THE O. E. S. PARTY

Delightful Affair Pulled Off Friday Night.

The O. E. S. Masonic party in the rink Friday night was a very enjoyable affair, participated in by ninety-nine couples. The only thing to mar the occasion at all was the horrid condition of the dancing floor. Usually the floor is among the best in the country but this time it was certainly "sticky." The scene made by over upwards of 140 attractive and beautifully gowned ladies gliding about the ball room or enjoying themselves in the cozy corners or lining the sides of the big hall furnished a charming picture.

The grand march was preceded by a very creditable exhibition drill by the Knights Templar, in full uniform, under the direction of Captain Kay.

The supper served by the ladies was simply great and was pronounced to have been just about the best ever.

A number of couples were present from Detroit, Flint, Pontiac, Plymouth, Lansing and other towns.

The GIRL and the BILL

By BANNISTER MERWIN

SYNOPSIS.

At the expense of a soiled hat Robert Orme saves from arrest a girl in a black touring car who has caused a traffic jam on State street. He buys a new hat and is given in change a five dollar bill with "Remember the person you pay this to" written on it. A second time he helps the lady in the black car, and learns that in Tom and Bessie Wallingham they have mutual friends, but gains no further hint of her identity.

Senator Portland, of South America, and Senator Alcarrante, minister from the same country, and some Japs try to get possession of the bill. Two of the latter escape. Orme finds in Mark's pocket a folded slip of paper. He takes the girl whose name is still unknown to him, to the home of a friend in Evanston. He turns to the university grounds. Orme gets in conversation with a guard at the life-saving station. They hear a motor boat in trouble in the darkest of the lake. They find the crippled boat. In it are the Jap with the papers and "Gill". She jumps into Orme's boat, but the Jap eludes pursuit. Orme finds on the paper he took from Mark the address, "241 N. Parker street". He goes there and finds Arima, teacher of Judo, in on the third floor. He calls on Arima, who is a Jap, and the Jap minister enters. Orme finds the papers in a drawer, under the table and substitutes pinning prospectuses for them. The minister is discovered. The girl appears and leaves again after being told that the American has the papers. Orme attempts to get away, is discovered and arrested by Arima and Mark. He comes to the conclusion that the papers are of international importance with a time limit for signatures of that night midnight. The minister is discovered. The girl appears and leaves again after being told that the American has the papers. Orme attempts to get away, is discovered and arrested by Arima and Mark. He comes to the conclusion that the papers are of international importance with a time limit for signatures of that night midnight.

CHAPTER XVI.—Continued.

Presently Orme raised his head and discovered that the houses were thinning out. The car appeared to be heading straight into the open country, and Arima put on more speed. Forty miles an hour was not a high estimate for the rate at which they were traveling.

For several minutes Orme continued in his crouching position. The positions of the stars told him that they were still going west—not south toward Chicago. Every turn of the wheels, therefore, was carrying him farther into unknown territory—farther from the girl and all chance of communicating with her. Surely he must act soon, if he was to act at all; for Arima evidently was proceeding to some rendezvous, where Orme might find himself again in the midst of an overwhelming number of enemies.

But what could he do? Rapidly he turned over in his mind the various courses open to him. Should he be trying to run Arima with a blow, and then reach forward and take the steering wheel before the car could swerve into the ditch?

The blow might not prove effective. In that case, the chances were that Arima would involuntarily swing the car to one side. Then there would be a smash—with death or serious injury threatening both Arima and himself.

Should he try to cut a tire? The feat was almost impossible. In attempting it, he would run great risk of premature discovery, and even if he succeeded in the attempt, the situation would be little changed. The necessity of stopping the car to make repairs might not put Arima in his hands.

The plan he at last decided upon was to throw his left arm around Arima's neck and draw him straight back, trusting that he might be able to get over the seat and set the brakes without losing his grip. The throat of the Jiu-jitsu adept is tough, made so by patient development of neck muscles, but Orme had a strong arm, and he believed, moreover, that Arima would not have time to protect himself by stiffening his muscles before the grip was secured.

The car was skimming along over the turnpike like some flying bird of night. Orme glanced back over the way they had come. A soft electric glow in the sky told where Evanston lay, several miles to the east. Far to the south a greater glow showed the position of Chicago.

Pulling himself erect, Orme leaned forward. It seemed as though Arima must hear him breathe. Slowly he advanced his arm. Then, darting swiftly, he threw it around Arima's neck and drew backwards with a jerk.

The Japanese was taken completely unawares. Uttering a strangled cry, he let go of the steering wheel and clutched at the choking arm that held him, he could not break the grip.

Meanwhile Orme reached for the steering wheel with his free arm. But Arima, kicking frantically, struck the wheel with his foot, just as Orme was about to seize it. The car turned sharply to one side. Into the ditch it plunged.

As the fore wheels dropped into the depression, the body of the car rose in the air. Orme, still clinging to Arima, shot forward. He was conscious, in that fraction of a second, that he must release his hold, or Arima's neck would be broken, so he unbent his arm.

The earth arose and something struck him heavily. He saw a fragment of brilliant stars. Then all was black.

CHAPTER XVII.

A Chance of the Game.

The first impression that came to Orme with returning consciousness was one of impending disaster. His mind was renewing its last thought before it had ceased to work.

Then he realized that the disaster had already occurred, and he moved his arm and legs, to see if they had been injured. They gave him no pain, and he laid himself to a sitting position.

The soft night hovered about him. He heard faintly the jingling of a bicycle, and the distant mournful call of a whippoorwill. The roar of the car was strangely missing. What had become of it? And where was Arima? These were the first questions he asked himself, as he became able to think without confusion.

He now became aware that his head hurt, and raising his hand, he found a large bump under the hair above his right temple. Turning, he discovered that he had been thrown over the fence into a field of thick standing grain, which had broken his fall. His head must have struck the fence in passing.

He got to his feet. At first he was bothered by dizziness, but that soon disappeared.

Climbing the fence, he saw that the car had turned over on one side. At a glance there were no evidences of superficial damage, but it would take a team of horses and some time to right it and get it back into the road. The Japs had been extinguished.

In the ditch near the car lay Arima. One of his legs was bent under him horribly. Orme hurried over to him.

The Japanese was conscious. His beady eyes glittered wetly in the starlight, but he said no word, gave no groan, made no show of pain. Whatever he may have suffered, he endured with the stoicism that is traditional in his race.

"Much hurt?" asked Orme, bending over him.

"My leg is broke," Arima spoke unemotionally.

Orme considered. "I'll send you help," he said, at last. "Lie quiet for a little while, and you will be looked after."

He rose, smoothed out his clothing, and pulled himself together. It was not part of his program to let whomsoever he might meet know that he himself had been concerned in the wreck. In a moment he returned to Arima. "I'll have to have those papers," he said.

Silently the Japanese reached within his coat and drew out the papers. He held them for Orme to take.

"You have me beat," he said. "Spirit told me I must fail."

A picture of the scene in Madam Alla's rooms came to Orme; the darkness broken only by a pinpoint of gaslight; the floating, ghostly forms; the circle of awed believers, with the two Japanese, intent as children.

The medium's work for him had not ended when she helped him to escape. Mentally he remembered his thanks to her; for she had so impressed the fatalistic mind of Arima that he gave the papers over without making necessary a final struggle.

By the size and shape of the papers

Orme recognized them. Nevertheless, to make sure that he was not being deceived, he slid his hands over Arima's coat, and felt in the pockets. He found nothing that resembled the papers he had, so he thrust them into his own pocket.

He now took out his watch. There was not enough light to see what time it was, and he ran his fingers over the dial, as he had done during that time of imprisonment, earlier in the evening. As nearly as he could tell it was ten minutes past nine. He could hardly believe that it was so early.

With a snarl, "Take it easy," to Arima, Orme now started down the road toward the lights of a house, a quarter of a mile ahead.

He had it in mind to examine the papers, to find a clue to the name of the girl's father. The sentiment which had led him to refuse her offer to tell him everything must now be neglected. There might still be time to deliver the papers before midnight, but he did not dare delay.

For one thing, he had only the haziest notion as to his whereabouts. Obviously he was somewhere west of Evanston, but that meant little in an unfamiliar country. He would have to find some conveyance.

Not altogether without sympathy for his fallen enemy, he nevertheless felt that Arima had received no more than he deserved. There had been no hesitation about the different attacks made upon himself. He had provoked, he assumed, unless by the fact that he had the marked bill in his possession. But the calmness with which Arima had endured his final defeat aroused admiration. After all, the Japanese had merely acted under orders. And now Orme's first thought was to get help for him.

He came to the lights he had seen. They shone through the windows of a small farmhouse a few rods back from the road. A short avenue of poplars led to the door.

In response to Orme's knock, the man of the house appeared—a German with sleepy eyes and tousled yellow hair.

"There is an injured man down the road a way," said Orme. "Motor car smash."

"So?"

"His leg is broken, I think. I made

The German shook his head in deprecation of the idea that he wished any return for his services. Meanwhile his long-legged, tow-headed son had come from within and stood gazing behind his father.

"Will you go back to der man mit me?" asked the German.

"No," said Orme.

"So? Vell, all right."

"I'm sorry I can't wait," said Orme.

"I've done what I could, and I have a long way to go."

"Sure! Dat's all right!"

"Then thank you very much. Good-night."

Orme walked briskly to the road and turned west. He felt assured that Arima would be looked after.

Following the road to the first crossing, he turned to the right. In a few minutes he saw the lights of the clubhouse, and a little later he stepped upon the veranda.

Many people were seated in the comfortable porch chairs. The charms of the summer evening had held them after their afternoon of play. Arima, from one of the groups came, the sound of a voice—a man's voice—which Orme found vaguely familiar.

He could not place it, however, and he quickly forgot it in his general impression of the scene.

In this atmosphere of gaiety he felt strangely out of place. Here all was chatter and froth—the activity of the surface-joy of living; but he had stepped into it fresh from a series of events that had uncovered the inner verities.

Here the ice tinkled in cool glasses, and women laughed happily, and every one was under the spell of the velvety summer evening; but he had looked into the face of Love and the face of Death—and both were still near his heart.

He found a servant and asked for the Wallinghams.

"Mr. Wallingham has left, sir," said the man, "but Mrs. Wallingham is here."

"Ask her if Mr. Orme may speak to her."

He smiled rather grimly as the servant departed, for he anticipated Bessie's laughing accusations.

And presently came, an admonishing finger upheld:

"Robert—Orme," she exclaimed, "how dare you show your face now?"

"His Friends Will Make It Right With You."

him as comfortable as I could. Can you get a doctor? The man will rest quiet till a doctor comes. He can't be moved very well."

"Ein doctor? Ja. Es ist one bei Niles Center. Mein son vill go for him. 'Too bad! Too bad! Come in.'"

"No, thank you," said Orme carelessly.

"Was you in der accident?"

"Do I look it?" Orme laughed.

"Nein, you do not look it. Ach! Dese autyomobile! Dey make much harm."

"It is too bad," admitted Orme.

"He was a millinaire, maybe. Dey comes by here so fast, going to Arradale. Hans! Komme her! Ein man is gesmasht. Du must for der doctor go." He turned back to Orme.

"Mein son, he vill go."

But Orme had no ears for what the sympathetic German said. One word had made his heart leap.

"Arradale!"

There he was to have dined with Tom and Bessie Wallingham! He had forgotten them utterly. Were they still at the golf club? Possibly, and, in any event, if he could reach the club, he would be near a railroad.

"How far is Arradale?" he asked.

"Half-miles. Und vere did you say der hurt man vas?"

"A few hundred feet back there."

Orme indicated the direction. "Can I reach Arradale by this road?"

"Next turn—rechts. I vill take der man some scannaps."

"That will be good. His friends will make it right with you."

"Ach! Do not say so!"

"I couldn't help it, Bessie. Honest, I couldn't. I must ask you to forgive and forget."

"That's a hard request, Bob. You have broken two engagements in one day—and one of them for dinner. But never mind. I have a weakness that I acquired from Tom—I mean the weakness of behaving in you. Go ahead and explain yourself."

"It would take too long, Bessie. Please let me put it off."

"Until you can manage a good excuse? You want all the trumps?"

"My explanation is all tangled up with other people's affairs. Where's Tom?"

"He went back to the city early—awfully sorry that he couldn't stay to have dinner with you. There is a committee or something this evening."

"Bessie, you know what I asked you over the telephone? Can you—can you help me?"

"What—now?"

"Yes."

"Why, Bob, what's the matter with you? This is no time of day to make a call."

"It's very important, Bessie. It doesn't concern the young lady alone. I simply must be at her house within the next two hours."

She eyed him earnestly. "If you say that, Bob, I must believe you. And, of course, I'll help all I can."

Orme sighed his relief. "Thanks," he said.

She flashed a speculative glance at him.

"I'm sorry," he said, "that I can't tell you what it's all about. You'll just have to take my word for it."

"Have I asked you to tell me?"

"No, you marrel of womanhood. You are dying of curiosity, I don't doubt, but your restraint is superhuman."

Again she looked at him keenly. "Bob, you are dying of curiosity yourself. Don't you suppose I can see?"

"It's something harder than curiosity," said Orme simply.

"How eager are you?" she laughed.

"Now, there is plenty of time. The trip won't take us more than half an hour; so come along and meet some friends of mine."

"Bessie—if you could hurry—"

"We can't start until the car comes. I'm expecting it any moment. So be good, and come along. There's such an interesting man—and very distinguished. We don't try to pronounce his name. Just think he was engaged for dinner here, also, and came too late. And ever since he arrived he's been called to the telephone at five-minute intervals. So exciting! Nobody can guess what he's so busy about."

She threaded her way through the lively groups on the veranda, and reluctantly he followed. The voice which he had so nearly recognized sounded closer, then stopped with a curious little laugh that was loudly echoed by others.

Bessie broke in upon the lull that followed. "Excellency, may I present another man who missed his dinner?" she said, smiling.

The man addressed was sitting comfortably in a wicker chair that was several sizes too large for him. At the mention of Orme's name he got to his feet with startling alacrity.

"Mr.—Orme?" His surprise was unmistakable.

"Mr. Robert Orme," said Bessie. "Some one struck a match to light a cigar, and in the sudden light Orme found himself looking into the face of the Japanese minister."

"I think I have never met you before," said the minister slowly.

"I think not," replied Orme.

He was much disquieted by the encounter. Now he understood that Arima had been bound for this very place.

If only he had refused to let Bessie drag him into her circle. The minister would not have known his face, but the mention of his name gave full enlightenment.

The minister resumed his seat, and a chair was brought for Orme. There were other introductions.

A woman's voice renewed the conversation. "Excellency, won't you tell us another of your very interesting stories?"

The minister turned to her. "I will tell you one," he said, "that you will not find in the literature of my country. It is a story of the recent service, and it came to me through my personal acquaintance with some of the participants."

Oh, that will be splendid!" exclaimed the woman.

The minister waited a moment. He turned his face toward Orme, and asked politely: "You did not mind listening to what I have to say, Mr. Orme?"

"Why, to be sure not," replied Orme, smiling.

"My stories are not always so light," continued the minister, as the others already knew. But they sometimes told of things which, in my country at least, would be perfectly plain."

After this add bit of by-play, he began his narrative.

"There was a man who lived in the city of Takamatsu, on the island of Shikoku. His name was Kimaga, and he was much respected by all who knew him, for he was painstakingly devoted to his aged and most honorable parents. In trade he was a maker of vases—a what you call him—a potter."

"One day while Kimaga was walking upon the road, he saw before him on the ground a letter. He picked it up. It was sealed, but he discovered upon the outside a curious writing which he could not make out. In fact, Kimaga could not read at all. He was very poorly educated."

"But Kimaga was charm by the grace and beauty of the writing. Though he could not read it, it fascinated his eyes. He decided to keep it, making no attempt to find the rightful owner. You must know that in Nippon beauty is worship by the humblest workman."

"It happened that the letter had been written by a Chinese spy, and it contained a report concerning our fortifications. Now there is in Nippon a very secret service. It is composed of nobles who for many and many a generation have bound themselves by a strong oath to do patriotic service which the government itself might be too embarrassed to undertake. If they are obliged to use extreme measures, and are arrested or cease of war, they have done, they calmly accept the punishment of the law without explaining their actions. Sons of noble houses have been executed for assassinating secret enemies of Nippon, and they have met this fate as their oath demanded."

"Members of this secret service knew about this letter of the Chinese spy. They knew, also, that it had been lost, and before long they learned that Kimaga had picked it up. How they learned all this does not matter. But they also knew that the relations between Nippon and China at the time were of such a strain that their government, not wishing to give cause of war, would hesitate to punish the Chinese spy."

"In the meantime Kimaga had become so enamored of the letter that he could not bear to let it go out of his possession. When he was alone he would feast his eyes upon the beautiful writing. But it was not long before he discovered that men were watching him, and he became filled with fear. Why should he be watched? Had he done a guilty thing?"

"So greatly did the fear swell in him that he decided to take the letter back to the place where he had found it, and drop it again in the road. But when he got to the place and looked for a fast time at the writing, it gave him such longing to keep it that he thrust it into his breast again and hurried back to his shop."

"That night a man came to see Kimaga."

"Are you Kimaga, the maker of vases?" he said.

"Kimaga, all trembling, replied that he was."

"Then," said the man, "I have come to you with high purpose. You have a letter which does not belong to you. Give it to me."

"Does it belong to you?" asked Kimaga, his desire putting armor on his fear.

"That is not to be asked," replied the man. "I am samurai. For the glory of Nippon you must give me the letter."

"But Kimaga did not wish to let the letter go. How do you know that I have it?" he said. "You have not seen it."

"It is enough that I know," said the man. "Three days I follow you. If by then the letter has not been placed on the altar of the war-god, in the shrine of Samiya, then you will be assassinated."

"With that the man went away. Kimaga was now almost dead with fright. For the first day he did nothing but weep. The second day he put on mourning and set his affairs in order. The third day he held the letter in his hand for many hours and filled his mind with the beauty of the writing. He could not give it up. Rather would he die. And at last he placed it in a lacquer box and buried it deep at the foot of the largest cherry tree in his garden."

"He arose to go back into his house, and his head was bowed over with terror. You see, he felt that many eyes were watching him from the nearby walls, and he thought he heard breathings and the whispers of strangers. What should he do now? He dare not advance, he dare not stay where he was. So exceeding frightened was he that he groaned aloud. From all about him came groans that answered his. Once more he groaned, and once more his ears were filled with the answers."

"Then he took one step toward his house. Nothing happened. He took another step, and his knees they shook like the palsy. The breathings and whisperings came, oh, so much nearer now. But he must at his strength put out his foot for the third step. It did not reach the ground before the young man slipped him."

"The next morning his wife found him dead. The letter had been recovered from his body."

The minister stopped and put back in his chair.

"How awful!" exclaimed the woman who had asked for a story.

"Not at all," the minister smiled. "In serving my country, such things must be done. Kimaga should have given the letter. But you think so, Mr. Orme."

"The terrible was quite clear to Orme. He understood the story."

"In America," he said, drily, "we do not worship penmanship."

"But an American might for other reasons keep a letter that did not belong to him."

"Not if he was honorable. His natural course would be to see that it was delivered to the person for whom it was intended. Certainly he would not give it to any man who could not prove his right to it."

"Would he not? But if he were told that he must die—?"

"In that case he would inform his friends of the threats against him, and they would see that his murderers were hanged. Assassination is not popular in America, excellency."

Orme did not attempt to conceal the contempt in his words, and several of the listeners moved in their chairs, betraying their embarrassment.

"Perhaps, then, Mr. Orme," said the minister, "you could favor us with a story which would show the attitude of an American in such a affair."

Orme laughed. "Oddly enough," he replied, "I can give you just such a story—if you all care to hear it."

"Go on," murmured one of the men. "It happened to a friend of mine," said Orme. "He had in his possession a number of proxies, the use of which would determine the control of a certain corporation. While he was carrying these proxies to the country house of the man to whom he was to deliver them, he was attacked by a man who was acting for another faction. This man secured the advantage over my friend and robbing him of the proxies, jumped into a waiting motor car to make his escape."

"And did he escape?" the minister interrupted.

Agreeable Change.

"Yes," said the meek little man at the quick-winch counter. "I take my meals at a restaurant every chance I get."

"Prefer restaurant cooking to the home brand?" asked the big fellow on the adjoining stool.

"No," said the meek little man. "I do," replied the meek little man. "But I can give orders at a restaurant."—Modern Society.

Reciprocity Will Not Pass.

The latest news from Washington is that the Canadian Reciprocity bill will not pass at this session and that the president may call a special session April 4 in an endeavor to crowd it through. The sentiment against the measure seems to be growing every day and the wage earner is gradually joining the agricultural element in the opposition.

The wage earner is beginning to see where he will be benefited. To be sure cattle, sheep and hogs are to come in from Canada free but the duty of $\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound remains on the meat. The laboring man will not want to buy a big fat steer and stake him out in the back yard so as to cut off a hunk of fifteen or eighteen cent beef every day for dinner. To be sure wheat is booked to come in free under the treaty but the laboring man eats flour and not wheat and the duty on flour is left at fifty cents per barrel. The sheep comes in free but the wool on his back after being clipped off is protected by a goodly sized duty and the laboring man is confronted by a duty of forty percent on the clothing he buys for himself and family. Hay, corn and oats is to come in free but the average wage earner is not eating much of those products. The wage earner may possibly buy butter and eggs a trifle less but even that is doubtful except possibly at Detroit. Pork, lard and a few other articles imported from Canada by the rivers who will be the winners? To the Record it looks as if the big beef trusts, pork packers, woolen mills, National Harvester company, automobile factories, etc., would get the big end of it. The farmers are fair in their argument. They say "If you take the duty off flour we produce then take it off from what we buy, or else only reduce the tariff on what we sell and reduce it on what we buy. Don't open our protection markets to Canada and let them take their American money into that country to purchase goods in a free market at a less price by twenty five to forty percent less than ours."

According to reliable authority of the average price paid for a good dinner, the tariff is only gets out four cents. Figure it up. Remove the duty on butter at 12¢ and tell us how much less would the wage earner pay for a meal than he does now.

About Card Parties.

In reading The Record each week as it comes to our home we see mentioned the weekly entertainments of the different card parties. How many mothers belong to the different card parties? Should you say to one of those mothers: "Do you ever think your son will be a gambler?"—her hands would go up in holy horror, and the answer be emphatic: "No! I am raising him different from that." Should the pall of the game of chance fall on that son, do not chide him. Say: "I let him the example by playing cards for a prize," which is the same as gambling. Mothers, your children are jewels the Lord has dropped in your casket. Are you guarding them with the watchfulness and care he requires of you?

Washington's birthday anniversary was fittingly observed by the W. R. C. on Wednesday evening of last week. A very pleasing feature was the program by pupils from the grades in our public school.

Various members of the Corps did themselves proud in readings and song. The evening's enjoyment was heightened by reports of sickness and suffering among members of our order, old soldiers and their families.

Nothing can be good for everything. Doing one thing well brings success.

Doan's Kidney Pills do one thing only. They cure sick kidneys. They cure backache, every kidney ailment.

Here is Northville evidence to prove it.

Mrs. Henry Garfield of Northville, Mich., says: "Doan's Kidney Pills are certainly an excellent remedy and I do not hesitate to recommend them to anyone afflicted with backache and kidney complaint. For a long time I suffered from pain in the small of my back and I had no energy or ambition. I tried various remedies but received no permanent benefit from them. Finally I read of Doan's Kidney Pills and decided to give them a trial. I procured a supply at Murdock Bros' Drug Store. In a short time after I commenced using them, I was entirely relieved."

The above statement was given on November 26, 1906, and was confirmed by Mrs. Garfield on March 6, 1909. She said that her cure had been permanent.

Notwithstanding the Hon. James H. Smith's argument that eleven cent gasoline will never get mixed with nine cent kerosene, the State Oil Department found in a barrel that was under legal test over in Montcalm county last week and this week picked up a whole barrel of fifty barrels in Wayne county. It was all rejected and shipped back to the refinery.

It has been stated by Postmaster General Hitchcock that the federal postal establishment will become self-sustaining before the close of another fiscal year. If this can be accomplished, penny postage for first class mail will become a fact. Indeed, Mr. Hitchcock is almost prepared to assert that one cent postage is in sight as a practical business proposition. Our postmaster must then content himself with reading fewer postal cards.

Your home paper is really a tireless letter writer. If nothing more, week after week we prepare this printed letter for those living here and for those who have moved to some other locality, telling of marriages, births, deaths, the coming and going of people, of business efforts and progress, accidents, crops, improvements, meetings and so on. In fact every thing of importance and interest. If you should undertake to write a letter to an absent friend every week telling him all the news, you would get a faint idea of the task in preparing a newspaper. Many of our townspeople recognize this and take pleasure in handing in items of news, as well as sending the paper to some distant friend.

This Home-Made Cough Syrup Will Surprise You

Stops Even Whooping Cough Quickly. A Family Supply at Small Cost.

Here is a home-made remedy that takes hold of a cough instantly and will usually cure the most stubborn case in 24 hours. This recipe makes a pint—enough for a whole family. You couldn't buy as much as this good ready-made cough syrup for $2.50.

Mix one pint of granulated sugar with 1/2 pint of warm water, and stir 2 minutes. Put 24 ounces of Pinex (fifty cents) in a pint bottle, and add the sugar syrup. This keeps perfectly and has a pleasant taste—children like it. Braces up the appetite and is slightly laxative, which helps a cough.

You probably know the medicinal value of Pinex in treating asthma, bronchitis and other throat troubles, sore lungs, etc. There is nothing better. Pinex is the most valuable concentrated cough remedy in the world. It is a natural healing pine element. Other preparations will not work in this formula.

The prompt results from this inexpensive remedy have made friends for it in all parts of the United States and Canada, which explains why the plan has been imitated often, but never successfully.

Money promptly refunded, goes with this recipe. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. Write to The Pinex Co., 34 Main St., St. Wayne, Ind.

Farmer's Rather Humorous Explanation for Telling Exceedingly "Tall" Story.

Irving Batchelder once told a story of a farmer on the Connecticut hills. "Pretty steep land for planting, isn't it?" a visitor asked the tiller of the soil.

"Pretty steep," the farmer assented. "I suppose it's quite difficult to plant your corn?"

"Quite difficult," came the echo. The visitor was interested, and would not be put off with short replies.

"How do you manage to plant on this hill?" he persisted. The farmer gazed at him pityingly. "We have to shoot it all into the earth with shotguns, stranger," he assured his guest.

The visitor gasped. "Really?" he ejaculated. "Really now? Is that actually true?"

The farmer sighed and turned upon his guest a look of withering scorn. "No, that isn't true," he answered. "I'm trying to make conversation."

A WOMAN'S KIDNEYS

Are Often Responsible for Untold Suffering.

Mrs. August Wittenberg, 1933 Hopkins St., Milwaukee, Wis., says: "Kidney trouble came on me almost before I was aware of it. There was a constant inclination for the kidneys to act and the secretions were contaminated by burning and aching of the back, chest, and glands feeling that up pressed me were almost unbearable and I soon lost all interest in my life."

After this came to my attention it that I felt tired and I used to feel faintly until entirely cured. Remember the name, Beecham's Kidney Pills, for sale by all dealers. For a box, Foster-McClellan Co., Buffalo, N. Y.

The Subtlety of Him
John dear," said "Mabel," as her lord and master entered the house. "I've just had a letter from mother, and she's coming to visit us. It's a pretty expensive trip for little Mabel, and I wondered if we couldn't help her out a little."

Of course we can," said John, giving his wife a generous kiss. "Just you write and tell her that I'll be only too glad to pay for her railroad ticket back home again as soon as she decides to go."—Harper's Weekly

Critics.
"Only competent critics can give competent criticisms," said Admiral Mahan, at the Immortals' recent reception in New York. "The ignominy the critic the ignominy the criticism—even of the very finest things—that he will pronounce."

"A man in a bar was praising a famous American journalist, a justly famous journalist, a journalist who gets out a really fine paper."

"Yes," the bartender agreed, "his paper is a good one. It picked two winners last week."

True Humility.
"I suppose you are tempted to put on airs since you own a motor car."

"I should say not," replied Mr. Chuggins. "A man with a motor car puts in most of his life apologizing."

BECOMES A BISHOP.

Rev. Joseph Schrembs is Consecrated in Grand Rapids.

Before the same altar where 20 years ago he was ordained a priest, and with the same apostolic hands laid on his head, Mr. Joseph Schrembs of Grand Rapids was consecrated auxiliary bishop of Grand Rapids at St. Andrew's cathedral.

This occasion was marked with rare dignity and was participated in by the greatest assemblage of church dignitaries Grand Rapids ever witnessed. The service, which is the most stately and impressive spectacle of ecclesiastical splendor and pomp, reached its climax when Bishop Henry Joseph Richter, of the Grand Rapids diocese, as consecrator, and Bishop Camillus P. Maes, of Covington, Ky., and Bishop John S. Foley, of Detroit, as co-consecrators, wearing their mitres, placed their hands on the bowed head of the bishop-elect and conferred on him the episcopal power which raised him from the priesthood to membership in the American hierarchy, and among the successors to the apostles of Jesus Christ.

Handman Radcliffe Dead.
Donald James Radcliffe, official handman for the Dominion of Canada, died in Toronto, after a brief illness. He was 56 years old, and at the time of his death resided at the home of his mother.

Radcliffe, while resenting the criticisms which were frequently made of his calling, took a certain grim pride in doing his work well. The rope which he employed he bought himself, selecting it with the greatest care. Curiously, this gruesome relic was turned to account by him, for after each execution he was beset by "relic hunters," to whom he sold the hemp as souvenirs.

One hundred and fifty-four times during his incumbency of the office had he sprung the fatal drop. He boasted, however, that in all his career he never hanged a woman.

NEW LINE IN CENTRAL OREGON
Will Open Up 5,000,000 Acres of Government Land.

Portland, Ore.—The long-heralded invasion of central Oregon, by the Hill lines, will become a reality on March 1, when passengers and freight service will be inaugurated between Clark, Wash., off the north side of the Columbia river, and Madras, Ore., 115 miles up the Deschutes valley. The new line will open a fertile and undeveloped territory, which heretofore has been difficult of access for lack of transportation facilities. Settlers have been going in by team for the past few months in great numbers and flying on the free homestead lands. There are 7,000,000 acres of government land that will be made immediately accessible.

DETROIT CONVENTION.

Declared for Reciprocity With Canada, So Did Grand Rapids Dems.

"Certainly the farmers of Wayne county are not feeling very kindly towards County Auditor Milton Oakman over his part at the county convention held in Detroit last week in putting through a resolution favoring the reciprocity agreement with Canada, which soaks the Michigan farmer with a free trade law on what he sells and a protective law on what he buys," said a well known Republican this week to the Record.

"Mr. Oakman is chairman of the Republican county committee, was chairman of the Resolution committee at the convention and his friends say he had the machinery on hand to run the whole works."

The convention was a very harmonious affair on the surface at least and as usual was dominated by the Detroit city strategy board.

The Democratic county convention at Grand Rapids also declared for reciprocity at the same time.

Sound Fraternal Order

Knights of the Modern Maccabees Make Excellent Showing.

Unique Features of this Popular Fraternity Beneficial Society.

The annual statement of the Life Benefit Fund of the Knights of the Modern Maccabees, Dec. 31, 1910, makes a very good showing for this popular home benefit association. The assets, total over $5,000, of which upwards of $34,000 is real estate. It's on a line in the "recess" of

GEO. S. LOVELACE, G. C. Commander for deducting death claims not yet adjusted, is over $432,000.

During the year 1910 it paid 1,650 death claims, amounting to $1,392,500; paid disability claims $63,700.30; and paid old age claims of $107,866.99. Three death claims are resisted and 81 were reported but proofs had not been filed. No claims of any kind in which proofs had been received were unpaid.

Attractive features of the Knights of the Modern Maccabees, many of which are peculiar to this association, are term insurance, whole life insurance, old age annuities, special disability certificates, health and accident certificates. Its rates are based on the National Fraternal Congress Table. An examination of the rates or assessment would indicate that the society does not offer the best of cheap insurance, which has lured to run so many fraternal orders. But offers protection at the lowest rates consistent with safety.

The Knights of the Modern Maccabees, Michigan's own fraternal order, number in their ranks men in every walk of life. The banishment of everything connected with alcoholism from the membership and social functions of the association has made the order exceedingly popular with wives and sweethearts, who appreciate the fact that the social gatherings of the Knights will always conclude with sobriety.

"The Cloister and the Hearth"

The variety of life, the vigor of action, the straightforward and easy mastery displayed at every step in every stage of the fiction, would of themselves be enough to place "The Cloister and the Hearth" among the greatest masterpieces of narrative; while its tender truthfulness of sympathy, its ardor and depth of feeling, the constant sweetness of its humor, the frequent passion of its pathos, are qualities in which no other tale of adventure so stirring and incident so inexhaustible, can pretend to a moment's comparison with it unless we are foolish enough to risk a reference to the name of Scott—Swinburne.
