Detroit's Awful Streets.

Some one ought to tie Detroit's public works' commission in an automobile or wagon and run him up and down Grand River avenue from the boulevard, west to the city limits. A public officer who persists in such half-headed, long-eared tactics as he is for four years ought to be relegated to the dump heap in such a way as to teach him a lesson that he is not really the lord of all creation. The half-mile of street is still impassable the major portion of the time and the tax payers' money in dumping tons of payments and other rubbish thereon and then covering it with calcium of chloride, than it would have taken in the first place to put down a nice gravel road. It seems the commissioner has plenty of authority to make this place of road worse all the time but when it comes to bettering it, he complains he has no authority. The half-mile of road in question is still a disgrace to the county of Wayne and the whole state of Michigan. Evidently Detroit has gotten used to it but the balance of the state is entitled to some consideration. The Detroit Board of Commerce ought to have been camping out on that stretch of the city's thoroughfare Saturday and Sunday and viewed no less than a dozen auto stacks in the mud and huge ruts, and then to have another trip down to Monroe to inspect the people who are supposed to be good roads.

May be the worst of the city's thoroughfares. The road is in such a state of disrepair that it is almost impossible to travel on it. The city officials should be ashamed of the way they have allowed the road to get into such a state of ruin.

MARY STUART'S BLACK PEARL

Story of Accidental Recovery of the Scottish Queen's Necklace in a Little Shop

A remarkable story appears in a Paris newspaper of the discovery of the black pearl necklace of Mary Queen of Scots which disappeared on February 5, 1577. We give the story as follows:

A lady crossed had a mishap with the cord of her necklace while touring in the city of Paris. The lady went to a jewelry shop and the shopkeeper, having a suitable cord, told her he would take the stone from an old necklace which he wore from her.

She, being struck with it, said she would buy it at the price asked—25 francs—and as best she could for a cord. On reaching her lodgings the lady cleared the pearls and was struck with their beauty.

The lady's next procedure was to submit the necklace to an expert jewelry, who pronounced the pearls to be of very great value, and the Paris contemporary from which we have taken the story, says they are worth at least $15,000, adding that on the day of the execution the unfortunate queen of Scots divided among her women who attended her, ornaments and jewels, including the necklace of black pearls. How it passed into the hands of the ancestors of the shopkeeper is a mystery.

Men's Inhumanity to Man.

Others, like one in New York, fare much worse. The magistrate told his no word of genius to which the human heart and soul have not sooner or later responded.—James Russell

LIFE IN THE AGES GONE BY

According to Standards of Living, Wages Were Good in the Fifteenth Century.

Good work and honest dealings were exacted by each guild of its members, and their laws against adulteration and the like were almost cruel in their severity. In the year 1546 two grocers were burnt in Nuremberg for adulterating saffron and spices. A similar instance occurred at Augsburg in 1492. In some towns makers who did not properly bake their bread were shut up in a basket fixed to the end of a pole, and soured
to the bottom of a pool of dirty water as many times as were thoughts necessary to reform and make better tradesmen of them.

Wages, judged by what the money would buy, were good in the fifteenth century. In South Germany the average price of beef was about half a cent per pound, while the daily wages of carpenters and masons, in addition to their keep, amounted to about eight cents a day. In Saxony the same workmen earned, besides their keep, nine cents per day. In addition to this the workman was given a certain sum each week to pay for the expense of washing himself. This wholesome gratuity was known as "washing money." In every town there were the needful arrangements for bathing, both in winter and summer; and it was a customary thing for the guilds to demand for their workmen a holiday once, a fortnight, and sometimes oftener, for the purpose of bathing.

At the beginning of the sixteenth century a day laborer could earn, besides his keep, 22 cents. A pair of shoes cost him seven cents, a sheep ten cents; a fat hen about one and one-half cents; 25 codfish, ten cents;
a wagon load of firewood, delivered, 12 cents; an ell of the best homespun cloth, 12 cents; a bushel of rye, about 15 cents.—From "The Story of School Notes.

[By a Pupil.]

Emily, Draper is back in the Fifth grade again.

Boys' Basket Ball prospects look good at present.

Ruth Yerkes is a new pupil in the Kindergarten.

Clarke Curdies spelled down the Seventh grade last week.

The First graders are enjoying their new drawing books.

So far this year the Fourth grade
has had but one tardy mark.

There has been no tardiness of absence in the Sixth grade this week.

Shirley Hafmon is absent from the Second grade on account of her eyes.

Mrs. Glenn Richardson visited the Sixth and Seventh grades Wednesday.

Regular High School orchestra
practice every Tuesday and Friday nights after school.

Several of the First grade pupils
who were out on account of sickness
are back in school.

For the month of September the "Popular Mechanics" was the most used magazine on our rack.

Frances Croes, one of the superintendent's former pupils at South Lyon, renewed acquaintance Tuesday morning.

We neglected to mention last week
that a brand new cupboard or book case fills an empty niche in the Fourth grade. It is for Miss Cole's benefit.

The Meteorology class are again ranging opposition to the weather bureau—making their predictions from 12:20 p. m. to 12:30 p. m. They are making pretty good guesses too.

Friday, Sept. 29 occurred the annual reception to the teachers and new pupils of the High School.

Fruits of various kinds were served and a very good time was reported by all.

Our new State Libraries have arrived and to the present time we have let out 150 copies. These new arrivals makes it necessary for us to call on Mr. Van again for a slight change.

The members of the Agricultural club are testing seeds, and volunteers from this class will test any kind of next year seeds for farmers.
If the latter will bring them to the school house this will furnish material for the class and will also help the farmers.

The first meeting of the Literary society was called to order by Mr.
Fletcher.

The following officers were elected:
Pres. Van, President
Hazel Kell, Vice President
Howard Stewart, Secretary
Marjorie Shuler, Treasurer

Executive Committee, Don Baker,
L. Della Mordock, Hester Power and Ludie Wheeler.

The Angry Man—I see the scoundrel in your face.
The Calm Man—That's a personal reflection.

Circumstantial Evidence.

A Scotchman and his wife were visiting in a wild, beautiful part of the country. While driving one day with their host, the two men sitting together in the front seat while the lady sat behind, they crossed a high bridge which spanned a roaring torrent. An unusually loud splash caught the gentleman's attention for a moment, but nothing was said. After several miles the gentleman, turned to address a remark to his wife, but her seat was empty.

"Are," he remarked to his host, "that will be you splash we heard."—Houskeeper.

An Exacting Situation.

"Doctor," said the nervous man, "Is there any way of having a piston to talk in his sleep?"

"I never heard of any," replied the physician. "How could such an accomplishment be of benefit?"

"It's either that or insomnia for me. My wife is one of the best snoring speakers before the public. She always rebukes her outbursts at home, and I've got to say 'hear hear' or 'that's the stuff' at least once every ten minutes."—Washington Star.

"I positively and absolutely refuse!" cried the candidate with great emphasis.

"Refuse what?" asked the campaign manager.

The Genevieve Who Lost a Flavor

Do you remember when you were a sturdy, freckle-faced Jimmy-boy or a baby Jenny-girl, about as high as the table, and they had strawberries for supper? Didn't you always save the biggest and reddest and most beautiful for the very last bite?

Of course you did. So did I. So did everybody.

Well, so did the Genevieve I am going to tell you about. And so, especially, did James.

This James was from the country a very, very few years back, with a university and law school between him and the days when he used to be engaged to a dear little girl down in the home neighborhood. But now he was engaged to Janey, was this very tall and handsome James, who had the most wonderful eyes, with the glinting blaze of the true sapphire in them, and black hair and broad shoulders, and a smile that would wipe the birds off even blackberry bushes, full of fruit, and a voice—well, a voice that was just the point.

Janey was little, and sweet, and loving, and very, very clever—far more clever than James thought she was at the time. But not with the cleverness that keeps such a James as her permanent possession.

This was the cleverness possessed by Genevieve, who lived a few blocks away, and who flirted her eyes at James when she saw him, because it was her nature to flirt her eyes when she saw a perfectly nice James about.

So, when his heart began to beat curiously at Genevieve and her flirt eyes, James was not pleased. He heart of them seemed to be dying, for James occasionally cast those glinting eyes of his elsewhere, and felt few qualms about it. But still he said "Come and let us," because she was in his set and it was pleasant that way. Love her? Why—certainly.

Then, as she felt him drawing a bit away from her, Genevieve held out a coy hand to James. And after a time James said: "I have waited a long time, Genevieve." And Genevieve said: "You need not wait any longer, James."

They both expected a thrill, but it failed to materialize. Genevieve got busy with her trousseau, which was of an elaborateness, and James was the soul of devotion. But they were both waiting for the flavor of that big strawberry, and they couldn't seem to catch it. Then James whispered to himself: "This isn't the biggest, this is just the sizes we have been having for several years; wait till we are actually married."

Genevieve wasn't thinking so much about the strawberry because she had all those clothes of hers on her mind. But even at that she could occasionally smack her lips at the spoon and—miss it.

Well! Then came the great day, and the church, and the six bridesmaids, and the matron of honor—Genevieve was about the last of her set—and the touching incident that gave heart interest to the occasion and love-copy to the society editor—for James, as well as Genevieve, now belonged to quite the first flight—but always, was James watching for the flavor of the big strawberry.

It might come when he slipped the ring on—but then he was sweating with horror because he had almost dropped it. It might come when the "Voice That Breathed O'er Eden" wafted them down the aisle—but then he was cold because he had just been kissed by his mother-in-law, who wore false teeth. It might come when he put Genevieve into the carriage and took his seat beside her, his own wife—but then they were slipping rice and old shoes and the rice got down his collar. No flavor to the big strawberry yet.

And they came back from their wedding tour, their honeymoon, and their bliss were still undyed from the pure of that biggest of all strawberries. And that's about all.

Except that, of course, it would never do for Genevieve to think about Another, nor yet regret those years before she told James "Yes." It is at this point in the story that you know your mind of course.

And James, who is a man of affairs, and public opinion, and—yes, and never in that bird's nest, must never cast a glance over his shoulder at the Janey girl he used to be engaged to, and who is living a brave and useful life—but all alone. That would be very wrong. And still less would he give a twinkle of those now dull, blue eyes, of his farther and farther back to the red lips of the girl out in the country, the girl whose little doubtless ring is in his box of remembrances, because she sent it back to him when he had been two years at college and grew careless about writing to her.

But, surely, they can think about the fruit crop of this great land of ours and what makes it seem to go queer things after arriving at a certain stage of ripeness?

It was the very finest berry in the dish and now the old thing tastes just like a sandwich and no strawberry at all. "Maybe Genevieve doesn't say this out loud. Very often Genevieve does not say such things out loud; they only feel them in the weary, sorry hearts of them."

"The berries are losing their flavor this year," mutters James to his empty plate. "That big fellow looked fine, the one I saved to the last—just as I used to do when I was a kid. But there wasn't a bit of flavor left. It tasted just like—just like—ashes."

And James scowls at his plate a bit and then shakes his broad shoulders and thinks to himself: "There couldn't have been any such flavor at all, I am sure. It was just because I was a kid."

Me? I like my berries with the dew on them!

No Vacancy for Him.

"We once had a night clerk who was an Englishman," said a New York hotel manager. "You know the call lists, the sheets on which are recorded the hours at which guests wish to be awakened in the mornings, are made out in rows of 7 A. M., 7:30, 8:00 and so on. Well, one night a lot of people had left calls for 7:30 when a man came up to the Englishman and said he wanted to be awakened at that hour. The clerk looked down the list and found that all the lines under 7:30 had been filled. He said to the visitor:—

"Really, I am very sorry, sir, but we haven't another vacancy for 7:30. But we have some under 7 and 8."

HALLOWEEN SUPPER.

A Halloween supper is the time when one may let the taste for the unusual and striking run riot. The more bizarre, the more effective. The center piece may be a pumpkin or a squash hollowed out in basket form and heaped with peaches, grapes, pears and apples, with grape leaves for a background. The candles may be set in sticks made of the large end of a carrot, and the salad dishes may be small cabbages, gourds or green peppers.

This is the season for nice hens and ducks, if they are obtainable; a most delightful dinner with these delicious birds for the piece de resistance may be served.

For refreshments to be served later, apples, doughnuts, coffee, elder, popcorn balls and roasted chestnuts will surely find something suited for all.

For a chafing dish supper one might have hot cheese sandwiches, olives, vanilla ice cream with maple and nut sauce and chocolate cake.

Another, a rarebit on toast, celery salad and fruits.

Another, tomato soup, corn cysters, bread and butter sandwiches, olives, pineapple spunge and tea.

Spanish Toast.—Peel as many good-sized tomatoes as there are people to serve. For six, tomatoes add three green peppers cut in rings, one small onion chopped and a tablespoonful of finely chopped parsley, a teaspoonful of salt and a dash of paprika. Simmer until smooth and thick. Have ready rounds of toasted bread well spread with butter. Place on each a spoonful of the tomato and finish with a poached egg.

Mushrooms are an ideal supper dish served on toast or in ramekins. Before the fall frosts come too late to nip them, they may be found in abundance in pastures and boggy places.

In Bed Seven Weeks With Terrible Kidney Trouble.

A. Dearth, Main St., Camden, O., says: "I was in bed seven weeks with kidney trouble and grew worse in spite of all the doctor could do. Kidney secretions were in terrible condition. If left standing they thickened like glue and had to be removed with a knife. My own doctor gave me up. I then called in a specialist who said I was beyond recovery. I had lost over 20 pounds and was but a shadow of my former self. I used one box of Doan's Kidney Pills and soon felt better. Continuing, I was cured and have not had the slightest trouble since."

A Reader Cures His Constipation—Try It Free

Simple Way for Any Family to Retain the Good-Health of All Its Members.

The editors of "Health Bits" and "Questions and Answers" have one question that is put to them more often than any other, and which, strangely enough, they find the most difficult to answer. That is "How can I cure my constipation?"

Dr. Caldwell, an eminent specialist in diseases of the stomach, liver and bowels, has looked the whole field over, has practiced the specialty for forty years and is convinced that the finger-point is directed to what is called Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, has the best claim to attention from constipated people.

His success in the cure of constipation has done much to displace the use of salts, waters, strong cathartics and such things. Syrup Pepsin, by training the stomach and bowel muscles to again do their work naturally, and with its tonic ingredients strengthening the nerves, brings about a lasting cure. Among its strongest supporters are Mr. John Archibald of 35 Milwaukee Ave., Detroit, Mich.; Mr. J. A. Vernon of Oklahoma City and thousands of others.
