MICHIGAN'S HEROES

HOW THEY ARE CARED FOR AT SOLDIERS' HOME.

Twelve Hundred of Veterans Now Quartered There.

Occupying an exceptionally beautiful situation three miles north of the business center of Grand Rapids, bordered in a natural grove of stately trees, looking down from a gentle eminence upon the smooth-flowing Grand River forty rods away, and up to a bold ridge of wooded hills beyond the river as its distant prospect—such is the ideal location of the Michigan Soldiers' Home.

Our state twenty years ago established this home and dedicated it to her veterans, so that when they find themselves broken in health and in fortune, and unable longer to maintain themselves, they might find there a haven of refuge, a restful camping place after the long march and the hard service. The first building was not ready for use until January, 1887, but so urgent was the realization of immediate need of relief that the institution was opened sixteen months before that, and the inmates were boarded and cared for in private institutions on contract with the state, and when the building was opened there were 300 to share its shelter. In 1890 there were twice that number, and in '92 the number had fallen off nearly a hundred, and the commandant reported that in his opinion the maximum number had been reached. But today, after fourteen years more have passed, the number is twelve hundred, one hundred and fifty of whom are absent on leaves, and there are, besides, about a hundred soldiers' wives and widows in the Women's Annex, which was opened in 1894. And after all these there is a waiting list of applicants for whom there is no room, some of whom will probably be still

TAKE LONG OCEAN JOURNEY FOR THEIR WEDDING TRIP

MR. AND MRS. WILLIAM M. MAIRS.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. M. Mairs, who were married last week Wednesday, Sept. 26, at the home of the bride, Miss Susie Dandison in Novi township, left yesterday for New York on their long wedding journey to South America, to sail on the steamer Coronita Oct 9, from New York to London, where they will make a brief stay and from there go to waiting two months hence, so crowded is the condition, in spite of repeated enlargements.

The legislature last winter appropriated $75,000 for a new hospital building to accommodate three hundred patients, and it is now well toward completion. This will release for dormitory purposes the present hospital building, where are now nearly two hundred patients, and afford welcome relief to the present crowded quarters for the men.

The food is excellent, and every man is supplied with two good suits of clothing per year, of the style worn by the United States infantry.

The total number cared for in the home since its establishment has been over 5,000, and the deaths at the institution have been about 1,300.

The United States pays into the Buenos Ayres, the ocean journey occupying about a month. They are to remain in South America six months with headquarters at Buenos Ayres, where Mr. Mairs goes for the second time to represent the Port Huron Engine & Thresher Co. Fred Woodman of Port Huron, formerly of Northville, who was best man at the wedding, accompanies Mr. Mairs as his assistant.

state treasury $120 a year for each soldier in the home, which is about 56 per cent of the expense of maintenance. The expense for the women is borne entirely by the state. They occupy a building erected for the purpose, to which are eligible only mothers, widows or wives of soldiers of the Mexican or the civil war, without means of support or ability to earn it, and every woman pensioner in the home must surrender to the institution her pension excepting $5.00 per month for her own use. Soldiers and sailors are eligible who have served in the Mexican or civil war, the war with Spain or in the Philippines, in a Michigan regiment or have since been for one year resident in the state. The original cost of the home was about $100,000, and the present value, with the hospital completed, will reach about $350,000.

The people paid in taxes for the Soldiers' Home last year almost $225,000—a greater amount than was paid for any other single institution, excepting the University and Agricultural College. One third of that was for enlargements and improvements. There is no complaint at the amount. The people are willing to pay all necessary cost of caring for the old veterans whose claim upon their care is so great and who are so rapidly passing beyond the need or the reach of that care.

HIGHWAY COMMISSION

Benton May Be One of the New Members.

State Highway Commissioner Earle has recommended Cass Benton of this place as one of the members of the Wayne county highway commission which will have charge of the county road system under the new road law adopted by such a big vote Sept. 4. The other recommendations are Ed. Hines, formerly president of the League of American Wheelmen and Henry Ford, the big automobile manufacturer.

This new honor to Mr. Benton will be pleasing to both him and his friends and the position is one for which he is well qualified. Mr. Earle has recommended an ideal board.

Much Good Accomplished.

While the closing of the very large evangelistic services attended marks no sweeping religious revival in Northville there can be no question that an inestimable amount of good has been accomplished, and influence, set in motion the entire value of which is not to be estimated by immediate outward indications. The addition of members to our churches will not be so large as had been hoped, perhaps, but the interest aroused in the minds of so many young people cannot fail to do untold service in character building, even though many should fail to carry out their intention of living the consistent christian life. If only a part shall do so it means more to those around them than can be even approximately foretold. And aside from this phase of the work, it is impossible that the members of our churches shall not have been spiritually awakened and a new interest and impetus be imparted to their work for the cause they represent. The thoroughly practical christianity advocated by Mr. Davidson, combined with his intimate and minute grasp of all the conditions of ordinary modern life, religious and secular, are forces to be reckoned with and will leave impressions impossible to eliminate even from the most unwilling mind.

Saw The Milking Machines.

About fifty people were taken by automobiles last Friday afternoon to T. G. Richardson's dairy barns at the north edge of the village to see the new milking machines in operation. The sight was well worth seeing and illustrated emphatically the practical possibilities of inventive genius as applied to the every day necessities of life in the way of labor-saving and of health and cleanliness as well.

In the first place everybody was delighted with the immaculate neatness and convenience of the elegant barns and the fine, sleek cows, that seemed to enjoy the new way of being relieved of their lacteal burden just as well as the old hand process. T. G. has two of the machines, each of which milks two cows at a time so that four are milked in about twelve minutes. The milk is drawn on the vacuum principle and is conveyed to covered receptacles in such a manner that not the least particle of dust or dirt of any kind can come in contact with it, either in the milking process or during its removal.

Says Townsend Is Gaining.

"The fact that five members of the Wayne delegation to the legislature have declared for Townsend will make him a very formidable competitor for the senatorship," said a prominent politician. "He had before this about eleven or twelve votes promised. This will give him about twenty. Now it is generally thought that William Alden Smith has about 35 pledges and Mr. McMillan about 25. Mr. Hill is credited with from six to nine. It is thought that Mr. Smith's strength cannot grow at all and that in dividing it will go to Townsend or McMillan. I happen to know that Mr. Townsend is receiving many letters from independent men who have been nominated."—Copper Country Evening News.

THE CUBAN REVOLT.

American intervention in Cuba has taken place. Marines landed in Havana to protect the treasury, and Secretary Taft will issue a proclamation creating himself provisional military governor, after which a further force of American marines will disembark.

The end came to the Cuban republic through the refusal of President Palma to withdraw his resignation and the action of the moderates in declining to attend the session of congress.

"Give the Republic of Cuba," cried Gov. Taft at the conclusion of an address at the University of Havana. This was the keynote of his statement, which is taken as an official pronouncement.

It is certain that a sufficient force of American troops will be maintained in Cuba to support the provisional government and to insure security to life and property pending the establishment of a stable government by the Cubans.

American troops are moving toward Cuba. Mobilization of the force will be at Newport News, Va., for the most part, although a part of the first expeditionary force to Cuba will be sent from New York and Tampa, Fla.

Senor Quesada tendered to the provisional government of Cuba his resignation as minister to this country.

It Was Brutal.

Brutally hazed by upper classmen on the night of his first college day, William Forrester, of Milwaukee, a freshman of the University of Pennsylvania, is lying in the university hospital in a critical condition.

Before he had finished the work, Forrester was set upon by a number of sophomores, and soon got the worst of it, although several other freshmen came to his assistance.

In the attack he was hurled down a flight of stairs, sustaining a fracture of the skull, while a fist blow in his right eye may cost him his sight.

Before he went over the rail, however, Forrester gave a good account of himself and half a dozen of his assailants were also obliged to go to the hospital for treatment. Forrester at once hurried to the hospital and his brother, Dr. Forrester of the faculty of the medical school was summoned.

"Looking Backward".

The looking-backward campaign now in operation under the leadership of the democrat candidate for governor promises some good results which Mr. Kimmerle did not have in mind when he entered upon his criticisms of the present as compared with the past. It will be stimulating to the pride of the people of Michigan in their state and its institutions to have its progress and advancement during the past decade and a half studied and reviewed and the object lesson provided through a recall to memory of the democrat administration of sixteen years ago. We believe however the comparison will be decidedly in favor of the present administration and Mr. Kimmerle's "looking-backward" campaign will not prove as effective as he anticipated when he launched out as the "great-question-asker".

More Extravagance.

It seems to have escaped Mr. Kimmerle's observation up to the present time, or perhaps he is reserving the declaration, that the high schools of our state are costing more than they did fifteen or sixteen years ago. County and city school teachers are all better paid now than they were sixteen years ago in Michigan, the then ideal years to which the candidate from this county so fondly refers. The great increase in the number of Michigan school houses and the teachers and the school children during the past fifteen years suggests another line of possible extravagance to which Mr. Kimmerle's early attention might well be devoted.

Get Them in the Church.

The time will come when the protestant churches of this country will take a lesson from the Catholic society, where the children belong to the church and are reared in the faith from infancy. Once in that church, always in it. Did anyone ever hear of revivals in that church or a mad scramble every year to raise funds to pay the preacher? The time will come, we believe in the protestant churches, when the Sunday-school pupils will all be enrolled as church members normally and publicity will be unnecessary and restrictions will be thrown around them to prevent their getting out of the church rather than getting in.

The fact that the democrats of the second district decided not to nominate any candidate for congress shows not only their belief in Charlie Townsend's invincibility at the polls but their confidence that the interests of all the people of the district, regardless of political affiliations, will be perfectly safe in his hands and carefully looked after in every respect.

The Orion Review's Oxford department describes a log cabin recently finished by an ice company at Long lake near Orion as "unique, sublime and beautiful." "Tis but a step, etc."

Wayne is a very dry town indeed—as far as water is concerned. The village is devoid of a water system and is consequently without fire protection except of the most primitive sort. Water they thinking of down there?

The S. Lyon Herald had nearly a column and a half of excellent school notes last week but the writer thereof—as usual, spells it "grammar." Phonetic, of course. Same with the Flint Globe which has a head line about somebody spilling "Hot grease On Her Feet."

A Linden family whose nearly new cistern would not hold water got at the root of the trouble the other day after a long time of wondering and investigating. One of the roots of a large woodbine had forced itself through the wall and plaster of the cistern making an outlet for the water.

John Fox of Oxford is a young man who is pretty safe to get what he wants in this world. It long headed perseverance will do it. For a number of years he has been buying, piece by piece, as his financial situation permitted, the component parts of an automobile. Now he has the whiz wagon together and has it about ready for business. John is a wise young fox who will certainly succeed in life, as he auto.

It is unsafe to get up too early in Pontiac. Several families in a certain section of that city just knew there was a "Peeping Tom" around and had individual and collective fits because some mysterious villain "flashed a light" into their windows in the small, dark hours. An officer of the law was induced to lie in wait for the wretch, who was nabbed in the very act of going along the street with a lantern in the interest of his business as a milkman. The complainants felt decidedly cowed and couldn't appreciate the cream of the joke at all.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a running ear, or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Sold by druggists. The Hall's Family Pills are the best.

Jewel Maladies

All jewels except diamonds are liable to maladies. Rubies, sapphires and pearls have their separate ailments, but diamonds are immune on account of their great hardness. Precious stones are all affected by surrounding conditions.

Herman Roesse, 18 New Butternut St., Syracuse, N. Y., is President of the Board of Trustees of Webster graded schools, Dist. 3, in the town of Salina. He is also Overseer of the Poor, which position has afforded him ample opportunity for noting the causes of disease, as well as the best means of preventing and curing the same.

He expresses his approval of the use of Peruna as a very effective means of solving a problem of such vital interest to the community, as follows:

"Exposure seems to affect the lungs and kidneys of the poor and I have seen hundreds of these who were broken down in health from this cause. 'I am pleased to tell you that Peruna has proven a most efficacious remedy in a number of cases where no other medicine was used. In an opinion handed down Wednesday the supreme court reversed the decision of the circuit court in the case of Bridger & Wheelock vs. Daniels & Starkweather, the circuit and a justice court having rendered a judgment against the latter, hay buyers of this place, who, by their attorney, C. C. Yerkes, carried the case to the higher court with the above result. Daniels & Starkweather contracted for some hay in the stack, the buyers to bale the hay which the plaintiffs were to deliver at the cars at Plymouth. Between baling and delivery the hay was badly damaged by rain. The plaintiffs claimed that the hay belonged, after contract of purchase, to the buyers, on whom the loss should fall. Starkweather & Daniels contended that the hay did not pass to them until delivery at the car door and the supreme court sustained their theory of the case.

DUKE OF DEVIL-MAY-CARE

By HARRIS DICKSON

(Copyright, 1906, by D. Appleton & Co.)

CHAPTER I. THE DUKE

Serene September night sparkled on the diamond-studded Mississippi—a girdle, bordered with stars, which belted the somber continent.

Twin columns of smoke uprose above the trees, a monster's growlings came, the dash of paddles. A blinding glare flashed round the bend, then straight down the quiet stretch of river there shot one dazzling shaft of light.

The steamer Sultana moved arrogantly through the silence. On her lower decks a group of "rousters" amused themselves between the landings.

The whistle blew. The mate shouted: "Here, Snowball, get your head hauled ready."

The black man dropped his banjo, took up a hawser, and prepared to spring ashore at Devil-May-Care plantation.

Three ladies sat upon the forward guards of the Sultana. Mrs. Ashton of Ivanhoe, was a slender alert woman of 50 with penetrating black eyes, and hair that was just beginning to turn. By ten years of hard work in managing her own plantation she had demonstrated an ability to take care of herself—and Alice sat beside her a timid little blue-eyed echo of everything her mother said. The girl's fair hair might have been beautiful but beneath Mrs. Ashton's shadow it lacked sheen and luster as grass that has grown up colorless in the dark. When she spoke at all it was diffidently and with a glance at the older woman.

Mrs. Ashton manifested the greatest impatience to reach her landing. The boat the river the negroes, all the humdrum incidents of her ordinary route of travel bored her, and she did not fail to show it.

The other girl, Anita Cameron, much darker than Alice, with deep violet eyes looked upon this new life with a curious interest. She had never seen the Mississippi river until that morning when Mrs. Ashton met her at Greenville, and brought her aboard the Sultana.

All that day Anita had amused herself watching the rousters as they scrambled up and down the river banks putting off freight and taking on cotton for the market at Vicksburg. But when night breathed its peace upon the river when the stars came out when God drew nearer and the boundless sea by man seemed so immeasurably small a swift rush of loneliness bore her back to those beloved mountains in Virginia where she was born, and where her people slept.

Her aunt and cousin had been kind enough. Alice extended a childish welcome, shy and sweet. Mrs. Ashton had even kissed her—once. But the homesick girl craved a sympathetic breast to lay her head upon and weep. She gazed into the silence, and into the night, and wondered what she would find to love in this new life to which her aunt was leading her.

"Anita," said Mrs. Ashton pointing to the landing, "we are coming to Devil-May-Care plantation, the next landing is Ivanhoe."

"I won't be so ungrateful, I won't," Anita thought, lifted her head and laughed brightly.

This was to be Anita's home, these were to be her people; and she looked to see what manner of men they were who lived in such a wilderness.

The searchlight blazed on a little group at the landing, hurling their shadows against the bank beyond.

"There's that miserable Noel Duke," sniffed Mrs. Ashton, "the Duke of Devil-May-Care they call him."

Even in the dark Anita could see Mrs. Ashton's jaws shut rigidly, tight as a snapping turtle's. Mrs. Ashton had the kind of jaws that never compromised and never forgave.

There were only two white men at the landing, with a multitude of negroes mules and dogs. In that brilliant light Anita could see every feature of the men every wrinkle and every button on their clothes. Both men were roughly dressed. The heavier of the two with the small blond mustache, had the air of a city man, somewhat conscious of the hunting garb he wore. But the other man wore his corduroys, slouch hat, leggings and spurs as naturally as the royal stag carries his antlers.

Independent looking, black-haired, erect as a soldier, Noel Duke's keenly humorous eyes twinkled as he watched Joe Balfour scraping the mud off his boots.

"Oh, never mind the mud," he laughed, "let it alone; we don't care if you do take a little mud back to Vicksburg with you—we've got plenty. It'll wear off."

Mrs. Ashton touched Anita's arm.

"That other young man, the heavy one," she whispered, "is Joe Balfour; you've heard me speak of him. He's my lawyer, lives at Vicksburg. But I never could understand how he had any use for Noel Duke."

Anita looked closer at the horrible example of swamp depravity that her aunt pointed out—the poker-player, cock-fighter, horse-racer, bear-hunter, whisky-drinker—Mrs. Ashton had every one of his shortcomings catalogued on the tip of her tongue.

"His father cheated your Uncle John out of the nomination for congress. Beat him by a low political trick. Of course, I never look at him, but he has the effrontery to bow whenever he meets me, as friendly as you please. Makes me so mad I want to hit him."

Mrs. Ashton more than half suspected Duke of smiling at her wrath, a suspicion that always upset her Presbyterian-fortitude.

"Hi, there! Get a move on you," the mate shouted. "Hurry that cotton aboard, and don't be all night about it." Bale after bale came tumbling down the stage-plank, and was tiered up on deck quicker than a child could build a house of blocks.

Then Duke nodded to one of his negroes: "All right, Chalky, put him aboard."

Two negroes bent over and lifted a limp black body from the ground, at first the thing frightened Anita, she thought it must be a dead man.

"Bear," said Mrs. Ashton, "that's all the fellow is good for, he does kill out the bears."

The bell sounded; the Sultana was ready to leave. The Duke of Devil-May-Care turned and went back to his horse.

"Hold the boat a minute Matthews," he called to the mate.

"All right, Mr. Duke, whenever you are ready."

The Sultana waited. Mrs. Ashton

a big round table, with eight chairs. Duke ran his hand over the clean white cloth and smiled. "Never been played on? Let's christen it, boys. What do you say?"

The boys didn't say much; they simply drew up their chairs. Capt. Graham rapped on the table. "Jerry, stir out the chips; we're burning daylight here."

Jerry came from behind the bar and placed a patriotic stack of chips in front of each man.

"Two and a half limit," he explained; "blues five, reds two and a half, whites a quarter."

Joe settled comfortably in his chair. "Noel," he said, "I thought you'd quit playing poker?"

Duke smiled back blandly. "I have; I've quit more'n a thousand times, every time the game breaks up. Snucks, boy, it's dead easy to quit playing poker. But I must have a little sport when I go to town—that don't count. I've got to tear down the gates and take the bridges off for a day or so, my system needs it. Look here, Joe, do you think I could sit here and watch you fellows play poker? Could a duck sit on the side of a puddle and watch the other ducks splashing around? Not much."

He picked up the first hand that was dealt him, and skinned it cautiously. "Now, this is what I call living," he said.

It must have been nearly ten o'clock at night when the boat whistled for Ivanhoe. From where Joe sat he could see down the long cabin, and noted that there were ladies in the rear. As the ladies rose and came toward the front he recognized Mrs. Ashton. He laid down his hand and slipped away from the table. "Here come Mrs. Ashton and her daughter," he whispered.

Duke kept his seat. "Can't help it," he answered; "I'm loser. She fumed. "Everybody lets him have his way," she muttered angrily. "No wonder he's such a fool."

After some moments' conversation with the negroes Duke turned back leisurely and crossed the stage-plank. Snowball cast off the head-line, scrambled aboard and the boat backed out.

"How's your grace to night?" Bluff old Capt. Graham smiled and took off his hat in mock humility.

"Hello, cap'n, thought I'd go to town with you, take a day off and have some fun. Got a fine piece of bear meat there for you, can't you cook some for supper?"

"Sure, Noel, sure."

"Say, cap'n, you ought to see Joe Balfour hunt bear. He's got no business foolin' round trying to be a jack-leg lawyer, he's just a natural-born bear-hunter."

Before they got half-way up the stair Duke had raised a laugh at good-natured Joe's expense. Mrs. Ashton caught her girls by the wrists and hurried them off the guards into the cabin, beyond the reach of contamination.

"All right," Duke called as he threw open the front door, "come on everybody, let's have something." He gathered the captain's mates, two clerks several drummers and a stranger or two—every human creature was his friend when he went to town to have a little fun.

There was a tinkle of ice, an aroma of mint, a crushing of sugar, and a straining of cocktails; then a dozen arms were lifted in perfect grace and unison. "Here's hopin'," they all said, and in a moment set their glasses down again.

They stood around the bar and talked; Duke related some of Joe Balfour's exploits in the cane-brake, and made him out a mighty hunter before the Lord.

"Here, boys, it's jes' as cheap to set down," Capt. Graham pointed to himself. "I'm a spig of Satan anyhow, and it doesn't matter."

"I'm her lawyer," Joe explained in a whisper. "and I don't care to have her see me playing poker."

"All right, Joe, duck and run, you've got a reputation to sustain—and so have I."

Joe Balfour laughed and backed out of a side door into the darkness on the guards.

Mrs. Ashton marched through the cabin, so competent to take care of herself that few men would have dared offer to assist. She glanced toward the table, tilted her nose in the air and passed on. Alice tucked her head, and hurried by.

But everything connected with this boat and the new life was of supreme interest to Anita. She caught a side long glimpse of the men at table, the chips, the scattered cards and for one hesitating instant she paused to look. Her violet eyes gazed straight into Noel Duke's. The smile was yet on his face—the same tolerant smile with which he always met Mrs. Ashton's withering contempt.

But this girl's steady glance made him feel very guilty and very foolish. The cards dropped from his hands, he tried awkwardly to get up. Then he was conscious that her face flushed and she drew her eyes away, he watched her as the gray traveling dress and the heavy coil of black hair vanished through the door. Without looking at the other men, he rose and stepped through another door to the guards.

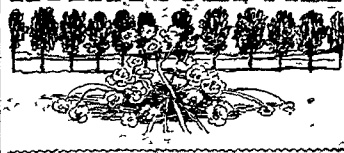

Joe Balfour had met the ladies at the head of the stair, and was assisting them to the lower deck. When Duke saw them they were waiting for the stage-plank to be run out.

Mrs. Ashton introduced Joe to the dark-haired girl—her voice was very low, but Duke heard it.

"What a hypocrite Joe is," he thought.

HORTICULTURE

APPLE PICKING ON A BIG SCALE.

The Methods Employed by an Extensive Orchardist.

Our starting point in picking apples is to train our trees with low heads.

This we consider a very important matter. As our men will pick two to three times as much fruit standing on the ground as they will from ladders. When trees get so high that we cannot reach the fruit from a 16-foot ladder we shake it off and it goes into the cull pile.

We hitch to a low wheeled wagon and set 22 boxes on the platform. We then go to the field with a wagon and pickers and put the team midway between two rows of trees. Our force consists of from eight to 12 pickers and a foreman. The foreman's business is to keep the wagon up even with the pickers, to see that the pickers do not get too far away from the wagon or do not get huddled up so as to interfere with each other, to see that they pick the apples clean and to keep the time of the men.

When the picker fills his sack which is shown in the cut, he goes to the wagon, raises the bottom of the sack a little and rests it into the box, unhook a flap on the bottom and the apples roll out into the box. Enough ladders are taken along to pick the apples above reach from the ground. The loaded wagon is driven to the packing house and the boxes are set upon platforms alongside.

Sometimes when parts of our orchards are too far from the packing house we pack in the field. We take two planks 2x8 inches by 16 feet. One end of each of these planks is cut sloping, and they are raised for runners. We set them on edge, six feet apart and nail cross pieces every two feet and then lay common fencing boards lengthwise on this sled. On this we set our sorting table lengthwise on the front end. Hitch a team to the sled, drive to the field and do our packing the same as in the packing house.

If the trees are very full the sled can be drawn along between two rows and the pickers can empty their sacks directly onto the sorting table. Some of our neighbors use this sled and prefer it to the packing house.

Our sorting table, says the correspondent of Farm and Home, is eight feet long by three or four feet wide. The back end being eight inches high or than the front which should be 20 inches high. The bottom is made of half-round strips with a space of one inch between to let the leaves and trash through. On the sides six inch boards are nailed to hold the apples. In the upper end a three inch strip is nailed.

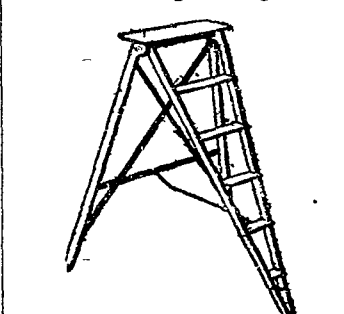

The apples are poured on the upper end and two sorters on each side do the work. The second and third grades are sorted out while spread upon the table and carried away. These are nearly always sold in bulk and so are put in piles or loaded directly into the cans which stand on the side track by the packing house.

The first grade apples are rolled on down to the lower end of the table and into the barrel or box. The first grade consists of all sound fruit above 2 1/2 inches in diameter. If this first grade is fancy or a little disposed to be soft, we pack them in boxes, but if they are good, solid winter varieties we generally pack in barrels. Our boxes are 18 1/2 inches long, and 11 1/2 inches square, inside measurement. The ends are 3/4 inch thick and the sides, bottom and top, 3/8 inch stuff. This box holds about one bushel.

We place a layer of fair sized apples, uniform in size and color with the stem ends down. Then fill up the box, shake down well, level up the top so that the apples are from 1/4 to 1/2 inch above the top of the box, put on the top and with a press force it down and nail each end, then nail on a cleat at each end. We then turn the face side up and with a rubber stamp mark the name of the variety and our brand. The box is then ready to ship.

New Idea in Ladders.

A California man has hit on a new idea in making a ladder which he thinks is such a good thing that he has had it patented. While this ladder is intended for use in workshops, in climbing over and about machinery, says the Prairie Farmer, there is no reason but what our readers can get an idea from this plan for making a similar ladder for their own use. The idea is well illustrated in the accompanying sketch.

WHEN CLEANING THE ORCHARD

How the Work of Getting Brush out May Be Simplified.

Everybody knows what a tiresome and slow task it is to clean the brush out of an orchard with any kind of a conveyance. When it has to be picked up it is about the worst work on the farm. It is even worse than churning with an old-fashioned dash churn. But one of our new men on the farm, says a correspondent of the Rural New Yorker, has made an implement with which two men and a team can get it out easily and ten times as fast as with any other contrivance I have ever seen. He went to the woods and cut a small tree with a crotch, as shown, of tough wood. The limbs he left six feet long and the body part 12 feet. It was about four inches in diameter at the crotch, and he hewed the straight part down, so it was about two and a half or three inches at the other end. He then cut the ends of the limbs a little slanting on the under side, so as to run smoothly along and not catch in the ground. Across the crotch he bolted a piece of plank 1 1/2 inches thick and six inches wide firmly to each limb, and far enough from the crotch so he could put a heavy clevis on it in the middle, to which he could fasten a long chain (the chain should be at least 12 feet long). To the other ends of the chain he attached a long even six or seven feet long, and a single whiffletree to this at each end, all of which is shown in the cut. To use it one man drives the team and the other takes hold of long end with the slant or limbs pointing up. The team is driven slowly, and the brush is gathered by the limbs under the chain until as much as team can draw is accumulated. The load is then driven up to the fire, where it is burning, and when a little part is swung off and the man holding the long pole hits it up. The ends of the short posts or limbs catch into the ground, and the whole load is rolled over on top of the fire in the best possible position for burning. If properly made and handled this takes the brush absolutely clean and with out touching once by the hands. If a wood lot is not accessible it can be made by bolting three pieces of scantling together as shown, being careful to use good, tough, straight grained timber, and the operator will find it as great a labor saver as the horse rake in the hayfield.

THE ORCHARD.

If a cover crop was not sown in the orchard last month, attend to the matter at once. Don't let the ground be bare all winter.

Satisfied with the varieties in the orchard? If not, now is a good time to decide which trees had better be grafted next spring.

Watch the peach and other trees carefully for weak crotches. A few well-applied bolts, where needed, may save loss when wind storms come. Do it now.

If the pears and quinces are scabby and cracked, and if the leaves have prematurely dropped from the trees, it's a sure hint that you neglected to spray with Bordeaux mixture early in the season.

Nearly all varieties of pears are better if ripened indoors. The proper time to gather pears is shown by the ease with which the stem parts from the branch, when the fruit is slightly lifted.

We find the much abused Keiffer pear very fine for canning. The canneries in these parts put up large quantities of them. Properly cooked and canned they are crisp and tender; and, too, the trees are regular and prolific fruit bearers and very hardy. Bulletin No. 222, by Prof. Pettit, is one of the best authorities yet published on spraying against codling-moth on apples. Write for a copy to the Michigan experiment station, Agricultural College post office, Michigan. Thorough spraying will now destroy the second brood of the moth.

As a general thing (except in southern localities) it is usually safer to plant fruit trees in the spring, especially tender kinds like the peach, the plum, etc. If desired, apples, pears, etc., may be set in the early fall. Even if trees are not to be set this fall, it is often a good plan to buy needed nursery stock now, and then heel it in at home until spring.

Windfall apples should be destroyed or fed as soon as possible. The orchardist who thus kills all the worms which drop to the ground in windfall fruit, has taken a big step forward in the destruction of next year's codling-moth crop.—Farm Journal.

Cure For The Blues

ONE MEDICINE THAT HAS NEVER FAILED

Health Fully Restored and the Joy of Life Regained.

When a cheerful, brave, light-hearted woman is suddenly plunged into that perfection of misery, the BLUES, it is a sad picture. It is usually this way. She has been feeling "out of sorts," for some time; head has ached and back also; has slept poorly, been quite nervous, and nearly fainted once or twice; head dizzy, and heart beats very fast; then that bearing-down feeling, and during her periods she is exceedingly despondent. Nothing pleases her. Her doctor says: "Cheer up; you have dyspepsia; you will be all right soon."

But she doesn't get "all right," and hope vanishes; then come the brooding, morbid, melancholy, everlasting BLUES.

Don't wait until your sufferings have driven you to despair, with your nerves all shattered and your courage gone, but take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. See what it did for Mrs. Rosa Adams, of 819 13th Street, Louisville, Ky., niece of the late General Roger Hanson, C.S.A. She writes:

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham: I cannot tell you with pen and ink what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I suffered with female troubles, extreme lassitude, 'the blues,' nervousness and that all-gone feeling. I was advised to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it not only cured my female derangement, but it has restored me to perfect health and strength. The buoyancy of my younger days has returned, and I do not suffer any longer with despondency, as I did before. I consider Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a boon to sick and suffering women."

If you have some derangement of the female organism write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for advice.

BRAVED ANGER OF KING.

Lafayette Flaunted Liberty Medal in Face of Louis.

Shortly after Lafayette's return to France from his second sojourn in America, he was at Versailles, where the king was about to review a division of troops. Lafayette was asked to join in the review.

He was dressed in the American uniform, and was standing by the side of the Prince de Conde, when the king, in his tour of conversation with the officers, came to him and, after speaking on several topics, asked him some questions about his uniform and the military costume of the United States. The king's attention was attracted by a little medal attached to the general's coat, and he asked what it was.

Lafayette replied that it was a symbol which it was the custom of foreign officers in American service to wear, and that it bore a device.

"And what is the device upon yours?" asked the king.

"My device," said the young general, pointing to his medal, "is a liberty pole standing on a broken crown and scepter."

The king smiled, and with some pleasantry upon the republican propensities of a French Marquis in American uniform, turned the conversation into other channels. Conde looked grave, but was silent.—The Sundry Magazine.
