Author of "The Black Wolf's Breed," Etc.

opyright, 1805, by D. Appleton & Co. CHAPTER XVII-Continued. But Anita was watching him, he it, he felt it-watching him not o much with her eyes as with her very soul, tortured with doubts.

The girl had long forgot her-aunt lying ill in the ted ward, forgot the people around her, forgot Alice-whose head she was stroking forgot everying except the one thing, the unforettable thing. Why was Noel in that cison? Why did he not deny those arful accusations? It was so unlike to be silent; they talked to him the had been a thieving negro, le said nothing.

Yes, Noel had been wild, she that. But Anita came of wild herself. Brothers, father, gi and as far back is there was any of them-the Camerons had h hard-riding, hard-fighting, hard-ring, hard-hating gentlemen. It was subtle magnetism of her gaze drew the man unresistingly toward her; whether against his will or no

Step by step he crossed the room, outhed her on the elbow, and she looking at him all the while, seemed to rouse herself and be conscious that he stood beside her.

"I must see you at once-alone," he bent down and whispered "May I come this afternoon?"

"At three," she answered, and gave the address on St. Charles avenue "Alone; people must not see me,' insisted.

"Come to the side door, next the onservatory; around the corner on fellevue street, number 48" Anita ent on calmly stroking Alice's hair, is if she were quite accustomed to naking such appointments.

He moved away aimlessly, absent-indealy. As he passed the door she w him step into the hall and dis-

"Well!" Chaudron remarked, inno-cently; "it's no wonder that poor Baker could not get on the track of anything, with all those fellows pulling against him.

Joe could not help it; he looked at Chaudron, and laughed.

Baker's duplicity burst upon him Where is Baker now?" he asked of

"He's out there in the street, came in the cab with me I saw him waikag up and down the sidewalk a few minutes ago."

Chaudron snatched his hat from the table and bolted out of the door. The detective prided himself upon is intuitions—and discretion.

For an hour he had been hanging the iron fence in front of the little ing inside. Not a word could he hear. and it made him desperately uneasy. The atmosphere began to feel sultry;

barometer fell as if the bottom had dropped out. "Hit's goin' blow," thought Baker, and pulled his hat on tighter. If that lawyer from Vicksburg who tooked so bloomin' good-natured, could raise such a row, Baker shuddered to think what would happen when Chaudron, the flery Creole, ploded. And the more he thought, the less of curiosity he had to witness it. When Chaudron bounded through the door he saw no fidgety little Englishman pacing up and down the banquette: there was no checkered suit hanging over the fence, and none of the cabmen knew in which direction that vanished.

Anderson accompanied Mrs. Chaudron and the girls to their car-rings, gave Alice his final assurances, and they drove away. Chaudron hur-sied his mother off, jerking restlessly at his tiny mustache.

"Come along," he caught Vance by the arm, "let's go find Baker."

"All right," the other man laughed, getting into the cab. "I've got to play ven on somebody."

Then Joe began to look around for duke.

Should Go Slow.

As was expected, bills have been promptly introduced at Lansing providing for additional circuit court districts and for the appointment or election of circuit andges. The fact that the additional expense thus created comes entirely out of the state treasury usually makes it seem to legislators an incident of home interest at outside expense to urge and secure new judicial districts. There are several more judicial districts now in Michigan than would have been created if the approval of the voters had been required for their establishment. The bills increasing the salaries of the supreme court reporters and two supreme court criers, are also deserving of the same sort of very critical consideration which should attach to the question of new judicial circuits

General Alger.

The loss to Michigan through the death of Senator Alger is that of a man who found enjoyment in making could assist He was true and helpful in all his relations, and the people of Michigan were glad to be true and loyal to him when he was bitterly assailed from-many directions at the close of the Spanish war It is recognized now that Senator Alger deserved approval rather than criticiem, but Michigan did not need to wait until he was dead to give to him assurances of confidence and endorsement That the closing days of Senator Alger's life were made happier by the cordial approving attitude of his home people will be to citizens of Michigan always a source of gratitude and gladness

Free Transportation.

In behalf of the reputation of Michigan for a fair degree of sanity and safety in legislative directions, it is to be hoped that no serious attempt will be made to make a law of the bill recently introduced. requiring the railroads to issue free passes to members of the state legislature and to state officials Such a law could not possibly prove profitable to the individual legislators and state officers, and the people of the state have not the least desire to save to the state treasury the amount required to pay for the transportation of its official representative whenever they may be required to travel. The compulsory free pass proposition should not be heard from again.

The statement recently credited to the chairman of the committee on labor interests, in the house of representatives at Lansing, who is himself a union labor man, that the legislation most desired by organized labor from this session of the legislature, is that providing for bindertwine plants in our state prisons, will be helpful to a movement which seems to be desirable from every point of view.

"If anything disagreeable should be said or done this evening here," she said, "I want-you to promise me that you'll restrain yourself, and not say or do any of those things that make me -that jar on me You understand?" "I am always myself," replied L. "I can't be anybody else

"But you are—several different kinds-of self," she insisted. "And please—this evening don't be that kind. It's coming into your eyes and chin now. I had lifted my head and looked

Her smile rewarded me. But it disappeared, gave place to a look of ner wous alarm, of terior even, at the rustling, or, rather, bustling, of skirts in the hall—there was war in the very sound, and I felt it. Mrs. Ellersly ap peared, bearing her husband as a detrailer invisibly but firmly coupled. She acknowledged my saludation with a stiff-necked-rod, ignored any extended hand I saw that she wished to impress upon me that she was a very grand lady indeed; but, while my ideas of what constitutes a lady were at that time somewhat be ed by my snobbishness, she failed dismally. She looked just what she was—a mean, bad-tempered woman, in a towering 228

MOST UNGENTLEMANLY.

As we neared the upper end of the park, I told my chauffeur, through the tube, to enter and go-slowly. When ever a lamp flashed in at us, I had a glimpse of her progress toward composure-now she was drying her eyes with the bit of lace she called a handkerchief, now her bare arms were up and with graceful fingers she was arranging her hair, now she was straight and still, and soft, fluffy man now she was terial with which her wrap was edged drawn close about her throat. I shifted to theopposite seat, for my nerves warned me that I could not long control myself, if I stayed where her garments were touching

I looked away from her for the pleasure of looking at her again, of realizing that my overwrought senses vere not cheating me. Yes, there she was, in all the luster of that magnetic beauty I can not think of even now gaze without flinching My eyes had followed hers and my look was taking in both her mother and her father I had long since measured them, yet I could scarcely eredit the confirmation as it was for most of their acquaint ances and friends, they would have lived and died regarding themselves, and regarded, as well-bred, kindly peo-ple, of the finest instincts and tastes. keep my promise! She is mine, but ple, of the finest instructs and tastes. But calamity was putting to the test the system on which they had molded then apparently elegant, graceful lives. The storm had ripped off the attractive covering, the framework. reality of that system, was re vealed, naked and frightful

"Anita, go to you room" almost screamed the old woman, her fury tearing away the last shieds of her cloak of manners.

"You daughter is of agr, madam," said I. "She will go where she pleases And I warn you that you are deceived by the Langdons. I am not poweriess, and"—here I let her have a full look into my red-hot furnaces of wrath- I stop at nothing in pursu ing those who oppose me-at noth-

Anita, staring at her mother's awful face, was shrinking and trembling as it before the wicked, palc-yellow eyes and quivering outstretched tentacles of a devil-fish. Clinging to my aim, she let me guide her to the door.

Her voice gained strength and her without an upblazing of the fire which manner courage as she spoke, at the is to the heart what the sun is to a end she was meeting her mother's blind man dreaming of sight. There she was on my side of the chasm that had separated us—alone with me—mine—mine! And my heart dilated with gride. But a moment later came a sense of humility. Her beauty inof my judgment Had life been smooth and comfortable for that old couple, ness, so fragile for such rough hands as mine, awed and humbled me. 'I must be very gentle,' said I to myself. "I have promised that she only to preserve and protect"

And that idea of responsibility in possession was new to me-was to have far-leaching consequences. Now that I think of it, I believe it changed the whole course of my life.

She was leaning forward, her elbow on the casement of the open window of the brougham, her cheek against her hand; the moonlight was glistening on her round, firm forearm and on her serious face. "How far, far away from—everything it seems here!" she said, her voice tuned to that soft, clear light, "and how beautiful it is!" Then addressing the moon and the shadows of the trees rather than me: "I wish I could go on and on-and never return to the world." "I wish we could," said I.

My tone was low, but slie started drew back into the brougham, be came an outline in the deep shadow In another mood that might have angered me. Just then it huit me so deeply that to remember it to-day is to feel a faint ache in the scar of the long healed wound My face was not has an area of 118 square miles, New bucden as vas hers; so, lerbars, she York has 326.

and reasonable." "Not too reasonable, please," said with an attempt at her lightness "A reasonable woman is as trying as an unreasonable man.'

"But we are going to be sens,ble with each other," she urged, "like two friends. Aren't we?"

"We are going to be what we are going to be," said I. We'll have to take life as it comes." That clumsy reminder set her to thinking, stirred her vague uneasiness in those strange circumstances to active alarm For presently she said in a tone that was not so matter-of course as she had tried to make it: "Well go now to my Uncle Frank's. He's a brother of my father's. I always used to like him hest-and still do. But he married a woman mamma thought-queer. They hadn't much so he lives away up on the West Side One Hundred and Twenty-seventh

"The wise plan, the only wise plan, said I, not so calm as she must have thought me, "is to go to my partner house and send for a manister."

Not to-night," she replied nervous 'Take me to Uncle Frank's, and to-morrow we can discuss what to de and how to do it.""To-night," I persisted. "We must is to-night's.

She shook her head, and I saw that the struggle between us had begunthe struggle against her timidity and conventionality. "No, not to high." This in her tone for finality.

To argue with any woman in such circumstances would be dangerous; to argue with her would be dangerous; to argue with her would have been fatal. To reason with a woman is to flatter her into suspecting you of weakness herself of strength. I told the chauffeur to turn about and go slowly She settled back into her up town corner of the brougham. Neither of us spoke until we were passing Grant's tomb Then she started out of her secure confidence in my obedience, and exclaimed 'This is not the way!" The room was a very pretty boudoir, in it were two women, both handsome in their different way, the tallest was light haired with blue eyes and a fair skin. She was having a white siik party dress fitted on by a girl who vas ās dark as she was light. Look ing at herself in the long peir glass that hung on the wall, she said:

'I think the style suits me, I am so sorry that you are going back to New-Orleans. I never had a dress maker that suited me so well before. When do you start?"

I want to leave on the evening train to-morrow. I am so glad that you are pleased with my work," Marcella Train enswered.

Pleased. I should say I was. . If you should ever make up your mind to come and live in the north, I hope you will make my dresses for me.' Mrs. Ramsdale smiled as she spoke. "I hope that time will never come

I thank you for your offer, one ver knows what might happen," reella replied.

lle you are changing it, 1 want you tell me all about its dearly love hear about a romance."

"I do not like to bother you, but ou have been so kind to me since. brought you that letter of introduction from your cousin that I would do any thing that I could to please you. I was not raised in the south as you can tell by my talk. Phillp Cobb, man I am going to marry, inherited his uncle's barber shop and moved to New Orleans-to take possession. That was a year ago. I have sewed for your coasin for some time, and she lways liked me She knew that Philip had gone away. Just a mouth before I came here your cousin determined to go to New-Orleans, her maid was not well, so she offered to take me in her place and then I could see Philip. I was delighted at the opportunity and decided to surprise 2 c

"Our cousin gave me the first after-noon off and I started out to find him. I had the street and number, and after inquiring of several people, I found the shop." It was not quite as large as I had expected to find it, but I cared for Philip not what he had and I walked up to the door and went in. I heard the sound of laughter from the back room, so walked towards the Here she paused.

"Well, what did you see?" Mrs. Ramsdale questioned.

"Philip and two girls sitting there as cosy as you please and having a good time; he had the hand of one of them in his. I was so surprised that could not help crying out

"Philip looked up and then he was so surprised. He introduced me to those girls as his intended wife and it seemed they knew all about me was raging and got away as soon as

"Then what: did you see him tgain?" Mrs Ramsdale asked.

"Oh- ves: I saw him that night and every night while we stayed. And what do you think was the excuse he Marcella said, indignantly.

"Flirting, if you please. Well I flirted him. I would have nothing more to do-with him. But I have changed my mind. He has written to me-nearly every day and promised never to do such a thing again. have been so lonesome that I just felt I could not live without him, so I am going down there and get married Do you think I am making a mistake? she asked.

"No, child; I do not. If you love him and he loves you I think you are better of married. I have the band is one of the best of men and I feel that he loves me dearly, but he will-flirt. He is going south-to-mor row night and I suppose he will no be on the car a half hour till he has found someone to flirt with. I would give anything in the world to break him of it." Mrs. Ramsdale sighed as she spoke.

There was silence in the room for a moment and then Mrs. Ramsdale laughed out loud. "I have it, I have it. With your help I think I will cure him. At least I can try."

Going to the door she looked up and down the hall, closed the door tightly, shut the one leading into her bedroom and then pulling her chair the judge. "They threw the dinner close to Marcella's she commenced to on the floor and stole the stove." tightly, shut the one leading into her falk rapidly in a low tone.

PART II.

It was very near train time when Mrs. Ramsdale entered the depot She looked around hurrledly and saw the face she was looking for. A nod was exchanged and then she turned to watch the door for her hasband's entrance. He looked surprised, but said Leartily:

"I declare, I am surprised to see

"I was down in this neighborhood and thought it would be pleasant to come to the train."

Mr. Ramsdale had his ticket and they walked down towards the sleep. ing car his wife talking as fast as possible. When they reached the car charge of murder, has at last been he was to take, the porter took his found in a garret, where he had only grip. She stepped back a little and ex-"There is a girl I know, claimed:

smiled at the pretty dark face looking at his wife. both women nodded and the conductor called: "All aboard." Mr. Ramsdale hurrically, kissed his wife and swung on the step. His wife waved her hand and as she turned away laughed out loud.

Mr. Ramsdale entered the sleeping car, behind the porter and his first sance, was towards the girl that his wife had recognized.

She was dressed entifely in black which suited her dark beauty, a big picture hat on her head and long black-gloves seemed to complete her costume.

Very pleased that he could use his wife's recognition as a basis to be-come acquainted with this beautiful girl be said: "I am-Mr. Ramsdale, and as you are a friend of my wife I hope you will consider that an introduction and let us be friends for the journey."

"Thank you, Mr. Ramsdale, I will be pleased to be friends. I knew you at once as your wife had shown me your picture. It is very pleasant co have an acquaintance on the train when one has a long journey ahead. I am going to New Orleans; how far are you going?"

To the same place. It will be delightful to have company."

The train pulled out and the two went to dinner together. When they were at the table he was rather surprised that she did not remove her gloves, but he was so deep in his fiirta tion that he made no remark.

The next day was spent-by the two together in pleasant converse. She received several telegrams of Memphis the next day. One of them was from his wife and she showed it to It was as follows:

"To Miss Marcella Train, Memphis, Tenn: My husband is on the train. Will you please tell him that I have sent him a telegram to New Ofleans. Have you met him? Please answer. Francis Ramsdale."

Marcella showed him the telegram nd then said; "I answered at once and told her that you had introduced yourself as soon as you came on the train."

"I am sorry," he said, "that you told her we were acquainted. My wife is always complaining about my flirting and I suppose she will call my becoming acquainted with you flirting."

The flirtation went on unfil the train pulled into the depot at New Orleans. They walked side by side till they had neared the gate then she pointed to a well-dressed negro standing be side the gate and said: "There is my intended husband."

"What! not that negro!" he exclaimed in horror. She laughed and said: -"Why not?

I am a negro, too, at any rate I had a negro mether."

Stopping still where he stood he looked at her in dismay and horror. She laughed again and said: "Goodby. I hope you enjoyed our little flirtation "

He was too stupified to answer and she walked away still laughing. As she reached the gate she turned-around and called to him: "Be sure and get your wife's telegram." He hurried to the telegraph office and inquired for his message. When it was handed him a grim smile spread over his face and he knew his wife had put up a job on him. For these words met his gaze: I hope-you had a good time. Fran-ot only make war and supply meat but evince other peculiarties that renthem invaluable concomitants of civilization. A few days ago a numper of people were seen gazing intently toward the upper limbs of a large pine tree. Stopping to learn the se-cret of Lis unusual interest, a man was observed descending the tree while a crew was furiously cawing and beating about his head; then it wās seen that the tresposser had possessed himself of one of her brood, an unpre possessing, httle chick that no one could be imagined to fancy for a pet. Asked what he intended doing with the young crow, he replied that it made excellent medicine for the "Chi-no-michi-no kusuri," to use his exact words. To insure the efficacy of the medicine, he explained, the bird must be taken before it leaves the nest, if possible, or, if it has left the nest, before it gets to where it can drink water; for, he asserted, if it has of itself taken water, it loses all virtue as a blood-cure. 'cess of preparing the remedy is, first, to kill the crow and, without cleaning it, to encase the body in an air-tight covering of cement or clay. mould is then baked for two or three days in a hot fire. When the claycrust is removed, naturally the crow will be found to be black, a lump of pure charcoal. This is pulverized and converted into pills of the "pink" order, which are very popular here as a blood regulator. He reminded his interlocutors that the medicine was very rare because of the difficulty of find ing a crow that had not taken water The-man was perfectly sincere, and appeared extremely proud of his success in having secured the bird. He was reluctant to leave the tree lest there should be another one on the ground somewhere... Those who, since the brilliant achievements of the Japanese Red Cross Society in the late war, are accustomed to take for granted the advance of medical science an this coun fry, will, of course, bear in mind that the practitioner under consideration had not at this time acquired member ship in any legally recognized therapeutic fraternity, but probably his nostrum was quite as effective as much of the medicine that is sold to a large constituency at a higher price in other portions of the globe.-Harper's Weekly.

PETS FOR LITTLE PARTSIANS.

All Kinds of Animals as Playmates de the Children.

Children play a great role in French society, as all those who have read Gyp's inimitable "P'tit Bob" will read ily admit, and now the small Par isienne insists on receiving on her fete day and at the New Year a live pet, instead of a costly doll or a me chanical toy. The demand has been creating a supply, and a lively trade is being done, not only in pupples and kittens, in tiny monkeys and in lambs, but also in tigers and leopards -Up to a certain age: these small felines are quite harmless, and, of course, as soon as they begin, so to speak, to show their teeth and sharpen their claws they are sent off to one of the two magnificent "Zoos" with which the Cay City is provided.

Expert Ocean Mall Sorters. One of the most interesting perform ances of modern times is the handling of the mails in great ocean-steam ships. Some of the men become so expert at sorting that they work most automatically, many of them being able to put their finger on any particular town maiked on the rack blindfolded. On an ordinary western trip they carry on an average abou 250,000 letters and some 10,000 regis tered packets. The latter have all to be written up in detail in their books during the voyage, and this takes more time than the actual sorting. The officials do not always manage to finish the work by the time they reach port, and when such is the case they accompany what is left to the general post office and complete the job there
