NO CANDIDATES

YET IN SIGHT

FOR THE ANNUAL VILLAGE ELECTION.

Caucuses Will Be Held Week After Next.

.Notwithstanding the annual village election is only about three weeks distant scarcely a caudidate for any of the offices has yet been mentioned. No issues are up and the prospects are there will be a shortage of canaddates for any of the honorary places

It is presumed that Mayor Johnson will allow his name to go before the people, and if he does his election is quite sure. Aldermen Stanley, Harmon and Phillips say they expect to retire again at this time from public life, but they are all too valuable men on the board to be allowed to have their own way in the matter. The opinion that all of them should be renominated and elected is apparently unanimous with the people of the village and it is doubtful if any other ticket will be put up.

Thos. Murdock as clerk is one of the very best the village ever had and she will have no opposttion" is the opinion expressed by several well known taxpavers of the village to a Record representative

Ralph Romeroy is serving his see ond term as village treasurer and therefore will not be eligible for re- Gential campaign election Thisoffice is usually handled by one of the banks and the available timber scens to be L. A. Bubbitt, D B. Northrop and E. H. Lapham

Will Lanning will be a candidate for re-election as assessor, and as he hus filled that office satisfactorily to day. the people he will without doubt be renominated. The office of assessor is the only real good paying office in the village and there are usually several aspirants for the job. However none besides Mr. Lanning have yet been spoken of.

The present council took hold when the village affairs were in a mixed condition with a bunch of extra and unknown debts of some. thing like $5.000 staring them in the face and to pay them it necessarily caused high taxes for two years. These debts are practically all cleaned up now and the village owes a great deal to the efficient and economical management of its affairs during the two years just about to

Small was so distrions putton sensited with it that he ultimately destroved it, though it wis considered others so excellent a likeness that Lord I ansdowne commissioned Smart Ch, hard is misplaced trust, great to pain this a real which he took to England Wishington which he took to England to pain' him a full length postrait of I owe her ma a "v." - Shortly after thes-Wishington himself ished Stuart to plint his portrait as And so She smirks at cheap yours well as that of Mis Washington Stuart, dryen by the press of visitors from his home in Philadelphia to a cennice retreat in Cermanionn, tionsformed his barn into a painting 100m and it was there that Washington sat for the so called Atheneum portrait. Stuart, with Washington's consent, retained the original of this picture and the Martha Washington head, making copies for Mount Yernon, the where abouts of which are not now known

It was in 1794 that Mr Smuart first met General Washington, and from that time be devoted his brush almost entirely to be-illustrious patron. The number of portraits of Warington which he made is not known. He left a list of therty-nine postraits which he had been commissioned to paint for admirers of the president at Lome and abroad, but he also printed five full length Wishingtons and twenty others of different sizes the proceeds of the sale of which he invested in in estate ın Pennsylvanıa

The originals of Washington and Mrs Washington were sold after the artists death to an association of gentiemen, who presented them to the Boston Ather.com in 1833. They paid Stuart's widow $1.500 for them.

Gilbert Charles Stuart, the most emi-nent of America's portrait painters and the rival of the greatest English artists of his day, was born in Narragauset: R. I, in 1756, and died in Boston in 1828 He received his first instruction from a Scotch srtist named Alexander, who took him to Edinburgh when he was about eighteen. He subsequently studied under Benjamin West, in whos family he lived for some time In 1812 he set up as a portrait painter in London and achieved immediate fame. He returned to America in 1793

HELD OVER REMAINS OF LATE SENATOR HANNA.

REPRESENTATIVE ALDIN SMITH RELATES TOUCHING INCIDENT.

ALL CLEVELAND WILL OBSERVE HOUR OF FUNERAL.

Washington, Feb 171-In the senatechamber, where he has spent so many hours in recent years and surrounded by his colleagues, and mearly all other distinguished men who operate the machinery of government, including the nation's chief, President Rossérelt, funeral services were held today at noon over the remains of the late Senator Hanna, prior to their being president and his cabinet, the chiefjustice and associate justices of the supreme court, the bouse of represent auves, the eiplomatic coips, the admiral of the navy and the heat-general of the army occupying the scars on the floor of the senate. Advission to the gallery was obtained by card and was well filled with the late senators friends. The family and near relatives occupied seats near the bier

The president and all attaches share in the general sorrow over the death of senator Hanna, President Roosevelt, the members of his cabinet senators and representatives in congress pail tribute to the memory of the dead statesman.

A Touching Incident . . Representative William Alden Smith of Michigan related at the white house a touching incident of a recent conversation he had with Senator Hanna. He went to Senator Hanna in the senate chamber one day and invited him to attend, as one of the distinguished men of the country, the semi-centennial celebration of the founding of the Republican party to be held at Jackcon, Mich, on July 6, next

"I don't know where I will be then," was the senator's pathetic reply to the invitation.

"Why, you will be right here, of course," returned Representative Smith, reassuringly

"No," replied Mr Hanna "I'm afraid

"I walked to the rear of the senate chamber," safd Mr Smith, "and, look ing back at the senator, wondered if he had a premention that he might not live long. The impression made by his words never left me"

The committee appointed by the sen ate to attend the funeral at Cleveland, consists of 25 senators, including Son ator Alger

Spearker Cannon applicated as men hers of the house committee to repre sent that body at the funeral the tire Ohio delegation, Rep Eucking of Michigan and several others

The funeral train will arrive at the Euclid aveur station in Cleveland at 11 a. M., Thursday. The body will be taken directly thence to the central armory, where it will lie in state until

RAILTOAD TO BLAME. Pere Marquette Paris Catastrophe Dus

to Road's Negligence. Grand Rapids, Mich. Feb. 17.-Coroner Hillsker's jury in the Pere Marquette wreck inquest returned its ver dict, laying the entire blame for the East Paris disaster of Dec. 26, in which 22 lives were lost, upon the operators in its employ. The case was immedtately turned over to the prosecuting attorney for action, and it is;)kely that heavy damage suits will grow our of the affair.

The most important testimony and the most damaging for the railroad company was that given by Train Dispatcher Allen Marzolf, who admitted that had No. 5 been given the change orders first she would have gone on to Fox and stopped while No 6 would have taken the siding at Oakdale, thus avoiding the accident. He also swore that since the disaster the Pere Marquette system had so changed its rules in giving train orders that such a wreck would be impossible, and said that had such rules been in force at that t me no accident would have copurred. curred. -

When you go around from printer to printer getting bids on a job and then giving it to the lowest bidder, you get an indifferently good job—one with no particularly good points—one that sells no goods for you, then who pays the printer?

- YOU DO.

When you pick out a good printer, giving him all your work, educating him to an idea of your needs, and paying a fair price for the work you get, your printed matter (when secured at the Record Printery) necessarily creases a favorable impression for you and for what you offer, and becomes a factor in selling your goods. BOOTH TARKINGTON'S Great American Story

THE GENTLEMAN FROM INDIANA

Will be published in this paper beginning in a few days. We are not going to say much about it and we will tell you why.

If we describe the story as it is you will say before you have read it that we have greatly exaggerated. After you have read it you will say we failed to do it justice.

It is the story of a fearless editor who incurred the hatred of white caps and was murderously attacked by them, and—but we must not say what came of it, for that would be telling, and would take away from your pleasure in reading it.

It-pictures vividly a too common in Ameri-

It ought to be read by every man who loves his country and by every person who loves a lover-for the hero is a passionate lover, whose love making is superb.

CHAPTER TXXIV. LOLA'S STORY.

At the moment of her first entering the room Lola had not seen the police inspector or Mr. Gifford, but when sho noticed them and saw that the former wore pelice uniform she was startled. "Who are these gentlemen?" she asked of Sir Jaffray.

But now I have something to say to my-to Sir Jaffray, which concerns no one but himself, and for the moment we must be left together."

A flash of rapid thought convinced the inspector that he could not possibly do any harm by doing what was saked, as he could easily shadow her ladyship should she attempt to get away again.

"I will do what you wish," he said, and with a bow he left the room with

As soon as the three were alone there was a long silence. The warmth with which Lola had spoken to the inspector died out, the pallor which all had no niced on her first entry increased, and she leaned back on the sofa on which she sat us though weak and striving to collect her strength for a great effect.

Sir Jaffray sat apart, torn by infinitely painful emotions. Her first repulse of him had roused a multitude of disturbing thoughts in which his fears on account of her madness, his doubts about the part she had played in the death of Prerre Turnan and his love. quickened into hot passion Ly the sight of her, were all mongled with a new and worst fear that her action was the result of a resolve not to let him go and the note of defiance again was per he knew not. He langed to rash and take her in his arms and yet was field back in a conflict of doubts and fears

Beryl sat quietly waiting for Lola to tell in her own way the story of which she knew the main features.

Lcl. broke the silence at length with a long, deep sigh "Then she said:

which she seemed to read intuitively.
"Do you think I am guilty of the death of Pierre Turnan, Jaffray" she cried in a voice of pain and resentment "And you, Beryl, do you?" And without waiting for any answer in words, reading one in the momentary embarrassed silence of the two, she cried in a voice all sorrow and suffering: "Eaven | 1 sagnever lets work to make any voice all sorrow and suffering: "Eaven | 1 sagnever lets work to make any voice all sorrow and suffering: "Eaven | 1 sagnever lets work to make any voice all sorrow and suffering: "Eaven | 1 sagnever lets work to make any voice all sorrow and suffering: "Eaven | 1 sagnever lets work to make any voice all sorrow and suffering: "Eaven | 1 sagnever lets work to make any voice all sorrow and suffering: "Eaven | 1 sagnever lets work to make any voice all sorrow and suffering: "Eaven | 1 sagnever lets work to make any voice all sorrow and suffering: "Eaven | 1 sagnever lets work to make any voice all sorrow and suffering: "Eaven | 1 sagnever lets work to make any voice all sorrow and suffering: "Eaven | 1 sagnever lets work to make any voice all sorrow and suffering to make any voice all sorrow and suffering to make any voice all sorrow and suffering to make any voice and to make any voice and to make any voice and the suffering to make any voice and the s On. "Were "to positions changed I should need no n nl of yours to make me feel your innocence, Jaffray," she said in a tone which stabled him, "but you shail have my word. As God is my judge I know.no more than yourself how this man met his death."

A flood of relief burst over him at the words, and again he made as though he would class her in his arms, and again she prevented him. Then Beryl, who had waited with suspense for the avowal of her innocence, and who was quite ready to accept it and to be continced by it, feeling something of the agony which Lola must at that moment be enduring, went to her, and, making her sit down again on the sofa, insisted on sitting by ot come to me?" — At first Lela tried to prevent the girl, but the touch of sympathy was too sweet to be long repulsed, and she first suffered, then welcomed and at last reveled in the consolation thus offered.

'You make my heavy task lighter,' she said to Beryl presently, and then, after another pause, she began her con-

"You heard the story as he told it."

"He said you tried to kill him then." "That is true, as true as light!" cried Lola vehemently, and Beryl felt her start and her muscles harden with tem per "it was an impulse, coming either from heaven to free myself from a devil, or from bell to bind myself closer than ever to him, I know not which, but I acted on it, and never from that moment till now, when I see you shrink and quiver at the thought of it, have I regretted it. I will not palliate my set or belittle it, but this I may say—I do not know that he could possibly have sa'red himself had I not stammed on his fingers, but I did not think of that then. He had made my life a hell, and when the chance seemed to come in my way I tried to free myself, and I would do the same again.

She stopped and looked engurly across at Sir Jaffray, hoping to read on his face an expression less hard than that which by her words she seemed to expert and not to fear

But he made no sign of any Lind, and she went on

"The rest you know now or can guess nearly, except one thing I will tell the truth now, the whole of it, and you shall knew the worst of me that can be known. > "I Lave Leen vicefully punished," said Lola in a low, naif meaning voice of infinite sadness. "Out of both my fanits have come the means to purish them. But, like a woman feeling for a woman's grief, Beryl tried to make the trouble as light for me as it could be. Heaven knows how I have thanked you for that and for all, Beryl!" cried Lois, breaking off a moment to kiss the girl at her side.

"But there was no hope of escape," she resumed. "Failing in his attempt to kill Beryl, the madman came to me with a plan to kill you, Jaffray, andremember the scene that morning which you interrupted. I knew then

She paused just an instant and Iooked at him as if hoping that he could read her thoughts, but before he had time to suswer she continued. .

"No, you will not guess after what I have said and what has happened. I wanted to find some way out of the trouble which would have left jome of your love for me remaining. I thought to kill myself, but I knew that then the man who is dead would have told you all my guilt and have tried to trade on the knowledge till the thought of me would have been hateful to you. I tried to tell you that afternoon, but the words were chilled on my tongue, and I could not. Then I saw no hope but to go away and so prove to the man who was thus between us that he could no longer profit by his secret, and I planned it easily. He wrote to me that afternoon o'clock near that cottage where he seems to have met, his death. Then Beryl's letter came, and you know that it was to ask me to go to her, and it formed just the excuse I wanted. I left word that I was going to Leycester Court, and I drove over there, stopping just short of the house and telling Robbins that I was uncertain what time I should re-turn, and that one of the Court carriages would take me back, and as soon as he was gone I walked back. -You know the lönely path across the fields. I came that way and did not meet any one the ichole time.

"Did you go to that cottage that night" asked Jaffray when she-paused, but Beryl sent a warming glance that he snor d let her tell the whole story in her own way.

"Yes, I met him there. It was before o'clock, and we walked back along the path I had come, stopping every now and then. I had to him in one tning, knowing him-I told him that you knew everything, Jaffray; that I was a fug.tive of my own free will, that he ver again should be or you set eves on me, and that, though he had be iten n.e. the victory should be as grit and aspes between his to the I faunted him with the blows that you had snower den tim ritte merning and mal-denca hisa with, jeers at the fasher of his plans. What I and ict let him even guess, Lowever, was that my heart was sick and my quit himsed to death. We particl, a blasphemens outh on his side and a curse on him from me, and I set my face to the darkness and plodded on through the night, alone with my grief and my knowledge that the ann could never rise again in all my life. One single, solitary ray of comfort in it all I had—that perhaps you would never learn how false I had been and so come to curse me for it." Her heaters had listened breathlessly to this part of the story, marking every syllable, and when she stopped they could not understand her Sir Jaffray himself had seen her houts later than she said close to the cottage.

"Where did you go, Lo's, and where and what time did you leave that man?" he asked hurriedly and in some excite-

"I was with him probably an hour, not more, and I left him to walk straight to Branxton, in order to catch the mail that stops there at 2 in the morning I did that. We parted about two miles from the cottage, I should think, on the field path that runs from there to the main road to Branxton and close to the road "
"I am bewildered," he said again

CANNED SUNSHINE.

Let us gather up the sunshine Let us gather up the sunshine Lyrig all around our way.

Let us pack it into boxes

And trainsport in on a dray

To a factory where canned goods

Or where breakfrist tood is made; Let us put it on the market Tirred and labeled for the trade.

Neighy every other product
Has been gobbled by a trust;
Air and samshine, wind and water,
Weather also likely must.
By the occopus be correred,
And if all the signs don't fail
We must buy it on the corner
From the merchant by the bale.

Then a man instead of going
With his friends upon a spree
Will say, When he meets a crony.
"Have a surshine, pard, on me!"
And the dainty litt'e lady
Seated at the soda fount
Will say. "Make the flator sunshire.
Charge it up to pa's account."

There are millions in the venture.
There are billions in the scieme.
For without our choice canned sunshine
Life would blank and barren seem.
Some one harling from New Jersey
Doubtless capital will bring
If our capitains of industry
O erlook so good a thing.
