

SLAYS HER FATHER TO PROTECT MOTHER

MRS. MAUDE MILLS SHOOT PAR- ENT WHEN HE THREATENS TO KILL FAMILY.

STORY IS SUPPORTED BY HER HUSBAND.

Victim Was Drunk When He Went to the Mills Home and Deranged Wife Returned to Him.

Mrs. Maude Mills, 22 years old, shot and killed her father, Frank Young, at the Mills' home, four miles north of Flushing...

Francis M. Mills corroborates his wife's story. Both of them are in jail in Flint, pending an investigation by Prosecuting Attorney Parker and Sheriff Parkhurst.

Young had threatened to shoot members of the family, and was fast overpowering Mrs. Mills' husband, when she grabbed a double-barrel shotgun in a nearby room and rushed to his aid. Her aim was true. The charge entered Young's body just above the heart and he fell over dead.

State Act Allows Saloonists' Bond.

The fact that fully nine-tenths of the saloons in the state, and about 1,400 out of 1,500 in Detroit alone are bonded by the Michigan Bonding Co., controlled by the Detroit brewers, shows that a profitable business the bonding company enjoys.

This condition of affairs is largely made possible because of the state law regulating liquor bonds. The statute is so drawn that it is very hard for a saloon man to get a personal bond.

To go on a personal bond for a saloonkeeper a man must own real estate worth the value of the bond, there must be no incumbrance upon it, no woman must have an interest in it, and the property cannot be disposed of during the life of the bond.

Under the conditions imposed by the law it is a very hard matter for a saloonkeeper to secure a personal bond and he therefore turns to the bonding company and for $30 a year gets a $2,000 bond.

The bonding company is very careful before issuing a bond and the applicant is to answer a long string of pertinent and personal questions, after which the application is considered and further by officials of the company.

Floods Wipe Out Italian Trenches.

There are many belated reports from Tripoli, but the one important happening seems to be the continued semi-tropical rain and the consequent food.

It is said that the Italian trenches at Boumelhane Wells have been swept away and a lake formed around the waterworks. A temporary river rushes from the lake toward the sea through the town.

It is evident that both the Italian and Turkish forces are greatly hampered. Cannon sniping seems to be the only form of fighting at present taking place. The censorship is more rigid than ever.

220 WOMEN ARRESTED.

London Police Make Wholesale Arrests of Suffragettes.

The militant section of the suffragettes have made good their promise to resume their old tactics. They warned Premier Asquith last week, and between 7 and 11 o'clock Tuesday some 220 women in the female court were marched by early London double-deckers to various police stations in the neighborhood of the House of Commons.

The suffragettes, unable to appear in force, could not make a very imposing display. The usual method of securing arrest was for two of them to run up a ladder and pull the other down to the ground. In other cases they would secure an arrest. This policemen would be brought out from the station and they would take the suffragettes to the police station, a mounted policeman parking was, for them, though the crowd in this manner 220 were taken to the police station.

MICHIGAN DOWNS PENNSY

Thrilling Football Game Ends With Score of 11 to 9.

"Old Eighty-three" they call it, the play that won for Michigan at Ann Arbor altering in the twinkling of an eye and at the last moment, the complexion of the most bitterly fought battle that Perry's field's sacred soil ever has seen. It really isn't much of a play and certainly isn't a new one. Maybe the name, "eighty-three" refers to the years of its age, maybe to the mysterious combination of numerals that are barked when it is impending.

For the benefit of the hurried reader, who wishes to learn only of Michigan's definite accomplishment, the score was 11 to 9 and Pennsylvania didn't have the 11. Two touchdowns by Michigan, one touchdown and a field goal—a beauty, too—off Pennsylvania, brought out the gladdest totals. The Wolverines missed one goal from touchdown, which didn't matter after all, although it caused some alarm at a time when the Quakers were atop by a single point.

Michigan's second score came with but a couple of minutes to play in the fourth quarter and was achieved by means of a delayed pass, which gave Jimmy Craig a chance to sprint 35 yards for a touchdown. That was "Old Eighty-three"—the delayed pass of ancient vintage.

John "Jack" Frost, civil war veteran, 82, who led the famous attempt to escape from the Andersonville prison during the civil war, is dead in Quincy, Ill.

SYNOPSIS:

The story opens in a Confederate tent at a critical stage of the Civil War. General Lee imparts to Capt. Wayne an important message to Longstreet. Accompanied by Sgt. Craig, an old army scout, Wayne starts on his mission. The two, after a wild ride, get within the lines of the enemy in the darkness. Wayne is taken for a Federal officer who came to keep an appointment, and a young lady on horseback is given in his charge. She is a northern girl and attempts to escape but fails. One of the horses succumbs and Craig goes through with the dispatches while Wayne and My Lady of the North are left alone. They seek shelter in a hut and enter it in the dark. A huge massive attack Wayne. The girl attacks the brute just in time. The owner of the hut, one Jed Bungay, and his wife appear and soon a party of burmen approach and lead by a man claiming to be Red Lowe, but Mrs. Bungay discovers him to be a disguised impostor, who pretends to be a man claiming to be a Federal officer whom the Union girl recognizes. He orders the arrest of Wayne as a spy. While a prisoner Wayne sees files of Confederates pass and knows that Craig has delivered the message. He is brought before Sheridan.

CHAPTER XI—Continued.

"Very well, sir," he said gravely. "Your fate is in your own hands, and will depend very largely upon your replies to my questions. You claim to have been the bearer of despatches, and hence no spy, yet you possess nothing to substantiate your claim. As your regiment is with Lee, I presume you were seeking Longstreet. Were your despatches delivered?"

"I have reason to believe so."

"By yourself?"

"By the sergeant who accompanied me, and who continued the journey after I was detained."

"Is Lee contemplating an immediate movement?"

"General Sheridan," I exclaimed indignantly, "you must surely forget that I am an officer of the Confederate Army. You certainly have no reason to expect that I will so far disregard my obvious duty as to answer such a question."

"Your refusal to explain why you were hiding within our lines is ample reason for my insistence," he said tartly, "and I am not accustomed to treating spies with any great consideration, even when they claim rebel commissions. You are not the first to seek escape in that way. Was your despatch the cause of the hurried departure of Longstreet's troops eastward?"

"This last question was hurried directly at me, and I noticed that every eye in the room was eagerly scrutinizing my face. I had the quick, flying thought of a boy then, and my cheeks flushed."

"I positively feel it to endeavor one word relative to the despatches entrusted to me," I said deliberately, and my voice shook with sudden rush of anger. And no officer who did not dishonor the uniform he wore would insult me with the question."

A bombshell exploded. In the room could not have astonished them as did my answer. I realized to the full the probable result, but my spirit was high, and I felt the utter uselessness of prolonging the interview. Sooner or later the same end must come.

Sheridan's face naturally flushed, instantly grew crimson, and a dangerous light flamed into his fierce eyes. For a moment he seemed unable to speak; then he thundered forth:

"You young fool! I can tell you that you will speak before another twenty-four hours, or I'll hang you for a spy if it cost me my command. Major Brennan, take this young pop-fay to the Mansion House under guard."

Brennan stepped forward, smiling as if he enjoyed the part assigned to him.

"Come on, you Johnny," he said coarsely, his hand closing heavily on my arm. Then, seeming unable to repress his pleasure at the ending of the interview, and his present sense of power, he bent lower, so that his insolent words should not reach the others, and hissed hotly:

"Stealing women is probably more in your line than this."

"You miserable hound! I cried madly. "None but a coward would tempt a helpless prisoner. I only hope I may yet be free long enough to write the lie with steel across your heart."

Before he could move Sheridan was upon his feet and between us.

"Back, both of you!" he ordered sharply. "There shall be no brawling here. Major Brennan, you will remain; I would speak with you further regarding this matter. Lieutenant Caton, take charge of the prisoner."

CHAPTER XII.

Under Sentence of Death.

At this late date I doubt greatly of my situation at that time was so desperate as I then conceived it. I question now whether the death sentence would ever have been executed. But then with the memory of Sheridan's rage and my own hot-headed retort, I fully believed my fate was destined to be that of the condemned spy, unless she who alone might tell the whole truth should voluntarily do so. That circumstances had left me in the power of one whose fierce dislike was already evident was beyond question, and I had yielded to his going to such an extent as to give those in authority every excuse for the exercise of extreme military power. Yet of one thing I was firmly resolved—no thoughtless word of mine should ever endanger the reputation of Edith Brennan. Right or wrong, I would go to a death of dishonor before I would speak without her authority. Love and pride conspired to make this decision adamant.

"Come," said Caton, briefly, and I turned and accompanied him without thought of resistance. At the front door he ordered the little squad of waiting soldiers to fall in, and taking me by the arm, led the way down the gravelled path to the road. I was impressed by his seeming carelessness, but as we cleared the gateway he spoke, and his words helped me to comprehend.

"Captain Wayne," he said quietly, so that the words could not be overheard, "you do not recognize me, but I was the officer who conducted you to headquarters when you brought the flag in at Wilson Creek. Of course, I must perform the duty given me, but I wish you to understand that I wholly believe your word."

He stopped, extended his hand, and I accepted it silently.

"There must be some grave personal reason which seals your lips?" he questioned.

"There is."

"I thought as much. I chanced to overhear the words, or rather a portion of them, which Brennan whispered and have no doubt if they were explained to the General he would feel more kindly disposed toward you."

It was asked as a question, and I felt obliged to reply.

"I appreciate deeply your desire to aid me, but there are circumstances involving others which compel me for the present to silence. Indeed my possible fate does not so greatly trouble me, only that I possess a strong desire to have freedom long enough to cross swords with this major of yours. The quarrel between us has become bitterly personal, and I hunger for a chance to have it out. Do you know, is he a man who would fight?"

The young fellow stiffened slightly.

"We are serving upon the same staff," he said more abruptly, "and while we have never been close friends, yet I cannot honorably take sides against him. He has been out twice within the last three years to my knowledge, and is not devoid either of courage or skill. Possibly, however, the arrival of his wife may shake him less a fire-eater."

"His wife?"

I stopped so suddenly that he involuntarily tightened his grip upon my arm as though suspicious of an attempt to escape.

"Do you," I asked, gaining some slight control over myself, "refer to the lady who came in with his party last evening?"

"Most certainly; she was, presented to all of us as Mrs. Brennan, she has been assigned rooms at his quarters, and she wears a wedding-ring. Far too fine a woman in my judgment for such a master, but then that is not so uncommon a mistake in marriage. Why, come to think about it, you must have met her yourself. Have you reason to suspect this is not their relationship?"

"Not in the least," I hastened to answer, fearful lest my thoughtless exclamation might become the basis for camp gossip. "Indeed I was scarcely in the lady's presence at all coming in, as I was left in charge of the sergeant."

"Perhaps he felt that he had already said too much, for we were trapped in silence until we drew near a large, square white building standing directly beside the road.

"This is the old Culverton tavern, known as the Mansion House," he said. "It is a tremendous big building for this country, with as fine a ballroom in it as I have seen since leaving New York. We utilize it for almost every military purpose, and among others some of the strong rooms in the basement are found valuable for the safe-keeping of important prisoners."

We mounted the front steps as he was speaking, passing through a corridor of guards; and in the wide hall way I was turned over to the officer in charge.

"Good-night, Captain," said Caton, kindly extending his hand. "You may rest assured that I shall say all I can in your favor, but it is to be regretted that Brennan has great influence just now at headquarters, and Sheridan is not a man to lightly overlook those hasty words you spoke to him."

I could only thank him most warmly for his interest, realizing full from his grave manner my desperate situation, and follow my silent conductor down some narrow and steep stairs until we stood upon the cement floor of the basement. Here a heavy door in the stone division wall was opened, and I was pushed forward into the dense darkness within at the lock clicked dull behind me. So thick was the wall I could not even distinguish the retreating steps of the jailer.

Tired as I was from the intense strain of the past thirty-six hours, ever my anxious thoughts were insufficient to keep me awake. Feeling my way cautiously along the wall, I came at last to a wide wooden bench, and stretching my form at full length upon it, pillowed my head on one arm, and almost instantly was sound asleep.

When I awoke, sore from my hard bed and stiffened by the uncomfortable position in which I lay, it was broad daylight. That the morning was, indeed, well advanced, I knew from the single ray of sunlight which streamed in through a grated window high up in the wall opposite me and fell like a bar of gold across the rough-stone floor. I was alone. Even in the dark of the previous night I had discovered the sole presence to furniture in the place. The room itself proved to be a large and almost square apartment, probably during the ordinary occupancy of the house a receptacle for wood of garden produce, but now peculiarly well adapted to the safeguarding of prisoners.

The solid stone walls were of sufficient height to afford no chance of reaching the great oak girders that supported the floor above, even had the doing so offered a favorable opening for escape. There were, apparently, but three openings of any kind—the outside window through which the sunlight streamed; protected by thick bars of iron, a second opening, quite narrow, and protected by a heavy metal grating; and the tightly locked door by means of which I had entered. The second, I concluded, after inspecting it closely, was hand, which I grasped warmly, for I felt how much depended on his friendship, and resolved to ask him some questions which should solve my last remaining doubts.

"Captain Wayne," he began soberly, looking about him, "you are in even worse stress here than I supposed, but I shall see to it that you are furnished with blankets before I leave. Sheridan is hasty himself, and his temper often leads him to rash language. I am sure he bears you no malice for what you said. But Brennan has his ear, and has whispered something to him in confidence—what I have been unable to ascertain—which has convinced him that you are deserving of death under martial law."

"Without trial?"

"The opportunity of furnishing the information desired will be again offered you, but, as near as I can learn, the charge preferred against you is of such a private nature that it is deemed best not to make it matter for camp talk. Whatever it may be, Sheridan evidently feels justified in taking the case out from the usual channels, and in using, most drastic measures. I am sorry to bring you such news, especially as I believe the charges are largely concocted in the brain of him who makes them, and have but the faintest circumstantial evidence to sustain them. You, Sheridan is thoroughly convinced, and will brook no interference. The discussion of the case has already led to his using extremely harsh words to his chief of staff."

"I am to be shot, then?"

His hand closed warmly over mine.

"While there is life there is always hope," he answered. "Surely it must

"I Am to Be Shot, Then?"

a mere air passage leading into some other division of the cellar. I noted these openings idly, and with scarcely a thought as to the possibility of escape. I had awakened with strange indifference as to what my fate might be. Such a feeling was not natural to me, but the fierce emotions of the preceding night had seemingly robbed me of all my usual buoyancy of hope.

In one sense I yet trusted that Mrs. Brennan would keep her pledge and tell her story to Sheridan; even if she failed to do this, and left me to face the rifles or the rope, then it made but small odds how soon it should be over. If she cared for me in the slightest degree she would not let me die unjustly, and to my mind then she had become the centre of all life.

Despondency is largely a matter of physical condition, and I was still sufficiently fagged to be in the depths, when the door opened suddenly, and an ordinary army ration was placed within. The soldier who brought it did not speak, nor did I attempt to address him; but after he retired, the appetizing smell of the bacon, together with the unmistakable flavor of real coffee, drew me irresistibly that way, and I made a hearty meal. The food put new life into me, and I fell to pacing back and forth between the corners of the cell, my mind full of questioning, yet with a fresh measure of confidence that all would still be well.

I was yet at it when, without warning, the door once again opened, and Lieutenant Caton entered. He advanced toward me with outstretched be in your power to prove the nature of your mission within our lines, and the delay thus gained will enable us to learn and meet these more serious allegations."

"If I but had time to communicate with General Lee."

"But now—is there one, no way by which such representation can be given this very day? If not full proof of your innocence, then sufficient, at least, to cause the necessary delay?"

I shook my head. "I know of nothing other than my own unsupported word," I answered shortly, "and that is evidently of no value as against Major Brennan's secret insinuations. When is the hour set?"

"I am not positive that final decision has yet been reached, but I heard daybreak-to-morrow mentioned. The probability of an early movement of our troops is the excuse urged for such unseemly haste."

I remained silent for a moment, conscious only of his kindly eyes reading my face.

"Mrs. Brennan," I asked finally, recurring to the one thought in which I retained deep interest, "does she still remain in the camp?"

"She was with the Major at headquarters this morning. I believe they breakfasted with the General, but I was on duty so late last night that I overslept, and thus missed the pleasure of meeting her again."

We talked for some time longer, and he continued to urge me to come further word, but I could give him none, and finally the kindly fellow departed, promising to see me again within a few hours. Greatly as I now valued his friendship, it was, nevertheless, a relief to be alone with my thoughts once more.

CHAPTER XIII.

A Strange Way Out.

Caton came in once more about the middle of the afternoon, bringing me some blankets, but he had no news, and his boyish face was a picture of pathos, as he wrung my hand goodbye. Sheridan, he said, had gone down the lines, and both Brennan and himself were under orders to follow in another hour. What instructions, if any, had been left regarding my case he could not say, but he feared the worst from the unusual secrecy Sheridan expected to return to his headquarters that same evening, as the officers of his staff were to give a grand ball.

I felt no inclination to partake of the rude supper left me, and just before dark I was lying upon the bench idly wondering if that was to prove the last vestige of daylight I should ever behold in this world, when, with out slightest warning, the heavy iron grating in the wall directly above me fell suddenly, striking the edge of the bench, and clattered noisily to the floor. The fall was so unexpected and my escape from injury so narrow, that I lay almost stunned, staring up helplessly at the dark hole thus left bare.

As I gazed, a face framed itself in this narrow opening, and two wary eyes peered cautiously down at me. There was no mistake—that countenance even in the fast waning light, and I instantly sat up with an exclamation of surprise.

"Jed Bungay, as I live!"

The puzzled face broke into a grin of delight.

"Holy smokes, Cap," he ejaculated, with a deep sigh of relief, "is that you, suah? I was so durned skeered I'd made a mess o' it when that thar iron drapped that I near died. What be this a goin' ter do with us?"

"I bris every reason to believe it is their purpose to shoot me at daybreak to-morrow."

"Shoot?—Hell! He stared at me as if he had just heard his own death sentence pronounced, and his little pecked face looked ghastly in the dim light. "Shoot us? Good Lord, Cap, what for? Ye ain't done nothin' as I know on, 'cept ter see in a fit with that blasted Yank, an' sure the's no shootin' matter or who'd a bin a comer long ago."

"That Yank has seen fit to charge me with being a spy, and as I was foolish enough to insult General Sheridan last night, my fate is probably sealed."

"This somewhat complex statement seemed to be too much for Jed to grasp promptly.

"Gosh, ye don't say!" he muttered. "Then durn it, I'm in luck, fer all they've got agin me is 'not shootin' at a bigger soper up in their mountings, en the ain't much, 'cause I didn't hit ther durned cuss."

Jed was carefully covering every inch of exposed wall with his little shrewd, glinting eyes.

"Ain't much show ter work out o' yere, is thar, Cap?" he asked at last reflectively; "leastwise I don't see none, 'less them thar dark corners he's got holes in 'em."

"The wall is entirely solid."

"So I sorter reckoned. But if ye'll crawl through yere inter my hoodoo, thar's a place whar I reckon ther tew of us tergether might make a try fer it. It's too durn high up fer me ter git at alone. I reckon, Cap, if ye cud manage ter git out o' yere ter night, an' take some news ter Lee, thet I've picked up, he'd 'bout make both of us generals."

"News for Lee?" I exclaimed, staring eagerly at him through the now darkened room. "Do you mean it? What news?"

"Thought maybe thet wid wake ye up," he chuckled. "This yere's gospel truth; Sheridan has started his infantry on a half-circle march fer Minersville. Ther first division left at three o'clock, an' thar won't be nary Yank loafin' on ther valley by noon ter-morrow. An' more," he added rapidly, his eyes dancing wildly with suppressed excitement. "Hancock is a s'ingin' of his corps west ter meet 'em thar, an' I reckon, as how thar'll be hell fer sartin up ther Shenandoah in less ner a week."

"But how do you know all this?" I questioned incredulously, as the whole scene and its dread possibilities rolled before my mental vision.

"Ther nigger I held up bed a despatch fer Heintzelman over on ther left, an' then Marlar 'she sorter pumped a young 'ule staff officer fer ther rest o' it," he replied promptly. "Oh, it's a sure go, Cap, an' I reckon 's how may be Lee's whole army hangs on one of us gittin' out o' yere ter night."

DO NOT LEAN UPON OTHERS

Learn to Stand Alone or You Never Will Become Strong or Original.

Power is the goal of every worthy ambition, and only weakness comes from imitation or dependence on others, says Orison Sakti Marden in Success Magazine. Power is self developed, self generated. We cannot increase the strength of our muscles by sitting in a museum and letting another exercise for us.

Nothing else so destroys the power to stand alone as the habit of leaning upon others. If you lean, you will never be strong or original. Stand alone or burn your ambition to the somebody in the world.

The man who tries to give his child a start in the world so that they will not have so hard a time as he had is unknowingly bringing disaster upon them. What he calls giving them a start will probably give them a set back in the world. Young people need all the native power they can get. They are naturally born imitators, copyists, and it is easy for them to develop into copies, imitations. They will not walk alone with you fresh crushed, they will lean upon you just as long as you will let them.

Use of Checks in France

The governor of the Banque de France has just sent to the director of the departmental banks a circular instructing them about the use of crossed checks. The terms in publishing these instructions point out the advantage of the English method of employing checks and then shows how the French system of making payments immobilizes capital unproductively in purse drawers or bank where these sums converted into checks would be profitable not only to their owner but also for the bank when it employs them.

While the Bank of France has to face a bank note circulation of 5,000,000,000 francs and the monetary stock is 211 francs 75 centimes per head of the contributions England with a greater amount of business has a bank note circulation of 698,000,000 francs and a monetary stock of 84 francs 56 centimes.

Destruction of Rats

An East Africa publication contains a description of a method of destroying rats followed in Java, in which carbon bisulphide is employed. In carrying out the method a small quantity, usually about half a teaspoonful of the carbon bisulphide is poured in to the rat hole and after waiting a few moments to let the liquid evaporate, the mixture of air and vapor is lighted a small explosion resulting and filling the hole with poisonous gas, killing the rats instantly. Such a process practiced openly might be objectionable under some circumstances because of danger from fire resulting from the explosion and a field for invention appears to offer itself to provide some form of fire-proof gun or explosion chamber suitably formed to be inserted in the mouth of the rat hole and adapted to enclose the explosion, and discharge the resulting noxious gas into the hole.—Scientific American.

HE PLANNED HIS OWN DEATH

How Sir William Hankford 500 Years Ago Evaded Law Against Committing Suicide.

Suicides often adopt ingenious methods but the art of the felo-de-se seems not to have advanced materially during the centuries. The modern case of a heavily insured broker who on a feigned business trip stood baled up in a quagmire for hours and willfully contracted a fatal pneumonia is matched in cleverness by one 500 years old.

The following facts are well vouched for, and indeed were never questioned, says the Green Bag. Sir William Hankford, a judge of the king's bench in the reigns of Edward III, Henry IV, Henry V and Henry VI, and at the time of his death, chief justice of England, was a man of melancholy temperament.

He seems to have contemplated suicide the greater part of his long life and during his later years the idea became a fixed purpose. The fact was of peculiarly serious consequences in those days for the reason that the law treated it as a capital crime. The offender was buried at the cross roads, with a stake driven through his body, and all his goods and property were forfeited to the crown, to the utter ruin of his family.

Hankford made good use of his wits and succeeded in accomplishing his purpose without incurring either unpleasant penalty. He gave open instructions to his gamekeeper, who had been troubled with poachers in the deer preserve, to challenge all trespassers in the future and to shoot to kill if they would not stand and give an account.

One Carl, might he purposely crossed the keeper's path, and upon challenge made motions of resistance and escape. The faithful servant, failing to recognize his master, followed instruction to the letter, as was expected of him, and Sir William fell dead in his tracks. The whole truth of the affair was common knowledge, but it was impossible to establish a case of suicide by legal proof. The servant was protected by his instructions. Hankford had honorable burial and his estate passed to those whose interests as heirs he had previously considered.

THEIR SINGING HARD LABOR

People of Star Island, Says Cella Theater Girded Out Sounds With Tremendous Exertion.

Among people of average musical ability there is less singing than there used to be. Nearly everybody enjoys it, and there was a time when nearly everybody was expected, on occasions of a more or less standard, to sing. The day of the low growth, and other reasons, in the singer are fewer than they were. It is a matter for regret that a large part of the vocal and instrumental music published of latter, Cella Theater, the new music of the Star Island, and the singing and playing residences of the island, used to sing.

Their singing, he declared, "was truly astounding indeed. I might say, extraordinary. They go at it precisely as if they were making wood, and sound out the sounds with such exertion that their faces become crimson and the perspiration stands in beads on their foreheads."—Youth's Companion.

THE IRON CROWN OF ITALY

The historic iron crown of Italy has played a prominent role in the history of the peninsula. It was made in the year 590 by the command, it is said, of Theodoric, the widow of a Lombard king, on the occasion of her marriage to the duke of Turin.

The crown is of iron overlaid with gold. Its significance was supposed to lay in the fact that the weight of gold could never be lightened by its splendid exterior. The iron of the inner portion was traditionally held to be one of the long nails used at the crucifixion.

Long before the crown was in the possession of the famous monastery at Monza, it was brought to the attention of the head of Charlemagne as King of the Lombards. On later occasions it figured in the coronations of Frederic II and Charles V. Finally in the presence of 24 Italian representatives of state, the foreign envoys and princes and officers Napoleon Bonaparte solemnly united it to the crown of France.

The crown belongs to the state, and the custodian of it is the legitimate representative of the basilica of Monza. The title of "grand custodian," however, pertains to the head of the order of Cavaliers.—Harper's Weekly.

Light of the Firefly

The statement that the light of fireflies and other phosphorescent animals is produced without any sensible degree of heat has often been repeated without any information as to the quantity of heat that would be required to produce a similar amount of light by artificial methods. This information is supplied by Professor McIntosh. He says that a temperature approaching 2,000 degrees Fahrenheit would be necessary to make a light equivalent to that emitted by an ordinary firefly. The enormous waste in all industrial methods of producing light is a matter of common knowledge, and the example of the firefly remains unimitated by man. The very simplicity of the mechanism employed by nature in phosphorescent animals is baffling.—Harper's Weekly.

BETTER THAN BOOK LEARNING

Kentucky Mountaineer Preferred as Teacher Because He Could Lick Biggest Boy in School.

The Colonel had gone up into the Kentucky mountains from the blue grass in command of a sawmill, and as soon as he had mobilized his forces in that field he began to maneuver in the matter of improving the people about his camp. What they needed most were better schools and he determined to take a hand in the selection of a proper teacher. To this end he called in one from his own section who had a college education, but no mountain experience. When he proposed this blue grass nurtured young man to the mountaineer trustees there was unanimous opposition in favor of one of their own kind, who had been teaching the school for some time, though his education was of the most limited kind.

"But," argued the colonel, "your man doesn't have the first rudiments of an education and the pupils might as well have no teacher at all."

"He's done better than anybody else ever done, colonel," replied the chairman of the board.

"That may be, but none of them has been educated properly to teach. My man has been through college and is superior to any teacher in the county."

The chairman didn't want any trouble with the colonel, nor did he want to yield his point.

"Maybe he's just what you say, he is, colonel," he said persuasively, "and I ain't for us to doubt that he has a powerful sight of book learnin', but, colonel, we have saw him and we have saw our man, and I want say for this board of trustees that your man can't lick the biggest boy in school and our'n kin, and that counts for a heap sight more in this neck 'n' woods than book learnin'."

The colonel's candidate retired to the blue grass whence he came.

The GENEVIEVES I KNOW (Also their JAMES)

BY HELEN HELP

The Genevieve Who Is Due Another Look

Genevieve, be honest with me—has someone been telling you that you know James like a little song?

Has some wise person been putting it into your pretty head that James is, to your eye, as transparent as a piece of window glass as that you can see right through him?

Have you been getting all puffed up with the theory that you are as mysterious as anything—and that James isn't?

Forgot it, my dear, forget it entirely. Move in from the suburbs yet there is time.

Perhaps even James has been feeding you on this dope: "Nobody can tell what a woman will do anyway. You are a queer set, and the man who pretends to understand you is a mere four flusher."

Even in this case, pause upon the brink and let me tell you about it. Because, if James amounts to a row of pins, there is a lot in him beside heart throbs—and heart throbs are about all you are calculating on.

When you married James you married him on a basis of heart throbs? Well, then, incorporate, taking in a larger capital. Or you may find yourself going bankrupt in a land of plenty.

James is a business man. Do you know him as a business man? When you talk about your little penny candle peering into and lighting up all the corners of James, has it ever shed its rays into James when his eyes look like steel, and his mouth shuts like a trap, and his voice gets so silky and quiet and friendly, so that you feel lovely one minute and scared to death the next?

preparing to rock the baby to sleep, while you go out into the kitchen and get dinner, at which you will have round steak and worry about the rising price of potatoes.

Have you ever thought about the friend that James had before he married you, you mysterious thing? You never liked Jones much.

Then there was that offer he had to go to South America for his firm. It was a big chance—but you said it would break your heart.

You shut your eyes when you remember this. It was his duty to stay at home, of course. Can your candle reach to just what this transparent creature suffered at the last chance?

The clue you have been using on James is just heart throbs. There are other things leading to different parts of his nature.

A Qualification. Rastus was honest and industrious, but, in the opinion of the new minister, unsociable.

Friendliness. Friendliness is, after all, but little more than courtesy. Any man can be courteous without much effort.

Proverb Wanted! If there is not a proverb, there ought to be one to the effect that familiar letters in the hands of a foolish friend are as a poniard in the hand of an enemy.

Sometimes. Purist—How is this? Your card reads "R. E. Vise, Rectifier and Compounder," and you tell me you are a proofreader.

WHY THE FARMER AND HIS FAMILY SHOULD ATTEND THE INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

By CAPT. A. H. WADDELL.

There are so many reasons why the farmer and his family should attend the great International Live Stock Exposition at Chicago, that it is well and opportune at this time to mention some of them.

This great Exposition, the greatest indeed of all similar shows, is so apt to be viewed by the farmer, breeder, and stockman as merely a place where he should go to see the animals exhibited there, and for business purposes only.

The great object of the founders of the International Live Stock Exposition, was to present to the breeders and farmers of this country, an object lesson of the highest ideals, and a school of instruction to which all could come and learn.

It goes without saying that the men who have made this great institution possible, and the breeders and feeders and farmers who have made it what it is, are men of age and experience, and in order to perpetuate and improve this great school, and the methods through which it has gained its present day perfection, it is absolutely necessary that the sons of these men be permitted to see the show, and so start their lives of improvement from the advanced point at which their fathers stopped.

Another thing that is sadly overlooked by the men who contribute to the Exposition with their stock is the fact that their wives, the heart and soul of their homes, and the faithful and constant companions of their lives, have done their generous share and contributed in no small degree to their husbands' successes.

The daughters, too, of these people, particularly those who have attained or are verging upon early womanhood, would be greatly improved by the sights and surroundings of a trip to Chicago and the International Show.

The delights of anticipation and the pleasures of accomplishment, are such inexpressible joys to youth that it is nothing short of inconsiderate selfishness to prevent such occasional enjoyment to these young people, particularly when it can be attained at such comparatively little outlay.
