

THE NORTHVILLE RECORD.

Vol. XLII. No. 45.

NORTHVILLE, MICH., FRIDAY, JUNE 9, 1911.

$1.00 Per Year in Advance

THE CLASS OF 1911

WHO WILL RECEIVE THEIR SHEEPSKINS AT THE NORTHVILLE OPERA HOUSE JUNE 22.

BIG EVENTS FOR JULY 4

AUTO PARADE WILL BE ONE FEATURE.

Business Men Will Take Charge of Up-Town Doings.

A well attended meeting of Northville business men was held at Jas Huff's store Monday evening to discuss the feasibility of a "good old fashioned" July 4th. (athletic sports, industrial parades, orations, fireworks, etc., etc.) The enthusiasm expressed at this meeting was something out of the ordinary and it is now up to the weather man to do his part.

The name of "Business Men's Booster Club" has been suggested by one of the local chairman and the necessary funds are being subscribed in a pleasing manner to the various committees. Any co-operation or contributions from the people of Northville would be heartily appreciated and accounted for in a business like manner by the committee on finance.

The following are the various citizens' committees:

General chairman—Jas. A. Huff.
Finance—C. A. Ponsford.
Decorations—N. C. Schrader.
Athletic sports—T. B. Bristol.
Parades—W. J. Lanning.
Fireworks—W. L. Tinsam.

Entertainment—L. A. Babbitt, B. A. Northrop, E. H. Lapham.
Advertising—L. L. Brooks, Dr. T. B. Henry, J. W. Perkins.
Jas. A. Huff, C. A. Ponsford, C. B. Bristol, committee of co-operation with Northville Driving Club.

The auto parade will be one of the events of the Fourth of July celebration. The Driving Club propose to pull this off at one o'clock. The benzine wagons are to assemble at the school house, unless otherwise later noted, and headed by the Northville band in the four head autos will drive to the race course. The club will offer a prize or two for the best decorated car and also three prizes for the slowest half mile on high speed gear. Ladies or girls as a part of the car decorations will be admitted free. N. C. Schrader is chairman of this committee. All neighboring towns invited to participate.

The Athletic sports will be held on Main street in the forenoon and there promises to be a lot of doings. James Huff is chairman, with Mr. Ponsford and Mr. Bristol as assistants. The business men are taking hold of this end of it and they will also furnish the fireworks for the evening.

The ball games and horse races and balloon ascension (four balloons are obtainable) will be the best that talent and money can procure. All under one big tent and all for the fourth part of a dollar, with all the up-town sports and fireworks free of charge.

VILLAGE TAXES NOW PAYABLE

The tax roll for the Village of Northville, for the year 1911, is now in the hands of the treasurer at the Lapham State Savings Bank. Taxes may be paid on or before August 1st 1911, without any additional percentage for collections.

They will make their home in Hudson where the groom has a position.

Second Count on June 28th

$10 in Gold Goes to the Candidate Who Makes the Largest Gain in Votes Since the First Count.

The time for the next count is fast approaching and with it interest in the result is growing daily more keen with a friendly rivalry among the contestants for first place. The remaining days will witness an active campaign for more votes. New subscriptions are coming in and the merchants are having wide and active demand for the merchant coupons.

If you are not a subscriber for the Record now is the time to start, or if you owe now is the time to pay. You have no doubt a friend among the contestants who would be delighted to have your votes.

Ten dollars in gold is worth considerable effort and then energy put forth to secure this, lands the winner much nearer success in the finish when the piano will be awarded. There is nothing worth while obtaining in this world without energetic and thoughtful effort.

One of the beauties of this contest is that none are disappointed: there are many prizes. It is a time when you can ask your friends to show their friendship in a substantial way by assisting you.

The count on June 28th will be decisive as to the $10 but its importance must not be overlooked for your standing on that occasion is a sort of barometer to your following of friends, and if you win it will be the result of yourself and friends.

The Record has the laudable ambition to improve right along and to regularly go into every home in Northville and vicinity; to stand for and promote those things which will be for the good of the community and to wield as great influence as possible for the upbuilding of the town we are justly proud of.

Others were nominated but as yet received no votes. These young ladies should by no means be considered out of the running as all have been doing some work and they will make the contest interesting for those who already have a good start.

Remember that many of our leading merchants are interested in this contest and give 25 vote coupons with every dollar purchase. Also, those who do not fully understand the rules and regulations of this contest can call at this office or write us and we'll be pleased to go over the proposition with them.

Names in Samoa.

Travelers visiting Samoa are perplexed at first by the fact that many boys bear feminine names, while girls as frequently have masculine names.
The visitor learns after awhile, however, that this confusing use of names instead of being due to ignorance is in reality the result of a native custom which is highly poetic.Thus if a girl is born soon after the death of a brother the latter's name is given to her in the belief that his spirit and all his good qualities have been transferred to her. On the other hand, if a boy is born after the death of a sister he takes the latter's name and, as the Samoans believe,
all her lovable traits become his.WESTERN CANADA
BEYOND THE PIONEER STAGELiberty-Loving People Have All the Liberty the Heart Can Desire
Under Canadian Laws.The New York Commercial of April 19th contained an interesting article on conditions in Western Canada. The following extracts will prove instructive reading to those who contemplate moving to Canada. The writer speaks of land at $5. to $18 an acre.
As a matter of fact, there is very little land that can be had now at less than $18 per acre, but when one considers the productive qualities of this land it is safe to say that in two years' time there will be little available land to be had at less than $30 an acre. Already the free grant lands in the open prairie districts are becoming exhausted and the homesteader has to go farther back to the partially wooded areas. This is no drawback, however. Some prefer this land to the open prairie. A recent publication, issued by the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, Canada, and which is forwarded free to applicants by mail by any of the Canadian government agents throughout the United States, says of the newly-opened districts:Water is always abundant, wood and fuel are plentiful and the soil that can grow the poplar and the willow as well as the rich grasses that are to be found there can be relied upon to produce all the small varieties of grain with equal success. The New York Commercial article referred to deals more particularly with conditions along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific, but what is said of one line of railway may with truth be said of the land and the conditions along both the Canadian Northern and the Canadian Pacific. The article says:"It would be no exaggeration to say that practically all the land along the entire distance traversed by the Grand Trunk Pacific system is capable of furnishing homes to those who engage in farming. The lands are of three classes. They may be designed, first, as having special adaptation to the production of grain; second, as having such adaptation to mixed farming, of which live stock will form an important feature, and third, as being mainly adapted to the production of live stock only. On the third class of lands the area is not very large, of the second it is much larger and of the first it is by far the largest.""As soon as mixed farming shall be generally adopted, land that may now be obtained for from $5 to $18 per acre, and even lands open now to free homesteads will sell for $20 to $100 per acre. This is not an extravagant statement. It is natural for this to be the case, fully equal to that of the American corn belt. In variety of production they excel them, and yet the latter sell for $100 to $200 per acre. In addition to the prairie cross-grass grown of wheat, oats, barley and rye, much of the land will grow winter wheat when properly prepared. Eighty per cent of the land will grow clover and alfalfa. A still larger percentage will grow field peas, and the entire tillable area will grow good crops of the cultivated grasses, timothy, bromus grass and western rye grass. With these elements what can prevent this region from becoming the main source of food supply of the Empire and Imperial dominions?"Special stress is laid upon the educational conditions. The writer says:
"The foundation of the social fabric of the agricultural country may be said to rest on the efficiency of its school system. Liberty-loving people have all the liberty the heart can desire under Canadian laws. In this regard Western Canada has a system of education based upon the best that can be obtained from the United States or Eastern Canada. Its school system and regulations are second to none. Every boy or girl has a school house brought to his or her doorway.
The government is most liberal in its support of higher education. In Winnipeg, Saskatoon and Edmonton are to be found excellent colleges and universities, so that the problem of higher education is solved. The provincial agricultural schools, located at Winnipeg and Saskatoon, give practical courses in scientific farming, preparing graduates to take up the responsibilities of farm life.""The newcomer, settling in this favored section will find the social conditions far beyond a pioneer stage.
He will find help on every hand. Instead of his going to the 'jumping-off place,' as is often supposed when thinking of Western Canada, he will find himself surrounded by wonderful opportunities for social advancement in a new country fraught with promise."Privilege.

Threw It Far Out Into the Water.

SYNOPSIS.

Philip Cayley, accused of a crime of which he is not guilty, resigns from the army in disgrace and his affection for his friend, Lieut. Perry Hunter, turns to hatred. Cayley seeks solitude, where he perfects a flying machine. While soaring over the Arctic regions, he picks up a curiously shaped stick he had seen in the assassin's hand. Mounting again, he discovers a yacht anchored in the bay. Descending near the steamer, he finds a girl on an ice floe. He learns that the girl's name is Jeanne Fielding and that the yacht has come north to seek signs of her father, Captain Fielding, an Arctic explorer. A party from the yacht is making search ashore. After Cayley departs, Jeanne finds that he has dropped a curiously shaped stick. Captain Planch and the surviving crew of his wrecked whaler are in hiding on the coast. A giant ruffian named Roscoe had murdered Fielding and his two companions, after the explorer had revealed the location of an enormous ledge of pure gold. Roscoe then took command of the party. It develops that the ruffian had committed the murder witnessed by Cayley. Roscoe plans to capture the yacht and escape with a big load of gold. Jeanne tells Fanshaws, owner of the yacht, about the visit of the sky-man and shows him the stick left by Cayley. Fanshaws declares that it is an Eskimo throwing stick, used to shoot darts. Tom Fanshaws returns from the searching party with a sprained ankle. Perry Hunter is found murdered and Cayley is accused of the crime but Jeanne believes him innocent.

"I might have saved him," he murmured brokenly, "if I had not hung aloft there too long, just out of curiosity; if they had been men to me instead of puppets. But when I guessed what their intent was, I was done before I could interfere. I saw him going backwards over the brink of a fissure, in the ice, tugging at a dart that was in his throat. And when they had gone—his murderers—"

"They?" she cried. "Was there more than one?"

"Yes," he said, "there was a party. There must have been ten or twelve at least. When they had gone I flew down and picked up that stick, which one of them had dropped. And to think I might have saved him!"

Her hand still rested on his arm. "I'm glad you told me," she said. She felt the arm stiffen suddenly at the sound of Tom Fanshaws's voice.

"Jeanne, take your hand away! Can you touch a man like that? Can you believe the lies?" but there, with a peremptory gesture, his father silenced him.

But even he exclaimed at the girl's next action, for she stooped, picked up the bloodstained dart which lay at Philip Cayley's feet, and handed it to him. "Throw it away, please!"—she said, "overboard, and as far as you can."

Even before the other men cried out at his doing the thing—she had asked him to, he hesitated and looked at her in some surprise.

"Do it, please," she commanded; "I ask it seriously."

Tom Fanshaws started out of his chair; then, as an intolerable twinge from his ankle stopped him, he dropped back again. His father moved quickly forward, too, but checked himself, the surprise in his face giving way to curiosity. At a general hint, Jeanne Fielding knew what she was about.

Philip Cayley took the dart and threw it far out into the water.

There was one more surprise in store for the two Fanshaws. When Cayley, without a glance toward either of them, walked out on the upper landing of the accommodation ladder, the girl accompanied him, and, side by side with him, descended the little stairway, at whose foot the dinghy waited.

"You are still determined on that resolution of yours, are you, to abandon us all for the second time—all humankind, I mean? This later accusation against you was so easily disproved."

"Disproved?" he questioned. "That beautiful faith of yours can't be called proof."

"I meant just what I said—disproved. They shall admit it when I go back on deck. Won't you—won't you give us a chance to disbelieve the old story, too?"

"I can never explain that now," he said; "can never lay that phantom, never in the world."

"I am sorry," she said holding out her hand to him. "I wish you'd give us a chance. Goodby."

This time he took the hand, bowed over it and pressed it lightly to his lips. Then, without any other farewell than that, he dropped down into dinghy and was rowed back to the floe—back to his wings.

When she returned to the deck she found that Mr. Fanshaws had gone around to the other side of it to see the sky man take to the air.

But Tom sat, rigid, where he was. For the first time that she could remember, his was regarding her with open anger. "I know," he said, "that I shall never like Hunter, though I never could see why you should dislike him, and it didn't take two minutes to see that this man Cayley, with his wings and his romance, had fascinated you. But in spite of that, I thought you had a better sense of justice than you showed just now."

She flushed a little. "My sense of justice seems to be better than yours this morning, Tom," she answered quietly. Then she unsling her binoculars again and, turning her back upon him, gazed out shoreward.

"I am getting worried about our shore party," she remarked, as if by way of discounting the quarrel. "If there are ten or twelve men lying there, in hiding from us, willing to do unprovoked murder, when they can with impunity—"

"So you believed that part of the story, too, did you?" Tom interrupted.

She did not answer his question at all, but turned her attention shoreward again.

A moment later she closed her binoculars with a snap, and walked around to the other side of the deck, where Mr. Fanshaws, leaning his elbows on the rail, was looking out across the ice-floe.

"Well," he asked briskly, as she came up and laid an affectionate arm across his shoulder, "I suppose you've been telling Tom why you did it—why you made Cayley throw that dart away, I mean; but you'll have to tell me, too. I can't figure it out. You had something in mind, I'm sure."

"I haven't been telling Tom," she said. "He doesn't seem in a very reasonable mood this morning. But I did have something in mind. I was proving that Mr. Cayley couldn't possibly be the man who had committed the murder."

"I suspected it was that," he said. "It's the stick that proves it really," she said. "You remember how puzzled you were because the end of it which you held it by wouldn't fit your hand? I discovered why that was when you sent me in to get it a short while ago. It's a left-handed stick. It fits the palm of your left hand perfectly. You'll find that that is so when you try it. And Mr. Cayley is right-handed."

The old man nodded rather dubiously. "Cayley may be ambidextrous, for anything you know," he objected. "She had her finger ready; 'But this stick,' Uncle Jerry, dear, was made for a man who couldn't throw with his right hand, and Mr. Cayley can." He did it perfectly, easily, and without suspecting at all why I wanted him to. Don't you see? Isn't it clear?"

"It's quite clear that the brains of this expedition are in that pretty head of yours," he said. "Yes, I think you're right." Then, after a pause, he added, with an enigmatical look at her: "Don't be too hard on Tom, my dear, because you see the circumstances are hard enough on him already."

She made a little gesture of impatience. "They're not half as hard on him as they are on Mr. Cayley."

"Oh, I don't know," the old gentleman answered. "Take it by and large, I should say that Cayley was playing in luck."

CHAPTER VI.
Tom's Confession.

At intervals during the day those enigmatical words of Mr. Fanshaws recurred to the girl with the reflection that they wanted serious thinking over, at the first convenient opportunity. But the day wore away and the opportunity did not appear.

The captain of the yacht—his name was Warner—was on shore in command of the searching party, but the first officer, Mr. Scales, remained on board. He was in possession of all the data, though they had not told him the story of Philip Cayley's old relation with the murdered man.

"It stands to reason," he said, "that the only party of white men that could be here would be the survivors of the Fielding expedition. We know from the news that young Mr. Fanshaws brought aboard that there is one such survivor here. If there were any considerable number of them left, able-bodied enough to walk across the glacier, we could be sure they'd be here on the shore waiting for us. We could be certain they would have made some attempt to signal us as soon as they sighted us."

"If they weren't white men but Indians—Chukotes—they'd have been quite as glad as white men to get a chance to go back with us as far as St. Michaels. And in the third place, if they were not Chukotes, but some strange, unknown, murderous band of aborigines, there wouldn't have been even one survivor of the Fielding expedition."

"Of course that's not an absolute water-tight line of reasoning, but it seems to me there is a tremendous probability that it is right, and that this flying man has lost his wit."

By four o'clock they had decided that whether or not the sky-man's story might be true, it was high time to send a relief party ashore to find the lost ones.

At five o'clock accordingly, the relief expedition went ashore, and Tom Fanshaws and the girl were left alone on the yacht.

Two hours later, perhaps, after they had eaten the supper which Jeanne had concocted in the galley, they sat, side by side, in their comfortable deck chairs, gazing out across the ice floe. The evening was unusually mild, the thermometer showing only a degree or two below freezing, and here in the lee of the deckhouse they hardly needed their furs.

They had sat there in silence a long while. Tom's promise that they would keep a brisk lookout against a possible attack on the yacht, had passed utterly from both their minds. It was so still—so dead still; the world about them was so utterly empty as to make any thought of such an attack seem preposterous.

Finally the girl seemed to rouse herself from the train of thought that had preoccupied her mind, straightened up a little and turned for a look into her companion's face. But this little movement of her body failed to rouse him. His eyes did not turn to meet hers, but remained fixed on the far horizon.

A moment later she stretched out a hand and explored for his beneath the great white bear skin that covered him, found it and interlocked her fingers with his. At that, he pulled himself up with a start, and abruptly withdrew his own from the contact.

She colored a little, and her brows knitted in perplexity. "What an odd bear you are, Tom," she said. "What's the matter today? It's not a bit like you to sulk just because we disagree about something. We disagree all the time, but you've never been like this to me before."

"I always told you I was a sullen brute when things went wrong with me, although you never would believe it," he said. "I'm sorry."

"I don't want you to be sorry," she told him; "I just want you to be a few shades more cheerful."

He seemed not to be able to give her what she wished, however, for he lapsed again into his moody abstraction. But after a few minutes more of silence, he turned upon her with a question that astonished her. "What did you do that for, just now?"

At first she was in doubt as to what act of hers he referred to. "Do you mean my hand?" she asked, after looking at him in puzzled curiosity for a moment.

He nodded.

"Why—because I was feeling a little lonesome, I suppose, and sort of tender-hearted, and we'd been about half-quarrelling all day, and I didn't feel quarrelsome any more, and I thought my big brother's hand would feel—well—grateful and comforting, you know."

She was curious as to why he wanted the explanation, but she gave it to him unhesitatingly, without the faintest touch of coquetry or embarrassment.

"I can't remember back to the time," she continued, "when I didn't do things like that to you, just as you did to me, and neither of us ever wanted an explanation before. Are you trying to make up your mind to disown me, or something?"

He leaned back moodily into his chair without answering her.

After a little perplexed silence, she spoke again. "I didn't know things were going wrong with you. I didn't even suspect it until this morning, when Uncle Jerry said—"

"What?" Tom interrupted. "What does the governor know about it? What did he say?"

"Why, nothing, but that you were playing in—rather hard—luck, he thought, and that I was to be nice to you. Is the world going badly—really badly—really badly?"

"Yes." That curt monosyllable was evidently all the answer he meant to make. At that she gave up all attempt to console him, dropped back in her chair and cuddled a little deeper down under her bear skin, her face, three-quarters away from him, turned toward that part of the sky that was already becoming glorious with the tints of sunset.

"You've never had any doubt at all, have you, that I really deserved the job of being your big brother; that I was that quite as genuinely as if I had been born that way?"

"No," she said, "of course not, Tom, dear. What put such an idea into your head?"

He paled a little, and it was a minute or two before he could command the words he wanted, to his lips. "Because of my hopes, I suppose," he said unsteadily; "because I had hoped, absurdly enough, for the other answer. You asked as a joke a while back if I meant to disown you. Well, I do, from that point of view—because, I'm not fit for the job, because—because I've come to love you in the other way."

She looked at him in perfectly blank astonishment. He would not meet her eyes, his own, their pupils almost parallel, gazed out, unseeing, beyond her.

Slowly her color mounted until she felt her white face burning. "I didn't know," she said. "You shouldn't have let me go on thinking—"

"I didn't know myself until today," he interrupted her stormily. "I didn't know I knew that. But when I say you put your hands on that villain Cayley, I wanted to kill him, and in that same flash I knew why I wanted to."

Turning suddenly to look at her, he saw that she had buried her face in her hands and was crying forlornly. "Oh, I am a brute," he concluded, to have told you about it in this way."

"What does the way matter? That's not what makes it hard. It's loving you so much, the way I do, and having to hurt you. It's having to lose my brother—the only brother I ever had."

There was a long, miserable silence after that. Finally he said, "Jeanne, if you do love me as much as that—the way you do, not the way I love you, but love me any way—could you—could you—marry me just the same? I'd never have any thought in the world but of making you happy. And I'd always be there; you could count on me, you know."

"Don't!" she interrupted curtly. "Don't talk like that, Tom." She shivered, and drew away from him with a little movement somewhere near skin to disgust.

He winced, at it, and reddened. Then, in a voice that sounded curiously thick to her, curiously unlike his own, he asked a question. "If I had told you all this a month ago—told you how I felt toward you, and asked you, loving me the way you do, to marry me just the same, would you?"

"Oh, I suppose you would have refused. But would you have shuddered and shrunk away from me—like that?"

"Did I shudder and shrink away?" she asked. "I didn't know it. I wasn't angry; I'm not now. But—that was a terrible thing you asked of me."

"Would it have struck you as horrible," he persisted, "if I had asked it a month ago?"

"Perhaps not," she answered thoughtfully. "I've changed a good deal in the last month—since we sailed away from San Francisco and left the world behind us—our world—and came out into this great white empty one. I don't know why that is."

"I know." He was speaking with a sort of brutal intensity that startled her. "I know. It's not in the last month you've changed; it's within the last 24 hours, it's since you saw and fell in love with that murderous lying brute of a Cayley."

"I don't know," she said very quietly, "whether you're trying to kill me love I have for you—the old love—or not, Tom, but unless you're very careful, you'll succeed in doing it. I don't think I want to talk to you any more now, not even sit here beside you. I'm going to take a little walk."

His Eyes Did Not Turn to Hers, But Remained Fixed.

He held himself rigidly until till she had disappeared round the end of the deckhouse. Then he bent over and buried his face in his hands!

What the thing was that roused him to his present surroundings he never knew. He was conscious of no sound, but suddenly he sat erect and stared about him in amazement. It had grown quite dark. It must be two or three hours since Jeanne had left the chair beside him and announced that she was going to take a little walk.

He spoke her name, not loudly at first, for he thought she must be close by. But the infinite silent spaces seemed to absorb the sound of his voice. There was no sign that any sentient thing, except his very self, had heard the words he uttered. Then he called louder.

The steps were rather difficult to negotiate, but by using both hands to supplement his one good foot, he succeeded in creeping down the stairs, and then in making his way along the corridor to the girl's door.

He knocked faintly at first, then louder, and finally cried out her name again, this time in genuine alarm. He tried the door, found that it was not locked, and opening it and peering in on a light, perceived that the stateroom was empty.

He heard footsteps crossing the deck overhead. No, that could not be Jeanne, it was a heavy tread, a curious, shuffling tread.

He closed the door behind him. Then he slipped slowly down the corridor toward the foot of the companionway. The heavy tread was already descending the stairs.

He turned the corner, stopped short and gasped. And that was all. There was no time even for a cry. He had caught one glimpse of a monstrous figure clad in skins, huge in bulk, hairy faced like a gorilla.

And then, the man or beast had, with bestial quickness, lifted his arm and struck. And Tom Fanshaws dropped down at his feet, senseless.

CHAPTER VII.

The Rosewood Box.

On the girl, Tom Fanshaws's passionate, stormy avowal had the effect of a sort of moral earthquake. It left the ground beneath her feet suddenly unstable and treacherous, it threatened to bring down about her ears the whole structure of her life. The very thing she had been proud for her and security against outside troubles and dangers, was, on the instant, fraught with a greater danger than any of them.

For the first few moments after his avowal she had felt no emotion other than that of astonishment and incredulity. Even when he asked her if she could not marry him, anyway, though the question revolted her, she told the truth in saying that she was not angry.

The anger came later, but it burned into a flame that was all the hotter for its tardiness in kindling. It must have an outlet somewhere, and as such, the promenade up and down the other side of the deck was altogether insufficient.

The sight of a small boat at the foot of the accommodation ladder seemed to offer something better. So, pulling on a pair of fur gamdets, she dropped into it, cast off the painter, shipped the pair of light oars, it contained, and rowed away without any thought of her destination—of any destination whatever; without, even, a very clear idea of what she was doing. She must do something; that was all she knew. Certainly she pulled away from the yacht's side, with no idea that she was running into any possible danger.

It was half a mile, perhaps, from the yacht to the particular bit of shelving beach toward which she unconsciously propelled the boat. She rowed steadily, without so much as a glance over her shoulder, until she felt the grate of the shingle beneath the bow.

She became aware, not only that she had unconsciously come ashore, but also that the yacht was nowhere to be seen. A bank of fog had come rolling in from the eastward, so heavy as to render an object 100 paces away totally invisible. The clump of empty buildings here on the beach could hardly be half that distance, as she remembered, yet looking round from her seat in the row boat, she could make out no more than their blurred masses against the white fog and sand which surrounded them.

She scrambled out of the boat and pulled it high up on the beach. The fog made the air seem cold, though for the Arctic it was a mild night. Two of the abandoned buildings on the beach behind her were mere sheds, windowless, absolutely bare, never having served evidently, any other purpose than that of storage. But the third, and largest, as she remembered it, offered a shelter that was becoming attractive. There were some rude bunk beds in it where she could rest comfortably enough, and, unless she was mistaken, Scales had left in the hut a half-burned candle which they had used in exploring its dark interior. She had a box of wax vestas in her pocket. She could go in there and make herself at home, and at the same time keep an alert ear for a hail from the yacht.

She found the candle in the place where she remembered Scales had laid it down, struck a light and wedged the candle into a knot-hole. She turned toward one of the bunks with the idea of stretching out there, and by relaxing her muscles, persuade, perhaps, her overstrung nerves to relax, too.

She had taken a step toward it, indeed, before she saw, through the murky and candle smoke, the thing that lay right before her eyes—a rather large, brass-bound rosewood box or chest. It had not been here in the afternoon when they had entered the place, for they had searched its bare interior thoroughly in the hope that there might be something which previous investigators had overlooked. This box, six inches high and a foot long, or more, could not have been here then. It was standing now—the most conspicuous thing in the room—in the very middle of the bunk.

Need for Two Collars.

Having bought a dog that he admired a Washington Heights man undertook to buy a dog collar. The dog had a neck nearly as big as his head and the dealer advised the man to buy two collars.

"What for?" said the man. "He's got only one neck, so I guess he can get along with only one collar, can't he?"

"Maybe so," said the dealer, so the man went away leading the dog by his new collar and chain.

In less than a week he brought the dog back.

"I'm afraid I can't keep him," he said. "He is too obstreperous. I can't keep him tied up. His neck is the biggest part of him and he is as strong as an ox, therefore it is a sin for him to slip his collar off."

"That is why I wanted you to take two collars," said the dealer. "Put both on and fasten the chain to the back collar and he can tug away all night without getting loose. He won't commit suicide, but he won't get loose."

LEARNING TO LIKE POETRY

Dean of Salisbury Points Out the Way in Which a Taste For It May Be Cultivated.

"I have no patience with the dean of Salisbury in a recent address, 'with people who ostentatiously say they do not care for some of the best products of the human mind. If you have not at present a liking for poetry,' added the dean, 'then wait a moment.'"

But how? Clearly a poet who is generally acknowledged to be a true poet, the speaker went on to say, and then every day even if it be but for five minutes, read a page carefully noting every suggestive word and visualizing every scene. "The important word in that advice is the word 'carefully.' Poetry must be read carefully or it will be better read. Its beauties should be looked for, for the subtlest and sweetest beauties are not those that hit you in the eye. Read carefully and read honestly. Don't for heaven's sake, make any pretense of enjoying something you do not enjoy or of seeing beauty that you do not see. Better far never read a line than to do that. But hunt for something that really appeals to you and when you find it tie it to you and make it yours. If it is nothing more than a happy phrase. You will be surprised to find how quickly you will grow adept in the search for such beauties even as a schoolgirl grows adept in the search of four leaf clovers or an archaeologist in the search for flint arrowheads—Current Literature

MILKERY IN COURT ROOM

Modern Hats Conceal the Eyes of Women Witnesses, so They Must Be Taken Off.

When designing styles in hats possibly milliners do not consider that small minority of womankind that is likely to appear in a law court. Judges, lawyers and women witnesses would appreciate it if they did.

"When a woman under suspicion takes the oath it is desirable to look her in the eye," said a lawyer, "but how can anybody look into the eye of a woman who has on a stylish hat? The court is in luck if he can see her mouth and the top end of her nose. Also it offends the dignity of the court for a woman to remove her hat; consequently they flounder between the horns of a very serious dilemma. An order to tilt her hat back is also the precursor of difficulties, because the hat is clamped down with so many pins that it won't tilt.

"Still the eyes of a woman before the bar of justice must be looked at, and under repeated exhortations she reluctantly removes the pins and shoves her hat back. But that pantomime results in waste of time and loss of temper all around. In order to obviate these evils it seems to me that milliners would better busy themselves designing a tipable hat for court-room wear.

WINDY MOVING PICTURES

If They Were Taken When the Air Was Still They Would Look Absolutely Dead.

"What rates the wind blow so much in the moving pictures?" The question is asked by almost every one who has been bitten by the bug of the moving picture show. It is a fact that in every scene where there is a breeze, a chance of getting up a breeze it blows a tornado, or at least a brisk gale disperses itself in the trees in the background and the skirts of the bareheaded heroine in the front.

A moving picture man solved the problem.

"That's easy," he replied in answer to a query. "If the pictures were taken when the air was perfectly still, then if the living characters happened to be still also the picture would be as dead looking as a 35-cent chrome of 'Twilight.' So a time is selected for photographing the scenes outside when the wind is playing old hob with things generally, trees swaying and skirts fluttering and hair flying—haven't you ever noticed how much more effective a woman is when her hair is streaming behind her like the burgee on a racing yacht? Then, too, when everything's busy moving it looks like there's something doing all around.

W. R. C. Notes.

(By Press Correspondent.)

The next meeting of the Corps occurring on Flag Day, June 14th, the program for the evening will be of a patriotic nature. There will also be short services in Memorial for deceased members.

This brings the 134th anniversary of the adoption by the continental Congress of the Stars and Stripes as the flag of the United States of America. It may be interesting to know something of the first flag hung to the breeze. In the early part of 1777, the British army was planning to conquer New York State, a part of their forces under command of St. Leger laid siege to Fort Stanwix, which stood on the location of the present City of Rome, N. Y. On the 6th of August the garrison attacked a part of St. Leger's camp and carried off five British flags which they hoisted up—down on their ramparts, and high above them, raised a new flag which had been adopted by congress the June previous. It was the Stars and Stripes and was made of a piece of blue jacket, some stripes of a white shirt and some scraps of old flannel. This flag consisted of seven red, and six white horizontal bars, with a union of thirteen white stars in a circle on a blue ground.

In 1792 the number of stripes was increased to fifteen, because of the admission of Vermont and Kentucky to sisterhood of states. In 1818 the original number of stripes was restored. These stand for the original thirteen colonies and for each new state admitted, an additional star is added to the blue field.

In all the wars in which our country has been engaged the flag has been carried gallantly by our soldiers and sailors who have defended it at costly sacrifice to serve ever as an emblem of a free people.

It is most fitting and proper that we should teach our children to love and reverence their country's flag and every loyal Corps member is urged to observe 'Flag Day' by flying the colors from her home.

Memorial Exercises.

Some special features of the exercises occurring on Monday, but of necessity omitted in the notes of last week, are worthy of note. The proper marking of graves with substantial flags and decorating with flowers was all, or nearly, completed on Monday afternoon preceding Decoration day.

By courtesy of Messrs. Cattermole, Parmenter and Neal, automobiles were tendered the delegations in charge. Mr. Neal accompanied the delegation south to Briggs and Waterford cemeteries, where two graves in the former and nine in the latter were visited. Thence to Oakview where twenty of Union and two of Mexican soldiers were marked. Rural Hill's graves numbered thirty-five, all of which were marked and decorated.

The north delegation, with marshal band, and conveyed by Messrs. Parmenter and Cattermole, went direct to Novi where Past Commander Geo. F. Goodell had provided an interesting program by the school. Following these exercises a line of march was formed for the cemetery where the ritualistic ceremonies were performed. Twenty-nine graves of '61 and three of 1812 soldiers were visited. The efforts of Mr. Goodell and the school were not only much enjoyed but highly appreciated by the citizens of Novi and Allen M. Harmon Post as well. Knapp and Yerkes cemeteries were then visited in the order named and six graves in the former and five in the latter were marked with flags and decorated with flowers.

The Boys' Idea of It.

A few days ago little John, three years old, who is very fond of his pets, noticed that his young rooster had a comb. In a very distressed tone of voice he exclaimed: "O, papa, somebody has made nicks in my rooster's head."

Rescue the aching back. If it keeps on aching, trouble comes. Backache is kidney ache. If you neglect the kidneys' warning, look out for urinary trouble—dropsey. This Northville citizen will show you how to go to the rescue. Mrs. John Raymond, Linden Ave., Northville, Mich., says: "I used Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at Murdock Bros., Drug Store, and they did me a wonderful amount of good. I suffered from dull, dragging backaches, felt tired and languid and had no strength of energy. I was unable to rest well and in the morning on arising my back was lame and sore. Doan's Kidney Pills helped me from the first and soon after beginning their use, the disagreeable symptoms of my trouble disappeared. I can recommend Doan's Kidney Pills as a remedy of great merit in cases of kidney complaint."

FARM HOUSE UP IN ICELAND
Typical Structure of Turf in the Guest Room of Which Was an Organ Made in Vermont.

The guest room, contained a buffet, a big round table and an organ made in Hattlesboro, Vt. Our host produced the usual box of snuff, and with it a box of good cigars.

The host and hostess then showed us all over the house. It is a turf structure and is typical of the older farm houses, with narrow, dark, windowless corridors, in labyrinthine maze from room to room. One passage leads to a large open mound where a fire is made to smoke meat and fish, and incidentally the whole house and everything in it. Another passage leads to another kitchen with a modern stove. The walls are all of turf, as is the roof with just enough drift wood in the roof to make a framework to hold it in place. Very steep stairs lead up to the badstofa, or sleeping apartment. The badstofa frequently forms the sitting and common work room of the family, especially in winter as well as the sleeping room of the entire household.

Bunks built into this wall extend around the room and are often filled with seaweed or feathers, over which is thrown a fold or two of wadmal and a thick coverlet of elderdown. The floors are sometimes covered with birch bark. From the ceiling are suspended numerous articles of domestic economy, while large chests containing clothing and valuables are scattered throughout the house.—Springfield Republican.

Trees of Liberty.

The last of the Trees of Liberty, several of which were planted in Paris to commemorate the revolution in 1848, is no more. The little tree, planted with much ceremony, flourished and became one of the tallest in Paris. Of later years the Tree of Liberty was only a tree of liberty in theory, for it was really a prisoner surrounded by houses, and these year after year have increased in height, making the struggle of the tree harder, and death has been the conqueror. The roots, however, spread and became a danger to a house of eight stories, so in its attempt to rival the house in height the tree was vanquished and has fallen to the axe of the tree feller.

ORIGIN OF OUR CALENDAR

Story of the Year and Its Days, as known Constituted, Told Once More

The Julian year consists of 365 1/4 days and exceeded by 11 minutes 14 2/3 seconds the solar year of 365 days 5 hours 48 minutes 46 seconds. In consequence of this the equinox in the course of a few centuries tell back considerably. In the time of Julius Caesar, it corresponded to March 25 and by the sixteenth century it had retrograded to March 11. It was at this time that a physician of Verona named Giraldi proposed a plan for amending the calendar. He died before he had opportunity to carry it forward, but his brother presented it to Pope Gregory XIII., who assembled a number of learned men to discuss it. It was passed upon favorably and adopted, and thus was given to the world what has since been known as the Gregorian calendar. In 1582 Gregory issued a brief, abolishing the Julian calendar in all Catholic countries, and introducing the reformed one.

The reform of the Gregorian or new on the Julian or old, consisted in dropping ten days after October 4, 1582, so that the 15th was reckoned immediately after the 4th. Every one hundredth year, which, by the old style was a leap year, was to be a common year, the fourth century, divisible by four, excepted; that is, 1600 was to remain a leap year, but 1700, 1800 and 1900 were not to be reckoned as such, while 2000 was to be reckoned as such.

In this calendar the length of the solar year is taken to be 365 days 5 hours 48 minutes and 46 seconds, the difference between which and the true length is immaterial.—The Christian Herald.

Old Custom Survives.

Uckheld has just held its annual pea supper, a function which owes its origin to a practical joke. Fifteen years ago a plot of land belonging to a resident became, on account of its neglected state, such an eyesore to his fellow-townsmen that they took the matter into their own hands and dug it up. The owner resolved to profit by their labor and plant the field, but on his next visit to the spot he found to his annoyance, that it had already been sown with peas.

Soon, however, anger gave place to amusement, and he laughingly told the perpetrators of the joke that they would have to eat the peas, says London Titbits. This in due course they did, and from that day the celebration has grown yearly in popularity. Over 50 sat down a week back to a capital repast of peas, bacon and other excellent fare.

Teacher Made Chinese Boys Fight, That Being Only Fault She Knew How to Correct.

The teacher who tried to throw all his pupils into his because that was the only thing he knew how to do, his little counterpart in the young Sunday school teacher who was transferred to do Chinese quarter from an Irish neighborhood where fighting was about the only original sin she had been called upon to rebuke. All the formulas warranted to slay the fight microbes were known to her but since Chinese boys have yet to learn that fists were made to fight with her one accomplishment lay fallow. Each lad, she was positive, was reeking with snore Oriental wickedness, but that was much harder to tackle than the rampant Irish-American variety she had been used to. At last she managed to stir up a real fight between two Chinese youths, but before much damage had been done the mission superintendent interfered and rebuked her for allowing so much bad blood to come to a head.

"But what could I do?" she said, helplessly. "I just had to let them fight. They all seemed to be scolded for something, and that is the only thing I knew how to correct them for."
