."

"You mean?"

"He was wounded on the Hartford."

"Is he dead?"

"No, sir, but soon will be. Admiral Farragut gave me permission to bring him home—to die."

While this colloquy had been carried on the blue-jackets on the launch, under the direction of the surgeon and the ensign who commanded her, had gently lifted the stretcher bearing the wounded man out on the wharf.

"Friends," said Willis Peyton, facing the crowd, "you hated my brother because in accordance with what he thought his duty he went north. He is dying now. Will some one help to carry him up the street to his home?"

"Let the traitor die where he lies!" broke forth a rude voice charged by some bitter heart.

"My men will carry him up under the flag, Mr. Peyton," said the ensign in command of the boat quickly.

"No, no!" burst from the crowd as one man or another pushed forward. "We will take him ourselves; southern hands for a southern sailor!"

The mordant words of the first speaker had arrested all that was good in the multitude.

"We have no love to spare for him or his cause," cried one, "but we have no animosity for a dying man. He has fallen in the line of his duty."

"He's of our people, though he fought against us," exclaimed a third.

"Fight!" cried another old man. "I knew him of old, and a braver, truer man does not—did not—live. And, as for you, sir," he added, turning to the man who had cursed and sworn, "if I hear any more remarks like that from you, old as I am, I will slap your mouth for you. I believe you are a Yankee anyway. Come, we will take him home."

"Tell me of the fort, sir," said Colonel Craighead as Willis motioned to the men who had volunteered to pick up the stretcher.

"It still stands and seems to have suffered but little from the bombardment. But," he whispered to the officer, "its fall is only a question of time."

Willis spoke a few words of thanks and a farewell to the surgeon and the ensign of the Loyal and watched them for a moment as they turned the prow of the boat to the southward and sped away to the fleet; then he took his place by the litter and directed the bearers to go on. The crowd opened before them as they carried it up the street. Here was the body of their enemy. More than one suspected that he might have piloted the fleet upon them, realizing his intimate knowledge of the harbor. They knew the family too well to doubt that he had fought bravely and well. The fact that he was there apparently dying was evidence that he had been in the thick of the battle. They had mocked and scorned him and hated him when he had chosen to leave them and remained true to his flag. His father had cast him off, the people had approved and honored the old man for his action, but the animosity was gone from their hearts now. Antisocialities vanished before that stretched out figure. Restless movements subsided. The sullen murmurs and mutterings died away, and a deep silence supervened. Hats were pulled from heads; awe fell over the multitude; women put their hands over their eyes.

A little company of home guards, ordered there to control any possible disturbance, was standing at the curb.

The officer in command hesitated a moment.

"By God," he said, "I'll do it!"

He faced about, uttered a command, and the company presented arms. The colors were dipped too. The stars and bars were lowered to valor, to manhood, to honor, to death, even though they had been exhibited upon the other side.

In silence and sorrow, with every military honor, Boyd Peyton had left his ship; in silence and in sorrow, with every military honor also, he came back to his home, the home of his childhood, the home of his enemies, the home of his mother.

CHAPTER XLII.

SAD HOUSE AT ANNANDALE.

IT was early in the morning of the day after the battle. The Morgan had successfully slipped past Farragut's fleet in the night and while it was yet dark had run alongside the St. Francis street wharf at Mobile. Her arrival had not been reported and no one but the sentry on guard was there to welcome the vessel. Mary Annan had stayed in the gunboat until daybreak at Colonel Pleasants' earnest request. The captain had given her his cabin and she had lain down during the passage, or at least after they had passed the Federal fleet, but she had been unable to sleep or take any rest.

Pleasants, who had gone on shore immediately, came back to the boat at sunrise with a conveyance for her and Dr. Baumpney and another one for the body of her brother. It was broad daylight when they drove up to the doorway at Annandale. Where before there had been troops of servants to welcome her or her guests, now she had to wait and ring the bell of her own home before the one or two faithful retainers crouching to her presented themselves.

The men, with the assistance of the drivers, carried the body of the little master of the ancient house into the great parlor and left it there. After seeing everything disposed properly, Mary Annan, bidding the clerical man and the officer to go into the sitting room to partake of such refreshments as the blockade permitted her housekeeper to offer them, turned to ascend the stairs. She had scarcely put her foot upon them when the door of the landing above them opened and a woman came out. It was Pink Peyton.

"Mary Annan!" she cried, and the next moment, discerning a tall figure behind her, she ran down the stairs with a scream of rapture and relief and fell into Pleasants' arms.

"Oh, thank God, thank God, you are safe!" she cried. "And my brother?"

Before Pleasants could answer Mrs. Peyton followed her daughter.

"General Peyton?" she cried.

"Well, madam?"

"His wound?"

"A trifle."

"God be praised!" ejaculated the woman brokenly. "The general is safe, and Willis!"

"And what of Boyd?" cried Mary Annan sharply, instantly suspicious of the pause.

"My poor child," said Mrs. Peyton, coming down the stairs and taking the girl by the hand.

"Oh, what is it? Have you news of him?"

"He is here, sister," cried Tempe, bursting upon them and clasping her sister in her arms. "He is here, in your room upstairs."

"Hush! Hush!" said old Dr. Baumpney, catching the child in his arms. "Don't you see how you alarm your sister?"

Indeed the shock of the news was almost too much for the woman. She divined instantly that Boyd Peyton would never be there in Mobile, in her house, unless something terrible had happened to him. Could it be that he was dead?

"How comes he here?" asked Mary Annan, leaning back against the wall.

"Willis brought him up yesterday under a flag of truce."

"Is he wounded?"

Mrs. Peyton bowed her head.

"Badly?"

"Oh, awfully, Sister Mary! Dr. Venosette says he will soon be dead, like brother," Tempe broke out again. "Did you bring poor brother back with you?" she asked, her little face filled with pain.

"Is it true?" whispered the girl, dis-regarding her little sister in her consuming anxiety.

"Yes, I fear so," said Mrs. Peyton, taking the girl in her arms. "Oh, Mary, dear, only God can save him!"

"Is he conscious?"

"No, he has not spoken since—since he was wounded."

"What is it?"

"A fracture of the skull and concussion of the brain. Dr. Venosette says that even if he recovers he might be—he might not—his mind—O God, O God!" wailed the older woman, and she looked old indeed now, "that this should come upon me! And we sent him away on the porch that day! His father drove him from us, and this is how he has come back to us! If he could only know that he is home again, that we love him once more and that we forgive him! If he could only know that no matter where he goes or what he does, he is my boy, my boy!"

CHAPTER XLII.

BOYD PEYTON SEES A VISION.

THE first thing of which Boyd Peyton was conscious was the song of a bird. The high, clear notes seemed to beat in upon him personally. They came to him apparently from afar off, from a great distance. They stole into his consciousness, through his dull and drowsy ear, with increasing vibration and volume. He wondered vaguely what it could be. The melody pleased him. Presently it burst upon him that the

"We were all wrong," said the girl brokenly. "We all drove him away—[as well as the rest, and I loved him too. I love him now—now that it is too late! May I see him? Take me to him."

There on the bed, her own bed, he lay. They had taken him to her room—that room with the window looking out toward the sunny south, where she had looked and watched—waited and listened, longed and hoped. She stood by his side dry eyed and desperate. This was the last blow that could have fallen upon her. She thought she had reached the sum of human endurance long since, but she knew now that fate had done its worst for her on that day and not before. Father, brother, lover—all gone, and now this one too!

The mocking bird sang in the great live oak outside the window. He did not hear. Stretching out her hands to him, she called him again and again. He did not hear. The long pent-up feelings of her bosom rushed to her lips at last. With every endearment that the deepest passion could dictate she appealed to him. He did not hear, he did not heed.

"The others stood about the bed." She did not care, if indeed, she were conscious of their presence, whether they heard or did not hear the words of her heart. But presently she became aware of a haggard figure standing next her. It was Willis Peyton.

"Oh, Willis," she cried, "You have nothing to reproach yourself with. You kissed him good-by with friendly words when we all turned against him."

"I fired the shot," cried the young man, "that struck him down!—My brother's blood is upon his hands! O God, he can't die; he can't!" he cried, in feverish anxiety and agitation.

"Hush!" said the girl. "Don't reproach yourself for that. We are all brethren. We are all guilty. You could not know. It was not your fault, but mine, and every other man's and woman's who cried for secession. Do you remember how in this very house that day at dinner I, we all, cried for war? We were mad, mad! And well have we been paid. Oh, the south, and the north and the east and the west, what are they to me? Secession, state rights, the Union? I'd give them all for him! Look at me just once, just for one moment! Say that you forgive me! I am guilty too. All are gone from me now. Let me have one—just this one! No, no, he cannot, he shall not, die! Dr. Venosette," she said, turning suddenly to the old man who had just entered the room, "is there no hope at all? Can't you do something? Is there nothing?"

"My dear child," said the old man, "he is in God's hands. All that my human skill and knowledge can do has been done. My colleagues who have seen him have pronounced his case hopeless. For myself, I think there is a little chance, but, well, I will tell you all. If he does recover, the probabilities are—that that his mind will be affected."

"I would rather see him dead than that."

"And I," added his mother.

"Oh, if he could only know that I love him; or, if I could only know that he cared before!"

"You may know, dear," said the older woman. "I found this left in his jacket. It was addressed to me, and this to you was inclosed in it."

"Give it to me," cried the girl, fairly snatching it from the hand of Mrs. Peyton.

"Oh," she cried as she tore open the envelope, a little flicker of light in her sad face as she read it rapidly. "I thank God for this mercy at least. He loves me, he loves me! Oh, Dr. Venosette, we will call him back! He shall speak again. His eyes shall open. And his mind, like his heart, will be true. God could not deny it to love like ours!"

sound came from the full throat of a mocking bird. A mocking bird! That recalled Mary Annan to him. He lay quiet and still, thinking vaguely of her. There was a strange indisposition to move in his mind as he thought of her. Fragments of ideas, bits of recollection, whirled about in his head. They began to assemble by degrees and take shape—her shape. He could see her at last—beautiful, winning, kind! He hesitated to open his eyes, fearing lest he should dupel the vision.

After awhile the song stopped, and the figure faded away. He opened his eyes and looked about him. He saw things dimly through a whirl of mist and motion. He could not recognize or localize objects, but he could perceive enough to know that this was not his berth or stateroom on the Hartford. He missed the heaving of the ship. The place was strangely motionless. Instead of the smell of tar and paint a delicious fragrance filled the room, a fragrance that, like the mocking bird, called up the days of the past, hours of youth and love and Mary Annan.

Where was he? Ah, it was a room. There before him, framed in white draperies, was an opening. Presently he made out a green mass of foliage beyond, a live oak, stirred by the gentle breeze. He was lying upon a bed, he discovered. Whose room could it be? What had happened? He remembered by and by the roar of the cannon, the beating throb of the mighty engines, the crash of timbers, the scream of shells. He had been on the Hartford—yes, that was it—with the great admiral. They were approaching the Tennessee. He had the lockstring of the forward pivot in his hand. He had pulled it. Then what had happened?

He thought deeply. At last he arrived at the conclusion that he had been wounded. Where had he been wounded? He felt a strange inability to move hand or foot, apparently, yet he seemed to feel that he possessed all his members. He happened to turn his eyes upward in his speculations, and the white line of a bandage showed dimly across his brow above them. What did that mean? A blow on the head, perhaps. Yes, that was it. He had been struck on the head.

What had they done to him? Where was he now? In a house somewhere on the shore, evidently. But whose house and where? It could not be Pen-sacola. It was not the hospital there; nor the fort. What could it be? Had the admiral—Ah, was it Mobile? Mobile and Mary Annan! What was that round? A footstep on the floor, a dark figure bent over him. He heard voices—surprise, relief, anxiety in their tones. They were saying something. He strove desperately to catch the meaning. It had been so long since he had heard and recognized a voice. What were they saying?

"His eyes are open. I believe he is conscious at last. Willis, call Dr. Venosette at once!"

He knew now. It was his mother's voice. And that other who had cried "Thank God" as he lay in the room was his brother.

"Mother," he whispered.

Another figure approached him, hung over him, swam into the field of his vision. Eyes that he had dreamed of looked love into his own, a voice that he could never forget called his name.

"Mary Annan," he whispered joyously, wonderingly, fearfully, and then faded away into insensibility again. The shock of her presence had caused him to lose consciousness once more.

Dr. Venosette speedily reassured the women by telling them that such things often happen, a concussion of the brain. Any sudden shock after consciousness had been restored was apt to throw the patient into unconsciousness again, but the recovery thereon would be speedy and sure unless the shock were too great.

For the first time the old doctor stated that unless complications ensued Peyton would get well, and better still, when he learned of that flash of recognition, he said that his mind would clear as well. Such a siege as the woman had gone through with him can scarcely be imagined. They had been sustained by that wonderful power which enables women to hear strains and fancies which would kill the strongest man out of hand. It was not until now, when the doctor had given them the first definite ray of hope, that they realized what they had gone through and how utterly worn out they were.

Summer had faded away into autumn and winter was fast approaching when Boyd Peyton was at last pronounced out of danger.

He be continued next week.
