BUSINESS MEN'S MEET LAST WEEK

RECORD GOT A KNOCKING AS ONE OF THE ATTRACTIONS

"Nether Meeting to Be Held in the Rink This Friday Night."

The Business Men's Association meeting was not largely attended last week, but by considerable effort about thirty were gotten hold of for the gathering in the council chamber.

A general discussion was had on the needs of the village and its welfare. Dr. B. Henry took occasion to throw a few hot shots at the editor of the Record, who was not present, for not being more enterprising, and criticizing the newspaper's policy. The doctor's remarks along this line were vigorously cheered by W. E. Ambler. The doctor intimated that the policy of the administration and Marshall Bogart in holding down the lid so tight on the saloon proposition didn't help the business interests of the town.

Marshall Bogart rather resented the remarks of the doctor along that particular line and very emphatically stated that he was doing his duty as best he knew how and that as long as he was marshal he would continue to see that laws, saloon and otherwise, affecting the village should be observed.

At the beginning of his remarks Dr. Henry expressed his deep sorrow because Mr. Neal was not present as he "did so dislike to criticize a man behind his back." So deep was the doctor's sorrow in this respect that he almost shed tears and for a time the meeting looked in danger of being turned into a house of mourning.

The question of a business men's banquet was discussed at some length. E. H. Lapham expressed the opinion that the question better be left for a future meeting whence a larger representation was present. It was thought a banquet might do much to keep up the interest of the association through the winter and to help start it off right next summer.

It was the consensus of opinion that Mr. Porter had made an excellent manager for the Saturday night attractions and band concerts and that they had attracted big crowds.

Another meeting of the association is called to be held in the rink this Friday night.

WHY? OSTEOPATHY?

BY DR. BEEBE RUTH JEPSON

If medical science has failed to bring relief from sickness, why not try Osteopathy? The treatment does not consist of rubbing or massage. It is a fundamental adjustment, where by the natural workings of your body can be brought to distribute the curative powers all ready given to you by God. His creator Osteopathy is not painful. Only the ignorant or those filled with bodily fear, claim so. It takes grit to be manly or womanly. If you lack this, nothing will be of benefit to you.

LIEUT. BOTSFORD'S FUNERAL WEDNESDAY

REMAINS ACCOMPANIED FROM CHINA BY WIDOW AND NAVY OFFICER.

Was Honored With Admiral's Funeral in Foreign Country.

The remains of Lieutenant Onet Botsford, U. S. N., arrived in Detroit Monday and was taken to the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Botsford, at Farmington where the funeral was held Wednesday afternoon. The remains were accompanied by his widow and were under escort of U. S. Navy officers.

Lieutenant Botsford was 25 years of age and spent his early life in Farmington. In 1902 he graduated from the Detroit High School and then spent a year at the University of Michigan. He attended the Groton school in New York and in 1904 was appointed to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, where he graduated as a midshipman in 1908.

Two years ago he went to the Far East on the cruiser Colorado but was shortly afterwards transferred to the Queros. He since had been quartered in Chinese waters. He was stricken with the malarial on board the Queros and died after an illness of ten days. The young man was popular in navy and social circles and was the first officer of his rank to be tendered an admiral's funeral. The funeral was held in Bubbling Well cemetery near Shanghai and was attended by marines and officers from all the American, British, German, Italian, Austrian, French, Japanese, Russian and Netherlands ships.

A "SURE CURE" FOR RHEUMATISM

DAIRY AND FOOD COMMISSIONER JAS HELME MAKES ANALYSIS

Of Jackson's Magic Foot Drafts, $15 worth Made for 25 Cents.

Michigan's Food Commissioner the Honorable James Helme, has recently been looking up the cure-all properties of Jackson's—much advertised Magic Foot Drafts. They are touted in ads and circulars as Rheumatism cures. Here's what Mr. Helme has to say about it:

"The recent rainy weather has made our Drug Analyst feel Rheumatism and in looking for relief he bumped against a rheumatic cure whose headquarters are at Jackson, Michigan. Magic Foot Drafts are made by the Magic Foot Draft Company. Our employee got a pill for one dollar. The company recommends that five dollars be sent for six pairs in order to insure a cure. Each pair is worn a week.

A big sheet of testimonials of cures accompanied the drafts. Most of them were of the vintage of 1907, which must have been a rheumatic year. The drafts consist of a piece of thin oil cloth 34 inches, with some adhesive around the edges like pitch to make them stick. In the center is daubed 'a mixture of pine tar and powdered poke root.

"You first wash your feet, (a most commendable proceeding which this department strongly endorses) then you slap a foot draft on the sole of each foot and wear your stockings over the draft for a week. The literature explains that the blood takes the tar up through the soles of your feet and sends it through the body to chase out the rheumatism. You wear this combination for a week. Then you wash your feet and repeat.

"The head of this department is not a doctor and he doesn't know whether tar and poke root applied to the soles of the feet will, poke the rheumatism out of the system or not. The writer doctors his own cows and he knows pine tar is good for sores on the cow and poke root is a standard remedy for caked udder, but as for rheumatism, he saveth not. If any citizen wants to try the tar foot draft, he can do it much cheaper than a dollar a draft. Get ten cents worth of poke root and ten cents worth of pine tar and mix thoroughly. Then get five cents worth of sticky fly paper and cut into pieces 3 1/2x4 1/2 inches. Dab some of the mixture in the center of each piece of paper and slap on each foot. Wear your stockings to bed so as to keep the tar off your better half. For twenty-five cents you can make about sixteen dollars worth of Magic Foot Drafts. "N. B.—Don't forget to wash your feet."

tain changes in your appearance. You and she may not have been unlike each other years ago."

"Oh, it is horrible!" sighed Sadie. "But I must have money."

"I have her likeness with me. I have often meant to ask you whether you had ever seen her. This is the first wife."

It was a photograph of—herself! The room seemed to reel with her. But in a moment she had regained her self-possession and rose.

"Mr. Morrison, you have made the mistake of your life. I am no black-matter—not even an adventuress. I have just fooled you—with this letter. My bankers are Morgans, and my story about poverty is just a fairy tale. I have made it my business to find out all that I can about you since my arrival in London and you may hear of me again. This was just a play-acting test. Go, please, and take with you this knowledge—there is one woman in London who knows you for the paltry scoundrel you are!"

Too dumfounded to reply, Morrison, left the room at once; and Sadie sat down to think over the strange knowledge so strangely gained.

USE OF THE METAL CAP.

Important Part Played By Soft Tip of Projectile.

The function of the soft metal cap on armor-piercing projectiles has been heretofore ascribed to the melting of the soft metal at the instant of impact, thus lubricating the way for the passage of the harder metal. A German scientist, who has given the matter some attention, now explains that by the presence of the yielding mass the point of the projectile proper is saved from deformation at the instant of impact, and, acting as a cushion, distributes the pressure over a fairly large cross-section, instead of allowing it to concentrate on the point, which would otherwise fracture. The real point of the projectile is thus preserved in its proper shape to cut its way through the target.

Judicial Flogging in India.

Let me draw the attention of the public to a shocking state of affairs which exist under the criminal law in India, says a writer in Reynolds's Newspaper.

In 1902, the last year for which figures are available, no fewer than 25,136 judicial floggings were inflicted upon adult male and female offenders for petty theft and the like. According to Sir Henry Cotton, M. P., K. C. S. I., who has published a pamphlet on this subject, these degrading floggings are administered publicly over the bare body.

The floggings are an unpleasant feature outside every criminal court in India. Sir Henry says, "I have known of floggings so severe that the victims have died on the trip to which they were flogged."

And this horrible torture is inflicted for the slightest offenses.

Production of Petroleum.

Although the production of crude petroleum in America is making enormous strides every year, the bulk of this comes from new territories which yield heavy oils containing little or no spirit. In fact, the fields which have in the past supplied the world with petroleum spirit and high-class illuminating oils are, it is said, failing, so much so that the center of production is no longer in the Eastern States but lies equally between the Gulf States and California. Recent work in the mid-continent fields shows, however, that there is a prospect of the supply of high-grade oils being increased.

A Water Clock.

One of the most curious clocks in the world is said to be that which tells the time to the inhabitants of a little American backwoods town. The machinery, which is nothing but a face, hands and lever, is connected with a geyser which shoots out an immense column of hot water every 38 seconds. This spouting never varies to the tenth of a second. Every time the water spurts up it strikes the lever and moves the hands forward 33 seconds.—London Tit-Bits.

Haunt of "The Insomnia Club."

Guadalajara has probably one of the most unique social organizations in the new world. It is called "The Insomnia Club," housed in a quiet thick-walled ancient building in the heart of the Mexican capital. There are at present 46 members, and as they can but seldom sleep, they pass the nights, perfumed as the nocturnal atmosphere there always is with jasmine and azahar, in agreeable diversions—chess, billiards, cards and bowling.

Norway's Old Churches.

Some of the wooden churches of Norway are fully 700 years old and are still in an excellent state of preservation. Their timbers have successfully resisted the frosty and almost arctic winters because they have been repeatedly coated with tar.

Building and Loan State.

Pennsylvania is the greatest building and loan association State in this country. It has 1,257 organizations at last reports and over 339,852 members. Ohio comes second with 474 associations and over 200,804 members.

SAFE-GUARDING THE PEARL MUSSEL

A Valuable and New Mississippi River Industry is in Danger of Extinction

STORIES OF SOME LUCKY FINDS

Scientists Take Up the Question of Artificial Propagation—Excitement Caused by Lucky Finds—Pearl Hunting Parties.

One of the tasks the Government has set for itself this summer is to find out why the pearl bearing mussels of the rivers of the Mississippi River are disappearing, and to try to propagate them. A commission headed by Prof. Paul Bartsch of Burlington has made a thorough search of the Mississippi and its tributaries to find out all about the mussel.

The mussel is highly regarded in that section of the country. Not only has it been the basis of a very profitable industry in the way of furnishing raw material for button making but it has enriched a great many who have merely taken up the hunt in the hope of finding valuable pearls. Mussels have been found in large quantities along the upper Mississippi, but pearls are few and far between, due possibly to the fact that the temperature of the water is not so favorable to the propagation of the slug, the technical name for the pearl bearing secretions. Down along the White and Arkansas rivers hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of pearls have been found in the last five years. In Arkansas more than a million dollars worth of them have been unearthed in that time.

The pearl bearing mussel has been found now and then for years in the Arkansas rivers by fishermen who use it as a bait for the drum and the red horse varieties of the sucker family of fish. Several lucky finds of this character on the Black River started every body hunting.

It was all a gamble. Only now and then a mussel with the precious stone attached would be found, but when once discovered it was well worth the time employed. Those who would not waste loafing around on the banks and had against one another for the unattached shells brought in by the fishermen. Baiting parties and parties at which the interest centered in pearl fishing were common.

Many stories are told of lucky finds. A fish of the trumps one day tried to induce a fisherman to catch them across the river. He kindly refused, telling them to go work and hunt pearls for a living. They took him of their word, and in about three hours had gathered several hundred of shells. Sitting down to open them, they discovered in the fifth shell a pearl that sold for more than enough to buy all the early possessions of the fisherman.

A lad playing about a boat used for pearl fishing discovered something shiny on the bottom. He showed it to a man whom he met on the street, and cheerfully accepted $10 for the pearl. The man disposed of it to a friend for $50. He sold it later for four times that sum to a professional buyer, who is reported to have received several thousand dollars for it. A business man who was on the verge of bankruptcy went down to the river to put in a few days fishing while he contrived to think some way out of his difficulties. On the first day he found three pearls that he disposed of for sufficient to pay all of his debts.

Pearls worth $500 were found one afternoon by three young Northern women who had accepted an invitation from a Southern hostess to join a bathing party with a pearl fishing attachment. The proper dress for these functions, by the way, was the ordinary bathing dress and broad brimmed straw hats.

Although the industry has waned greatly the last year, there are still numerous camps of fishermen to be seen dotting the river banks. The shallows were, of course, first hoisted, and nowadays most of the work is done in the depths. For this purpose oyster tongs are used, and the work is kept up most of the year.

Dredging for pearls is very largely a business matter these days. Dredges are used on the deep places and on the bars the river bottom is ploughed up and the mussels brought in scows and opened. The shells are saved and sold to the button factories that have sprung up at every town and village. These shells more than pay the expenses of the work, and the pearls found are clear profit. Several comfortable fortunes have been built up in this way.

There are hundreds of button factories all along the upper Mississippi. Wherever there are sandbars and shallow places the work of dredging for mussels goes on. The supply is getting shorter every year, and to preserve the sources and propagate the mussel the last Congress was induced to make a liberal appropriation.

Shells by the carloads are shipped to the factories and there they are made into blanks and buttons. A big business in shipping the blanks to Germany has been built up in the last few years.

Rule Where Men Burn.

The rule of conduct on and beyond Aden, where men burn and die, is keep the head cool and the stomach warm.

PLAN TO HARNESS THE TIDES

An Old Story in Canada, but it is Heard Once Again.

Canada hears every little while that some one is going to harness the mighty tides of the Bay of Fundy and put them to work, but the tides have gone on doing as they please and the story has been ranked with the reports—which usually originate in Maine—that gold is to be extracted from the sands of the seashore.

A tremendous amount of power is going to waste all the time in the Bay of Fundy and the scheme to put this power to some account is reasonable enough on paper. It has been proposed again by J. L. Weller of St. Catharice, Ontario, who is organizing a company and has applied for a charter from the Dominion Government.

The tide rises in the Bay of Fundy sometimes as high as sixty feet. A rise of forty feet is ordinary. When it is remembered that the tide is either rising or falling for more than twenty hours out of the twenty-four it will be seen that there is almost continuous power.

The vast extent of the tidal area is the most difficult factor in the problem. The water sweeps up broad estuaries for the most part; at few places is there such a thing as a narrow passage through rocky walls. To harness the Fundy tide will require long stretches of heavy stone embankments.

Mr. Weller's plan, so far as he has announced it, is to build power plants below Moncton, N. B., on the Petitcodiac River, at Amherst, N. S., on an arm of Cumberland Bay, and at some points on the Basin of Minas.

The movement of the tide in the Petitcodiac River represents an energy of about 3,000,000 horse-power a day. The river bed below Moncton is more than a mile wide. The banks are gentle slopes.

It is here that the bore, a wall of water that marks the coming of the tide, is seen at its best. Its power seems quite worth while harnessing, for in spring tide seasons it is some six feet high and it rushes up the river at express train speed.

Following the bore the tide pours in steadily and forcefully. It has the strength of a spring-freshet in a mountain river.

Mr. Weller's plan is to build extensive dams in the river bed, in order to force all this power into one spot. The dams would be built so as to catch the power of the falling tide as well as to get it coming and going. The plan is to develop only 100,000 horse power at first.

The problem at Amherst seems easier for there the water is confined within narrow bounds. In the Basin of Minas the problem is the hardest, for there is little natural opposition.

There is a good market for power all around the Bay of Fundy. It could run the electric lines in the cities and towns, it could work the mills. It could be used in developing the oil lands near the mouth of the Petitcodiac and the coal mines near Amherst. The work at Amherst has made the distribution and employment of collected energy a simple matter.

Canada, however, will not believe until it sees.

A Joke on Sir Robert Ball.

Sir Robert Ball, the famous astronomer, recently told the House of Commons Committee on the Waste of Daylight that as an astronomer he thought daylight was altogether a mistake. This notwithstanding the fact that he, Sir Robert, is a yachtsman and a golf player. The author of "The Starry Realms" and of "The Popular Guide to the Heavens" is naturally addicted to the night side of things.

Being an Irishman too, he is, of course, as much a humorist as an astronomer. On one occasion, when visiting Shakespeare's native birthplace, Sir Robert came off second best in a tilt with his erstwhile landlady. "I will give you a lesson in astronomy, madam," he said. "Have you ever heard of the great platoon year, when everything must return to its first condition?" In 26,000 years we shall be here again, eating a dinner precisely like this. Will you give us credit till then?" "Yes," was the prompt reply. "You were here 26,000 years ago and left without paying. Settle the old bill and I'll trust you with the new."

Our Poultry Industry.

There is a great awakening in the poultry industry among the scientists of the country. Twenty or more States have established experiment stations and in addition, three years ago the Department of Agriculture started a station at Baltimore, Maryland. At the State experiment stations there are regular courses of instruction on poultry raising while scientific experiments are made to determine the comparative values of different breeds and varieties, the best methods of housing and breeding, and the value of the different foods. The poultry industry has long been deserted by the scientists and in spite of them, according to figures prepared by Secretary Wilson, the value of the eggs and poultry produced on the farms last year was $20,000,000—as much as the cotton crop, seed included, or the hay or the wheat crop.

Some Busy Boys.

One thousand and sixty-four sparrows were slaughtered by Marquette (Mich.) boys during the three months of the open season for these birds and which expired with the close of February. At the rate of 2 cents a head, the feathered prey netted the youngsters a total of $21.28 in bounties. Much larger payments were made in other Upper Michigan cities.

What Mary Said. Judge Brewer cites a striking example of the sort of spoke which the trickster can insert in the wheels of justice.

A witness testified, in a certain case that a person named Mary was present when a particular conversation took place, and the question was asked: "What did Mary say?" This was objected to, and after some discussion the Judge ruled out the question. An exception to this decision was immediately taken and on appeal the higher court reversed the verdict and ordered a new trial on the ground that the question should have been answered.

At the second trial the same inquiry was propounded and elicited the information that Mary said nothing!

Entitled to Vote.

Victoria, the capital of British Columbia, has a peculiar municipal franchise. Every person who pays a $2 dog tax is entitled to vote in elections for mayor and alderman. The system has led to abuses. It has been discovered that six enterprising women voted on the strength of a single dog. Worse still, one ingenious woman unable to get a real dog in time to qualify, took out a license for a china dog on her mantlepiece. Municipal franchise reform is now regarded as a question of urgency in Victoria, and aldermen is doomed.

Where Records Are Kept.

Only one mistake found in the Kansas City (Kan.) election commissioners' books with a fatal vote of nearly 14,000 furnishes a new record for the handling of elections on the West Side. The mistake was made in the writing of one name wrong.

How They Die in Scotland.

Traveling in the north of Scotland, far away from anywhere, the tourist exclaimed to one of the natives: "Why what do you do when any of you are ill? You can never get a doctor?" "Nae, sir," replied Sandy. "We're just to see a natural death!"

For a McKinley Monument.

Citizens of New Berlin, Ohio, are devising ways and means to raise money to erect in that village a monument to the memory of the late President McKinley. The monument will stand in the public square where, as a young man, McKinley delivered his first political speech on the evening of September 2, 1887.

Automatic Extinguishers.

A new invention has been introduced in Newcastle, England, by which it is feared the lamp-lighters of the city will lose their vacation. A German inventor has placed a machine at the local gas works which will enable the gas company to light and extinguish all the street lamps simultaneously.

Take Sam's Tug.

The biggest job of gardening undertaken by the Government is the planting and growing of little trees, five and a half millions of which are now being planted every year for setting out in the various forest reserves.

Believed in Mourning.

A striking illustration of the superstitions which a Cornish country folk may be seen in one of the villages of the Duch. A death recently occurred in the family of a bee-keeper, who thereupon believed that if he failed to dress the whole of his bees would die. He had a flock of his five hives and a place of black crepe.

CARL BEUTEL

Eminent American Pianist and Composer Praises STARR PIANOS

Detroit, Mich., Aug. 30, 1913. The Starr Piano Co., 110 Broadway, City. Gentlemen:—Permit me to express my sincere thanks for the Starr Mimm Grand which you placed at my disposal during my stay here this summer. I have used the Starr Piano exclusively during the past three years in studio, home and recital work and it has at all times been equal to the varying demands I made in shading of tone color and more delicate passages, and then again when a sonorous fortissimo is needed one does not have to resort to brutal forcing of the piano in order to realize an adequate result. For smoothness and perfect balance on action it is indeed, in my estimation, quite unexcelled.

With sincerest good wishes, I am, very truly yours, CARL BEUTEL, Prof. Indianapolis Conservatory of Music.

THE AUTO SPEED-IDIOT.

Recently a young man, who had nearly killed himself and a half dozen other people while auto speeding, was brought before a Cincinnati police judge to answer to the charge of violating the law. This is what the judge said to him:

"Young man, stand up. You belong to a class of young maniacs who act as if you didn't have as much common sense in your head as an ordinary horse who gave you the right to go tearing along the streets at the speed of a railroad car. Who gave you the right to use our streets in such a manner as to constantly endanger people's lives. Who set you down in this community as a complete example of a man driving a dangerous machine without any brains, care or prudence? You are a shame to the town, to the decent father and mother who begot you. We can have sympathy for the natural born idiot, but we fall utterly when we look upon a man who has deliberately made himself such with an automobile. I will put you where you will not endanger any more lives for the next three months and assess you the costs of this action."

Such an admonition and sentence would do good in any town. There are men all over this state who are just as culpable as the Cincinnati youth, and many of them need the same penalty every day. On some of the best paved streets and avenues it is critically dangerous for pedestrians to attempt to cross. The only remedy seems to be the kind handed out by the Ohio judge. The good hard fact is, something must be done with the speeders or many lives will be sacrificed to gratify the desire of a class of people who have no respect for their own lives or with those who run with them or those whom they meet.

WHY THE RECORD ATTACK?

Since the officers of the business men's association lent the money of last week to an attack on the Record and, by success at least, approved of the utterances made, then it becomes in order for the Record to ask the officers to state just what the association has accomplished for the benefit of Northville and its people, excepting the Saturday night concert during its existence.

That the Record may not be accused of any further lack of interpretation, we would be glad to have all this information to publish, together with the receipts and expenditure of the business men's contributions and have each business man state just how much his business was increased on each Saturday night over the previous year. All this will be printed free of charge the same as in the past.

This information gathered in the shape of statistics will be valuable in getting concerts and contests started with increased vigor next season. Understand that the Record is heartily in favor of the band concerts. They were splendid attractions all summer and brought together large crowds, but why the Business Men's Association?

The farmers who didn't like ex-President Taft's Canadian reciprocity bill will probably fall in love with President Wilson's bill which puts practically everything the American farmer produces on the free list, or nearly so, without any reciprocity on the part of Canada.

Just to make sure that they never agree on any one subject, in last Sunday's edition of newspapers, the New York weather report said "Rain" while the Free Press was "Fair."

Sunday school at 11:20 and Christian at 6 o'clock.

Evening service at 7 o'clock Subject, "Peter Plate and Judas."

The Rally Day services of last Sabbath were a decided success. It is hoped that this will be an annual affair with the churches of this community. The attendance at the various meetings is a demonstration of the value of concerted effort and judicious advertising, also proof of the community's interest in the work of the church. Please remember that a welcome is extended to all every Sabbath. Make the slogan of last Sunday the slogan every Sunday, "Crowd" every service at every church.

The ladies of the church held a very profitable meeting Wednesday. The address by Mrs. Jeffry was greatly enjoyed. Plans were made looking to a very active fall and winter. It is the purpose of the Aid society to open a "department store" in the church parlors for three days during the first week in December. Please refrain from purchasing any Christmas gifts until you have visited this store. Money raised in this manner will go into the pipe organ fund.

The Ladies' Missionary society has just sent to the Mission at Cabell, West Virginia, two barrels of clothing and furnishings valued at eighty dollars, most of the materials sent go toward furnishing a new cottage at the Mission.

A baked goods sale of unusual merit and proportions will be held at Ryder's store on week from Saturday. Every lady of the church and congregation is expected to contribute of her best, both as to amount and quality. The residents of Northville will have such an exhibition of the culinary art as it never has heretofore beheld. It is rumored that considerable rivalry is being aroused among the ladies as to who is the best cook. This matter which has been under discussion for a long time, will reach a final decision at this bake sale.

Kidney ills come mysteriously. But nature generally warns you. Notice the kidney secretions. See if the color is unhealthy. If there are settlements and sediment. Passages frequent, scanty, painful. It's time of use Doan's Kidney Pills.

Doan's have done great work in Northville. G. B. Sinclair, retired farmer, High St., Northville, Mich., says: "Most of my trouble was from my kidneys. The secretions contained much sediment and passed too frequently. At night I had to get up four or five times and the passages were accompanied by burning pains. I saw Doan's Kidney Pills advertised and I got a supply at Murdoch's Bros. Drug Store and they cured me. I am glad to confirm the testimonial I gave at that time as I have not had any more kidney trouble."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milbourne Co., Buffalo, N. Y., sole agents for the United States. Remember the name—Doan's—and take no other.

There is no Royal Road to Wealth.

The average man must win his way. Some have inherited riches but the foundation of every fortune, big or small, is based on hard work and thrift.

A savings account is the first step to wealth. It enables a man to save his money and at the same time it is earning money for him.

This bank will not only help you save money but it will pay you interest—Remember this—compound interest has made more millions than speculation.

The Case of Lady Broadstone

A THRILLING STORY OF LOVE, MONEY AND INTRIGUE.

By Arthur Marchmont

Copyright 1933 by the Author.

No—it couldn't be true. Five years had passed since he had come home to find that his father—the quiet country rector—had all unexpectedly come into the barony. He himself had been the title four years. If Sadie had lived—but it was impossible—impossible! He would have what his cousin had to say; but nothing could bring a dead woman to life.

In the morning his drift of courage had evaporated, but it was soon restored and he waited for his cousin in a mood of sullen defiance.

But Gilbert Dorrisson, although he was to be the best man, did not come. There was no message from him; and Gardiner when questioned, knew nothing.

"He will be at the church," thought Lord Broadstone, as the time arrived for the wedding.

But he was not there, and a substitute had to take his place. After the ceremony there was a great reception at the Manor, and half the county were present. John Petherby was a proud man that day as he moved about, hand and arm of fact, among the crowd of people, most of whom until that day had scarcely deigned to recognise his existence.

The bride had gone to change her dress to leave when Gilbert Dorrisson arrived and asked to see Lord Broadstone privately.

"You don't mean to say that after my letter you have actually married this girl? Are you mad, man?"

"Mad? Not even drunk, yet?" was the answer. "My lordship had had plenty of wine. What do you mean? Why didn't you get down in time?"

Dorrisson said: "Because I know John Petherby and have no mind to do him the trick with you as an accessory to a bigamous marriage."

"You're a fool, Gilbert! My wife died five years ago last March in Helena, Montana."

"Well, this woman left Helena in June of the same year, in complete health after a long and dangerous illness." He handed his cousin a photograph. "On the back you'll see the newspaper cutting with the date."

Lord Broadstone stared at the photograph like a man who, at the sight of a snake, had turned over, read the paragraph. The room seemed round him, the photograph dropped to the floor, and he fell fainting into a chair. His face was grey and his teeth were chattering as he staggered.

"What am I to do, Gilbert?" he whispered hoarsely and feebly.

"Do what you please—I'm going. You've done too much for me to stay," said Dorrisson, picking up the photograph.

"Don't go far for God's sake."

"I'm not fool enough to stay, thank you."

As he turned to the door Mr. Petherby came in.

"Eva is ready. What's the matter? Ah! Mr. Dorrisson."

"Bertram is ill—has had a fainting fit. Mr. Petherby, you had better get him some brandy. I was detained by Parliamentary matters and couldn't get down for the wedding, and have to go back by the next train."

"Was that you come then?" he asked sharply. But the question was unanswered. Dorrisson had left the room.

"I'm all right now, Mr. Petherby," said Lord Broadstone. "It was only the excitement. I mustn't keep Eva waiting."

And with scant ceremony he brushed past his father-in-law and went to his bride.

He must get away from John Petherby at any cost, and decide afterwards what to do. The next minute he was laughing and chatting with his friends, accepting their congratulations noisily and bidding them good-bye.

CHAPTER III.

PROPOSAL BY IMPLICATION.

Gilbert Dorrisson was on the friendliest terms with himself as he paced up and down the deck of the giant Atlantic liner, the "Aronia," on a lovely morning in the September following that trying and sensational visit to Petherby Manor, on the day of Lord Broadstone's marriage.

Everything was going well with him; and while appropriately grateful to Fortune for her smiles, he felt that the main causes of his success were his own cleverness and abilities.

In the matter of his cousin's marriage, in particular, he plumed himself upon his management. He wanted the barony and meant to have it. The marriage, if legal, was quite likely to bar him, of course; while, by an old proviso in the family deeds, the heir to the title received £1,000 a year, so long as the holder was unmarried.

But it had suited him not to step the marriage. He was confident that Lord Broadstone's first wife was living, although for the moment she could not be found; and it was obvious that his cousin could not afford to quarrel with him and stop that £1,000 a year. Indeed, as Broadstone had now command of so much money, he could readily afford to pay much more. And at the one interview they had had since the marriage it had been his lordship's own proposal that the income should be continued.

Dorrisson had taken the earliest opportunity, however, of going out to Montana, and he was now returning more confident than ever.

Meanwhile, another plum had dropped into his lap on the voyage. One of the most costly suites of state-rooms on the liner was occupied by Mrs. Seth P. Porlock, as rich a widow as was to be found in all America, and he had made the running with her at a great pace.

On the ship he was a universal favourite indeed. His adaptability, good humour, genial laugh, ready-made face and ready tongue made friends with everyone. The men liked his smoke-room stories and even forgot to be jealous when he won the log pool three days in succession; the women relished his deck chat and anecdotes about all sorts of people and subjects, and even the children felt they could overrun him and yet be sure of a kind word and a smile.

Altogether there was ample reason for the bright smile and confident air with which he was enjoying the sunshine, his cigar, and his self-complimentary thoughts.

"Is that smile for your luck, Mr. Dorrisson?" He started and looked up as Mrs. Porlock's sweet low voice with its soft Southern intonation broke in upon his reverie. "Or is it because the world is going all your way just now?"

"It is good enough to see me smiling that you are going my way, Mrs. Porlock."

"That is a real pretty speech, Mr. Dorrisson, if you only meant it. But you Englishmen say nice things to us, while our men do them. Still the luck's mine in that, for you've made the voyage mighty pleasant."

"Let me settle you in your chair. He placed her cushions and arranged her rug, and sat down by her side. "I haven't done that for a long time."

"But for a little consideration in the world, I think we both had a good time. I don't dread the voyage, and that's the truth, but the weather and you have made it just lovely, and I'm sorry it's nearly over. We'll be in by this time to-morrow, they tell me, and all sorts of things in different directions."

"Scarcely different. You are going to London?"

"That's so. But London isn't the 'Aronia's' promenade deck quite."

"Still friends can meet there."

She had picked up her novel and was turning the pages, but she let it fall on her lap and looked at him for a pause. "I guess, I hope so," she said with a smile.

"Where are you going to stay?"

Her smile broadened into a laugh. "Seems to me if I told you you might forget."

"You mean something by that. Of course I shouldn't forget."

"Sort of proud of your memory are you? But what about that book of speeches you promised me?"

"It's up against me," he laughed.

"But I didn't suppose you really cared to read a lot of dull rot like that."

"I don't hear you talk any dull rot if they were good enough for you to make, I reckon they'll be good enough for me to read."

This drew one of his cheeriest smiles. "I'll go and get it now."

"I'll keep your chair," she laughed as he hurried off. "He's a real pleasant fellow, but—" The rest of the thought was left unspoken, and she lay back thinking.

She was very handsome, tall and with the characteristically upright carriage of the American woman, her finely developed and well-proportioned figure would have attracted attention in any crowd. But the most striking thing about her was her hair—it was almost white, although her smooth, unwrinkled skin and clear complexion were those of a woman in the twenties.

To all she appeared the very type of one of those favoured women on whom the breath of trouble had never been blown, and whose course in life had been just one peaceful, care-free, pampered, leisurely saunter. But the world made a big blunder, Sadie, or Mrs. Seth P. Porlock as she was now, had drained the cup of suffering and privation to the dregs, and had found the draught very bitter. But she had her own strong reasoning for not setting people right in their reckoning.

Six years had made as much change in her fortunes as in her looks and her nature. When her husband had slunk out of that Helena shanty leaving her for dead, she had been little more than a slight slip of a girl of twenty, worn out by hard work, weakened by anxiety, and emaciated by illness. In her weakness, the treachery of the man she had loved and sought to win back to a decent life had nearly killed her.

In his nervousness, his drink-betuddled wits had mistaken an opened bottle of lotion for the poison, and when she came to herself she found the poison and understood everything. For a month and more she lay close to death's door, but then she learnt that which made her once more keen to live.

As soon as she was well enough to travel, she left Helena, telling no one her destination. She would not go to her father—never forgiving him for his former conduct—but travelled down to Mexico to her mother's brother, Seth P. Porlock, a grizzled bachelor, who had quarrelled with every relative he had in the world.

To him she told her story and he befriended her. In his house her child was born; and she and her babe won upon him that he would not let them leave him. She left her own people to believe her dead, and took her mother's name; and when the old man died he left her every stick and stone of his fortune.

Trouble had bleached her once golden hair; but after the birth of her child her figure had developed, and her wrinkles disappeared in the ease and comfort of the millionaire's house. Her appearance was changed beyond recognition.

For six months after the death of Seth Porlock she stayed in Mexico to realise her many possessions—doing it all with the natural shrewdness which the old man carefully nurtured—and then had resolved to see life in the American cities.

The knowledge of her wealth, added to her own personal charms, brought her many proposals of marriage, and this decided her to settle the question whether she was wife or widow, to institute a search for her husband, Bert Hunter, and eventually to come to England herself to direct it.

On the "Aronia's" passenger list the name of Dorrisson recalled to her that she had once heard her husband speak of some relative of the same name, and it was this slight fact which had induced her to encourage Gilbert Dorrisson's very ready advances.

Her keen wit craved to read him easily, and when she heard that Dorrisson was the family name of Lord Broadstone she saw at once there was little or no hope of getting any clue to her husband's whereabouts. To negotiate such a drunken, dissolute chuck as Bert Hunter with an English peer was obviously ridiculous.

But Gilbert Dorrisson had proved a very entertaining ship companion, and, despite his belief that he was paying court to a woman, he had won upon her good feelings to far that she felt she could not but know more of him.

She wanted to know something of what the man himself was under that smooth surface of indifference and courtesy.

She gave him a little when he returned with the book and thanked him. "And now leave me alone for an hour while I go—what you are like in print and then I'll tell you whether I wish to keep it longer."

"Rather rough, isn't it, to send me away as a reward for bringing it?" he laughed.

"You won't be jealous of our own speeches, surely? I shall be studying you all the time. Don't forget that."

"It will be a long hour," he rejoined as he turned away with a rueful shrug of the shoulders.

It was a volume of newspaper cuttings, reports of speeches, chiefly with a few personal paragraphs about the M. P. These speeches she skimmed, the paragraphs she read turning the pages idly; and then suddenly she came upon a paper lying loose, and a glance at the first line drew an exclamation of surprise and interest.

"My Dearest Gilbert."

"Yes, dearest, although you tell me you have cast me off for ever and will never return to England to make me your wife. God forgive me for having trusted to your honour, and you, for the wrong you have done me."

She had read so far in a single glance, noted the address—300, Roath Road, Cardiff—and in putting the letter back in the book she saw the written name—"Gladys Llewellyn."

At that moment she caught sight of Dorrisson returning, and in a flash resolved to test him and see how he would act when he knew she had seen the letter. She let the book lie open upon her lap with the letter in full view.

"Is the hour up already?" she asked, smiling sweetly. "You see how interested I must have been. I thought it was only a few minutes. Some of your speeches are brilliant."

He glanced at the book and started very slightly as he saw the letter; but she noticed both the glance and the start.

"I am glad you would even read one," he replied. "I find no difficulty in speaking, luckily."

"There is something here that is not a speech. Was this left for me to see? I read half a dozen lines." And she picked up the letter. "Who is—Gladys?"

The moment was long enough to enable him to answer with complete self-possession. With a very serious air he said: "No that was not for you to see, of course. I ought not to have been so careless as to leave it there. It is the one real trouble I have at present. I am going to see what I can do in the matter."

"My man, Cardner, has been a scoundrel, I fear, I learnt of this when on your side, recently; but I am resolved that justice shall be done."

"He seems to have taken your name, too."

"It is his also, by an unfortunate coincidence."

She shrugged her shoulders with intentional indifference. "Men will be men. Poor girl!"

"They need not be scoundrels, Mrs. Porlock. But she shall be righted."

"I am glad to think you are so chivalrous. And now shall we say no more about it?" she said with a sigh.

"I am sorry the thing has been brought to your knowledge. I have promised him that strict secrecy shall be observed if he does the right thing."

"Why, of course. For the girl's sake, whoever she is, I would be as silent as a mouse. Hello—there's the first luncheon bugle. For a quarter of an hour you can give me the surroundings of some of these speeches."

"You are quite giggardly with you, time this morning," he said, with a glance of reproach and a light laugh, as self-possessed as though the affair of Gladys Llewellyn had not even been mentioned. "Had he told her the truth? That was the thought in her mind as he took the book of cuttings and made it the pretext for a very interesting sketch of political life. So interesting indeed that the full half-hour slipped away and the second bugle sounded.

They were not alone again until after dinner. The night was warm, the sea very calm, and the moon at the full—an entrancing sight for the last of the voyage; and Sadie was leaning on the bulwarks gazing at the brilliant ladder of the moon on the waves when Dorrisson joined her. "Your face is set toward the light. That is always your way, I know," he said.

"I was just letting my thoughts tangle themselves. Wondering, as I suppose everyone does when approaching a new country, what it has in store for me."

"Happiness, of course, for you carry that with you," he answered gently. "Hearty friends, too; you have the magnetism that attracts and you may find a home—plenty will be offered to you."

"I have had many homes of that kind offered to me on my side. I am not craving for that purpose."

"There was a pause. Then in a tone not quite so steady as usual, Dorrisson asked: "You mean you will be my mother-in-law?"

She turned and looked at him. His face was full in the moonlight. "Why do you ask that?" she said in a little more than a whisper.

Dorrisson's heart began to speed to his ears. "Because in that case you should let everyone know it."

She laughed—the soft entrancing laugh of the South. "But why do you ask?"

"I am not like some men. I cannot face a fall. My tone was low and intensely earnest."

There was a long pause. She sighed deeply. "I'll let you know if I ever shall when I've been something in London. I'll write to you."

"A promise," he asked eagerly.

"My hand on it," was her answer. She gave it to him and he held it until she withdrew it and bade him good-night.

He remained there a long time alone, smoking and dreaming dreams of millions.

CHAPTER IV.

SADIE'S TEST.

London even in September is a glorious place for the rich and Sadie enjoyed herself thoroughly. She had one friend, Lady Preston. Sir John Preston had once been in Mexico to buy some mining properties, and had taken his wife with him. Old Seth Porlock had taken such a great fancy to him and had given such good sound advice as to his investments that he had made a large sum of money.

The wife and Sadie had been much together; and now she was glad to be able to retain the hospitality and at the same time to take under her wing this striking and handsome millionaire.

But Sadie did not forget the purpose of her journey, and with American promptness she set on foot inquiries for Bert Hunter within two days of her arrival at The Carlton.

Nor was that all. Gilbert Dorrisson's implied proposal had its due consideration. Sir John Preston spoke in the highest terms of him as a rising politician and still a possible heir to his cousin Lord Broadstone. Everyone said pleasing things about Dorrisson and foretold a great future for him.

But Sadie was not content with this, and resolved to put his disinterestedness to a severe test. She had plenty of fortune hunters to deal with in her own country; and if she was to marry again, she was determined that she should be chosen for herself and not for her wealth.

She had made shrewd preparations accordingly. She had a credit opening with one London bank, to whom her real position and wealth were stated, and to another bank, she had just £1,000 remitted, together with a guarded letter about her. This amount was soon spent and she meant to use the matter to test Dorrisson.

Nor did she neglect that ugly Cardiff incident. She spent enough time in Cardiff to find the Jewellings and to ascertain that although the name of Gilbert Gardner had been used the real offender was Gilbert Dorrisson. She discovered, too, that the brother of the girl was a fiery-tempered Welshman who would prove a dangerous enemy should he learn the truth.

Fired with resentment against Dorrisson, both on account of his act and because of the smooth lie with which he had met her question on the "Aronia," she prepared her test and wrote to him.

"I think I shall marry again. I am staying at The Carlton. Sadie Porlock," and awaited his visit with much curiosity.

Dorrisson on his side had been waiting eagerly for word from her—he had been down at Broadstone—and called that same evening.

Sadie was magnificently gowned, and was wearing her richest diamonds. She had taken especial pains with her toilet to impress him.

"You are radiance personified," he said, pressing warmly the hand she gave him, and gazing ardently into her eyes.

"As I told you once before, London is not the promenade deck of the 'Aronia'."

"You have made me feel the difference, indeed, by keeping me so long at a distance."

"I have been very busy," she said.

"And I very lonely." She encouraged him with a glance, and he added: "I would not have thought it possible a mere fortnight even without seeing you could seem so long."

Sadie looked down and then asked with a smile: "Shall we get our breath first? What have you been doing?"

"Trying to kill a few days at my cousin's weary house, Broadstone; but I was to be wired for the instant a word came from you. I left Cardiff behind for that purpose."

"Gardiner? Who is that?"

"My man, you know," he said indifferently, but ready to curse himself for having mentioned the name. "Ah, I remember. That shameful affair. But he has done the right thing."

"Oh, yes. They were married three days after we parted."

She was so surprised at the glibness of the lie that she could not answer for a moment. I am glad," she said then. "My letter—days moved by any such cruelty to my sex."

"I honour you for that, and, man of the world though I am, we are alike there." His air was one of complete frankness and candour. He was an excellent actor.

His falsetto disgusted her. That he could do the thing was bad enough, but to lie about it so glibly and with such hypocrisy and loathing, after impudently to tell him what she knew, and the words rushed to her lips, but she checked them. She could not even better than he.

"And now tell me what you have been doing," he continued. "The delay cannot have seemed long to you—for you could have ended it with a word."

She laughed gaily. "I have been everywhere, seeing everything and buying, buying, buying, until I don't know what I have spent. I have been playing my part. Don't I look it?"

He was puzzled. "Playing your part?" he asked.

"As a millionaire—what else? How you Londoners worship money! Talk of New York—why, even Chicago is way back in that respect," and she rattled on with an account of her doings in London largely imaginary.

"Do you think you would care to live in London?" he asked after a time, to bring the talk back to the object of his visit.

"My! It would be just good. No wonder you folks are proud of it."

He took out her letter and looked meaningfully from it to her. She smiled and dropped her eyes.

He moved nearer to her. "And so your name is Sadie?" he said, lowering his tone.

"Have you anything to say against it—except there are many thousands of Sadies in the States?" This with a coquettish smile.

"I think it is a lovable name—especially when signed to such a letter as this."

"Mr. Dorrisson?"

"You remember the last night on the 'Aronia,' Sadie?"

A glance as of reproach at even a hint of possible forgetfulness answered him. He touched her hand and she did not withdraw it. He was more excited at the thought of the prize he had won than he had ever been in his life. "And you will marry again?" She nodded in assent. "You will give yourself to me?"

"If you really care for me." Just a whisper, this.

"Dearest, with all my heart," he said, earnestly, and would have drawn her to him, but she put his arm away gently.

"Are you sure you love me—for myself?"

"On my honour. You are more to me than all else in the world, I swear," his voice vibrating as with passion.

She drew back and with a shudder clasped her hands to her face, and sat down. A long pause fell between them.

"Sadie, you don't doubt me?"

With a deep sigh she took her hands from her face and let her large dark eyes rest upon him.

"Dearest," he whispered.

"I have been wicked. How can I doubt you? Yet I ought not to have done it."

"Done what? Not that I care. You could do nothing that would shake my love for you."

"Wait, wait; I have misled you. I told you I had been playing my part. I have sent for you that you should know. I ought to have told you first. I had a craving for the adulation which is paid to rich women, and—it is all ended. All the money I had at the bank was five thousand dollars—a thousand pounds. It is gone. See how they write. Oh, the tears it has cost me."

She took from her bosom a letter creased with constant tumbling and stained as if with the tears she had shed on it.

"He read it and turned cold with consternation."

"Of the £1,000 placed to your credit by the First National Bank of New York a balance of $5,000 remains to your credit. We have today had to return a cheque for $5,000. We cannot of course allow you to overdraw your account, and await your instructions."

He read it twice before he could trust himself to speak. "Do you mean—" he began, when she interrupted him with a laugh.

"I mean that I have had a good time. I was determined on that. I have lived just like a millionaire, and have heaps of debts. I have bought everything I took a fancy to."

"You have spent a thousand pounds in a fortnight," he broke in. "The only thousand pounds you had?"

"I knew you would come to me, Gilbert. You are not angry? You said nothing could shake your love."

He was already congratulating himself upon his escape; and his pale face was set and resolved as he folded up the letter very precisely, and returned it.

"It is not for me to be angry," he answered. "What can I do for you?"

"You have asked me to marry you."

"My dear Mrs. Porlock, I am not rich enough to marry anyone who can spend that sum of money in a fortnight."

"But you asked me," she insisted, enjoying his confusion.

He got up and paced the room. "Why, then, this Cardiff business is all a deception," she nodded.

"Your dress, your jewels, your signs of wealth?"

"Don't they become me? Don't I look the part?"

"You—you are an adventuress. These debts you have incurred without means to pay them. They may involve you in trouble—in great trouble—even with the police."

"Can they?" she asked irresponsibly. "I can give the things back."

"What are you going to do?"

"To do? Why, to become your wife, of course."

"But I cannot marry an adventuress."

"I am the same woman as I was on the 'Aronia'."

"Well, but you are an adventuress."

"She shrugged her shoulders, and her diamonds sparkled and glistened. Then with a laugh: "I suppose I am."

"You can't expect me to marry you in that case?"

"But what can I do? Without money, without friends—if you desert me—without even means to get back to the States. Mr. Dorrisson—Gilbert! Surely you won't—oh!"

and she sank back in her chair apparently in great distress. Her dejection touched him slightly in spite of his disappointment. He was willing to help her if he could. And then an idea occurred to him.

He sat down again and said quietly: "Let us talk it over. Of course, marriage is out of the question; but I can help you if you really can get rid of these debts."

"I can do that—my jewels will do that," she answered. "Show me."

"I can help you to make perhaps enough money to enjoy legitimately some of the things you have had here."

"I will do anything in the world for money," cried Sadie, with excellently simulated desperation.

"You can keep a secret?"

"Have I not kept this? Did anyone on the 'Aronia' suspect?"

"Well, there is a secret involved. You have played your part so well that you could play another—this time with me to help you. There is a man I know who has lately married a girl with a huge fortune. He has been already married—unknown to her—and the first wife is living. The man and wife have not met for many years. If you will play the part of that first wife there is a fortune for both you and me. You say you have come to the end of things with this—and he

AS THE TWIG IS BENT THE TREE WILL GROW

Old Axiom True of Children—Train The Daughter's Taste In Clothes

It is common to hear of a mother's duty toward her daughter, a daughter's duty toward her mother, but little is said concerning a mother's duty to train her daughter's sense of propriety and beauty in dress.

Many a girl who wears flashy, "fashionable" garments, more suitable for a denizen of the demi-monde than for a modest miss, gained her ideas of style from a bedazzled doll given her by a thoughtless mother, in the days when she was believed to be too small to notice such things. When you place a doll or any other plaything into your small daughter's hand, you permit her to read a book, YOU, Mother, cannot be too careful. It is strictly "up to you" to figure out what is to be the effect of the plaything or book on the child's mind and character. A child's character is formed when it is still very small and ideas picked up before your daughter is ten years old may remain to influence her whole future—for good or evil. Which is up to you. You should be dressed with modesty and the little girl taught what constitutes modesty and propriety in dress.

Unless you are your own dressmaker there is no better way to achieve the well-dressed appearance than to visit the department stores of the large cities. There the modest garments in "lastest" style as well as the ultra-fashionable and "razzle-dazzle" are to be found and by carefully trying on garments it is easy to find what is most becoming to the figure. If a woman lacks faith in her own taste the large stores provide experienced clerks who will gladly give the benefit of their experience and taste.

According to the latest indications on the other side, sashes and girdles will continue to be in vogue for the coming fall and winter. Most of these give the large waist appearance and the negligee, loose effect, which are now so fashionable. Sashes and girdles are now receiving recognition from women all over this country. They are made of black or colored satin, taffeta, moire or velvet ribbon, or of silk or pile fabrics arranged in various ways.

Many novelty ribbons and other fabrics are employed for sashes or girdles. Among these are printed velvets or satins, high brocades, Roman fancy stripes and Scotch tartan plaids.

Some of the sashes encircle the hips in the boyade style and are knotted in front or at the side. Others tie in the back. Some, again, encircle the waist and end in loops and bows below the knees. In fact, there are many ingenious ways of arranging the sashes; thus giving added variety to the garments on which they are used.

Many of the new girdles are finished with flat obi bows, in Japanese effect. Others are made with points in front which simulate a vest. Most of the girdles are very wide and are placed at the normal waistline, but so as to give a short-waisted effect. A few are worn low, however.

The sashes are seen not only on dresses, separate skirts, suit skirts and coats of suit, but also on separate outer garments. The girdles are employed on dresses, skirts and waists.

The increasing demand for outing apparel has brought the tailored flannel waist more prominently to the front. Not the old-time garment, made of fabrics which were heavy and unattractive, but waists of lightweight fine-weave materials.

There is also a departure from the strictly tailored ideas, as the new models show novelty features in the form of successive rows of pleats, shirt bosom effects, all-over tucks, fancy vests and surprise designs.

The sleeves are mostly full-length, but there is considerable variety in cuff styles, some of the newest showing four fancy buttons and buttonholes in button-through arrangements.

The variety also includes straight bands, and narrow and wide cuffs finished in points and scallops.

The necks are about equally divided between high and low finish. When the standing collar is used new ideas in trimmings are featured.

Many of the finer woolsens show colored pin stripes, although the all-white waist is by far the best seller. The influence of the strong color shades of former seasons having given way to yellow, cerise, myrtle green, purple, terra-cotta and Naples blue. With these striped waists appear the small tailored blouses at the neck, colored pearl or glass buttons or fancy ties run through slashes down the center front.

GO IN THE WOODS FOR SPRUCE GUM

There Are Men Who Make a Business of the Trip Into Maine's Wilderness

THEY CALL IT "GOING GUMMING"

From 25 to 50 Work the Maine Woods
Each Spring—Leases from the Lumbermen—May Pick $8 Worth in a Day.

In the early days of April from twenty-five to fifty athletic, canvas clad young men start for the up-river woods from Bangor, Me., and nearby towns to collect spruce gum from the more than 26,000,000,000 feet of spruce timbers still standing in the northern forests of Maine.

Not a few of these men are the well to do sons of old families, who go "gumming" partly for profit and partly as a pastime. A majority, however, are trained climbers who know the woods and who break away from side walks and electric lights to gain health and money at a time of the year when lumbering operations are drawing to a close and before the streams open up for driving.

Instead of being a solitary and silent man the gum picker as a rule is as talkative as a book agent and as ingratiating as a poor kinsman in straitened circumstances, says the Boston Herald. For, in order to secure exclusive control over the gum territory he desires to monopolize, the picker must claim lease over spruce timber lands whose owners he has never met. Before he can do this he must ingratiate himself into the favor of the camp bosses and their subordinates. A man who can sing a rollicking song or tell a lively story is welcome.

The travelling outfit of the gum picker is very light. A set of steel climbing spikes, such as are used by firemen, a heavy, and broad hatchet for cutting off the gum and for scarring the trees for the making of more gum the next year—these with tobacco, pipe and matches, complete his rig. His food and lodging are given to him by the boss of the camp where he chances to stop over night, his cheerful ways and the news he brings from the outer world more than paying for all day.

The picker who glories his harvest from the same trees year after year estimates the value of the holding great, though this value applies to the gum alone for the trees are not materially affected. The owners of the woods are too busy to spend time in looking gum areas and as the income from gum picking is never large and the time of picking lasts but a few weeks the picker cannot afford to pay the fee for drying the leaves to any nothing of giving tribute to the gum.

A "smart" man working in an old gum orchard of thirty trees that are scattered about a bunch to admit sunlight for ripening and hardening, can run up under such conditions collect in a day from eight to ten pounds of rough gum, which on cleaning will shrink two pounds, worth $1 a pound in the city. Before starting out to operate a gum orchard a picker must spend one spring in marking and scarring the trees, so as to make sure of finding gum enough to pay for his labor when he calls around a year later. This is done by climbing a thirty foot tree to above the old limbs and high into the sunlight and scarring the south side of the trunk between the whorls of limbs with deep incisions shaped like a V.

The spruce sap exudes from these wounds and moving downward along the cut is dried in the sun until a pitchy crust is formed, which fends off the bits of bark and spalls blown about by the wind and prohibits the entrance of insective bees and other insects. Thus protected from harm, the embryo nugget of gum continues to grow from the inside by fresh supplies of resinous sap and to harden from the outside by slow evaporation. The sun goes away south, winter arrives and the sweetening frosts remove the pitchy and acrid taste, leaving from a score to a hundred of sweet and ruddy and crystallized "teats" of genuine spruce gum.

There are good reasons why the harvesters should choose April as the month for the task. It is then that the gum is in its ripest and best condition, not so old as to be hard and crumbly, not so young as to be soft and taste of pitch. The sealy crust above the winter snow banks among the trees is then as smooth as glass, carrying all the gum which escapes the hand of the picker into the hollows among the drifts and holding them safely in plain view until they can be picked up. Before the end of May the coming gum will have warmed the tree trunks and set the old wounds to bleeding new sap, thus spilling the harvest for another year.

If he is an old hand at selling in the city the gum hunter will charge from $1 to $1.50 a pound for his gum. If he is new at the business he may sell to some sharp broker or druggist for 75 cents a pound. If he likes to haggle he will call around from place to place and in a day or more can sell out for $2 a pound.

GORGEOUS COURT UNIFORMS

Some of Them Cost $1,250 Each—Expensive Regalia of Foreign Diplomats.
Much of the splendor of any of his majesty's courts would be lacking if it were not for the dazzling uniforms of the high officers of state and the great officers of the royal household who assemble at these impressive functions, says "Tit-Bits."

There are always five or six different grades of gentlemen in attendance present when his majesty holds a court, and each has his distinctive dress, the difference usually being indicated by the trimming, either gold or silver, or the number of buttons worn. The complete outfit of a first-class court official runs to $200, the jacket alone costing $80 to $100. It is made of the finest royal blue cloth, lavishly embroidered with gold lace of a highly elaborate design. The waistcoat and knee breeches are made from white herseymere silk, richly embroidered, set off with buttons and buckles of gilt, and white silk stockings, sword, cocked hat and white kid gloves make a complete costume, as rich as it is dignified.

An ambassador of foreign diplomat wears a special distinction—black velvet collar, with a gold embroidered floral design. The uniform costs the wearer about $115.

Lord lieutenant is dressed in a coat of royal red cloth, cut swallow-tail and adorned with silver buttons, and the collar embroidered with silver lace. Silver laced trousers are worn, with a cocked hat without plumes. The uniform is very handsome, and costs the wearer 160 guineas simply for the privilege to wear it, let alone the making of it.

To the Duke of Norfolk, as the earl marshal, however, falls the enviable distinction of wearing the most costly of state. The dress is absolutely unique, and for sheer magnificence has no parallel in any country. Nearly three miles of the finest gold thread are used in the embroidery on the coat, collar, front and on the lapels of the sleeves. Each suit costs his grace $250.

All Cabinet ministers and other high state officials are expected to have at least one state uniform. A complete court outfit will cost from $130 to $170.

There are, of course, many others such as the captain of the Yeomen of the Guard, the captain of the Gentlemen at Arms, the Master of the Horse and the equires and pages of honor, who have to possess a distinctive dress for special occasions costing from $20 to $50. Court dandies will only wear three uniforms once, while noblemen some times make the same uniform last a lifetime. It has been computed that on great state occasions the value of the uniforms worn exceeds £30,000.

Demand for Hair Ropes.

There is one thing which we export from this country that few people, in fact, no one outside those in the trade, ever know anything about, said S. C. Brown to a Milwaukee Sentinel reporter. "That is hair ropes. They are shipped mainly to India, though they go to any place where poisonous snakes are plentiful. Every cowboy and plainsman learned years ago that if he did not wish to wake up in the morning and find a rattler for a bed mate when he laid to sleep on the prairie, he had to be careful before he laid down to see that his horsehair lariar was coiled carefully about him so that there was no opening through which a snake might crawl."

No snake will tackle a hair rope. It is the only safe protection against them. Somehow this idea has permeated the minds of the East Indians and now they buy these ropes for protection against the poisonous snakes with which that country abounds. Large numbers of these ropes are shipped to India and adjoining countries each year.

Over there they are coiled on the floor around the bed at night and the occupant can lie down in comfort, certain that no snake will ever attempt to pass over that hair rope. It is about the only way any one can be sure of a night's sleep undisturbed by visits from snakes in that country."

Game Abounds in Louisiana.

Louisiana is blessed with an abundance of game, and just how great that abundance is never was realized until the State Game Commission began to receive detailed reports from its parish wardens, telling how much of various kinds has been killed this season. Reports from wardens of three parishes are especially interesting. Allen Mouch, warden for West Baton Rouge parish, estimates the number of quail killed from September to April at 4,500; the doves killed at 7,000, the ducks at 700, 100 deer, 12,000 squirrels, 1,000 rabbits, 1,000 coons, 500 muskrats and 4,000 snakes.

J. G. Durand, warden for St. Martin parish, says in his district 19,000 squirrels were killed, 19,000 quail, 7,000 doves, 1,500 snakes, 4,500 ducks and 3,500 rabbits.

Charles Alonzo, warden in Assumption parish, says 25,891 coons have been killed, 15,500 muskrats, 19,347 squirrels, 10,000 doves, 5,488 quail, 18,350 oie d'eau and 6,612 ducks.

Nature and Humanity.

I hope the day will come when it shall be considered as commendable to dissect a lake or brook as a latrine or brookinoptus. To climb a mountain and gain a view is as "scientific" as to "shun" a tree and photograph a nest. Get nature—large or small—in your own way and be improved by the getting.

Market Report

The peach market is oversupplied and easy. Demand is slow. Other fruits are steady and in fair demand. Potatoes are easy and offerings are larger than they were last week. Poultry is easy and in fair supply. Dairy products are in active demand and offerings are small. The market is firm and recent advances are well held. General trading in farm stuff is moderately active and the tone steady.

Buy a Mechanical Drudge

ANY a winter day of back breaking labor has the average farmer spent stooping over the old buck saw, z-r-p, z-r-ping its way through tough wood for the kitchen stove supply. But the wise ones don't do it now. They have a handy engine to run the saw, while they rest and plan for next summer's work.

That engine is about the busiest and most convenient machine the wise man has on his farm. It pumps water for him, runs the separator, washing machine, feed grinder, corn sheller, and grinders. Often it runs a hay press, ensilage cutter, small thrasher, or a repair shop. The year round it drudges for him, saving the man's strength for more profitable things. And the wise man has an because it does most for him at least cost. Its simplicity renders it almost trouble-proof. Its construction makes it easy to start and to operate, and it is most economical in fuel consumption. It is made of best material, and when necessary it will deliver 10 to 30 per cent above its rated horse power. I H C responsibility for the engine lasts all the years it is in service.

I H C engines are made in all styles—vertical and horizontal, portable, stationary and skidded, air and water cooled. There are pumping, sawing and spraying outfits. Sizes from 1 to 50-horse power, to operate on gas, gasoline, naphtha, distillate, kerosene, and alcohol. Oil tractors, 6-12 to 30-60-horse power for plowing, thrashing, etc.

The I H C local dealer will show you the engines and tell you all about them. Get catalogues from him, or write the

How About Madame.

"Under the lax American system of bringing up girls," says a Paris Journal, "the American young man rarely wins the first kiss from the girl who is to be his bride. Maybe but by heck that is not so bad as the Gallic discomfort of never knowing who has won the last kiss from the madame."

Self Confidence.

Lack of self confidence ever makes you fall back in the ranks, weak, helpless, despairing. It shuts from you the revelation of power that is born only of action. Feel in every fiber of your being, feel with the heat and glow of conviction that you have infinite possibilities; you must yourself make realities or you will do nothing until great. —Herbert Knowles.

Avoid Sedative Cough Medicines.

If you want to contribute directly to the occurrence of capillary bronchitis and pneumonia, use cough medicines that contain opium, morphine, heroin and other sedatives when you have a cough or cold. An expectorant like Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is what is needed. It cleans out the culture beds or breeding places for the germs of pneumonia and other germ diseases. That is why pneumonia never results from a cold when Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is used. It has a world wide reputation for its cures. It contains no morphine or other sedative.
