DAVID EVANS DIED FRIDAY

RESULT OF RUPTURE OF SHORT TIME PREVIOUS.

Funeral Held from Home Here Sunday.

The death of David E. Evans occurred at Harper hospital, Detroit, Friday afternoon, May 8, following a surgical operation for rupture. The accident which made this treatment necessary happened before quitting time May 1, while he was at work helping build a new cement wall at the Globe Furniture Co. plant.

Mr. Evans was born near Walled Lake October 30, 1848 and had lived in the four counties of Wayne, Washtenaw, Genesee and Oakland all his life. He was a good citizen and was held in high esteem by all his many acquaintances.

His marriage to Miss Mercy Filkins occurred Jan. 1, 1872 and a daughter and son were born to them.

Mr. Evans was a loyal member of the Modern Maccabees and has been one of their lodge officials.

Beside the widow and one son he leaves two brothers, one in Plymouth and one in Holly.

The funeral was held Sunday afternoon from his late residence on Randolph street and the remains were taken to Oakwood cemetery for burial.

The following out of town people attended the funeral: Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Murphy, Cleveland, Ohio; Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Northard, Mrs. Wilbur, Mrs. Killyon, Mrs. Couren and Miss Smith of Ypsilanti; James Barkham, Holly and Oliver Evans and family of Plymouth.

Notice to Taxpayers.

Dated, Northville, May 8, 1908.

MRS. WITHINGTON DIED SATURDAY

FOR SOME YEARS WAS ESTEEMED RESIDENT OF NORTHVILLE.

Had Been Ill but Eight Days—Apoplexy.

Mrs. Maria A. Withington died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. S. V. Miller, 740-14th Ave., Detroit, early Saturday morning, aged 71 years.

About eight days previous, while reading from a paper to Mr. Miller's mother, she was prostrated by a stroke of apoplexy which later affected the heart and from which she failed to rally.

She was the wife of the late William Withington, who died about two years ago. They lived in Northville for a number of years, residing in their home on church street, now occupied by Mr. Darwin.

Mrs. Withington was a faithful member of the Presbyterian church society. She was a most excellent woman and was thought much of not only in Northville and Detroit, but wherever known. She visited Northville friends just a few weeks ago and was then unusually well. How little did she and those she visited then think they were saying good-bye for the last time.

She is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Smith of Toledo, Ohio and Mrs. Miller of Detroit.

The funeral was held from the Miller home Sunday afternoon and the burial was at Quincy on Monday beside her husband.

Baptist Church Notes.

[By a Member.]

Services as usual next Sunday. The subject of the morning sermon will be "The Worth of a Man." The evening subject, "The Constraining Influence of Christ's Love."

OPINIONS FROM THE STATE PRESS

SOMETHING NEEDED BATTING.

While a third term in the gubernatorial office is not a popular measure to the ordinary republican voter, Governor Warner has become the logical candidate for another term. The people can't stand for the gang that have and are opposing him and the reforms he advocates. As a public official he has made few mistakes and has been consistent in constantly pushing for reforms demanded by the people and must have hurt something that needed battling, from the source of the opposition to him. —Chelsea Standard.

PROUD OF TOWNSEND.

Congressman Townsend has been very much before the public for the past week, and as usual was on the popular side. The leaders in Congress have shown a disposition to ignore the wishes of President Roosevelt in some much needed legislation, and Mr. Townsend came forward and in short order had Speaker Cannon promising to be good. Those members of Congress who wish to see something done by the present Congress are looking to Mr. Townsend as a leader at this time, and not only the second congressional district but the entire state is mighty proud of its representative. —Chelsea Standard.

DON'T WANT "BOXER" LEGISLATION.

Auditor General Bradley has again announced himself as a candidate for the governorship. Naturally the doctor should expect strong support from Eaton county, but there are other questions than local pride to be considered. It doesn't so much matter where a candidate lives as what he will do after election. It is supposed that he is and has been in sympathy with the Boxer legislation. We don't want any more of that, Bradley or no Bradley. —Charlotte Tribune.

WOULD BE HELPLESS.

Taken as a whole Dr. Bradley's pledge of economy can only be construed first, as a criticism, not of Governor Warner but of the last legislature; and second, as a plea for popular support which, if not forgotten after election, he would find himself entirely helpless to fulfill.

Knight—Dickerson.

Mr. Chas. Knight and Miss Grace Dickerson were married in Detroit Saturday by Rev. Gardner. They returned to Northville Sunday evening and went to housekeeping immediately in the rooms back of Dr. Rickel's dentist office. There friends wish them a happy and prosperous wedded life.

Is the Doctor a Pessimist.

And now Dr. Bradley is kicking about the expenses of the last legislature, forgetting that legislature controls its own expenses except as they are audited by the Auditor General. The Doctor also kicks because the state's expenses are larger than they were ten years ago, forgetting that Michigan hasn't stood still for all those ten years. Presumably the increase in the expenses of the Auditor General's department are warranted by the increased business. No one ought to blame the Auditor General's department for that. The doctor should not look on the dark side of life so much. It was only a few weeks ago that he came out in the newspapers with the startling announcement that the "state treasury was bankrupt"—or near it. Treasurer Rich has a million or so yet to the good and the world moves on just the same dragging Eaton Rapids along with it.

Justice Carpenter May Retire

The contemplated retirement of Justice William L. Carpenter from the supreme court will be a severe loss to the Michigan judiciary. Justice Carpenter came to the supreme bench with a well earned reputation as a jurist and his record as a member of the court of last resort has not only fully sustained that reputation but materially enhanced it. His return to active practice because it presents a more inviting field from a financial standpoint, should serve to remind the people of Michigan that they cannot hope to profit by the services of able citizens of the state in any connection unless they are prepared to compensate them in a manner commensurate with the service rendered.

The People Are Supreme.

The enthusiasm and heartiness with which Gov. Warner is being received throughout the state shows how well the people think of his candidacy for re-nomination. Let it be recorded that the people and not the bosses or convention manipulators of years gone by will nominate the candidate for governor this year. That is why things are different. It also explains why a candidate who stands firmly for measures demanded by the people is sure to win.

"No sentiment for Warner at Grand Rapids," yelled the Lansing Republican Tuesday. But when the vote was counted the Warner candidate for State Central committee man, G. J. Diekema had two votes to one for the Bradley-Atwood-Avery-Hill-Baird candidate. Don't worry. There will be plenty of sentiment when the votes are counted.

Congressman Townsend took hold of the "big stick" down at Washington recently and finally got things in action long enough to do away with the "do-nothing" policy and get an agreement through that some of the legislation advocated by President Roosevelt should be considered at once.

Dr. Bradley's candidacy, detained at the Immigration hospital while enroute, has finally arrived with the Boxer tag O. K. On the reverse side of the tag, however, the doctor will find the clause "Subject to change without notice."

From his attack on state officers and the last legislature, one would infer that Doctor Bradley is running on the democratic ticket.

The latest primary reformers are Dr. Bradley, T. W. Atwood, Lincoln Avery, John Baird, Ira Sayre, George Moore and Jas. Kinnane.

History makes men wise, poetry witty, mathematics subtle, philosophy deep, morals grave, logic and rhetoric able to contend; nay, there is no impairment in the wit but may be wrought out by fit study, where every defect of the mind has its proper remedy. Those that have the excellent faculty of using all they know can never know too much.

PARDRIDGE & BLACKWELL.

PARDRIDGE & BLACKWELL.

This Is As Much a Store for Men As for Women.

Women come here in preference to the exclusive houses. Men are getting to be of the same notion. Our assortments of Men's Wear are larger and better than those of the exclusive men's apparel stores. We have destroyed many illusions during the years we have been doing business here. One of them is the old-fogy idea that a dealer who carries only a limited quantity of merchandise carries better quality.

Time was when there was foundation for this opinion, but nowadays the big dealer gets the preference with the manufacturers. We go to the same sources of supply as the small hatter, haberdasher, clothier or shoe dealer.

The difference is that we go DIRECT, while they buy through middlemen. We buy in hundred dozen lots while they buy in small quantities. Furthermore, the rental of the exclusive store, and other expenses, is an enormous tax upon profits necessitating higher prices. Here the percentage of selling expenses is reduced to the minimum because our total rental is divided among a great many departments.

We state a fact when we say that Men's Clothing, Hats, Shoes and Furnishings of every kind cost on an average a third more than is necessary, and that the man who wishes to economize to this extent, and yet dress as well as his fellows, can do so by trading at Pardridge & Blackwell's.

To Those Who Love Us Best.

The world is found they say, yet I oft believe it is square. So many little hurts we get from corners here and there. But one sad truth in this world I've learned. While journeying East and West, The only ones we hurt the most are those we love the best. We flatter those we scarcely know. We please the fleeting guest. And deal full many a thoughtless blow to those who love us best.

ELECTRIC CORN POPPER HERE.

Very Different from the Old Time Kind You Held Over a Fire.

The old fashioned wire corn popper in which you pop corn over a glowing fire, is familiar enough, but a novelty is the electric corn popper; in which you pop corn by electricity.

The electric corn popper consists of an aluminum basin with flaring sides, to which is fitted a dome shaped cover of wire gauze; this cover to keep the corn from popping out as it pops, and also to enable one to see how the popping is getting on. To the under side of the basin is permanently attached a resistance coil in which heat is produced when the electric current is turned on.

In one side of the popper are two plug holes. Into these holes you insert the two plugs at one end of a flexible electric wire, the other end of which you screw into the nearest and most convenient electric light socket.

As everybody knows, in popping corn in a wire popper you have to keep the popper moving as you hold it over the fire to keep the corn from burning; to permit keeping it agitated to the same end, the electric popper, which is used on a stand or table, is mounted on wheels.

How a Sidewalk Dog Tots.

The place was the porch of the store, the time was about 10 o'clock in the morning of a summer day, the people were the amiable loafers, and Old Baumgartner. The person he was discussing about was his son, Seffy. I am not sure that the name was not the ripe fruit of his father's fancy—with, perhaps, the Scriptural suggestion which is likely to be present in the affairs of a Pennsylvania German—whether a communicant or not—even if he lives in Maryland.

"Yes—always last, especial at funerals and weddings. Except his own—he's sure to be on time at his own funeral. Right out in front! Hah? But sometimes he misses his wedding. Why, I knowed a fellow—yous all know him, begoshens—that didn't get there till another fellow'd married her—about four or five years after. Wasn't it mornin' a year, boys? Yes—Bill Ehrenkluft. Or now, was it his brother—Baltzer Iron-Cabbage? Seems to me now like it was Baltz. Some sing wiss a B at the front end, anyhow."

Henry Wasseman diffidently intimated that there was a curious but satisfactory element of safety in being last—"fastnacht" in their language in fact. Those in front were the ones usually hurt in railroad accidents, Alexander Althoff remembered.

"Safe?" cried the speaker. "Of course! But for why—say for why?" Old Baumgartner challenged defiantly. No one answered and he let several impressive minutes intervene.

"You don't know? Hang you, none of yous knows! Well—because he ain't there when anythin' occurs—all ways a little late!"

They all agreed with him by a series of sage nods.

"But, fellows, the worst is about courting. It's no way to be always late. Everybody else gets there first, and it's noosing for the fastnacht but weeping and wailing and gnashing of the teeth. And mornin' the other fellow gets considerable happiness—and a good farm."

There was complaint in the old man's voice, and they knew that he meant his own son Seffy. To add to their embarrassment this same son was now appearing over the Lustich hill—an opportune moment for a pleasing digression. For you must be told early concerning Old Baumgartner's longing for certain lands, tenements and hereditaments—using his own phrase—which were not his own, but which adjoined his. It had passed into a proverb of the vicinity indeed, though the property in question belonged to one Sarah Pressel, it was known colloquially as "Baumgartner's Yearn."

And the reason of it was this. Between his own farm and the public road (and the railroad station when it came) lay the fairest meadowland farmers' eye had ever rested upon. (I am speaking again for the father of Seffy and with his hyperbole.) Save in one particular—it was like an enemy's beautiful territory lying between one's less beautiful own and the open sea—keeping one a poor inlander who is mad for the seas—whose crops must either pass across the land of his adversary and pay tithes to him, or go by long distances around him at the cost of greater tithes to the soulless owners of the turnpikes—who aggressively fix a gate each way to make their tithes more sure. So, I say, it was like having the territory of his enemy lying between him and deep water—save, as I have also said in one particular, to wit that the owner—the Sarah Pressel I have mentioned—was not Old Baumgartner's enemy.

In fact, they were tremendous friends. And it was by this friendship—and one other thing which I mean to mention later—that Old Baumgartner hoped, before he died, to attain the wish of his life, and see, not only the Elysian pasture-field, but the whole of the adjoining farm, with the line fences down, a part of his. The other thing I promised to mention as an aid to this ambition—was Seffy. And, since the said Sarah was of nearly the same age as Seffy, perhaps I need not explain further, except to say that the only obstruction the old man could see now to acquiring title by marriage—was Seffy himself. He was, and always had been, afraid of girls—especially such aggressive, flirtatious, pretty and tempestuous girls as this Sarah.

These things, however, were hereditary with the girl. It was historical, in fact, that, during the life of Sarah's good-looking father, so importunate had been Old Baumgartner for the purchase of at least the meadow—be could not have ventured at that time—and so obstinate had been the father of the present owner—he (he had red hair precisely as his daughter had)—that they had come to blows about it to the discomfort of Old Baumgartner; and, afterward, they did not speak. Yet, when the loafers at the store laughed, Baumgartner swore that he would, nevertheless, have that pasture before he died.

But, then, as it fairs, too, were against him, the railroad was built, and its station was placed so that the Pressel farm lay directly between it and him, and of course the "life" went more and more in the direction of the station—left him more and more "out of it"—and made him poorer and poorer, and Pressel richer and richer. And, when the store laughed at that, Baumgartner swore that he would possess half of the farm before he died; and as Pressel and his wife died, and Seffy grew up, and as he noticed the fondness of the little red-headed girl for his little tow-headed boy, he added to his adjuration that he would be harrowing that whole farm before he died—without paying a cent for it!

But both Seffy and Sally had grown to a marriageable age without anything happening. Seffy had become indifferently shy, while the coquettish Sally had accepted the attentions of Sam Fritz, the clerk at the store, as an antagonist more worthy of her, and in a fashion which sometimes made the father of Seffy swear and lose his temper—with Seffy. Though, of course, in the final disposition of the matter, he was sure that no girl so nice as Sally would marry such a person as Sam Fritz, with no extremely visible means of support—a salary of $4 a week, and an odious reputation for liquor. And it was for these things, all of which were known (for Baumgartner had not a single secret) that the company at the store detected the personal equation in Old Baumgartner's communications.

Seffy had almost arrived by this time and Sally was in the store. With Sam! The situation was highly dramatic. But the old man consummately ignored this complication and directed attention to his son. For him the molasses tapper did not exist. The fact is he was overjoyed. Seffy for once in his life would be on time! He would do the rest.

"Now, boys, chust look at 'em! Dogged if they air t' bese like one another! How's the proteeb? Buds of a feather flock wiss one another!"

He would do the rest.

"No, durn him, he ain't no good. Say—what'll you give for him hah? Yere he goes to the highest bidder—for richer, for poorer, for better, for worse, up and down, in and out, swing you partners—what's bid? He ken plow as crooked as a mule's hind leg, sleep hard as a 'possum in winter time, eat like a snake, git left ebery time—but he ken ketch fish. They wait on him. What's bid?"

No one would hazard a bid. "Yit a minute," shouted the old fellow, pulling out his bull's-eye watch again, "what's bid? Going—going—all done—going."

"A dollar!"

The bid came from behind him, and the voice was beautiful to hear. A gleam came into the old man's eyes as he heard it. He deliberately put the watch back in his pocket, put on his spectacles, and turned, as it she were a stranger.

"Gone!" he announced then. "Who's the purchaser? Come towards and take away you property. What's the name, please?" Then he pretended to recognize her. "Oach! Sally! Well, that's lucky! He goes in good hands. He's sound and kind, but needs the whip!" He held out his hand for the dollar.

It was the girl of whom he had spoken accurately as a prize. Her sleeves were turned up as far as they would go, revealing some soft lace-trimmed whiteness, and there was flour on her arms. Some patches of it on her face gave a petal-like effect to her otherwise aggressive color. The pretty dress was pinned far enough back to reveal the prettier petticoat—plus a pair of trimly-clad ankles.

Perhaps these were neither the garments nor the airs in which every farmer-maiden did her baking. But then, Sally was no ordinary farmer-maiden. She was all this, it is true, but she was, besides, grace and color and charm itself. And if she chose to bake in such attire—or, even, if she chose to pretend to do so, where was the churl to say her nay, even though the flour was part of a deliberate "make-up"? Certainly he was not at the store that summer morning.

And Seffy was there. Her hair escaped redness by only a little. But that little was just the difference between ugliness and beauty. For, whether Sally were beautiful or not—about which we might contend a bit—her hair was, and perhaps that is the reason why it was nearly always uncovered—or, possibly again, because it was so much uncovered was the reason it was beautiful. It seemed to catch some of the glory of the sun. Her face had a few freckles and her mouth was a trifle too large. But, in it were splendid teeth.

usual, was his own. He stepped to the adjoining field, and, selecting a clod with the steely polish of the plowshare upon it, threw it at the mare. It struck her on the flank. She gathered her feet under her in sudden alarm, then slowly relaxed, looked slyly for the old man, found him, and understanding, suddenly wheeled and ambled off home, leaving Seffy prone on the ground as her part of the joke.

The old man brought Seffy in triumph to the store-porch.

"Chust stopped you afore you got to be an anchel!" he was saying. "We couldn't bear to sink about you being an anchel—an' wiss the anchels stand—a harp upon your forehead—a crown within your hand, I expect—when it's corn-planning time."

Seffy grinned cheerfully, brushed off the dust and contemplated his father's watch—held accusingly against him. Old Baumgartner went on gall.

"About an inch and a half apast ten! Seffy, I'm glad you ain't breaking your reputation for being fastnachtich. Chust about a quarter of an inch too late for the prize wiss flour on its hair and arms and its frock plumed up to show its new petticoat! Uhu! If I had such a nice petticoat—", he imitated the lady in question, to the tremendous delight of the gentle loafers.

Seffy stared a little and rubbed some dust out of his eyes. He was pleasant but dull.

"Yassin, Seff, if you'd a-got yere at a inch and a quarter apast! Now Sam's got her. Down in the cellar a licking molasses together! Doggese if Sam don't git eberything except his due bills. He don't want to be no anchel tell he dies. He's got fun enough yere—but Seffy—you're like the flow of molasses in January—at courting."

This oblique sauciness made no impression on Seffy. It is doubtful if he understood it at all. The loafers began to smile. One laughed. The old man checked him with a threat of personal harm.

"Hold on there, Jefferson Daffs Bus by 'the child.' I don't allow no one to laugh at my Seffy—except chust me—account I'm his daddy. It's a fight, word the next time you do it."

Mr. Busby straightened his countenance.

"He don't seem to notice—nor keer—'bout gals—do he?"

No one spoke.

"No, durn him, he ain't no good. Say—what'll you give for him hah? Yere he goes to the highest bidder—for richer, for poorer, for better, for worse, up and down, in and out, swing you partners—what's bid? Fat Men and Jobs.

Employment agents say it's about as hard to get work for a fat man as for a gray-haired one. According to their statements, employers of labor hold that a fat man is indolent. They assert that the hustler, the fast, nervous, energetic worker, is sinewy rather than fat, and does 30 per cent. more work than the soft, fat fellow. "It is not uncommon for us to advise fat applicants to diet," said an employment agent, "and reduce their weight before beginning to canvass for a job." So far as recorded, Dr. Osler has expressed no opinion on the expediency of chloroforming men who are running to adipose tissue.

NAAMAN THE
LEPERHe Gratefully Remembers the Little Hebrew MaidSTORY BY THE "HIGHWAY AND BYWAY" PREACHER

(Copyright, 1906, by the Author, W. S. Edson.)

SERMONETTE.

No human greatness or power or riches can blot out the stain of sin.

Leprosy is a type of sin. It is incurable, except as God applies the remedy.

The world's self-treatment for sin will never cure the plague spot of sin. Only the God-prescribed remedy of Jesus' blood can cleanse.

Many Naamans in the world to-day are waiting for the word which will lead them to the place of cleansing for sin. Speak the word as did this little maid that will point to Christ the sinner-bearer.

When in a heathen land and among a strange people the little maid did not forget the true God. When away from home do you leave your religion behind you?

God's gifts cannot be purchased.

The world's gold and silver and fine raiment are not legal tender in buying the blessings of the kingdom of God.

The sinner must accept God's way of salvation if he is ever cleansed from sin.

Many a sinner misses salvation because he willfully makes out the program as to how he will be saved.

The way of cleansing was so simple that Naaman almost missed it. So it is with the way of salvation. It is so easy and simple that many a soul refuses to enter therein.

The great Syrian general had to learn what submission and obedience to God meant before he could obtain the blessing of cleansing and healing. So, it is with every one who would receive of God's salvation. How ever great or mighty he may be from the world's point of view, he must submit his will to God's will and must obey God's word before he can be saved.

When Naaman came to the king of Israel seeking cleansing, the latter knew so little about God and his prophet that he was unable to direct the needy leper to the place of cleansing. To often this is true of the Christian. He is unable because of the low standard of his own Christian life to point the needy sinner to the Christ who can heal.

The dark hour of the little Jewish girl's slavery was made bright by the opportunity it brought her of pointing a needy soul to the true God. So it may be with the Christian. The darkest hour of affliction may be made bright with the kindly service for Jesus.

THE STORY.

WISTFULLY, and with a great heart hunger, the little maid from the vantage ground behind the bushes watched the gay cavalcade start. She had slipped out unobserved, for all the household had gathered to bid good by to Naaman, the lord of the household, who with a great company of servants and soldiers was starting for the land of Israel.

"Oh, I am so glad he is going!" exclaimed the little maid to herself, but but I wish I were going, too! And she began to cry softly to herself, as she had done many and many a night since she had been seized by the Syrian band during one of their raids into Israel, and had been taken into this strange land and sold to this great general.

True, they had been kind to her, but she could not forget her home away back there in Israel. She wanted to see mamma once more and her brothers and sisters. And as she watched her master depart the impulse came to rush forth and beg him to take her back to her home, but as quickly came the realization that she was only a slave girl, and could ask no favors and with a low moan she sank back in her place. But the one comfort which she had had in her loneliness—the thought that the God of Israel whom her mother had taught her to reverence and love would not forget her—came now to help and cheer her, and she crept from her hiding place and slipped back into the house.

More than once during the days which followed the story of Joseph came to her as it had been told to her by her mother, and she had said, over and over again:

"God remembered Joseph, and he will remember me."

And there she was content to let the matter rest. So the days passed, but only once since that first morning when she had spoken to her mistress of the prophet in Israel, who could cure her master, had her mistress spoken to her of the matter, and then it was to remark, rather impatiently:

"Can help come out of Israel, when all Syria and the rest of the world has been searched for a cure?"

"The God of Israel is able to do anything," bravely but quietly, ventured the girl.

"And is he more powerful than the gods of Syria?" was the contemptuous reply. "Why, then, is Syria great and Israel in bondage?"

The little maid made no reply. In fact none was expected, for the mistress dismissed her with an impatient wave of her hand and she left the apartment.

That night the household of Naaman was thrown into the greatest excitement and joy by the arrival of a runner who brought tidings that the master of the household had been healed and was even then on his way back home, and would doubtless arrive on the morrow.

There was little sleep in that household that night, because of the preparations which must needs be made for welcoming Naaman home again. Even the royal household was in a fever of excitement over the joyful news, and the king ordered his chariot ready for the morrow that he might go forth himself to meet the great general on his return.

The wife of Naaman could scarcely contain herself with joy and impatiently watched every detail of the preparations, keeping the servants rushing hither and thither until it seemed as though they would drop from sheer exhaustion.

Upon the little maid fell even a more trying burden, and by the time all the preparations had been made she was utterly tired out, and creeping off to her little couch, she soon fell into a heavy slumber. So deep, in fact, was her sleep, that she did not hear the bugle calls, the shouting and the rejoicing as Naaman with his cavalcade came up to the house and was greeted by the waiting throngs.

The greetings are over. The ceremonies attending the return of the great general are ended. The king has departed for the palace, and the groups of curious and interested people are scattering to their homes.

"Oh, how good it is to have thee back again, and healed!" exclaimed Naaman's wife, when they were alone, and she reached up in a sort of awed way and smoothed the fresh new skin which had taken the place of the unsightly leprosy spots which had shut him away from her for so long.

"Yea, 'tis wonderful," responded Naaman, returning the caress.

"Tell me all about it," she urged. "Yes, yes," he responded, "but first tell me where is the little Hebrew maid that told me of her God and whose God has healed me?" I searched all through the crowds that thronged me on my return, but saw not her face.

"Ah, that is what made thee so preoccupied. I wondered of what thou wast thinking as I saw thee searching the faces before thee, when thou shouldst have been content with but one face."

"Yea, and I am," lovingly responded Naaman, as he in turn patted her cheek, "but I must see the little maid and tell her, too, what great things her God has done for me."

And to the little audience of two the great general of Syria rehearsed like an enthusiastic child the story of his visit to Israel and of his washing in the Jordan seven times and coming out cleansed of his leprosy. And when he had finished he turned to the little maid, and putting his arm about her, asked, tenderly:

"And now what can I do for thee, who has done so much for me?"

The little maid looked up beseechingly into his face, and then looked questioning over at her mistress as she whispered the one word:

"Home!"

And even before the words of assent had been spoken she read the answer of her appeal in the loving, appreciative eyes which beamed upon her.

I should like to have kept her as my own daughter," Naaman said to his wife later in the day as they watched the departure of the little maid for her home, "but Naaman will not forget her."

Recording the Voice.

Dr. Marago of Paris is photographing the human voice, and with a powerful magnifying glass he is able to read the records of a person talking. It is the belief of certain scientists that these voice photographs eventually will take the place of writing and alphabets altogether. Stenography, too, would be abolished. Instead of writing a letter the sender would talk into the microphone, pull out the strip of zigzags when through and post it. Forgery would be out of the question, for it is absolutely impossible to deceive the electric needle, which faithfully records every shade of tone. For books and newspapers the idea is to have a conventional imitation of zigzags of the various vowels and consonants in the form of type, which will be set in lines like ordinary printed matter. Telephone conversations would be as binding as a written contract to day.

Long Wireless Transmission.

Consul Thomas H. Norton of Chemnitz reports that by the Slaby-Arc system of wireless telegraphy over 1,000 words were recently telegraphed from the trial station of the company at Nauert, near Berlin, to the Austrian military station for wireless telegraphy at Korneuburg, near Vienna, a distance of about 372 miles. He adds that this is the record result thus far in the use of the system for overland transmission.
