New Playlets.

Last wlater, when the "Popress of Ogg" was staged here by local talent, H C Chevaller, one of the owners, was attracted by the acting of Charlie Gardner, who took part in the show. He approached thirdner with a proposition to go on the was reached, a play written to fit his peculiar talents, a company engaged to support him and Charlie is going on the road as a star.

It develops that Mr. Chevaller is a "dlacoverer of genius" in the theatriminetrel, who was a clown of ordi nary ability with the Wallace Circus, when Chevaller first saw him, Mar garet Mather, who attracted his attention when a comparative child, while selling papers on the Chicago streets; Blanche Bates, originally a teacher in elocution; James Young, the great Shakesperlan actor, formeriy a reader; Ezra Kendall, a stage hand when Mr Cnevaller-first saw him, became one of our greatest comedians.

There are many more equally well known to fame and he declares that Gardner is, the equal of the best of them and insists that he is the very best portrayer of "rube" character living tođáy.

Charlie' will, star in a beautiful rural comedy entitled, "Them Hend-erson Lids," which was written by Henry Court, the author of "The Witch of Endor," "When Smith Met Smith," "The Empress of Ogg" and other successes, and it fits bim like a glove. Six weeks have already been devoted to rehearsals and several more weeks of steady grind will be put in before the show opens.

It has already been booked in Saginaw, Bay City, Grand Rapida and then Chicago and under the able management of Mr. Chevaller ta Rachel's Birthplace.

The Swiss, it is said, are about to prect a monument to commemorate Rachel's birth in their territory. She was born in the Golden Sun Inn at Muni in the Canton of Aargau, her inther being described in the parish register as "un homme qui colportait." He had been educated to be'a rabbi, but had become a peddler, and drove acros Europe selling soap, ribbons, laces and popular illustrated almanacs. His cart contained his tabily as well as his wares, and it needed to be a large one to do so, for his wife. Esther Haya Fellz, bore him no fewer than sixteen children, though only six of them lived to grow up. The fulness of his quiver was apparently one of the reasons why he gave up peddling and settled at Lyons, where he became a teacher of German, while his wife dealt in indicat cast off clothing

Says State Has Waited Too Long.

The arguments in the case of the stice against the Grand Tinnk rail, road, whereby it is sought to collect about $3,000,000 of inpaid tayes from about $3,00,000 of impair dayes from the company, have been set-for early next month by the circuit court at Grand Rapids. The railroad company has demuured to the bil of complaint filed by the state and the demurrer will be argued and determined before the hearing of the case is taken up.

The railroad company, in its demin rer, claims that the auditor general has no light to fix its capital stock at $7,000,000 and claims that the com pany's property cannot be attached for the uppaid taxes, and further that the state has so long delayed pressing its claim that the statute of limitations now, precludes it-from confecting the amount by litigation. Other objections of a rechnicat nature are also made.

The Kicker.

We hope to go to the realms above when we lie down to die; we hope the choirs all clad in white will greet our wandering eye; we know that we'll be filled with joy in regions free from care, for angels tell us in our sleep there are no lickers there Though rugged be the Jasper pave, no soul shall more complain, though sunlight shine the ages through, no spirit call for rain, though crowns be half a size too small, no seraph tear their hair, and all is joy above because there are no kickers there. Their music may be out of tune, no one will hold his core; the robe may not be tailor made, there'll be no moans and tears; the sandals may be often worn, none ask a better pair; for glory's to the Lord of Hosts, there are no kickers there. And when the Heavenly council calls for paving on the street, the man who gets the contract may work onward swift and fleet, no spirit will injunc tions bring, nor cranks nor croakers awear, the realms_above are free from chumps-there are no kickers there Then take us from this vale of tears where cranks come to the front, where men who never work or toll still lie around and grunt; we long to wear relestful robes and climb the golden stair; for well we has been the guest of Miss Hazel know that in those linds, there are no kickers there diceping Over a- Voicano Nature makes many successful ex-periments in having old dogs, lions, tigers and men go without teeth. As a matter of fact, beauty is the main use of teeth in civilized man. People with bad septic mouths, no matter how wealthy they seem, are sweetly sleeping over a volcano that may blow them into enternity any minute. Say along comes a fierce epidemic of grippe, the bad mouth sets up and swells up the whole face and head and throat and lungs; then septic lung fever, pneumonia and death. And there is the cternal danger of canger from rotten teeth. No teeth are better than bad ones that can't be saved. Grown teeth are all to the good if done right Millions of crowns in people's mouths today without any sore gums or gum boils or abscesses or swelled head and face.

Read Somewhat Peculiar.

That there is not much in a name after all was proved amusingly a day or so ago, says the Philadelphia Times when a prominent business man received a postal from his son and daughter-in-law, saying: "We are on our way to Hell, but it's not as hot as you would expect More than that," to get out of as to get finto. The news came as quite a surprise to the man, as, knowing his son and daughter-in-law, he scarcely pictured them on their way to the infernal regions. It turns out, however, that Hell is a village in Norway of 1,388 inhabitants and is in nowise a rivar to its name-sake "I wouldn't mind it at all," declares the recipient of the news, "If he only hadn't sent it on a postcard."

You are mistaken, sir; my name is Jones, and I live at fort Wayne, Indiana. "Never-mind the name," said Reed, "I got the names mixed, but I remember now where I mer you. You used to run a Yes, I đić." . Then of course you remember me. I am the man that sold pumps and fact, much like his mother in her kept my team at your stable. You

His face was indicatine of criminal tendencies. I was fold that he was a difficult man to approach that he did not care for the compan ionship of men. This being the case was at a loss to determine how to reach him. It was necessary to introduce a stranger in order to carry out the plot I had in view.

After pondering over the matter for come days L hit upon an expedient that I believed would dispose of the young man without public exposure or resorting to crime. There was in my employ at this time a man whom l shall call Reed. 'If ever there was born confidence man he was the one; an actor that could assume a part, live it and play it through with a face as solemn as the graveyard; never vicious, but ever apparently in -arnest while practicing a deception for misleading only those who ought to be misled I had found him on all occasions to be a valuable assistant in furthering the ends of justice.

Reed hailed from the south, had oust arrived in the city and was in quest of a private lodging place. The judge's stepson was now occupying an elegant spire of rooms in a fashionable location. He-was so empletely capti vated by Reed's assumed manners apparent wealth that he was delighted at the opportunity afforded to secure roommate. The detective accepted the offer made by his new friend and soon found himself in quite a novel and dangerous situation. He was the

"I will go down and bring up'a bor As Reed moved away he winked slyly to the judge's stepson. After an absence of some thirty minutes of more Reed returned with the brands He pulled the cork. While Jones was looking out of the window he slipped a small vial out of his pocket and, giv ing his partner an opportunity to see it, he turned the contents into the bottle of brandy. He gave the bottle shake and set it down on the table The judge's stepson's face flushed and there was a tremor in his voice. He seemed to comprehend the noxious power of the venomous ingredient that had been poured into the bottle Reed appeared self-possessed and proficien in the art of deceiving and hold and bad enough to commit any crime

The stepson strove to raily him to his senses. Jones closed his eyes. What might have reen at phastoric overheafed magnation now became a fearful reality. The stepson was now almost paralyzed with fear as Jones slipped from his chair to the floor.

Was he dead or alive? He uttered a low and suppressed moan as his lank and livid body was laid upon the bed and stripped of all its valuables. The stepson, thoroughly in earnest, wanted to take Jones' overcoat, but Reed said it would be dangerous, as it might lead to detection.

I now leave the horrors of this occasion to the imagination of the reader.

The two survivors suddenly left the hotel and crossed over to Jersey City and took lodging at Taylor's hotel; where they registered under assumed names, as they had done previously at the Merchants'. It was late in the vening when they went to bed.

They had left the Merchants' hotel late in the afternoon. Jones, the supposed drugged countryman, was not quite as dead as the judge's stepson thought him to be. He, too, was 2 killed pretender.

Soon after his entertainers had taken their departure he, possum-like, came to life, got up and took a drink from the brandy bottle that was left upon the table, and made his way at once to the government secret service office, where he told the story of his adventure and received further instructions. This so called Jones was a detective of marked ability. He could assume almost any character and de-celve the best educated criminal, yet withal an honest, faithful servant to the government. At an early hour on the following morning at Taylor's hotel "Reed pre tended to be taken suddenly sick with a cramp in his stomach . He left his roommate and went below. A short time afterwards he rushed back into the bedroom and informed the judge's stepson with a trembling voice that they must get out of the place in's hurry or they would be arrested. Reed said that while downstairs he had torn a slip from a newspaper. He handed it to the judge's stepson, who, on glancing at it hastily, at once sprang

It was a sensational article and bore the appearance of having been clipped from a newspaper. As a matter of fact, however, it had been printed at the New York Tribune job office. It was a nice piece of deception and read as follows.

JA Brutal Murder and Robbery.

Another of those optrageous and dastardly murders which have so recently startled 'the community occurred in this city yesterday aftermoor, the particulars of "which are as follows; It sppears that shortly after dark last evening a well dressed man, apparently thirty-fire years of age, was tound by the police lying near the foot of Courtland street in an insensible condition Ho was taken to the police station, where restoratives were administered, and when be had resteed sufficiently he stated that his name was P R Jones and that he was from Fort Wayne,

Mr Innes was removed to the clly hospital fast evening where he be ranie delirious and died about nine o'clock The police are on the track of the fourderers who are supposed to be from Haltimele or Washington, as the clerk at the potel states that they came in just after the arrival of the Waching ton train The clerk is positive he can identify them

A frightful ghost had risen and was standing in its most horrible form be-fore the now half-crazed stepson. The rope of the hangman was looming up before his eyes He did not even take time to wash his face, so great eas his analety to leave New York be hind him. breathed seemed tainted with the foul odor of his crime. It was thought to be dangerous to travel by rail at first, and they started away on foot, and finally concluded to make their way

Reed was, of course, the ruling spirit and was carrying out the plan they had agreed upon. They doubled back and forth with the object of putting imaginary pursuers off the track Reed was seeking delay for the pur-pose of gaining time. When the pair pose of gaining time arrived at New Orleans about the first thing that met their eyes was a handbill posted in the depot describing the fugitives and offering a reward for their arrest and conviction Staring at the bill with beads of perspiration starting upon his brow the judge's stepson nearly collapsed. He was areworn, downhearted and ready to speed away as swift as steam could carry him. In the course of time the fugitives arrived at Brownsville, Tex From this point I received a note from Reed saying that they intended to cross the Rio Grande and work their way to the City of Mexico.

To the minds of the detectives who played their part in this case the whole affair appeared a farce,

After a time Reed returned from Mexico. He had given his companion the slip and was quite positive in his opinion that the judge's stepson would never dare show his face in the United States. He declared the man was about the greatest coward he had ever net with Reed was correct in his opinion, as the fugitive, so lsr as I know, has never been heard of. He certainly did-not appear in Washington to further annoy the judge and his wife, He may still be running from a Nemesia that will never overtake him.

When Orme answered the knock at the door a singular young man stood at the threshold. He was short, why, and very dark. His nose was long and complacently titted at the end. His eyes were small and very black. His mouth was a wide, uncertain slit. In his hand he carried a light cane and a silk hat of the flat-brimmed French type. And he wore a gray sack suit, pressed and creased with painful ex-

No, he could see where the roots of the coarse black hair joined the scalp And there was not the least evidence of make up on the face. Nevertheless, Orme did not feel warranted in giving up the=marked bill-without a definite explanation. The little man was a comic figure, but his bizarre extenor might conceal a dangerous plot. The newcomer bowed with soave dignity.

"Senor Alcatrante? The name is familiar," said Orme, smiling Poritol assumed an air 'He is the minister from my country to these United States." Orme understood This was the wary South American diplomat whose name had lately been so prominent in the Washington dispatches. What vas he doing in Chicago? "I am glad to-meet you," said Orme.

Alcatrante smiled, displaying a rominent row of uneven teets "My young friend" Peritel ' Le be

Or, bungled some important commission if you still doubt him, permit me to It occurred to Orme that the secret of offer you a bill from my own pocket." He drew out a fat wallet.

The situation appeared to be simphiled. And, yet Orme was dubious. There was mischief in the bill; so much he felt sure of. Alcatrante's reputation was, that of a fox, and as for Poritol, he was, to say the least, a person of uncertain qualities. Orme could not but admire the subtle manner in which Alcatrante sought deli-cately to limit his doubts to the mere possibility that Poritol was trying to pass spurious money. He decided not to settle the question at this moment.

"This seems to be rather a mixed up affair. Senor Alcatrante," he said. "Taere is much more in it than appears. Call on me tomorrow morn
