"I learned a good deal from you in those interviews, but I did have to do a lot of guessing That was a real inspiration of mine, to insist on playing that Helen by night and Helen by day were different personalities, and that, you must not speak to the one of the other. That saved_complications, because you did keep to the compact, didn't you?"

I assented, a little grudgingly; and my thoughts went back with reluctant alind's had not step to those early affairs of mine, which I have already frankly disclosed in this chronicle, and I wondered, with her counterpart before me, how much Helen really meant to me. Rosalind studied me-with her frank, merry eyes, then she-bent forward and addressed me with something of that prescient air with which my sisters used to lecture me.

continue my father, and you and I-

I began stammering some reply, but she recurred abruptly to the serious business that hung over us -

'I knew-you will do what you can Aunt Pat. I wish you would tell her, if you think it wise, that father is here. They should understand each other And Helen, my splendid, courageous, beautiful cousin-you see 1 don't grudge her even her better looks, or that intropid heart that makes us so different. I am sure you can manone all, these things in the best possible way And now I must find my father and tell him that you are going to arrange a meeting with Aunt Pat, and talk to him of our future

She led the way up to the garden, and as I struck off into the road sho waved her hand to me, standing under the overhanging Figuralist proclaim of Hartridge, the compounder, at Rod

Helen Takes. Me to Task.

I paged the breezy terrace at Glewaym, studying my problems, and stambling into now perplexities at eyery turn. My Indement has esually served me loorly in my own affairs which I har generally confided to Good Luck, that most emable of goddesses; and I gluces out upon the lake with some notion, perhaps, of seeing her tairs sail drifting toward me But there, to my vexation, bung the Stiletto, scarce moving in the indolent air of noon There was I felt again, something sin ister in the very whiteness of its pocket-handkeichief of canvas as it stole lazily before the wind Did Miss Pat, in the school beyond the wall, sce and understand, for was the hanging there as a menace or stimulus to Helen Holbrook, to keep her alert in her father s behalf?

"There are ladies" to see you sir." announced the maid, and I found Helen and Sister Margaret waiting in the library.

Sister Margaret, whose brown habit and nun's bonnet had merged into the shadows of a remote alcove.

The brim of Helen's white plumed hat made a little dusk about her eyes Pink and white became her; she but aside her parasof and folded her ungloved hands, and then, as the spoke, her head went almost imperceptibly to one side, and I found myself bending forward as I studied the differences between her and the girl on the Tippe cance Helen's Lps were fuller and ruddier, her eyes darker, her lashes longer. But there was another Claer ence, too subtle for my powers of analysis: something less obvious 15an the length of lash or the color of eyes, and I was not yet ready to give a rame to it. Of one thing I was sure. My pulses quickened before her, and her glance thrilled through me as Ros

What's Your Business?

Don't imagine for a moment that advertising will not bring you recuits in your immédiate field. That's an error that many merchants make, when they assure themselves that their store is so well known that it doesn't require news paper advertising-that the trade will naturally drift his way, anyhow. There isn't a store anywhere in the world that has so secure a footing as that—not a single store—and you are not doing business in a neid but that your sales can be increased by careful newspaper advertising. Il this is not true, why is it that a stream of mail orders is constantly going out of your town to cata logue houses! And are not these catalogue houses the result, of per sistent advertising in the very field you feel that you have cultivated to the limit? Whenever you get such an idea fixed in your mind and really believe that there's nothing more to conquer, you are simply turning over ready money to the man that does possess the broader vision-you are ceding territory and rights to others that careful news. paper advertising would retain in your postession

Helping the Town.

Every town has its advantages and should make the most of them Every town is peculiarly fitted for some one enterprise more than another, and as soon as it is ascertained what would be most conducive to the growth and prosperity of the place the citizens should take bold of the matter and push it for all there is in it. The members of the W. R. C. royally entertained friends Wednesday evening in honor of the 18th anniversary of the organization of the society. A short program was given after which pop corn, candy and apples were served. The principal feature of amusement was a "grabbag" ,which netted the society a little over $4 00 for the flower fund.

Eight little girls were entertained Tuesday alternoon at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ceil McCuliough in honor of their piece, Frances Sutton's, sixth birthday. Various games were played and refreshments served. A novel feature of the occasion was the dainty hand_painted shamrock place cards with each guest's name on. A number of pretty little gifts were received.

LLUSTRATIONS BY RAYWALTERY रक्षणकार्यम् राज्यका स्टब्स्य सम्बद्धाः द्वाराकाराम् । स्टब्स्य व्यवस्थाः SYNOPSIS.

A joung woman cast ashore on a lonely island, finds a schiary inhabitant, a young white man, dressed like a savage and unable to speak in any known inguage. She decides to educate him and mold his mind to her own ideals. She finds a human sheleton, the skeleton Like dog, a Bible and a silver box, which lead her to the conclusion that her companion was cast ashore on the island when a child, and that his name is John Reteil Charnock of Virginia. Near-the skeleton she finds two woman's rings
one of which bears an inscription 'Il rings one of a leading university. Her writings or the see problem had attracted wide attention. The son of a multi-fillionale becomes infatuated with her, and they which no other ceremony than a handclasp they go away together. A 'ew days on his yacht shows her that the man only professed lofty idea's to pressess her.

CHAPTER VI-Continued.

She began to realize how helpless she-was? Under the inspiration of a Under the inspiration of a belief, which was as honest as it was mistaken, she had put herself-in the power of this man Even if she were ashore, there would be no one to sne could appeal, and here on the ship she was helpless. Lingering remains of better things had kept him from the last resort of the tyrant force'-but how long these would be operative in restraint she could not tell She fancied not for long What should she do then?

She saw the end coming when in his anger he resorted to drink, to drink which exploited the last vestige of his philosophy, however he had professed She was frightened beyond measure when she realized the depths to which he had sunk and to which, in spite of berself, he had dragged her What further descent was before her? She did not even yet abandon that philosophy which had served ber so ill She cang to that with the more tenacious pride because of its very weakness but she loathed manking On that yacht he summed up for her the whole human race, and she hated form and it. To what corry plass had a Anolta, bractical exhancate reduced her

She had begged and pleaded with bin to after the eachte course but he had boorn he acold go further couffi into those unknown seas and least her there until she erawled to So the long hows dregged The inecitable rupture diew rer Allust Wenne In its details , it was hourible, but there was in H a great relief affer all

CHAPTER VII.

The Joy of Freedom

One of hit at ofmer she had fied From him. He had been drinking more replay them usual and wes in an ugiv mood fis handsome the was flushed, esarge from a derspread his brow ite had risen driving the meal and with to lay hapds upon her -at list! She had brokin away and carted into the nearest casin, plach happened to be She had closed the door and turned the key against him before he realized vinat she was about. She stood within the little 160m, panting enrag d. tearful, vet reacy to deterd her all and almost glad the crisis had arrived. She could hear his divoken laugh outside the door.

Jaugh outside the door.

Why you little fool?" he cried, 'do you thank I can't neek that look down in a moment? The ship's mine, every man on it's mine. I pay em. They do my bidding. I have you where I want you and I can have you where I want you and I can have you where I all very well in theory, but it doesn't all very well in theory, but it doesn't.

But vinat could she say? Al though the world knew there was no binding the between them, to the offe cers and men of the yacht she was his wife. They would not interfere And if she declared the truth she would put herself beyond the pale of their sympathies Being merely stupid men. with conventional ideas about propriety, in that event they would be less apt to interfere than ever. It was ! true she could do nothing. She sank more of this she could stand and live down on a hassock, clenching -her hands

As she sat, her eyes fell on a chest of drawers screwed against the bulk head The top contained various toilet articles of silver Among them was a picture, the picture of a woman. It impulse she did not stop to analyze. she rose and picked it up " The face let him do it. She shrank a little she looked at was ineffably vulgar and closer together every muscle tense for she looked at was mentally fullgar and common Across the bottom was written in a grayly unformed hand "Your she was a human tigress and her phil-"Your ten in a scrawly unformed hand deroted wife." There way a date ser-osophy was gone. He was too drynk eral years before that heur. Your de to see it, too incapacitated to take voted wife'. She had neen in that varning stateroom before; she had never seen that picture. He had only brought it out since the rupture between them.

And so while entering into this relationship with her, in compliance with principles and ideas which she at least regarded as sacred and holv. Tre-had not been a free man! There was another woman to whom he had been bound. Oh, not by the marriage tie that she disdained, but by the among thieves and which certainly arms, grasping for his throat, struck that. She knew how to run the motor should exist among philosophers And him in the breast. Unsteady on his and flow to steer the boat. She had honor, which was supposed to exist should exist allows philosophers. And and the treet down as if he had been done it many a time.

was added hatred. The combination transformed her. Instead of avoiding, she would seek him. "

He=was still in the cabin. She could hear him muttering thickly to himself. Impulsively she stepped to the door, turned the key in the lock, threw it open and entered the brilliantly lighted luxurious cabin. He had dismissed the attendants some time since with orders not to reappear unless he summoned them, and they were alone. There was no likelihood of any interruption whatsoever The man, who was leaning back in his chair, bent forward when she opened the door. He laughed viciously. If she had reflected, she would have marveled at the change that a few weeks had wrought in one whom she had hitherto deemed worthy of her affecnothing except the business in hand.

"So you've come out, have you?" he stammered triumphantly." "Come of your own free will!" You've found out, have you, that I am master and you are coming to neel?"

He whistled to her derisively, whistled as if to a dog! -

'Who is this?" asked the woman in a voice carefully suppressed, yet which shook with wrath.

She held the photograph in its heavy silver frame up before him.

"That's my wife," he said equably, with no surprise or consternation. "We haven't lived together for some vears." he went on with drunken good nature, "or I'd take you back to San Francisco and introduce you to her."

'Your wife!' exclaimed the woman in that same low, tense voice "Then what am I?'

"My mistress," said the man, blunt ly, throwing the last shred of concealment and decency to the winds, "and a damned obstreperous one at that, he went on.

Then she returned to the cabin and carefully locked the door She glanced at the man as she did so He lay just as he had lain before. She bent over him He was still breathing she noted nore of this she could stand and live with was it legret? But she wasted "But don't be afraid," he went on no time over him. Time was the most with a drunken attempt at reassur- precious of all things to her at that moment

She had a clear and definite plan of action She knew exactly what she sailor's sheath knife fastened to a lanintended to do and how she intended to do it Fortunately the means of escape were at hand They had passed one or two tiny islands during the day, mere treeless spots of sand or coral in the vast of the ocean, prospects-that others more inviting might be raised had caused the man to order the power tender to be got overboard. This was a good, substantial boat, 15 feet in length, broadheamed and built for heavy seas, yet good speed. By his direction the tanks had seen filled and everything overhauled so that it would be in readiness He was by her side now. He for use. The sea was very calm and

She realized now that the fireven, has with what things die faucled she able had happened, that there was no would need, returned to the table, lower room for the of them. edible and portable, without mech re away, although the fire of rage still gard for the alcothes she made it ap in a heavy parcel which she fied with napkins. She remembered that the water tank in the launch had been filled, so that for a time at least she would lack nothing Carrying hag and bundle in her hands and with the boat cloak over her aim and a straw hat tied on her head, after one long look at the man, she turned and went aft and re-entered the starboard after stateroom, her own.

The boat's painter had been affixed on the could see no the painter The boat of course, was see knew what that smile swinging to a long rope. She pulled that the man realized what at this line cautiously, although the effort taxed her strength to the utmost Indeed, she seemed possessed of a fictitious strength for the time being else she never could have ac-complished her hard task. But she managed to get the boat practically under the cabin at last. She fastened the painter to her bed, which was of brass and securely screwed to the floor. Then she cut off the line and tied the bundle of provisions and her bag and cloak to the end of it These she dropped down into the boat. Among the petty articles was a shar, yard. She slipped this lanvard into her blouse. Then she climbed up on the port sill and essayed the dangerous descent herself . She was glad that she was a strong, athletic woman, used to trusting to her own skill and nowers, for it was no easy task to slide down that rope and get into a boat trailing afong beneath the coun ter of a yacht going perhaps 12 knots an hour Fortunately the engine was well aft and the bow of the launch was high out of the water; else her weight would have prossed it, down the back wash from the yacht would perhaps - have swamped the Atany rate, she succeeded, although after she got her foot in the bows she slipped and fell. But that she fell straight aft upon the cloak and bundles she would have burt herself severely. If she had not fallen that way, she had pitched to the right or the left she would have gone overboard Carrying her heavy boat clock she for she knew that she would have died of her fall might have attracted the attention of some one on the deck, but the poop of the yacht was us. ually deserted at night and it was unlikely that any one would be up there her knife and severed the taut rope that held the launch to the yacht. It parted instantly. She was whirled backwards and sideways with a suddenness that again almost threw her out of the boat. For one agonizing moment the launch lay full in the broad beam of light that proceeded from the bright cabin window she had left. For one agonizing moment of suspense she hung there and then the swirl of the wave carried her into the darkness.

She lay directly in the wake of the yacht, and the launch was pitched up and down by the waves made by the rapidly moving ship with a violence of motion that was sickening. There were a pair of oars in the boat, but she did not break them out. She just drew herself-down in the stern sheets and lay there waiting. She knew that the clatter of the motor could be heard a long distance in so still a highf and over so still a sea, and therefore, al-though her impulse was to start it at she restrained berself and waited, watching the yacht rapidly disappear. She could mark her gourse easily by the light from that cabin window. Her ear was keen and she window: Her ear was keen and she listened until she could no longer detect the beat and throb of the steamer's engines. Then she rose and started the motor.

The boat was provided with a compass, and although she could see no star, she was able to set a course which was directly at right angles to the course of the yacht. She realized, or at least she thought so, that she would be pursued. She believed that the yacht would retrace its course She decided that those aboard her would reason that she would endeavor to put as much distance as possible between herself and the yacht, and therefore she would sail straight away rom it. Consequently, she went broad off to starboard at right angles to the other course. The gasoline tanks were both full. Inasmuch as the boat had designed for extended craising in shallow waters, there was enough fuel to keep the motor going for over 10 home at full speed. The motor was capable of developing at least ten knots per hour. By the sarve time comorrow right rhe would be 240 ufles away from the present spot. The Yacht was going 12 knots an hour tier escape would probably not be discovered for ten homs. By that time the yacht would be 120 miles away. They would be 150 wiles apart by oforn lne, pior onted on the hypothense and by night, who could tell? At any rate she hid now done all that she

Her andfillion was desperate; her prospects gloomy beyond expression She was alone in a annil power boat which would be helpless, the spirit of aind and water after perhaps 30] Fours That book was alone la the g eat expinse of the Pacific ocean Sum where about there were islands probably Indeed, on the chaits those seas were dotted with points of land, but they were small, inconsiderable uninhabited, unknown. In that little boat she might pass close by water sufficient perhaps for a week or ten days. After that unless she time and then woke to the fact that and do nonewhere she would drift on she was hingry. Again she satisfied anded somewhere she would drift on until she starved and died. It a storm came, the launch probably would not survive it. Her chances of escape, in and drink, and then putting the past any event, were worse than problem resolutely behind her, hoping and peratical. The end was almost certain in the stern sheets, her hand on the steering wheel, listening to the steady drumming of the motor, seeing the black water broken into foam by the boat's bows flash by her, keeping the launch steady on her course by the aid of the compass needle, her eyes turned ever and anon to the fast diminishing point of light which marked the rapidly disappearing yacht, and she realized that she was free. She had hurled out of her path-and how she exuited in her own prowess; it was something of a salve to her soul for the wretched humiliations which had been heaped upon it she had hurled out of her path and stricken down as any other animal might have done him who had brought her to this awful pass. She was away from him, free from him. She was once more so far as wind and wave allowed, the master of her fate, the mistress of her destiny.

She was glad in her heart, too, that there were to be no physical conse quences from her brief alliance. She did not realize that there were to be other consequences which not even all the water of the seas over which she floated could wash out. There was a strange elation in her soul. She felt as if in some way she had vindicated her right to be. There was something yet in her philosophy and did opporfunity serve, could she get free from the dangers that encompassed her, she vowed that she would prove it.

She was tired and sleepy, but-while the little engine was alive she could not leave it to its own devices. She must hold on her chosen course as long as the motive power remained. She could not lose a moment while that motor throbbed and beat. She must be alive with it. There would be time to sleep when it was exhausted. She must put as many leagues between her and pursuit by holding the direct course as long as was possible.

And so she sat there grimly, hands clutching the wheel through the long day and through the longer night and well into the following morning. It must have been half past ten on the morning of the second day before the motor stopped. The silence, after the ceaseless drumming of a night, a long day, a longer night and a still longer, morning, struck her with the same strange sense of shock. She calculated that the motor had been running for 28. hours and that she had gone 380 miles at least on her course. She had seen nothing whatever of the yacht. The chances that it would pick her up, even if it came about and cruised for her, a loxely speck in the ocean, were millions to nothing. At any rate, she had done all she could. Her philesophy for once stood her in good stead. There was nothing more to be She was dead for want of sleep. The sky had been slightly overcast since she had left the yacht, but there had been no storm and weather conditions looked just as they had and seemed to be permanent.

Taking the precaution to examine the gasoline tanks and finding that indeed they had been drained of the last drop, she carefully closed and locked them, thereby assuring her salvation, and spreading the boat cloak in the stern sheets with her bag for a pillow and her straw hat tied over her face to shield it from the sun, she instantly dropped to sleep.

The coming of the breeze stimulated her imagination. It was a gentle breeze. She noticed that it blew from the direction whence she had come by her compass course. If she only had a sail of some kind the boat would be driven along. She must move somewhere. She had heard of ocean currents and drift but she doubted whether the boat was moving. at least sufficiently fast or in any definite direction to make any difference. Unless she got somewhere, she vould slowly starve and die just where she was. She stepped forward in the boat and examined the oars. There was a sort of a deck forward over the gasoline tanks. She thought that she might make shift with the remains of the painter, of which she had a good length, to fasten one of the cara in an upright position against All night long she stayed awake. President Jefferson was also the recipient of an historic cheese, brought to him all the way from Massachusetts by a six horse team. On the wagon was the regend. The Greatest Cheese in America, for the Greatest Man in America" Jefferson, however, was America" Jefferson, however, was noted for his 'simplicity" and he thought it was opposed to good government for a president to receive girts from anyone, so he maisted on paying the cost of the cheese, which was about $200, and this cheese lasted all Winter

President Van Baren, too, had a monster cheese given to him. He distributed it at a reception and the guests in their excitement split a lot of crumbs on the carpet and then trampled them in, causing so much damage that unlimited cheese at the White House functions was tabooed from that time forth. De farmers eat the proper sort of food? The farmer of today buys a much larger-proportion of the food that goes on the table than he did ten years ago. It's a good thing that this is so because he has a great variety to select from.

He should, however, use great care in selecting for the best results in health and strength.

The widespread tendency in the city to increase the amount of Quaker Oats eaten is due very largely to the recent demonstrations by scientific men that the Quaker Oats fed man is the man with greatest physical endurance and greatest mental vigor.

Farmers should give this subject careful thought and should increase the quantity of Quaker Oats eaten by themselves, their children and the farm hands: 57

Millions of Lives Lost .

An Awful Toll Collected by Consumption. Many Unnecessary Deaths from this Disease.

If people could only understand that systematic catarrh is an lutern al disease that external applications cannot cure, they would not need to be warned so often about this malady, which, when neglected, paves the way oftentimes for consumption, at the cost of millions of lives every year. Yet catarrh may be enred, if the right treatment is employed.

Catarrh is caused by a general diseased state of the system which leads commonly to annoying and perhaps serious local conditions, which may prove a fertile breeding ground for germs of consumption. External remedies give but temporaгу евже..

The only way to successfully treat eatarrh is by employing a medicine which is absorbed and carried by the blood to all parts of the system, so that the mucous membrane of internal lining of the body, is toned up and made capable of resisting the infection of consumption and other diseases.

We have a remedy prepared from the prescription of a physician, who for thirty years studied and made catarrh a specialty, and whose record was a patient restored to health in every case where his treatment was followed as prescribed That remedy is Rexult Mucu Tone We are so positive that it will completely overcome catarrh in all its various forms, Thether acute or chronic, that we promise to return every penny paid us for the medicine in every case where it falls or for any reason does not satisfy the user

We want you to try Revall Mucu Tone on our recommendation and guarantee. We are right here where you live, and you do not contract any obligation or risk when you try Rexall Mucu Tone on our guaran tee We have Revall Mucu-Pone in two sizes, 50 cents and $1.09.
