STIMPSON SCALE WKS. HAS BEEN SOLD

RECEIVER BABBITT SELLS PLANT TO TOLEDO PARTIES

Will be Conducted on Larger Plans Than Before.

Receiver L. A. Babbitt has disposed of the Stimpson Scale Works to J. W. McMahon and Dr. Peter Donnelly of Toledo and they will take possession as soon as the court confirms the sale.

The price paid and obligations assumed in the neighborhood of $30,000, besides the release of a claim of about $10,000 they, as the Stimpson specialty, to hold against the defunct company.

Mr. McMahon is a well known Toledo business man and Mr. Donnelly is one of that city's leading surgeons. They will put an experienced manager in charge of the Northville factory and hope to materially increase the output.

Receiver Babbitt deserves considerable credit for his successful management of the Stimpson factory since it collapsed. From the start he put it on a paying basis and kept practically the same number of men employed as when the job took place a year ago. Receiver Babbitt and the receiver's attorney, C. C. Yerkes successfully conducted the sale of the Toledo parties and while the creditors realize about 30 per cent and the stockholders nothing, at the same time as a business proposition it looks brighter and bigger for Northville than ever before.

The Maxwell Messenger.

The little Maxwell Messenger belonging to the United Motor Detroit Company completed last week a test that is seldom undertaken by any automobile. In other words, the car was driven 120 hours with all adjustments sealed, and without stopping the motor, a greater distance than the ordinary owner would drive the car in six months. At the completion of the run the following report was made to the manager of the United Motor Detroit Company:

"The car had traveled 2060 miles at an average speed of 17 1/2 miles per hour, the consumption of gasoline being 31 gallons, or making an average of 22 1/2 miles to the gallon. Eighty-two pints of oil were used and two quarts of water."

This car is now on exhibition and is now making a trip throughout the state, with all adjustments sealed.

Says Boys Play Pool.

Editor Record: I would like to inquire through the columns of your valuable paper, why the law compelling the proprietors of the pool rooms, in regard to school boys and other boys under age, playing pool and billiards in their place of business, is not enforced. It is no uncommon sight to see the tables filled with boys a very tender age playing pool and billiards.

The law is very clear on this and it seems to me that the council and marshal ought to get busy.

Yours respectfully,

MY LADY OF THE NORTH

The Love Story of a Gray Jacket

by RANDALL PARRISH
Author of WHEN WILDERNESS WAS KING
ILLUSTRATIONS BY ARTHUR T. WILLIAMSON

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens in a Confederate tent at a critical stage of the Civil War. Gen. Lee imparts to Capt. Wayne an important message to be delivered to the Union. Wayne starts on his mission. He is captured by the enemy. In the darkness, Wayne is taken for a Federal officer who came to keep an appointment with a young lady on horseback. She is a northern girl and attempts to escape but fails. One of the horses succumbs and Wayne goes through with the dispatches, while Wayne and My Lady of the North are left alone. They seek shelter in a hut and entering it in the dark a huge man attacks Wayne. The girl shoots the brute just in time.

"The great ugly brute!" she exclaimed, looking at the form in the center of the floor.

"He was certainly heavy enough to have been a bear," I replied, clenching my teeth in pain, "and sufficiently savage."

I viewed her now for the first time clearly, and the memory will remain with me till I die. How distinctly that entire picture stands forth with the mist of all these years between! The low-celled room, devoid of all furniture save of the rudest and most primitive kind; the bare logs forming the walls, unrelieved in their rough ugliness except as here and there sandy unshapely garments dangled from wooden pegs; the rough deal table, with a few cheap dishes piled upon one end of it; the dead dog lying across the earthen floor; and over all the leap of ruddy flame as the newly kindled fire gathered war, leaving weird shadows here and there, yet steadily forcing them back, and flooding the whole interior with a cheerily glow.

She had flung aside the blue and yellow cloak which, during the long hours of our night ride had so completely shrouded her, and stood before me dressed in some soft clinging stuff of a delicate orange color, so cut and fashioned as to most become her rounded, graceful form.

CHAPTER VII.

A Disciple of St. Walter

Even as I gazed upon her, my admiration deeper than my pain, the arch expression of her face changed, there came a sudden flush of pity, of anxiety, of those clear, challenging eyes, and with one quick step she drew nearer and bent above me.

"Oh, Captain Wayne," she cried, her warm, womanly heart conquering all prejudice, "you are badly hurt and bleeding. Why did you not tell me? Please let me aid you."

"I fear I must," I replied grimly. "I would gladly spare you, for indeed I do not believe my injury sufficiently serious to cause alarm, but I find I have only one arm I can use at present, the brute got his teeth into the other."

"Oh, believe me, I can do it!" She spoke bravely, a sturdy ring of confidence in the voice, although at the thought her face paled. "I have been in the hospitals at Baltimore, and taken care of wounded soldiers. If there was only some water here!"

She glanced about, dreading the possibility of having to go forth into the night alone in search of a spring or well.

"I think you will find a pail on the bench yonder," I said, for from where I leaned against the wall I could see out into the shed. "It was doubtless left for the dog to drink from."

She came back with it, tearing down a cloth from off a peg in the wall as she passed, and then, "carrying a resolute air of authority," knelt beside me, and with rapid fingers, flung back my jacket, unfastening the rough army shirt and laid bare, so far as was possible, the lacerated shoulder.

"Forgive me," she said anxiously, "but I fear I can never dress it in this way. We must remove your jacket and cut away the sleeve of your shirt."

At last the disagreeable task was accomplished, the wounded shoulder completely bared. Her face was deathly white now, and she shielded her eyes with her hand.

"Oh, what a horrible wound!" she exclaimed, almost sobbing. "How that great brute must have hurt you!"

"The wound is not so serious as it appears," I replied, reassuringly, and glad myself to feel that I spoke the truth, "but I confess the pain is intense, and makes me feel somewhat faint. It was not so much the bite of the dog, but unfortunately he got his teeth into an old wound and tore it open."

"An old wound?"

"Yes; I received a Minie ball there at Gettysburg, and although the bullet was extracted, the wound never properly healed."

She performed her disagreeable task with all the tenderness of a sympathetic woman, and as she worked swiftly and deftly, made no attempt to conceal the tear-clinging to her long lashes. Skillfully the deep, jagged gash was bathed out, and then as carefully bound up with the softest cloths she could find at hand. The relief was great, and I felt, as I moved the shoulder, that saving the soreness it would probably not greatly bother me.

"Now you must lie back and rest," she said commandingly, as I attempted to thank her.

"As your nurse I command absolute quiet," striving to speak gallily. "See, the daylight is already here; and I mean to discover if this lone cabin contains anything which human beings can eat; I confess that I am nearly famished."

"A most excellent symptom, and I imagine your quest will not be wholly vain. To my eye that greatly resembles a slab of bacon hanging beside the chimney."

"Indeed it is," she exclaimed, "and I feel as a shipwrecked seaman must on first beholding land."

However, my naturally energetic spirit revolted at inactivity, for the time being my faintness precluded any thought of doing other than obeying her orders, and I lay there silent, propped up against the logs, my eager eyes following her rapid, graceful movements with a constantly increasing interest. As she worked, the reflection of the red flames became mingled with the gray dawn, until the bare and cheerless interior grew more and more visible. Her search was far from unsuccessful, while her resourcefulness astonished me, old campaigner as I was; for it was scarcely more than full daylight before she had me at the table, and I was doing full justice to such coarse food as the larder furnished.

The eating helped me greatly; but for some time so busy were we that neither of us spoke. On my own part I experienced a strange hesitancy in addressing her upon terms of equality. Ordinarily not easily embarrassed in visited him, and I felt it my duty as a loyal woman to aid the poor fellows.

"I remained silent, striving vainly to frame some innocent question which should solve for me the problem of who and what she was. Suddenly she spoke softly:

"Captain Wayne, I feel I owe you an apology for my unwarranted and unladylike conduct last night. I am very, sure now that you are a gentleman, and will appreciate how bitterly I was tried, how deeply I have ever since regretted it."

It hurt her pride to say even this much, as I could tell by her downcast eyes and heaving bosom, and I hastened to relieve her embarrassment.

"You have nothing whatever to ask forgiveness for," I said earnestly. "Rather such a request should come from me. I only trust, Miss Brennan, that you will excuse my part in this extremely unfortunate affair."

She sat looking down upon her plate, her fingers nervously crumbling a bit of corn bread.

"You do not even know who I am," she said slowly. "I am not Miss, but Mrs. Brennan."

I felt as if a dash of cold water had been suddenly thrown in my face.

"Indeed?" I stammered, "scarcely knowing what I said. "You appear so young a girl that I never once thought of you as being a married woman."

"I was married very early; indeed, before I was seventeen. My husband—"

What she was about to add I could not conjecture, for a quick change in the expression of her face startled me.

"What is it?" I questioned, half rising to my feet, and glancing over my shoulder toward the wall where her eyes were riveted.

"Something resembling a hand pushed aside the coat hanging yonder," she explained in low trembling tone, "and I thought I saw a face."

"Believing it to be merely her overwrought nerves which were at fault, I sought to soothe her. "It was probably no more than a shadow," I said, crossing to her side of the table, to enable her better to feel the influence of my presence. "Let us be content to sit here by the door, for we should be taking too great a risk of discovery if we ventured into the open."

I had barely spoken these words and placed my fingers on her hand to lead her forward when the small door which opened into the shed was thrown back noisily, and two great shaggy dogs, the evident mates of the dead brute at our feet, leaped merrily in. She shrank toward me with a sob of terror; but even as I drew a revolver from my belt, a man and a woman appeared almost simultaneously in that same opening.

"Down, Douglas! down, Roderick! Ha! There lies Red Murchock, stark and stiff!"—down, you brutes; you'll be dead yourselves sometime."

The man strode forward as he spoke, clubbing the frenzied brutes with the stock of the long rifle he carried.

"Telled on the view the opening pack," he quivered, as he distributed blows impartially to right and left; "look, gien, and cavern paid them back." Then, that be, Scott's words, stranger, an' I reckon as how ol' St.

Walter knew what he was writin' 'bout. Stop that blame, youhn, you Roderick, er I'll take t'other end o' this gun ter ye."

He rebuffed his efforts for peace, finally driving the rebellious brutes back into one corner, where they sat upon their haunches and eyed us wistfully.

"Two dogs of black Saint Hubert's breed, unmatched for courage, breath, and speed," he exclaimed, wiping the perspiration from his face with the back of one hand and staring at us, "specially the breath."

He was a fierce-looking little fellow, scarcely more than a half-grown boy in size, with round, red face, full of strange wrinkles, and head as oddly peak-shaped as I ever looked upon. "It went up exactly like the apex of a peak, while the upper portion was utterly bald. He formed a most remarkable contrast to the tall, raw-boned, angular female who loomed up like a small mountain just behind him.

"I reckon as how you uns had cure a bit of a scrap afore ye laid that thar dog out, stranger," he said, a half-angry tone lurking in his deep voice. "The fleetest hound in all the North, an' I'm durnd if I jist likes ther way you uns makes yourselves at hum in this yere cabin."

Set up, Jed Bungay, cut 'n his better-half, s'pecially, and as she spoke she caught the little man unceremoniously by one arm and thrusting him roughly to one side strode heavily forward until she paused in the centre of the room facing us with her arms akimbo.

"Now I'd jist like ter know," she said savagely, "who you uns be, a breakin' into a house, and a killin' a dog an' a eatin' up ev'rything we uns got without no much as a sayn' by yer leave, er nuthin' I reckon as how you uns don't take this yere cabin ter no faver."

"Madam," I said with a low bow, "it is unfortunate, no desire, which has caused us to trespass upon your hospitality. We will very gladly pay you liberally for any damage done. I am an officer in the Confederate service and the breaking down of our horses compelled us to take refuge here in order that this lady might not be exposed to danger from roaming parties of desperadoes. The dog attacked me in the yard, and we killed him in order to save our lives."

The deep-toned bloodhound I had just mentioned upon the very way, barked bawlingly with delight.

"But set party, Jed Bungay, ye don't make no kind for such!" She turned back to me and from her first words it was plain, evident she had been impressed with my own statement of my honored vocation.

"Did you uns say as how ye'd pay us what we owe fer that dog, er be he ter be asked doubtfully."

"Certainly, madam, and I took some money from my pocket at the time of your death. "Well, I would you consider due you?"

"The dog set free relaxed slightly, while she permitted her horse to edge his way a little more into the courtyard.

"Well, stranger, I s'orter reckon as how 'bout four bits 'll square things—dogs is mighty durst cheap hereabouts, an' how Gien me ther horse bits, mister, an' I reckon as how it'll be all right."

I glanced at Mrs. Brennan, and the amused twinkle in her eyes led me to say heartily, "We had not entirely completed our meal, but imagined we saw ghosts."

"Ghosts!" He glanced around apprehensively. "On Heaven and on thy lady-call, and enter ye enchanted hall!" Was ther ghost, ye saw over thar?" And he pointed toward the wall opposite.

I nodded.

"Then I s'orter reckon as how now Mariar and me was them ghosts," he continued, grinning. "We s'orter reckoned as how we wanted ter see who was yere afore we come in. 'I'll listen to, my fancy hears the clang of swords, the crash of spears. These yere is tough times, stranger, in these parts, an' a man what has ter perfect a lovely female bes got ter keep his eye skinned."

Maria sniffed contemptuously.

"Ye're no great shakes at a perfectin' o' me, Jed Bungay. Now you sit down thar an' begin ter fill up, I reckon as how ther Cap an' his gal will kinder jine with us, fer manners."

She seated Jed with such extreme vigor that I looked for the chair to collapse beneath him as he came down, but the little man, not in the least daunted, picked up his knife and fork with a sigh of relief.

"O' woman! in four hours of ease uncertain, coy, and hard to please," he murmured. "Come, sit down, stranger; sit down an' share a soldier's couch, a soldier's fare. Not as I'm a sojer," he hastened to explain, "but that's how it is in ther book." Say, old woman, kinder kinder sker up some coffee fer we uns—kewstevise what us Confeds call coffee."

Without much difficulty I induced Mrs. Brennan to draw her chair once more to the table, and I sat down beside her.

"It's Hosses," She Said Harshly.

"You are Confederate, then?" I asked, anxious to know upon which side his sympathies were enlisted in the struggle.

"He glanced warily at my gray jacket, then his shrewd, shifty eyes wandered to the blue and yellow cavalry cloak lying on the floor.

"Wal, I jist don't know, Cap," he said cautiously, continuing to eat as he talked, "as I'm much o' anything in this yere row. First ther durned gray-backs they come s'rooppin' up yere, an' run off all my horse; then ther blame blue-bellies come long an' cut down every lik o' my corn fodder, so ther I'll be cussed if I ain't 'bout ready ter fight either side. Anyhow I ain't did no fightin' rit worth talkin' 'bout, fer Mariar is powful feared I'd get hurt."

Maria regarded him scornfully.

"Hiding out, I suppose?"

"Wal, I ain't very healthful fer us ter be stayin' er hum much o' ther time, long with that thar Red Lowrie, an' Jim Hale, an' the rest o' that cattle round yere."

"Guerrillas pretty thick now in the mountains?"

"Wal, I dunno, I heerd as they was don' somethin' down by ther brick church, but thar's no great shakes o' emist round yere. I reckon as how ther know's 'nough ter keep 'way from Jed Bungay—I'd pitch 'em far as ever peasant pitched a bar."

"You bray no fear of them, then?"

"'Whut, me?" The little man sat bolt upright, and stared wildly across the table as though he would resent an insult. "I jist tell y' Cap, I reckon thar ain't no guerrilla no more ter poke his nose round yere 'less he's a lookin' fer sudden death, thar's mighty few o' em an' heerd o' Jed Bungay—'Whut in thunders ther matter with yer gal?"

He stopped suddenly, and stared at her, but before I could turn about in my chair one of the great dogs began to growl savagely, and Maria sprang forward, and cuffed the surly brute into rebellious silence.

"It's hosses," she said, harshly. "Likely as not it's Red's gal now, Jed Bungay sees two lovely females fer his ter perfect."

As I hastily sprang to my feet I caught a fleeting glimpse out of the partially opened door. Downy, the dog of the hill, and there was slowly stepping toward us on foot a small party of perhaps a dozen men, a column of which I could not see, but which I could see were irregularly dressed in uniform, but on their heads, two others were even, then turning into the narrow path that led to the house, attracted probably by the smoke which streamed from the chimney top.

CHAPTER VIII.

Mrs. Bungay Defends Her Hearthstone

A hand pressing hard upon my arm brought back my scattered senses with a rush. It was Mrs. Brennan who stood here, her face whitened by anxiety, her eyes peering anxiously through the opening of the door.

"Strike those men as not soldiers, Captain Wayne," she exclaimed. "They wear 'n foras of both armies."

"No don't they are guerrillas," I answered, drawing her back from where she might be seen in their approach. "We must tread being it possible, for you shall never fall into such hands, Bungay!"

I turned toward where the little giant had been sitting, but he was not to be seen. However, the sound of my voice aroused Maria to a full sense of our danger, nor was she a woman to hesitate in such emergency. With a single stride she crossed the narrow room, caught the white-faced hero by the collar of his shirt dragged him ignominiously forth from beneath the table where he had sought refuge, shook him as she would shake a toy dog, until his teeth rattled, and then flung him out of the door leading into the back shed. It was done so expeditiously that I could only gasp.

"Now enter ther hole with ye, Jed Bungay—you an' yer dogs," she panted furiously. "An' you uns feller hum, I reckon I'm able ter handle ther lot out thar, even if it should be Red Lowrie and his gang."

Catching firm hold of Mrs. Brennan's hand I sprang down the single step and closed the door tight behind me. Jed had scrambled to his feet, and rubbing himself vigorously with one hand, utilized the other to drag outward a rough cupboard, which appeared to be a portion of the house itself. As it swung open there was revealed behind it a fair sized opening extending into the face of the hill. It was a most ingenious arrangement, doubtless, finding frequent use in these troublesome times. Its presence partially explained how Jed had thus far escaped the conscription officer. Into this hole we entered one at a time, and when the heavy cupboard had been silently drawn back into place, found ourselves enveloped in such total darkness as to make any movement a dangerous operation. I felt the clasp of my companion's hand tighten, and knew that her whole form was trembling from intense excitement.

"You bray no fear of them, then?"

"'Whut, me?" The little man sat bolt upright, and stared wildly across the table as though he would resent an insult. "I jist tell y' Cap, I reckon thar ain't no guerrilla no more ter poke his nose round yere 'less he's a lookin' fer sudden death, thar's mighty few o' em an' heerd o' Jed Bungay—'Whut in thunders ther matter with yer gal?"

He stopped suddenly, and stared at her, but before I could turn about in my chair one of the great dogs began to growl savagely, and Maria sprang forward, and cuffed the surly brute into rebellious silence.

"It's hosses," she said, harshly. "Likely as not it's Red's gal now, Jed Bungay sees two lovely females fer his ter perfect."

As I hastily sprang to my feet I caught a fleeting glimpse out of the partially opened door. Downy, the dog of the hill, and there was slowly stepping toward us on foot a small party of perhaps a dozen men, a column of which I could not see, but which I could see were irregularly dressed in uniform, but on their heads, two others were even, then turning into the narrow path that led to the house, attracted probably by the smoke which streamed from the chimney top.

CHAPTER VIII.

Mrs. Bungay Defends Her Hearthstone

A hand pressing hard upon my arm brought back my scattered senses with a rush. It was Mrs. Brennan who stood here, her face whitened by anxiety, her eyes peering anxiously through the opening of the door.

"Strike those men as not soldiers, Captain Wayne," she exclaimed. "They wear 'n foras of both armies."

"No don't they are guerrillas," I answered, drawing her back from where she might be seen in their approach. "We must tread being it possible, for you shall never fall into such hands, Bungay!"

I turned toward where the little giant had been sitting, but he was not to be seen. However, the sound of my voice aroused Maria to a full sense of our danger, nor was she a woman to hesitate in such emergency. With a single stride she crossed the narrow room, caught the white-faced hero by the collar of his shirt dragged him ignominiously forth from beneath the table where he had sought refuge, shook him as she would shake a toy dog, until his teeth rattled, and then flung him out of the door leading into the back shed. It was done so expeditiously that I could only gasp.

"Now enter ther hole with ye, Jed Bungay—you an' yer dogs," she panted furiously. "An' you uns feller hum, I reckon I'm able ter handle ther lot out thar, even if it should be Red Lowrie and his gang."

Catching firm hold of Mrs. Brennan's hand I sprang down the single step and closed the door tight behind me. Jed had scrambled to his feet, and rubbing himself vigorously with one hand, utilized the other to drag outward a rough cupboard, which appeared to be a portion of the house itself. As it swung open there was revealed behind it a fair sized opening extending into the face of the hill. It was a most ingenious arrangement, doubtless, finding frequent use in these troublesome times. Its presence partially explained how Jed had thus far escaped the conscription officer. Into this hole we entered one at a time, and when the heavy cupboard had been silently drawn back into place, found ourselves enveloped in such total darkness as to make any movement a dangerous operation. I felt the clasp of my companion's hand tighten, and knew that her whole form was trembling from intense excitement.

A DRUGGIST'S FAVORITE KIDNEY REMEDY—CURED HIMSELF.

Fifteen years ago I had an attack of acute kidney trouble. I consulted a physician who gave me medicine which only relieved me for a time. After discontinuing his medicine my trouble returned as severe as before.

Having heard of Swamp-Root I gave it a trial and can honestly state that three dollar bottles cured me, never having any sickness in fifteen years. I have sold Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root as a druggist for many years and can give the very best of recommendations at all times.

The City in Brief.

Miss Ina Smitherman is confined to her home by illness. Mr. and Mrs. George Rattenbury moved to their farm Monday. Mrs. Chas. Bloom is recovering from a severe attack of the grip. Charles Leech has purchased a farm of eighty acres near Farmington. Charles VanValkenburg is treating his house on Rogers street to a new coat of paint. Emery VanValkenburg and family are moving into the Mark Ambler house on Cady street. The L. O. T. M. N. enjoyed a tea party at the home of Mrs. Win Elliott last Wednesday. Mrs. Will Stark entertained the Merry-Go-Round club at a 12:00 o'clock dinner Tuesday. Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Richardson attended the latter's sister's wedding at Grand Rapids this week. Miss Ina Wood is still unable to resume her duties in White's store because of a severe attack of the grip.

The new K. of P. club rooms were opened last Wednesday and presented a very neat appearance, being entirely redecorated. The first "500" club was very pleasantly entertained at the home of Mrs. Grayson Robertson one evening last week. Mrs. J. W. Perkins, who has been at Grace hospital for some time, was able to return home Tuesday and is much improved in health. School District No. 3 will give a box "shadow social" at the home of Elmer McKay Halloween evening. Games, gobbins and fortune telling.

Our experience with Rexall Pepsin Tablets leads us to believe them to be among the most dependable remedies known for the relief of indigestion and chronic dyspepsia. Their ingredients are soothing and healing to the inflamed membranes of the stomach. They are rich in pepsin, one of the greatest digestive aids known to medicine. The relief they afford is very prompt. Their use with persistency and regularity for a short time tends to bring about a cessation of the pains caused by stomach disorders.

Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets help to insure healthy appetite, to aid digestion, and thus promote nutrition. As evidence of our sincere faith in Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, we ask you to try them at our risk. If they do not give you entire satisfaction, we will return you the money you paid us for them, without question or formality. They come in three sizes, prices 25 cents, 50 cents and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain them only at my store.—The Rexall Store, A. E. Stanley Northville.

NO WONDER.

He—She is so artificial. She—Yes, artificiality seems natural to her.

Successful Economy in Baking.
Most housewives assume when they buy a big pan of baking powder at a low price that they have been economical. They have to a slight extent—but when they use that cheap "low cost" baking powder, and find it so uneven in quality, or so unreliable that the baking fails, there isn't so much economy in it after all. For the wasted materials far outweigh the few cents saved in the price.

Not Controlling.
One of the boys had broken one of the school rules and no one would can up. The teacher announced that he would punish the whole class if someone did not tell him who had committed the offense. All were silent, and he began with the first boy, and the whole class in the end until he had reached the last one. "Then he did it. Now, if you will tell me who did this I won't punish you." "All right, sir, I did it," was the reply.—Ides.

Rivalry.

The Genevieves I Know

(Also their JAMES)

By HELEN HELP

The Genevieve Who Is a Noble Nagger

The Genevieve that I am going to tell you about is a noble woman. And besides that, she is sure that everyone else ought to be a noble woman, too. She used to say to a flititious girl friend: "I do not see how you can justify yourself in acting so. Clarence as if you enjoy his society, when only last week you told me you were in love with Willyum. This is not the course of a truly noble girl; and I always thought you had such high standards, too."

Then her friend would say: "Oh, goodness, of course, I am in love with Billy; but I can enjoy the society of Clarence, too, can't I? Billy knows all about Clarence, anyway, and, besides, there isn't anything to know. He is just funny—well, he is a little in love with me, but not enough to hurt. Why, it isn't important."

Then Genevieve would feel awfully about it, and make it the subject of serious conversation, compelling say little Clara to turn herself inside out as to action, and chasing every little motive to its lair with utter unrelenting.

Well, in the course of time Genevieve married, and the James she acquired was one of those blunt-featured, good-enough looking Jameses who build bridges and know about construction and concrete and steel girders, and the strength of the span and things like that—things requiring some concentration and nice calculation, and an absolute knowledge of matters and a power of taking responsibility, because otherwise things might fall down rather disastrously. This, James's curious ascetic way James had quite a conscience as a self.

Well, one day after they had been married awhile James happened to mention that Johnson had been in the office looking for a job. He said Johnson was a good man and he thought they would put him to work. Genevieve looked at him in dumb horror—but it didn't stay dumb. "Do you mean to tell me, James," she said, "it is a political tone as to said: "Well, Genevieve, we need our job, I am not arranging matters for my firm, thank you."

"Genevieve," says James some time later, "two of the men I graduated from Tech. with are in town and I would like to bring them home to dinner tomorrow. I guess I'll bring a quart of fizz with me. They'll like it."

"I will be very glad to welcome your friends, James," says Genevieve. "But I draw the line at liquor. It shall never come under my roof."

"Why," says the bewildered James, "you used not to mind—"

"That was before I had a serious responsibility of bringing up a child properly," says Genevieve.

"But Jimsey is only three months old—what harm can it do him?"

Well, Genevieve was right enough, perhaps. She pres't just what the atmosphere of the home ought to be from the first, and she was going to keep it that way. And she did.

Jimsey kept on growing up and the atmosphere of the home came to be something like this—Jimsey being three years old and a capable young citizen.

"Doesn't little son know that it is very wrong? Isn't Jimsey sorry? Why isn't Jimsey sorry? But Jimsey ought to be sorry. Oh, Jimsey, you hurt mamma so when you are not sorry. Doesn't Jimsey know that his little heart ought to be clean and good?"—And all that little Jimsey really needs is a slight but rapid hand applied externally a moment, and the words, spoken in a clear calm voice, with a downward inflection: "You mind me."

So on Jimsey would learn to recognize kindly authority, and after awhile he got to prize the value of being a good citizen over himself.

But James is told about Jimsey and he, too, must look sorry and probe at or inner feelings, with Genevieve says: "I don't see where he got such a disposition—but, perhaps, if one is really to be a better nature."—And then she looks at James and James's better nature all curls up and crawls into its nest and hibernates, and his worse nature is on the job trying to dodge this noble woman's care of his conscience.

James's firm now says: "He is a good man, but you have to let him proceed on his own lines. Well, he is worth that and every cent of it."

Genevieve's thought says: "This is a lovely character, and I am a pity that he has been used as a cold hard nature? And as for that child, he is such a torment!"

And Genevieve's very dear friend says: "It is, how do you say, that poor man? And for his firm?" (Copyright by Author Helen Help)

Humiliating.
That the antidote was rich beyond the ordinary dreams of anyone, everything said to show and be stoutly brought silent when the marplot, in the usual form, I said that he had caught his way's across, I could not be pronounced.

"Flauntingly stepped and with lip slightly curling he said:
It is the order of the court, then, the magistrate went on, "that you pay a fine of $1—"
"One dollar?" the motorist gasped.
"One dollar—and costs amounting to 57 cents."

The man's parody of disdain was broken through. He needed visibly a shadow of pain flitted across his face.
"Mon Dieu! Is there nowhere in this mob ruled land that a person of real consequence may exceed the speed limit without loss of self-respect?" he cried.

"Flinging a piece of gold on the desk, he fled without waiting for his change.—Puck.

Language Studies in Dutch Schools.
"While the percentage of educated persons in Holland is not greater than in the United States, I am inclined to think that more attention is given in the public schools of Holland to instruction in foreign languages than there is in this country," said J. A. C. Gritterink, an engineer of The Hague, here on a mission for his government. "In our Dutch schools it is part of the course of instruction to teach the three principal languages—French, German and English."

"When a pupil reaches the period of graduation he must take an examination in these languages as well as in other studies. It therefore is not strange that a person of fair education in Holland is able to speak English understandingly at least."

Lights on Battlefields.
One would suppose that powerful searchlights would illuminate fields of battle best by night, in order to discover and bring in the wounded. But experiments in France prove the contrary. They are of small benefit, because the slightest obstruction—such as a house or slight irregularity on the earth's surface—will create a great cone of shadow, within which nothing can be seen. The best device tried so far is the individual acetylene lamp, carried on the backs or in the hands of the hospital corps when going over the field with their litters.

"Neither—it is a monologue."

ALMOST CRAZY WITH ECZEMA

"I, the undersigned, cannot give enough praise to the Cuticura Remedies. I had been doctoring for at least a year for eczema on my foot. I had tried doctor after doctor all to no avail. When a young girl I sprained my ankle three different times, paying little or no attention to it, when five years ago a small spot showed upon my left ankle. It was weared and seat for a doctor. He said it was eczema. He drew a small bone from the ankle about the size of a match and about an inch long. The small hole grew to about the size of an apple, and the eczema spread to the knee. The doctors never could heal the hole in the ankle. The whole foot ran water all the time."

"My husband and my sons were up night and day wheeling me from one room to another in the hope of giving me some relief. I would sit for hours at a time in front of the fireplace hoping for daybreak. The pain was so intense I was almost crazy, in fact, I would lose my reason for hours at a time. One day a friend of mine dropped in to see me. No more had she glanced at my foot than she exclaimed: "Mrs. Finnegan, why in the world don't you try the Cuticura Remedies!" Being disgusted with the doctors and their medicines, and not being able to sleep at all, I decided to give the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment a trial. After using them three days that night I slept as sound as a silver dollar for eight long hours. I awoke in the morning with but very little pain, in fact, I thought I was in heaven. After using the Cuticura Remedies for three months I was perfectly restored to health, thanks to the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I will be sixty-four years of age my next birthday, hale and hearty at present." (Signed) Mrs. Julia Finnegan, 2234 Hebert St., St. Louis, Mo., Mar. 7, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. 12 K, Boston.

When Friendship Counts.
The doors of the deformed man are always locked, and the key is on the outside. He may have treasures of charm inside, but they will never be revealed unless the person outside cooperates with him in unlocking the door. A friend becomes, to a much greater degree than with the ordinary man, the indispensable means of discovering one's own personality. One only exists, so to speak, with friends. It is easy to see how hopelessly such a sensitiveness incapacitates a man for business, professional or social life, where the hasty and superficial impression is everything, and disaster is the fate of the man who has not all the treasures of his personality in the front window where they can be readily inspected and appraised.—From the September Atlantic.

A Broken Bone.
Your first duty, after notifying a surgeon, is to provide support for the injured member in the form of an improvised splint. Flat pieces of board, as broad, if possible, as the limb and slightly longer than the broken bone, canes, umbrellas, in fact anything that will accomplish your end may be used. In adjusting these, pad with any soft material that is at hand; straw, leaves or cushions made of grass may be used. Avoid any pressure on the injured part, cover it with a cloth, and keep wet with clean, cold water.—Woman's Home Companion.

WHAT I WENT THROUGH

Beforetaking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Natick, Mass. "I cannot express what I went through during the change of life before I tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was in such a nervous condition I could not keep still. My limbs were cold. I had creepy sensations, and could not sleep at night. I was finally told by two physicians that I also had a tumor. I read by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and decided to try it, and it has made me a well woman. My neighbors and friends declare it had worked a miracle for me. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is worth its weight in gold for women during this period of life. If it will help others you may publish my letter."

I lost flesh in a distressing way and seemed in a perpetual sort of dreary nightmare. No one serious disease showed, but the 'all-over' sickness was enough.'

"Finally, between the doctor and father, I was put on Grape-Nuts and cream, as it was decided I must have a nourishing food that the body could make use of."

"The wonderful change that came over me was not, like Jonah's gourd, the growth of a single night, yet it came with a rapidity that astounded me."

"During the first week I gained in weight, my spirits improved, and the world began to look brighter and more worth while."

Discussion of Practical Forestry

By J. FRED BAKER, Professor of Forestry Michigan Agricultural College.

(NOTE—In the following series of articles, discussion of seasonal operations which every woodlot owner should be interested in, will be discussed.)

Seed Collection.
Every farmer is much interested in the harvest, which is just coming to a close and we hear on every hand discussions of the crops and yields in comparison with other years. However, few realize or have taken notice of the fact that this past season has been one of the best for the production of forest tree seeds for some time past. In Europe, the forest seed crop is of immense value annually. We Americans have not realized its value in this country as yet. However, in the next decade, the crop produced each year along the fence lines and in woodlots will be looked upon as a substantial source of revenue to its owner. Many woodlot owners and farmers have recently become interested in how they can better their forest conditions in the woodlot or establish new woodlots. One of the best ways to do is by collecting seeds near at hand, such as, for instance, acorns and nuts. The black walnut, bitternut, hickory, red and black oak and basswood have all produced very abundantly this season. The best time to collect is after the first severe frost. The seeds that fall before the first severe frost as a rule are defective and should not be gathered. After the first severe frost they should be gathered and if squirrels and rodents are not prevalent, plant directly in the area desired. This can be done by filling a knapsack with nuts and going into the woodlot with a spud, pacing along the fence lines, spading a hole and dropping a nut into it and then covering with the soil. It is wonderful how quickly trees, planted in this way will develop into good sized saplings. These should be planted in open places in the woodlot where the grass and briars have come in. A good knapsack is made by tying an ordinary grain sack, cutting down parallel with the sides, leaving two hands about two inches and padding cutting out a panel about one third the length. Tie the ends of the sack ribbons made in this way and fling over the shoulder.

If rodents and squirrels are a source of danger, the nuts should be stored over winter. In the storage of all forest tree seeds, effort should be made to imitate nature. If nature produces seeds and plants at once the forester does the same. If nature allows the seeds to fall and cover them over winter with a moist coating of leaves and litter, the forester then does the same and the same with these seeds which are borne high on the tips of branches and left to the chance of the wind or other such as in the case of our seed-bearing ash, honey locust and box elder.

All nuts and acorns nature covers over winter. The woodlot owner can do this for the nuts, place them in a box sufficient to contain the amount that he desires to collect. Sink the box in the soil in a well drained locality, putting in about two inches of sand in the bottom, then a layer of nuts or acorns then another layer of sand, then nuts and so on until the nuts are taken care of and the box is full. See to it that five or six inches of good sand is left on the surface. Then place covering of light boards over the top. If there is danger of squirrels and chipmunks, a piece of closely woven wire netting should be staked over the box large enough to cover an area four or five feet larger than the box itself and this netting should be partially covered with earth. This will protect the nuts from danger of squirrels and gophers, as they will not burrow through the wire. In this way, the nuts are kept at an even temperature and even moisture condition and can be planted out in the woodlot when desired in the spring. Do not try to keep seeds of this class in the dry state over winter, as they will not germinate in the spring to any degree of satisfaction. However, such seeds as sycamore, ash, box elder, black locust, honey locust, etc., should be collected in the fall and hung in a bag on rafters in barns or houses and kept in a dry condition. These can be planted the same as other tree seeds in the spring.

Hen That Pays Her Board.
The sprightly hen that is always off the roost early in the morning and on hand with a fresh egg as soon as she eats her breakfast and then goes directly to work, scratching about and does not hover about the nest or hunt for sunny spots to nap in. Is usually the hen which pays her board off with interest at the end of the year.

Value of Charcoal.
The value of charcoal for poultry is best ascertained by allowing them constant access to it. Wet, filthy or old charcoal is not desirable. Do not expect fowls to eat charcoal, grit and shells the way they eat corn. Do not force it on them, but rather have it in convenient reach of the poultry and they will eat as much as they need or as good for them.

Sell Surplus Stock.
Surplus stock should be converted into cash at the earliest profitable opportunity. Money talks, but it doesn't sit its head off or die of cholera or cough or some other ailment prevalent among fowls.

Commercial Fertilizers vs. Humus

By A. J. PATTEN, Experiment Station Chemist, Michigan Agricultural College.

Commercial fertilizers should be used to supplement the manures made on the farm and the green manure such as clover, vetch, rye, etc. The manures made or grown upon the farm usually contain small amounts of the plant food elements but are rich in organic matter of humus forming material. These home manures serve to keep the soil in good physical condition, and are absolutely essential to successful farming.

Commercial fertilizers are more universally successful when used on land that is kept well supplied with organic matter. This may easily be demonstrated by running the fertilizer drill across a field that has been fertilized with barnyard manure. The path of the drill will usually be conspicuous owing to the increased growth of grain. Very often fertilizers used on land devoid of, or low in organic matter fail to give satisfactory returns and they are consequently condemned as being worthless. In many cases of this kind the fault does not lie in the fertilizer but in the condition of the land. Commercial fertilizers require moisture in the soil to bring them into solution. Soils deficient in organic matter are not retentive of moisture, consequently the plant food contained in the fertilizer is either not brought into solution at all or may be leached out of the soil and be carried away in the drainage water.

The idea which many farmers hold in regard to the use of commercial fertilizers that once the practice is commenced they must always be used because their action upon the land is such that after once used nothing can be grown without them is entirely erroneous. This idea undoubtedly was originated by those who used commercial fertilizers to the exclusion of all humus forming materials such as barnyard manure and green manure.

Commercial fertilizers alone will not restore the fertility of a run down soil. This can only be done by using materials having a large amount of organic matter. This fact cannot be too strongly emphasized, and it should be repeated over and over.

The supply of humus in the soil must be maintained and this can only be done by using materials rich in organic matter, such as barnyard manure or green manure, (clover, vetch, cowpeas, etc.)

Commercial fertilizers are used to furnish plant food in a more readily available form than that exists in the soil, while the humus forming fertilizers are used to improve the physical condition of the soil in which the plant must live.

There are of course other conditions governing the production of crops in a soil, such as cultivation, drainage, climatic condition, seed selection, etc., but these cannot be discussed at this time.

CARE OF THE SEED CORN

By C. P. HALLIGAN, Assistant Horticulturist Michigan Agricultural College.

The quality of seed corn in the spring depends largely on its having been properly dried and stored. The selected ears should be placed where they will dry in the shortest reasonable time and various methods have been employed for this purpose. There is no better method from the standpoint of efficiency than the old one of braiding the ears together by the husks or tying them in lots by strings and hanging in the summer kitchen or in the attic above, near the stovepipe. This, however, requires considerable room and is not altogether satisfactory to the workers in the kitchen. A furnace room is a good place, providing it is well ventilated and an occasional fire is built. Frequently the corn is left in crates and while this is usually a successful method, there is more or less danger from mold; corn so stored should be watched carefully until it is known to be thoroughly dry.

Storing.—Many contrivances have been used to hold the ears. Racks on which the ears can be placed in single layers are good if mice and rats can be kept out of the room. Ears suspended in links of binder twine will keep well and be safe from mice. The soft-pith in the butt of the ears makes it possible for them to be hung on nails which have had the heads cut off after being driven into upright posts. An inverted pan will need to be nailed about the bottom of the post to prevent mice from reaching the corn.

Drying.—The temperature of the room in which corn is stored should be maintained at 75 or 80 degrees, with abundant circulation of air. Rapid drying removes the possibility of molding and consequent loss of vitality. After the drying is complete, the temperature of the room may be allowed to drop even below freezing, but it should be observed that many of our successful corn growers never allow the temperature of the room in which seed is stored, to fall below freezing. This room should be kept thoroughly dry.

MINISTER HELD FOR CRIME.

Charged With Having Murdered Girl to Whom He Was Engaged.

Rev. Clarence Virgil Thompson Richeson, pastor of the Immanuel Baptist church of Cambridge, Mass., a handsome Virginian, was arrested on the charge of killing Miss Avis Linnell, pretty 17-year-old girl, to whom he was formerly engaged. It is charged that he threw her out of the way so that he might marry Miss Violet Edmonds, a rich Brookline, Mass. girl. Cards of invitation were out for his marriage to Miss Edmonds.

Richeson at police headquarters emphatically protested that a terrible error had been made in his arrest.

Fiancee's Father Will Defend Richeson.

"Mr. Richeson will have as good a defense as money can buy," declared Moses Grant Edmonds, millionaire father of Violet Edmonds, whom Clarence V. T. Richeson, charged with the murder of Avis Linnell, was to have married October 31. Edmonds and his daughter firmly believe in the innocence of Richeson, while the police as firmly believe in his guilt.
