JACKSON GETS SUPT. LARUE

NORTHVILLE LOSES ITS POPULAR INSTRUCTOR.

By securing the services of Superintendent John D. Larue of the Northville schools, the city of Northville has lost one of its most popular instructors. Larue will have charge of Jackson of that city's largest school outside of the high school, and will have under him four teachers and about seven hundred pupils.

Mr. Larue has been superintendent of Northville for three years, past and very one in the city will regret that we are to lose him. Larue is not only popular in the village, but he is also well known in the district, and has a high reputation as an educator that has so far stepped into the Northville schools.

He is an all-around athlete and is right at home as an instructor or participant in all outdoor or indoor sports. In Northville society, also, both he and Mrs. Larue will be greatly missed and while we all wish them great future success, we hope they will ere many years, return to Northville to reside permanently.

Card of Thanks.

I desire to extend my sincere thanks to The Klipp's Daughters, neighbors and friends for the floral offerings and kindness shown me in my late bereavement.

MRS. J. B. HOAR DEAD.

Mrs. J. B. Hoar died at her home of pleuro-pneumonia late last Friday afternoon. Her death was very sudden, as she had not been ill a week. The deceased leaves a husband, Dr. J. B. Hoar, one of Northville's well known dentists, and a little daughter aged two and one-half years.

The funeral was held Monday afternoon, Rev. R. M. Phares officiating.

MRS. J. W. HETLEY DIED SUNDAY

Funeral Was Held at South Lyon Tuesday.

Mrs. Joseph Hetley died at her home on Main street Sunday afternoon of cancerous trouble. She had suffered the past two years, compelled to keep to her bed most of the time, but uttered no word of complaint.

The deceased, who was fifty-nine years of age, was Miss Frances Jacobus. In 1875 she was united in marriage to J. W. Hetley, and has resided here the past twelve years. They had no children of their own but have an adopted son, Clarence Hetley, whose home is in Rochester, N. Y. She leaves, besides her husband, who is a prominent merchant here, three sisters and three brothers, one of whom, George Jacobus, resides here.

The funeral was held at South Lyon Tuesday afternoon, Rev. T. J. Murdock, officiating.

MRS. W. I. SIMMONS INSTANTLY KILLED

P. M. TRAIN STRUCK HER AT NOVI CROSSING

Was Returning from Decorating Grave at Cemetery

While walking from the Novi cemetery towards her home yesterday, Mrs. W. I. Simmons was struck by the 12 o'clock north bound P. M. passenger train as she attempted to cross the track, and was instantly killed.

She had been up to the cemetery near the crossing to decorate some graves and must have become confused as she stepped on the track and heard the train warning and also that shouted by Frank Woodworth of this place who was passing at the time.

The train was stopped and the body brought to Northville where it was cared for at Schrader's undertaking parlors. The funeral will take place Sunday afternoon from the home at Novi.

Mrs. Simmons was but 51 years of age and the family were well known all over this section of Wayne and Oakland counties. Much sympathy is expressed to the husband and the two daughters (Mrs. Will Flint and Mrs. Earl Banks) in their so sad and sudden bereavement.

GREAT WRITER IN JEOPARDY

Charles Dickens Once Threatened With Arrest for Attempting to Pass Counterfeit Money.

One night when Dickens had retired at Gad's Hill he found he could not sleep. So he got up, dressed and determined to walk to London, about thirty miles away. He reached the suburbs early in the morning and applied at an early coffee house for some refreshments. When he had finished he gave the proprietor a sovereign, the smallest coin he had with him. "It's a bad un," said the man, biting at it and trying to twist it in all directions, "and I shall give you in charge."

The coin did have a suspicious look. Dickens had carried some substance in his pocket which had oxidized. Seeing that matters looked awkward, he said, "But I am Charles Dickens!"

"Come that won't do; any man could say he was Charles Dickens. How do I know?"

The man had been victimized a week previous and would take no more chances. At length Dickens suggested that they go to a chemist's and have the coin tested. A chemist was finally found when the shops had opened. The chemist immediately recognized the "novelty" in spite of his dusty appearance, and the coffee house keeper was satisfactorily convinced that he had not been entertaining a confidence man.

NEW PENSION LAW

On May 11th President Taft signed a pension bill. The result was a compromise measure between the House and the Senate. This will mean an expenditure of $25,000,000 in pensions for old soldiers. The bill is a very satisfactory one and will be generally pleasing to the boys who offered their services to our country in its time of need. Following is the schedule of allowance:

Age	Length of service	New rate
62	90 days	$13.00
62	6 months	13.50
62	1 year	14.00
62	1 1/2 years	14.50
62	2 years	15.00
62	2 1/2 years	15.50
62	3 years and over	16.00
66	90 days	15.00
66	6 months	15.50
66	1 year	16.00
66	1 1/2 years	16.50
66	2 years	17.00
66	2 1/2 years	18.00
66	3 years and over	19.00
70	90 days	18.00
70	6 months	19.00
70	1 year	20.00
70	1 1/2 years	21.50
70	2 years	23.00
70	2 1/2 years	24.00
70	3 years and over	25.00
75	90 days	21.00
75	6 months	22.50
75	1 year	24.00
75	1 1/2 years	27.00
75	2 years	30.00
75	2 1/2 years	30.00
75	3 years and over	30.00

The new law takes into consideration both the length of service of the soldier and his age at the time of his making application. However there is an additional provision in the law which provides that those pensioned on account of wounds or disease contracted in the service shall receive $5 per month, other wise the rule is as scheduled above.

Our local veterans have already made pretty general application to be placed under the new act, but it will be many months before the machinery of the Pension Bureau will be able to dispose of the vast accumulation of business incident to the new enactment, but provision is made for the increase in date to the time of filing of the soldier's application.

TITANIC REPORT SCORES CAPT. SMITH

WHITE STAR LINER'S COMMANDER RESPONSIBLE FOR RECKLESS SPEED.

S. S. CALIFORNIAN COULD HAVE PREVENTED LOSS OF LIVES

Over-Confidence Largely to Blame for Fatal Conditions. Punishment to be Left to English Courts.

One of the decade's most eloquent speeches in the United States senate was that by Senator William Alden Smith of Michigan today submitting the report of the senate inquiry into the wreck of the Titanic.

The speaker, who was chairman of the senate committee, held the strictest attention of that body while he placed the blame for the greatest maritime disaster of all time.

Blame for the Titanic disaster is chargeable directly to the failure of the dead Capt. Smith to heed repeated warnings of icebergs ahead, but responsibility for unnecessary loss of life must be shared by Capt. Lord of the steamship Californian, through his disregard of distress signals. This is the finding of the senate committee which investigated the sinking of the Titanic, as prepared in a comprehensive speech delivered by William Alden Smith, of Michigan, chairman of the committee.

Senator Smith declared that responsibility also rests upon the British Board of Trade, "to whose laxity of regulation, and hasty inspection, the world is largely indebted for the new safety." In denouncing Capt. Lord, of the Californian, the senator said the Titanic's distress signals were plainly seen from the deck of his vessel a short distance away.

America will leave to England the chastisement of those guilty, asserted the senator, and he quoted British law to show that Capt. Lord might be prosecuted for a misdemeanor.

Before the Titanic departed on her maiden voyage, there were no sufficient tests of boilers, bulkheads, equipment or signal devices.

Officers and crew were strangers to each other and not familiar with the ship's implements or tools, and no drill or station practice took place and no helpful discipline prevailed.

The speed of the Titanic was 24 1/2 miles an hour at the time of the accident, although officers of the ship had been advised of the presence of icebergs by the steamship Baltic, America and Californian.

Passengers were not advised of danger, although President May of the White Star line, who was taking the vessel's maiden voyage, was informed of general opinion, was given no official warning of safety under attack.

Of the 1,321 passengers and 899 members of the crew on board, there was room in the lifeboats for only 1,178 persons and because of lack of a life on the ship took off only 711 persons, 13 but a rescue from the water.

Officers of the White Star line "that took with the Titanic" for receiving information from their Montreal office to having the accident.

Condemns Shipping Laws.

Senator Smith condemned "anti-quarantine shipping laws and over-riding administrative boards," and asked that all nations act together in shipping reforms.

New laws, he said, will test the effect of their affection for the dead.

Capt. Rostron, of the rescue ship Californian, was praised by Senator Smith, and he urged that Congress recognize his valor.

At the outset Senator Smith attacked the course of his committee in holding British subjects to secure their testimony without delay, and briefly answered criticism of his lack of nautical knowledge.

"Our course was simple and plain—to gather the facts relating to this disaster while they were still vivid realities," he said. "Questions of diverse citizenship gave way to the universal desire for the simple truth. It was of paramount importance that we should act quickly to avoid jurisdictional confusion and organized opposition at home or abroad. We, of course, recognized that the ship was under a foreign flag; but the lives of many of our own countrymen had been sacrificed and the safety of many had been put in grave peril, and it was vital that the entire matter should be reviewed before an American tribunal if legislative action was to be taken for future guidance."

NEW JERSEY ALL FOR ROOSEVELT

VICTORY ONE OF MOST COMPLETE
EX-PRESIDENT HAS MADE IN PRIMARIES.

WILSON VICTOR OVER STRONG OPPOSITION.

Appears to Have Twenty-Four of the Twenty-Eight Democratic Delegates—Taft's Balf Convention in Texas and Hold Own.

Col. Roosevelt made a clean sweep Tuesday at the primaries in the state of New Jersey.

Indications, based on fairly conclusive returns, are that Theodore Roosevelt has won all the 28 delegates elected Tuesday at the New Jersey primaries.

Shortly after midnight E. W. Gray, secretary of the Taft Business Men's League, concluded that Roosevelt had carried the state on the preference vote and that he would have the four delegates-at-large.

Those who examined the returns were unable to guess closely at the plurality for Col. Roosevelt, as the figures from several counties had not been tabulated, but former ex-Governor Stokes, Col. Roosevelt's representative at Trenton, said that Col. Roosevelt would have a plurality of between 15,000 and 20,000.

Wilson Victory Clean Cut.

Governor Wilson won his own state against a strong opposition, within the state, and appears to have 24 of the 28 delegates, including the delegates-at-large.

Senator La Follette made a showing in every county, but his vote, as far as counted, indicated that he would not get more than two per cent of the total.

Delegates-at-large elected for Col. Roosevelt are John F. Fort, Everett Coby, Frank B. Jess and Edgar B. Bacon.

Delegates at large for Gov. Wilson are James E. Martine, Joan W. Vincent, Nicholas P. Wedin, and John Hinchliffe.

The Rainfall for May.

According to the figures of the state board of health, 3.11 inches of rain has fallen thus far in May. If the same ratio keeps up, the month will have a downfall of 7.5 inches. This is the highest on record except May, 1908, when 7.61 inches fell. Some of the heaviest downpours during May occurred in 1880 when it reached 6.81 inches, May, 1882, 6.31, May, 1890, 6.22, May, 1897, 6.51, May, 1901, 6.51, May, 1905, 6.51, May, 1907, 6.51, May, 1911, 6.51, May, 1912, 6.51.

Laying Something by for Future.

The general prosperity can only be reflection of the prosperity of the individual, and no individual is really prosperous who is not laying aside something for the future. The man who makes $10,000 per year and spends $10,000 is poorer than the man who makes $1,000 and spends but $900. It may be hard to walk while your neighbor whisks by in an automobile, but it is the man who has the courage and character to live well without it means who accumulates enough capital to do things in the world.

School Notes.

(By a Parent)

Don't McLean of the 3rd grade is a little scabby fever.

Harvey Robertson of the Second grade is absent on account of illness.

The Kindergarten and First grade joined in morning exercises Tuesday.

There were no tardy marks in the Seventh grade during the month of May.

Ernest Jordan of the Second grade has left school on account of ill health.

The 11th grade pupils are finding some interesting things in their study of bugs.

Eliza Murdock has returned to school in the Second grade after having the measles.

Kathleen Herrick, Paul Riddick and Burgess Jordan are out of school on account of sickness.

The A class of the Sixth grade has just completed the study of the Central states in geography.

There were fourteen out of twenty-eight in Grade Seven who had perfect spelling all last month.

Howard Benton, Walter Ryder, Gerald Taft and Helen McFarlin received one hundred in spelling last month.

The Seventh grade geography class is busy making maps, the A class of Europe, and the B class of South America.

The First grade and Kindergarten will give their Mother's Day program the afternoon of June 6th, in the High school rooms at 2:30 o'clock. All parents are invited.

The Eighth grade pupils are busy working on a cantata to be given for their graduating exercises. Thirty scholars will graduate in June from the Fourth grade, entering the High school.

The High school again played a good game on the local diamond yesterday afternoon. The Tigers by a score of 11 to 5. Johnson pitched two innings left was unable to finish the game. But was put on for the remainder of the game and played up to the end.

The Sunday, June 1st, the N. H. team will play the local diamond. The Tigers will play the home team, when they go up against the Tigers. The spirit of the team seems to be that they will be able to play the game. At all events in this game will be scored. Come out to see.

On Monday, only three scholars were present, and the school was closed. The school was closed on Monday, June 1st, because of the storm. The school was closed on Monday, June 1st, because of the storm.

JUDGMENT BY THE KIMONO

Women Size Each Other Up by a Method Which They Consider Is Infalible.

Ever as men judge one another by a Masonic emblem, an Elk pin or the band of a cigar, so do women in sleeping cars weigh each other according to the rules of the Ancient Order of the Kimono.

Seven seconds after Emma McChesney first beheld the negligee that stood revealed in the dim light she had its wearer neatly weighed, marked, listed, docketed and placed.

It was a kind of kimono that is associated with straw-colored hair, and French beehive shoes and overtired dogs at the end of a leash.

The Japanese are wrongly accused to having perpetrated it. In pattern it showed bright green flowers that never were sprawling on a purple background. A diamond bar fastened it not too near the throat.

It was one of Emma McChesney's bests that she was the only living woman who could get off a sleeper at Bay City, Mich., at 3 a. m. without looking like an immigrant just dumped at Ellis island.

Traveling had become a science with her, as witness her serviceable dark-blue silk kimono, and her hair in a schoolgirl braid down her back—American Magazine.

We quote the following from the Detroit Courier:

"A local paper unintentionally hit the nail squarely on the head in a recent announcement by stating that the Northville Athletic club would 'celebrate' as usual on December day. This is just the point at which patriotic people all over the country are trying to make—and have been trying for years—that a memorial to the soldier dead of our time is not and should not be made an occasion for 'celebration' the kind that is expressed in races, games, sports and general amusement. We have a national day of celebration of all our victories and the courage and devotion of the men who won them, but this day,
Nov. 30, was originally set aside as a memorial to the memory of the dead, and it should be held sacred to that purpose. If public sentiment is not adequate, legislation should be passed."

These are just our sentiments, but over the less it seems to be the natural trend of the American people to make a celebration of that date of our high school.

The POOL of FLAME

SYNOPSIS.

The story opens at Monte Carlo, with Col. Terence O'Rourke, a military man, and something of a gambler, in his hotel. A beautiful girl who suddenly enters the elevator and passes from sight. At the dining table, O'Rourke notices two men watching him. One is the Hon. Bertha Glyn, while his companion is Viscount Des Trebes, a duelist. The viscount tells him the French government has directed him to O'Rourke as a man who will undertake a secret mission. At this apartment, O'Rourke, who had agreed to undertake the mission, finds a mysterious letter. The letter arrives in a package sealed package to O'Rourke, who is not to open it until on the ocean. A pair of dainty slippers are sent to him, from under a doorway curtain. The Irishman finds the owner of the mysterious feet to be his wife, Beatrice, from whom he had run away a year previous. They are reconciled, and opening the letter he finds that a Rangoon law firm offers him five thousand pounds for a jewel known as the Pool of Flame and left to him by a friend, but now in keeping of one named Chamberlain in Algeria. O'Rourke wears the necklace in a duel. The wife bids O'Rourke farewell and he promises to soon return with the reward. He discovers both Glyn and the viscount on board the ship. As he finds Chamberlain there, an attack by bandits and his friend dies telling O'Rourke that he has left the Pool of Flame with the governor general, who at sight of a slave ring given the colonel will deliver over the jewel. Arriving at Algeria, the Irishman finds the governor general's apartment, and tells O'Rourke that he has gained possession of the jewel by stealing it. In a duel O'Rourke masters the governor, secures possession of the Pool of Flame, and starts by ship for Rangoon. He finds the captain to be a smuggler who tries to steal the jewel. He is driven away by a rival captain and O'Rourke escapes to land. With the aid of one Danny and his sweetheart, O'Rourke overcomes the Pool of Flame. On board ship once more, found for Haggan, a mysterious lady appears. O'Rourke comes upon a letter about to reach the Pool of Flame. He finds, and kills the man into the hold.

Her spell, through her eyes, answered his in a flash. Then, crouching, she looked him over from crown to toe, weighing him deliberately in the balance of her knowledge of men. He bore this inspection with equanimity, quite sure of himself, as was natural in the O'Rourke. Provoked, but not in the least, he felt himself invited and allowed it in every line of his pose. She could not have wavered; indeed, her decision was quite manifest. Impulsively she caught his two hands in her own.

"Yes," she cried, "I do believe you! I take you for your word—your generous word, Colonel O'Rourke! I will trust fully in you. You shall get me to the lady by the fifteenth."

"The fifteenth? he asked thoughtfully. This is the tenth."

"The fifteenth, I calculated to arrive on the fifteenth. All my plans depend upon these being no delays."

"Five days? It shall be managed. Mrs. Prynné Bombay by the fifteenth it shall be, or the O'Rourke will have broken his heart!"

She grew thoughtful. "You are very good—I've told you that I believe that you will accomplish what you promise. Yet it seems hardly fair to saddle you with my cares, my perils without informing you of their nature."

"Madam, 'tis not the O'Rourke who would ever be prying into your secrets. Let's not complicate a simple situation with explanations."

"But, colonel, there is one thing more." He paused. "It is a question," she continued, "of chartering a ship at Adeu, is it not?"

"I see no other way."

"Then—spare no expense, Colonel O'Rourke. Remember that I foot the bill!"

"Or, if you insist, sir, I pay nothing: Great Britain pays for both of us."

"Eh? Yes?" he stammered.

"But see, colonel!"

He had before then noted indifferently that she wore a chain of thin, fine gold about her neck, its termination—presumably a locket of some sort—hidden in the folds of her corset. Now she quietly pulled this forth, and displayed her pendant, a little trinket of gold, a running greyhound exquisitely modeled.

"Stunned, she stared first at the top, then at the woman. "Ye mean to say—" he whispered, doubting.

"On the King's service, Colonel O'Rourke!"

"A King's courier, madam? You—a woman!"

"And why not?" she demanded proudly. "The King's messengers dare many dangers, it's true. But in some of them might not a woman serve better than a man?"

"True enough. Yet 'tis unprecedented—at least, ye'll admit, most unusual. I begin to understand That Haggan, for instance?"

"Believe me, Colonel O'Rourke, I'm at liberty to tell you nothing."

"Tell me this, at least: would ye know him if ye saw him again?"

"Truthfully," she said, looking him in the eye, "I would not. I will say one other word: I had anticipated his attack although I had never seen him before."

"Faith, 'tis yourself that has your courage with ye, Mrs. Prynné! But good night, madam! Your servant!"

"Good night, colonel," she said softly, and as she watched him swing away laughing lightly and strangely. Later, still, standing outside her door, she sighed, and an odd light glowed deep in her eyes of grayish-green. Sighing again, and with another low laugh that rang a thought, derisive, as though she were flouting the man whose service she accepted so gladly, she turned and vanished within her stateroom.

As she did so, the opposite door—that of an inside stateroom on the same gangway—was opened cautiously. A turbaned head peered out, its eyes glancing swiftly up and down the corridor. Long, since, however, the excited passengers had been reassured and had returned to their berths; the coast was clear.

The lascar stepped noiselessly out, shut the door without a sound, and sped swiftly forward: a long, brown man with an impassive cast of countenance in which his eyes shone with a curious light.

As he swung into the space at the foot of the saloon companionway, he collided violently with an indignant and excessively red-headed Irishman, nearly upsetting the latter, to say nothing of a glass of brandy and soda which he was conveying to a certain stateroom.

"What the devil, ye damned yar-pur! Pwuh d're ye not look where ye're going?" demanded Danny with some heat.

The East Indian backed away, howled profusely, mumbling something inarticulate, and sprang up the steps. Danny looked after him for a moment, then put down the tray and pursued. He caught the flicker of the lascar's chambermaid as the latter escaped to the deck, and himself arrived at the forward end of the promenade just in time to see a white shape disappear into the stateroom companionway.

"I'd take the oath," said Danny reflectively, "that he's the wayward that came aboard at Suez. 'Tis myself that wishes I'd had a better peep at the ugly mug as him. I'm thinking I'd rather be after 'cliffa' himself."

CHAPTER XXI.

Lurching drunkenly into the harbor known locally as Adeu Back Bay, the Panjab came to anchor.

O'Rourke, from the lower grating of the steamship's accommodation ladder, signaled to one of the swarm of hovering dinghies, and waiting for it to come in, reviewed the anchored ship, gathered transiently together in that spot from the four corners of the earth, and shook his head despondently.

A yellow-haired Somali boatman shot his little craft in to the grating. O'Rourke dropped upon the stern-seat and took the tiller. "Post Office pier," he said curtly. The dinghy shot away with dipping, dripping oars, while the Irishman continued to search among the vessels for anything that seemed to promise the speed necessary for his purpose, and failed to discover one.

"'Tis hopeless," he conceded bitterly as the boat wore a serpentine wake in and out among the heaving hulks. "And, I'm thinking, 'tis the O'Rourke who will presently be sinking back to confess he bragged beyond his powers. The fool that ye are, Terence, with your big words and your fine promises, all empty as your purse! 'Tis out of patience I am with ye entirely!"

Doubtless he made the very picture of unhappiness.

So, at least, seemed to think a man lounging in a dilapidated canvas deck-chair beneath a dirty awning in the stern of a distant tramp steamer; who, raking the shoreward-bound with a pair of rusty binoculars, had chanced to focus upon O'Rourke.

"Looks as if he hadn't a friend in the world," said the man audibly.

"Looks as if a letter from home with cash draft 'ud about fill his little bill!"

He grunted in pleased appreciation of his own subtle wit. A short man he was, stout, very much at home in grubby pajamas and nothing else, with eyes small, blue, informed with twinkling humor and set in a florid countenance bristling with a three days' growth of grayish beard.

He swung the glasses again upon O'Rourke, and, "Hell!" he exclaimed, sitting up with stimulated interest.

"Well, by jinks!" said the stout man. "Who'd a-thunk it?"

He got up with evident haste and waddled forward to the bridge where he came upon what he evidently needed in this business, a huge and battered megaphone. Applying this to his lips and filling his lungs he belowed with a right good will, and his hail, not unlike the roaring of an amiable bull, awoke Adeu's echoes: "O-O'Rourke!"

"Good morning," murmured the Irishman, lifting his head to stare about him with incredulous curiosity.

"Who's that barking at me?"

"The pajama'd person continuing to shout at the top of his voice, by dint of earnest staring the Irishman eventually located the source of the uproar. "Now who the devil might ye be?" he wondered. "Ananias, me friend!" to the boatman—"row to the steamer yonder where the noise comes from."

Whereupon the stout man, seeing the boat alter its course, put aside the megaphone. And again peace brooded over Adeu.

On nearer approach to the tramp, O'Rourke's smile broadened to a pleased grin, and softly he waved a hand to the man with the voice.

"Jimmy-Quick!" he observed with unfeigned delight. "Faith, I begin to believe that me luck holds, after all!"

From the bottom step of the tramp's ladder he tossed a coin to the boatman, then mounted to the deck. Incontinently the stout man fell heavily upon his back with symptoms of extreme joy. A hull succeeding his first transports he wiped his eyes, beamed upon his guest and suggested faintly: "Drink!"

"Brexit's ever the soul of your wit, captain," said O'Rourke. "I will, and he meekly followed Quick's bare heels forward to the officer's quarters beneath the bridge.

Having set him in a chair, Quick, still a gurgler, wandered off, unearthing a bottle, beamed upon his visitor, asked a dozen questions in as many breaths—and, without waiting for an answer, waddled off again to return with a brace of dripping soda-water bottles. "Schweppes," he said, patting their round forms tenderly; "and the last in our lockers—all in your honor, colonel!"

"So?" commented O'Rourke. "Hart up, is it? 'Tis not the O'Rourke who would be wishing ye ill, captain, dear, but, faith, meself's no' sorry to hear that word this day. I'm thinking me luck is sound, after all."

Quick had again vanished. Presently O'Rourke heard his mighty voice booming down an engine-room ventilator. "Dravos! Dravos, you loafer! Come up and see a strange sight!"

He came back, still vibrant with an elephantine sort of joy. "O'Rourke," he panted, mopping a damp brow with the sleeve of his jacket, "ye're a good sight for sore eyes. Never did we meet up with you yet but there came a run of luck."

"'Tis good bearing," said O'Rourke, smiling.

A slight little man stipped a bald head, relieved by ragged patches of gray hair about the temples, apologetically into the cabin door.

"The top of the day to ye, Dravos!" said O'Rourke loudly, for little Dravos was partially deaf. "And how are the engines?"

The engineer carefully hitched up his trousers and regarded the wanderer with temperate geniality.

"Good afternoon, Colonel O'Rourke," he replied, clipping his words meticulously. "Very nicely, I thank you."

He shook hands, sat down on the edge of a berth with the manner of one who fears he intrudes, and glanced searchingly at Quick. "If ye're going to serve the drinks, cap'n," he snapped acidly, "bump yourself!"

He accepted his glass with a dispassionate air and drank hastily after a short nod to the guest, as one who sacrifices his personal inclinations to the laws of hospitality. But from his after-glow of benevolence, O'Rourke concluded that the drink had not been unwelcome.

"What brings you here?" demanded Quick in a subdued roar.

"I've a job for ye, if so be it, ye're not otherwise engaged—and if ye can do it."

Quick slapped a huge thigh delightedly. "I knew it—could have sworn to it!"

"Can do anything," asserted Dravos with asperity.

"'Tis merely a question of speed," explained the Irishman. "Can ye make Bombay in four days—be the fifteenth?"

"Dravos" roared Quick, "how much speed can ye get out of those damned engines?"

"Twenty knots," snapped Dravos. "When can you sail?"

"To night," said Dravos. "If," stipulated Quick, "I can pick up a crew in Adeu."

"He satisfied then?"

"Ye shall have it, within an hour!" Dravos rose and added towards the door, a faraway look in his pale eyes.

CHAPTER XXII.

By nine o'clock the Rance lay with steam up, ready to weigh anchor.

It is no praise to Dravos to state that his engines were in admirable condition. Such was their favorable state. For an assistant he impressed into service none other than Danny.

With an unconscious, surprised oath, O'Rourke stepped aside.

"You strike the bargain, Quick," he said, "I'll have a look around the engine-room."

"Right-O, Bobby. Yourself alone, I s'pose, O'Rourke?"

"And three others. Danny—"

"Yes, yes."

"And two ladies; an Englishwoman and her maid."

CHAPTER XXIII.

The day came out of the East with a windy swagger; as Quick had foretold, a series of thunderstorms swept the sea before dawn, so that it, like the sky, seemed newly washed, clean and brilliant.

O'Rourke relieved Quick at four bells of the morning watch and kept the deck for the remainder of the day, his meals being brought to him on the bridge. His duties were simple enough, requiring little more than a display of the habit of authority which sat so well on his broad shoulders. It was no great trick to keep the crew in order; they went about their work peaceably enough and showed no signs of desiring to renew their disputes. Otherwise he had to keep an eye upon the helmsman and see that he held the Rance to the course prescribed by Quick; and that was nothing difficult to a man of average intelligence. Naught but deep water lay between them and Bombay, so long as a direct course was shaped and maintained.

As the night watches wore out and nothing untoward took place, O'Rourke's grim apprehensions dissipated into shadows. He began to be lighthearted with Quick that the affair of the winged knife was merely a haphazard accident, quite unpremeditated.

Below decks, Dravos and Danny were standing watch-and-watch, with clockwork regularity, where the former's beloved engines were justifying his confidence and pride in them and clicking off their twenty knots without a hitch.

With an Unconscious, Surprised Oath, O'Rourke Stepped Aside.

Malone; to Danny's intense dismay. O'Rourke took upon himself the duties of first officer under Captain Quick. The Irishman cared little for the sea, knew less of a first officer's duties, but it was patent that Quick could not stand every watch; and O'Rourke was not to be daunted by any such slight matter as nautical inexperience.

In the knowledge that they were safely off at last there was poignant relief to the wanderer, as he stood by Quick's side, on the bridge, with mild, night imminence and the ship still and peaceful. "I'll stand the night watch," the captain announced. "By morning we'll be far enough out for you to take hold without spraining the art of seamanship. O'night."

"Thank ye," said O'Rourke. In fact, he had long been sensible that he was very drowsy; the night-wind in his face had something to do with that. "Good night," he returned, and went down the ladder to the deck.

At its foot he paused, turning curiously. It seemed that surely there must be some serious trouble afoot in the crew. The Irishman could see in the glimmer of the forecastle lanterns a confused blur of naked, shivering, brown bodies and limbs, apparently interfixately locked. A scream rang shrill and there followed the sound of a heavy fall.

Overhead, on the bridge, Quick was roaring himself hoarse, without effect. The sounds of shuffling, of blows, harsh breathing, stifled cries, continued. A knot of the contestants swept, whirling, aft, toward the superstructure. Something shot singing through the air; the wind of it, fanned O'Rourke's cheek.

With an unpractised, surprised oath, O'Rourke stepped aside, his hand going toward his revolver. The missile struck a stanchion, glanced, and fell eddying into the scupper. Revolver in hand, he went forward to the rail overlooking the struggling rabble on the deck below. But they seemed intent only on their private differences, and Quick's roars were bringing them to their senses. Gradually the tumult subsided, the contestants separating and slinking forward to their quarters.

"It may have been chance," O'Rourke conceded a bit doubtfully. He swung about and moved aft slowly, examining the deck intently. In a moment or two he stopped and picked up a long, thin, winged knife, double-edged and keen as a razor. The point was broken, having doubtless been snapped off at the moment of contact with the deck. O'Rourke turned it over soberly.

"Faith, I don't like to think it was intentional—but me head would have been split had it come two inches to the left."

He returned to the bridge, calling Quick aside. "You're armed?"

"Certainly—always armed when I'm dealing with these devils. Why?"

O'Rourke showed him the knife. Quick laughed at his theory. "Nothing in it," he was pleased to believe.

Anti-rugby Club.
Six women in Chicago have organized a club to lessen household cares. The club is the possessor of an electric vacuum cleaner, one electric washing machine, two electric irons and a fan for drying the washing. The only dues are those required for the upkeep of these labor savers, and this amount has been estimated to be about three cents a week. The initiation fee consists of the price of the apparatus divided into six equal parts. The members arrange their work so that a small boy may take the apparatus around to each in turn. They live in one neighborhood, so the affair is easily arranged. How practical; how easily the idea could be explained to take in any number of housekeepers. What a help it would be in solving the servant problem.—American Club Woman.

BABY'S ECZEMA AND BOILS

"My son was about three weeks old when I noticed a breaking-out on his cheeks, from which a watery substance oozed. A short time after, his arms, shoulders and breast broke out also, and in a few days became a solid scab. I became alarmed, and called our family physician who at once pronounced the disease eczema. The little fellow was under treatment for about three months. By the end of that time, he seemed no better. I became discouraged, I dropped the doctor's treatment, and commenced the use of Cuticura Soap, and Ointment, and in a few days noticed a marked change. The eruption on his cheeks was almost healed, and his shoulders, arms and breast were decidedly better. When he was about seven months old, all trace of the eczema was gone."

"During his teething period, his head and face were broken out in boils which I treated with Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Surely he must have been a great sufferer. During the time of teething and from the time I dropped the doctor's treatment, I used the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, nothing else, and when two years old he was the picture of health. His complexion was soft and beautiful, his head a mass of silky curls. I had been afraid that he would never be well, and I feel that I owe a great deal to the Cuticura Remedies."

I cramped and had backache and headache, and was so nervous and weak that I dreaded to see anyone or have anyone in my room. The doctors gave me medicine to ease me at those times, and said that I ought to have an operation. I would not listen to that, and when a friend of my husband told him about Lydia E. APPLE SCAB

By G. H. COONS, Research Assistant in Plant Pathology, Michigan Agricultural College

Apple Scab, Advanced Stage.

Apple scab is a disease found on all varieties of apples, which is caused by a parasitic fungus. A parasitic fungus is a plant which lives on another plant, taking its food from the host. Fungi are not able to make their own food as the ordinary green plants can, but live entirely on food prepared by others. Some fungi are found only on dead material. These are useful in nature in decomposition processes. Other fungi, such as apple scab, are parasitic, attacking living plants and producing serious disturbances in the host. Fungi are spread by means of small fruiting bodies called spores. These serve the same purposes as seeds of other plants, but spores are a great deal smaller and much more simple than seeds.

The symptoms of apple scab are shown fairly well in the accompanying cut. This, however, shows the effect only on the fruit and many fruit growers believe that apple scab occurs only on the fruit. It is true that it is most conspicuous here and for a given year produces loss on that part of the plant. Apple scab, however, is also found upon the leaves, and here great damage, although for the larger part unnoticed—is done. If you will examine carefully the leaves of the trees that have not been sprayed, you will find that the leaves are blotched with sooty, velvety spots both on the upper and lower surface. Sometimes these blotches are extensive enough to cause the curling of the leaves, since the scab fungus kills the tissue at that point and the growth of the leaf causes the blade to curl around the dead spots. Very frequently during the rainy season apple scab is so severe on the leaves on to cause complete defoliation. It is under such conditions as this that heavy losses occur and a great drain on the vitality of the fruit-producing power takes place. Since the great part of the dry matter that goes to make up the fruit of the apple is manufactured from carbon dioxide of the air and water, by the leaves, anything which interferes with the proper working of the leaves endangers the fruit crop of the following year. Therefore, an attack of scab not only produces unsaleable fruit during the year of the attack, but it weakens the tree and cuts down the crop the next year.

Apple scab lives over winter on the old fruits and the leaves, very largely, and it is probable that from this source, the spring attacks of the disease start. Whenever a spore which has lived over winter is blown upon the leaf, blossom or a young fruit, and is given the right conditions for germination, it is able to produce a scab spot. Each scab spot on the apple or on the leaf started from the single spore and when one considers that each scab spot started from this single spore is able to produce millions of spores, each one capable of starting a new scab spot, it is easy to see how the disease spreads through the orchard and how no fruits on unsprayed trees escape. It is also easy to see that if one controls or prevents the earlier infections, he lessens the chance for an excessive attack of scab.

Losses caused by this fungus, taken for the entire United States, are enormous. So far as the fruit itself is concerned, apple scab is the worst disease of the apple. Some years this fungus is not important in any given community, due to peculiarly favorable weather conditions. Last year was such a season and in all the loss by scab, although the disease was fairly common, was smaller than usual. There have been years in Michigan in which the entire crop has been lost, but these days were before the widespread use of sprays.

While apple scab is one of the worst diseases of apples, it is also one of the easiest to control. For years, the experience of experiment station workers has demonstrated that with proper material, applied correctly, 90 percent of apple scab can be prevented. For a long time Bordeaux mixture was the standard remedy, but it has lately been replaced by lime-sulphur or the home-bolled. The applications are planned so as to prevent the early infections and to check the spread throughout the growing season. The principles of plant diseases in covering the part to be protected with a solution poisonous to the fungus spores. On leaves and fruit protected in such a manner, the fungus spores are either killed directly, or, if they do germinate, the tender germ sprouts are killed and entrance to the tissues is thus prevented. This point explains a great deal about spraying. It explains why frequent sprays throughout the growing season are required since the leaves expand and put out new growth and the fruits also increase in size and frequent sprays keep all the new and tender growth covered. This principle also explains why so much emphasis is put on thorough spraying—spraying with a mist and not with spattering drops, since the pores are small and a very small amount of the chemical is needed at one place, but a great area must be covered. Farmers can follow no better rule than that given in the spraying bulletin recently published by the college, which reads as follows:

Just before the buds open, if the scale be present, spray with strong lime-sulphur.

Just before the blossoms open, or when they are "in the pink," a spraying must be made to prevent scab and other fungus diseases. Use dilute lime-sulphur or Bordeaux mixture.

After the blossoms fall and the stamens wither and before the calyx closes, another spraying must be made just like the one before.

About two weeks later, after the above spraying, make another. Use same mixture and poison as in previous spraying.

Late in July or early in August there will be a second generation of codling moths.

Copies of the bulletin will be sent to anyone who writes for it. This bulletin also tells how to make the different sprays which are in use (The Department of Botany will identify specimens of plant diseases that are sent in, free of charge).

MODEL FARMS FOR CITY BOYS

Novel Idea of State Management to Bring City and Country Boys Together

Having provided for the boys from the country at the 63rd annual State Fair, the management decided to also look after the boys from the city and so established a system of Model Farms on a plot of ground 1,000 feet by 400 feet and on this plot fifty of the city boys will conduct for the next four months miniature farms, on which will be grown celery, onions, corn, potatoes, mangel, beans, sugar beets, squash, pumpkins and other produce according to a schedule and also flowers to beautify the little farms. The boys who will take charge, each of an individual farm, will come from the Boy Scouts and from the Ford Republic and other organizations. These fifty boys will be under the general charge of a man who will give them instructions in the fundamental principles of agriculture and who will also provide them with the necessary seeds. The crops will be so planted that they will be at the harvesting period at the time of the opening of the fair and on the general results and appearance of each farm the prizes will be awarded. The State Fair Management has offered $100 in five, bright $20 gold pieces to the boy whose produce and the general appearance of his farm gives him the lead and the second boy will receive $50 and third boy $25, while other prizes of seeds and agricultural implements will be offered by the merchants of Detroit and exhibitors whose seed and tools may be used. The boys who will range in age from fourteen to sixteen years will also be allowed to dispose of their produce to the best advantage and in this way every boy will receive adequate returns for his labor. The State Fair Management will prepare the ground for the boys and the first crops will be in the ground within a few days now. The idea of the Model Farms for city boys was that of Secretary and Manager Hannon and it was immediately taken in hand by the Directors who gave it their hearty support and by the management of the Boy Scouts and other organizations, who carefully selected the boys. The State Fair management made but one restriction, that twenty-five farms be in actual operation at the time of the State Fair.

In arranging for the farming enterprise for the city boys and for the boys State Fair school from the boys all over the State, the Michigan State Agricultural Society, provides the means for the boys of the city and of the country to get together for the week and the meeting will prove beneficial to all concerned and very interesting to their elders.

GROW FODDER CORN TO SUPPLEMENT LIGHT HAY CROP

By R. S. SHAW, Director Michigan Experiment Station

The past winter has witnessed a shortage of hay with market prices at an exceedingly high level and the prospects for a large crop during the present season are not good. Because of the unusual severity of the drought one year ago catches of grass and clover seed either failed, or suffered more or less injury. During the winter just passed new meadows were injured more or less in many localities. In addition to this the total area seeded has been reduced somewhat because of the high prices of grass and clover seeds.

The probable hay shortage during the present season creates a serious situation confronting the Michigan farmer who keeps live stock. This shortage can be overcome in part by growing more corn. We do not believe the area of corn grown in hills for husking or for the silo should be reduced but more fodder corn should be grown. This class of corn does not run the work of the ordinary corn planting season for it can be sown later in the season any time from May 24th to June 15th, depending on the location, kind of soil and character of the season. Corn of this kind should not be grown for the purpose of husking but rather for feeding in the bundle or shredded form. An endeavor should be made to produce in the crop not less than 50 percent of a normal yield of ears. Even more than this would be desirable for many kinds of live stock to which it might be fed.

It is of course desirable in order to get a good crop of fodder corn that it be planted on a fairly rich well prepared soil. It can be drilled in rows about three feet apart with the stalks twelve inches apart in the row. These distances should of course be varied somewhat to meet the particular needs.

Corn thus grown can be fed during the winter from the shock or stack and is well suited to the needs of horses, cattle and sheep when forming a part of the ration only, being supplemented by some leguminous roughage, concentrates or succulents according to the kind and condition of the animal and the purpose for which it is being fed. It is only when corn fodder or corn stalks only, with or without the addition of straw, forms the exclusive diet throughout long periods of time that unsatisfactory results arise.

Under the present conditions we cannot urge Michigan farmers to grow more fodder corn this season in order to cope with the high prices of feed which are likely to continue throughout the

A retired merchant who was well known in the fighting branch in New York fifteen years ago recently spent some time at Atlantic City, where he took his wife for rest and change of scene, and where he had an unusually pleasant experience. "We met there," so he tells the story, "a man whom I had known in a business way many years ago. We met and we walked and 'roller skated' together, and they seemed to enjoy our company as much as we did theirs. On the day before we came away Mr. Blank called me into the Lillard room, handed me an envelope addressed to me at my New York home and said 'I intended to bring you this when our visit here was over and before we went back to our home out west.' The envelope contained a check for a balance which the man owed when his business collapsed in 1901, with interest to date. 'So glad I met you,' he added, 'for I saved the cash to your house.' The New York man added that the debt had passed out of his mind, together with many others which had gone to 'profit and loss' in his old books.

Figures

We know, are for very attractive unless seen on hundred dollar bills, or in department stores, millinery and automobile tire ads. However, if you will take a few seconds to look at the figures presented below, it may enable you to take advantage of those found in above mentioned articles. In column No. 1 we show the cost of a $100 loan borrowed in the regular way, from the Association. The stock being withdrawn and loan repaid at different intervals.

In column No. 2, the money being borrowed elsewhere at 6 per cent interest, payable once or twice a year, and principal paid at end of the different intervals.

	No. 1.	No. 2.
2 Years	$112.22	$112.00
4 Years	$122.88	$124.00
6 Years	$133.32	$136.00
8 Years	$143.38	$148.00
11 Years	$153.00	$166.00

Not very much difference, but suppose it was a $1,000 loan? 25 cents a week, paid to the loan for about 11 years would settle the $1,000 loan and you wouldn't know how you paid it. You have paid the other party $66 interest and if he should now want his money what would you do? Very likely borrow from someone else and keep right on paying interest. Getting rich. THIS is Mr. Henry Sonneborn, the first clothing manufacturer in America in 1843, and to-day the head of Henry Sonneborn & Co., Baltimore, Md., the greatest clothing factory in the world.

His persistent effort has made medium-priced clothes mean something more than mere cloth cut in prevailing modes. His genius has resulted in greater values in medium-priced clothes than any other maker has ever produced:

The Same Price

Styleplus Clothes $17

The World Over

They are America's Greatest Clothes Value. They reflect the best taste of the very latest styles. The tailoring on them rivals the workmanship in $25.00 garments found elsewhere. The fit and finish cannot be duplicated under the $25.00 grades. Every Styleplus garment is sold with an ironclad guarantee to give satisfactory wear.

"If You Want to Save Money with the assurance of perfect satisfaction, inspect our showing of Styleplus Clothes $17."

BRUNO FREYDL, The Tailor.
