

THE NORTHVILLE RECORD.

Vol. XXXV, No. 16

NORTHVILLE, MICH., FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1903

$1.00 Per Year in Advance

ROLLIN H. PURDY IS NO MORE

ONE OF NORTHVILLE'S FOREMOST BUSINESS MEN.

Laid to Rest in Rural Hill Tuesday
Afternoon

Although not unexpected, the death of Rollin H. Purdy, which occurred at midnight Saturday, was a shock to the people of Northville, many of whom had hoped against hope that he might recover from his long illness and once more take his accustomed place among them.

Mr. Purdy was a man whose every acquaintance was his friend and during his nineteen years' residence here had won the respect of all as a business man and the warm regard of the many who knew him in the more intimate relations of social life. He was born in Manchester, Vt., nearly thirty-eight years ago and was married in 1895 to Miss Ellen

ROLLIN H. PURDY.
And little 7-year-old Helen, who left an orphan by his death.

Maxwell, daughter of Judge Maxwell of Mt. Pleasant and who had been president of the Northville schools for some years. She died about three years ago, leaving one little daughter, Helen, now seven years old.

Besides the orphaned daughter, Mr. Purdy is survived by three sisters and two brothers, one of whom was his twin. All of them reside in Vermont.

All the business places of the village were closed during the funeral, which was held at the home Tuesday afternoon, the business men attending in a body. The services were conducted by his pastor, Rev. W. S. Jerome, of the Presbyterian church, of which Mr. Purdy was a worthy and valued member. He was laid to rest beside his wife in Rural Hill cemetery.

Among the profusion of beautiful flowers that completely covered the casket, one offering which was particularly noticeable was a magnificent sheaf of roses from the business men of Northville.

The Annual Catholic Banquet.

The banquet given by St. Mary's Catholic society in the town Tuesday night was, as expected, a thorough success. A large crowd was in attendance to partake of the sumptuous supper and to listen to the program, which was very enjoyable and was carried out substantially as our friend last week.

R. E. Fitness of Detroit was found to be the holder of the lucky ticket that drew the watch, O. B. Moore captured the handsome quilt and the rag doll to the lot of Mr. Hally. The society netted about $160 from the banquet besides the good time every body had.

Benton Not Candidate.

Supervisor Benton announces that owing to ill health he will not be a candidate for the Republican nomination for county auditor, to succeed Lawler Christy, next year.

Brown & Co.'s Last Trip.

Mr. Brown announces that his last trip of the year to the Northville gallery will be on the first day in December.

GREAT FOOT BALL GAME

Wolverines Played Here Saturday Afternoon.

The game played here Saturday afternoon between the local high school football team and the Wolverines of Detroit was one of the best ever witnessed in this village. The home team was victorious by a score of 5 to 0, but the Detroiters though outwitted by the locals by a considerable margin, put up a great game and had for an off-side play by Northville should have tied the score.

The Detroiters were a fine lot of mainly young fellows, with Harold Prunty as captain, and they won a host of friends by their gentlemanly play while here.

The boys were chaperoned by W. H. Southwick, manager of the Wetherbee Club in Detroit and W. P. Prunty, a student general superintendent of the Pere Marquette railway.

The line up was as follows:

Lycium Theater—Detroit.

Few plays have achieved such popularity as "The Palace of the King." Miss Isabelle Evesson fills the role formerly played by Miss Viola Allen. Mark Kent will have the character of Adonis, the deformed jester. Alfred Hollingsworth will be Don John, brother of the King, and the other characters will be presented by well known actors. It is forceful and interesting.

Whitney's Opera House—Detroit.

Typical scenes of New York seamy side of life are found in Langdon McCormick's "Hearts Adrift" to be at the Whitney theatre next week. The author has drawn his characters well and most of them from life after many years in active newspaper work in New York city, where most of the scenes of the play are located. At the end of the third act there is an enormous air ship—and as it rises majestically there is a situation which is about as thrilling as ever the most captious could wish for. Matinees daily except on Wednesday.

The Buying Opportunity of Your Life

Fittingly describes this Great Reorganization Sale. Its many saving advantages are so great that you cannot in justice to yourself afford to overlook them. Having known nothing like it you can't imagine unless you come and see for yourself what it really means to you.

We are not selling a few slow moving lines or manufacturers' left-overs—this is no ordinary everyday selling event—don't try to compare it with any other sale, that's an impossibility for when were you ever offered your choice of an entire stock such as ours—a stock of ever brought to Detroit at prices lower than similar merchandise was ever marked before.

The Finest CLOTHING, FURNISHINGS, HATS

The fact that we guarantee every article we sell assures satisfaction. And the fact that we've expected nothing save E. & W. collars and cuffs which we were not allowed to cut in price, assures satisfactory choosing.

This stock will be entirely disposed of—it must be gone to carry out the reorganization plans made when Mr. Bird purchased a half interest in this firm—every dollar's worth must be sold regardless of cost or former selling prices.

Selections are splendid—perhaps a little better than you'd expect.

222 South Peoria St.,
CHICAGO, ILL., Oct. 7, 1902.
Eight months ago I was so ill that I was compelled to lie on my back nearly all the time. My stomach was so weak and upset that I could keep nothing on it and I vomited frequently.

I longed so much that my throat and lungs were raw and sore. The doctors pronounced it Bright's disease and others said it was consumption.
It mattered little to me what they called it and I had no desire to live. A sister visited me

I had ever tried Wine of Cardui.
I told her I had not and she bought a bottle. I believe that it saved my life. I believe many women could have much suffering if they but knew of its value.

Don't you want freedom from pain? Take Wine of Cardui and make one supreme effort to be well. You do not need to be a weak, helpless sufferer. You can have a woman's health and

The M. E. Ad society meeting at Mrs. Ella Spencer's last week was the most largely attended of any of several years. A fine program was given, all doing their parts ably.
Pess Odell from Milford and Cora from Walled Lake made very interesting remarks, and Mrs. James Devereaux delighted the audience with her fine elocutionary skill, reading the story of a Thanksgiving dinner from a stolen turkey. A bountiful dinner was served, and the proceeds were between $8 and $9.

about her husband. With an the stubborn tenacity of his race he held the honor of his name and family as high as a religious creed and perhaps higher. Straight dealing was an instinct and deceit and treachery an abomination. He had seen 30 men of this in the months of the honeymoon, and she was shrewd enough to understand that the deceit which she had practiced he would punish remorselessly and visit with implacable unforgiveness if he ever discovered it.

His faith once given was given absolutely; once betrayed, was withdrawn forever.

She did not care while she knew that the tie between them was on her side one of tongue and not of heart. She knew, of course, that in the future, whether Pierre reappeared or not, she would need a clear head and calm judgment to walk safely, but if she grew to love her husband she would be neither clear in head nor calm in judgment.

So long as she could part from him, if all were discovered, without any loss except such as touched her social position and her money interests, she felt that she could go through all with the certainty of ultimate success.

But if she loved her husband there were a thousand and one complications which might follow, each of which would be a source of undoing.

It was no trouble to her to feign love, to school herself to seem happy in her husband's presence, to be bright and cheerful with him and to shower upon him a hundred attentions which seemed the spontaneous outcome of a desire to please, but to be in reality the more shrewdly chosen because a clever calculation prompted each and all.

Gradually she was surprised at the ease with which this acting was done and the pleasure which it seemed to give her in the doing, nor did she guess the real source of the pleasure until an incident which happened when they had been away some two or three months revealed the truth to her.

They had ridden into a far outlying town in one of the southern states, and Lola was standing in the street alone waiting for her husband, who had been detained at the place where they had stabled the horses. A couple of drunken rowdies passed, and, noticing her beauty, stopped and spoke to her. She took no notice except to glance at them with so much contempt in her expression that one of them lost his temper and, with a deep oath, tried to clutch her by the wrist, yowling he'd kiss her for her insolence.

He reckoned without her strength and pluck, however, and as he grasped at her she pushed him violently backward and struck him with the heavy end of her bag riding whip in the face. He staggered back and measured his length on the roadway, to the intense amusement of his companion, who laughed and swore profusely.

When he got up, the ruffian, red with rage and swearing that he would have revenge, approached Lola, who, as yet, with a look of unflinching courage, crying him steadily the while. Remembering, however, his first defeat, he held off for a moment watching her opportunity, and then with a cunning feint, he put her off her guard and rushed in, pinning her arms and held her.

She struggled to free her hands, but the fellow's arms were too much for her, and she was beginning to fear that he would overpower her when she heard him vent a sob, guttural, choking sound and saw that his Jaffray had come up and caught him by the throat, half-strangling him in his bare hands. He let him go, and the man was on his back again in the roadway, flung there with great violence by her husband.

"Are you hurt, Lola?" he asked, with the pain of suspense in his eyes.

"No, not in the least. Come away. That brute's getting up again."

The fellow was on his feet again directly, and with his companion he had drawn their revolvers.

"You don't shoot women in these parts, do you?" said Sir Jaffray sternly.

"Wait, come, Lola."

He led her away to a house that was open at some little distance, and, putting her inside, told her to wait.

"You mustn't go back, Jaffray," she said, a fear that she had never felt for herself awaking on account of him, and she clung to him to keep him by her.

"Don't be afraid," he said kindly, and, putting her hand off his arm with a firm, gentle strength, he went out again. He walked straight up to the bully who had assaulted Lola, and, disregarding contemptuously the revolver which the man held threateningly, struck him with his clenched fist a fearful blow in the face, knocking him down with a thud which resounded all across the road. The man lay like a stunned ox. Then Sir Jaffray turned to the companion, but he, seeing what had happened, fired his revolver at random and ran away, swearing.

When Sir Jaffray went back to Lola, he found her more agitated than he had ever seen her, and she did not seem herself again for many hours and indeed for days afterward.

He did not understand the cause of it all.

In that instant the revelation had come of the new feeling which was developing in her, and the knowledge, in view of all that it meant, had agitated her as much as any incident in all her turbulent life.

In the days that followed, Sir Jaffray noticed for the first time in his wife a waywardness and uncertainty of temper which were quite unusual, and they surprised and rather grieved him. She was in reality fighting against her new emotions and striving resolutely to conquer them.

But she fought in vain, and from that moment onward she felt herself drawn closer and closer to him until she ceased at last to wage a useless fight.

Her return to England was thus unwelcome. So long as they were thousands of miles away from Europe she was safe against discovery, and could she have had her way she would have prolonged their journey indefinitely.

But Sir Jaffray was beginning to feel a strong desire to be home. He loved the place and loved to be there and to see Lola, smiling at his beautiful mistress. He would have hurried home earlier had he followed his own inclination, but he could not interfere to stop the pleasure which she showed on every occasion in all the incidents of their traveling. He was delighted, however, when at length he stood with Lola on the big Atlantic liner and watched the tugboat at anchor, the growing dimmer and dimmer in the haze of distance and felt that they were homeward bound.

He was surprised that Lola was silent and thoughtful.

It was a new thing for her to feel foreboding.

But now if what she had begun to dread came true she felt half helpless to grapple with it. And it was part of the effect of her new love and the fears it bred that the danger which, when she did not dread its coming, had seemed remote and all but impossible now appeared almost certain and inevitable. She blamed herself for not having taken any of the thousand precautions at the time of Pierre's death which she now saw she ought to have taken, and her father's words recurred to her over and over again.

"You did not see him dead. How she wished she had."

Sir Jaffray rallied her once or twice when he caught her brooding apparently.

"Beginning to think what a serious matter marriage is?" he asked. "You'll have no end of fuss made of you in the country. Different from the wild west."

"I suppose one is quizzed a bit," said Lola. "But I know most of the people, and I can manage them, I think."

"Not much fear of that," replied her husband, with a smile of admiration. "There are not many people you could not manage. We shall have to have a function or two, and there'll be a bit of fuss when we get back, I expect. But we won't stay longer than you like at the manor. We'll get up to town. We shall have to go about a bit, you know."

"Yes, marriage isn't an excuse for refusing invitations, as it used to be in Galilee. It makes one look out for them rather."

"There won't be much looking out for them, I promise you. When once you're seen, they'll come fast enough."

"I suppose so, but I'd rather have our time back there," with a movement of the head toward the west, "than a London season."

"You'll grow out of that fast enough," he said. "But I'm glad you haven't been bored. After all, there's no place like the manor, to my mind."

I'm fully fond of the old place, and on my word I shall go back with great pleasure to my time in the country. Then, after a long pause, he added, "I shall like to hear that ever with you at the head of Lola, and I think you'll find it all pretty much as I told you."

"I shall, if you make it a permanent place to me," she answered with a laughing look of affection. "If not, I shall not."

"I'll try not to make you do that. I shall be glad when you get there. We're due to-morrow afternoon, and if all goes as it has hitherto we shall be well up to time. We shall have before us a magnificent time, I'm afraid that our getting in at such a time will cut up any arrangements which the whole people may have made for a reception, but we must have a triumph next day and a grand lunch or a sort of some kind. Women that are fond of appointments like a good deal of Jove, I shall be glad to see the old place again."

"That night, the last they were to spend on land, the latest went up on deck to smoke a cigar after supper, and Lola went with him. It was a clear, crisp, sharp night, and the moon and stars were shining brightly. She took her arm, and, pressing closely to him, walked up and down the deck.

"Our last night at sea, Jaffray," she said.

"And a lovely one, isn't it?"

"Have you enjoyed the time?"

"Never had a better in my life," he answered enthusiastically. "Didn't know marriage was half so good."

"Or you might have tried it before?"

And she laughed.

"If I'd met you before," he replied, like a lover.

"I'm glad I've given you one span of happiness, Jaffray," she said, and the tone in which she spoke seemed rather sad.

"It seems to have changed you a good bit," he said. "You're not like the same girl in some ways."

"Not with you?" She put the question in a tone that touched him at once.

"I'm the same with you. You forget that till you came into it mine was a fighting life."

"So that cheap first love thought in Calicut," he said, laughing at the recollection of the way she had treated the man who had tried to insult her.

"But you had to come to the rescue then. I wonder if you always would and will."

"We don't breed cowboys in old England," he answered.

"True, but there are other villains. Do you believe in omens, Jaffray?" She put the question impudently.

"Yes, of a kind," he said. "When I've been hunting big game, for instance, and missed at the first shot, I always took it for an omen that if I didn't hit with the second I should have a bad time, and I took good care not to miss, I can tell you."

"Oh I don't mean things you can avoid."

"Then I don't believe in any other. Bad luck doesn't begin with a man as a rule till he's made a mess of things for himself."

"Yes, but I mean if you fear something's going to happen?"

"But a man doesn't fear that unless he knows there's something that can happen. A man who walks straight isn't afraid of tumbling into the ditch at the roadside. But, once I had a presentiment, by the way, and it came true," he added after a pause.

"What was that?"

"When I saw you that day in the little woman's house, I had a presentiment that you would be my wife, and here we are."

He laughed pleasantly and pressed her arm, and she thought it wiser to say no more about omens after what he had said.

Their arrival at Walcott manor was necessarily very quiet. They reached Liverpool in the afternoon of the following day, and as soon as the baggage could be got together started for home.

Lady Walcott had remained in the house by Lola's special wish—one of the results of the change in her feelings—and Lola did her utmost to follow up the kinder letters she had written with a greeting of really affectionate warmth.

But the old lady had not changed on her side, and, though resolved to act up to the promise she had made to Sir Jaffray before the marriage, she did not like the woman he had chosen and would not pretend that she did.

Thus the home coming was chilled on the threshold, and Lola herself was both disappointed and irritated, and there was more of the old Ishmaelish feeling of defiance in her manner than her husband had observed since the marriage.

With Jaffray himself his mother was all tenderness and love, but she felt the change in the position.

It was the first time that he had come home from any of his wanderings when she herself had not had the first place in his thoughts. If the other woman had been Beryl, she thought, it would have been tolerable, but to give place to Lola was unbearable.

She struggled with them for a long time while they talked to her of their travels and she listened attentively.

"You have been a good correspondent, Jaffray—better than usual, I think," the baronet had thoughtfully made a point of writing much more frequently than he had been accustomed to write on former occasions. "The letters from you both have been most bright and interesting. You have had all mine, I suppose?"

"Yes, I think so. We got the last batch at New York."

"And what is your theory of the five stringed violin enthusiast? Is he a lunatic?" He has been here and was most impatient to know when you would be back."

"Five stringed violin?" exclaimed Sir Jaffray. "What do you mean?"

"There, you haven't read my letters. I told you about him and his queer visit to Beryl."

"Who is he? What is it? I must have missed it."

"The foreign violin player, M. Pierre Turrian, who has a theory about violin."

"Jaffray, I told you so. I'm disappointed," exclaimed Lola, and she put out Lady Walcott's arm and said, "I'm sure you'll find the home news in the morning, the old bit, with a smile."

So she had come home, she thought, as she was with a good deal of her heart, but not in the way she had hoped for.

Forests in Germany.

In the official count of 1900 the area covered by forests in Germany aggregated 34,889,672 acres, of which 17,443,188 acres belonged to the states and municipalities. These, as also the woodlands of private individuals, are kept in a high state of scientific cultivation, as the preservation of forests is considered to be a matter of great importance for economic and hygienic reasons.

The Best Remedy for Croup.

(From the Atchison Kans., Daily Globe.) This is the season when the woman who knows the best remedies for croup is in demand in every neighborhood. One of the most terrible things in the world is to be awakened in the middle of the night by a whoop from one of the children. The croup remedies are almost as sure to be lost in case of croup as a revolver is sure to be lost in case of burglars. There used to be an old-fashioned remedy for croup, known as hore syrup and tulu but some modern mothers say that Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is better, and does not cost so much. It cures the cough, and gives relief in a shorter time. Give this remedy as soon as the croup cough appears and it will prevent the attack. It never fails and is pleasant to take. For sale by all druggists.

A Tired Congregation.

"My friends," remarked the minister, "the collection to-day will be devoted to my traveling expenses, for I am going away for my health. This more I receive the longer I stay." And, chancing to say, the largest collection ever made was then taken up.

The next instant the man was on his feet, ferent, and she could not hate him, and there was therefore but one possible result.

She had chosen, moreover, that kind of holiday which helped to make indifference possible. She saw her husband at his best during the whole time, and there was no incident of their travel to distract her from him, nothing that caught and held her attention which was not associated closely with him.

More than all, however, he was a man born to be loved by women—strong to command where strength was needed, gentle as a child where gentleness served, as brave as a man can be and courteous to the point of long suffering. In all bodily exercises he was exceptionally agile and enduring, and he possessed in a marked and extraordinary degree just those qualities which to Lola were the type and embodiment of manhood.

She was bound to yield in time to the forceful influence which he exercised, and the more she perceived this and struggled against it the more irresistible did she find it.

As her feelings softened, so her fears waxed. She was afraid to grow to love him, because she saw all the dangers of it to her.

One thing she had

Long after he had disappeared amid the small clump of fir trees, which fringed both sides of the drive close to the turn of the lodge gates Beryl remained, leaning against the window frame looking out, full of the foreboding which the man's visit had roused.

Then, being a practical girl of method, she went to her room and wrote out every word that she could remember of the interview and added her comments and the impressions which had been caused, and she locked the whole away in her most secret and secure hiding place.

The points which stood out most clearly in her mind were that the foreigner, Pierre Turrian, had some very strong motive for finding Lola; that the tale he told about his musical mission was from start to finish a falsehood; that the fact of the marriage of Lola to Sir Jaffray had moved him beyond all power of self control; that in some way Montreux was mixed up in the matter, and that he had been anxious to learn whether Lola had ever mentioned the name of Turrian to her.
