NORTHVILLE'S GRAND OLD MAN

FRANCIS R. BEAL PASSING REMAINING DAYS ON LITTLE GARDEN-FARM.

Many Years of Active Business Life Here Still Well Preserved.

Along the various stages of the public life of every community there are always some individuals whose activities and achievements must inevitably stand out more prominently than those of the average citizens among their contemporaries. Communities, if in any degree progressive must have leaders, as necessarily as armies, individual or militant, or as must all the enterprises of human effort. By reason of certain inherent qualities, combined with force of circumstances and effective utilization of opportunities as they present themselves, some men naturally and almost imperceptibly find themselves at the front in life's local campaigns. Perhaps at the time of his greatest usefulness, such a man's services, while duly recognized, are not always estimated at their fullest worth, either by himself or by the community he serves, but the lapse of time sooner or later brings events into a truer perspective, and makes possible a clearer and more comprehensive realization of real meanings and true values. A citizen who, in his day, made an ineradicable impress upon the history of his community is Francis R. Beal, who may be appropriately called "Northville's Grand Old Man."

Mr. Beal's identification with the business and educational and religious life of this place covered a period of almost half a century. He was born in Northville August 24, 1836, and his entire life, with the exception of one year in Lonia county during his boyhood and four years near Jackson when falling health compelled his retirement from business, has been passed here. His education was acquired in the famous stone school house on what is now Hutton avenue, a ten roomed building, a few rods and in a private school run by Rev. Sylvester Chubbart. When 14 years old Mr. Beal began to work the cabinetmakers, trade with the late John Sands. In 1863 he bought the Robert McFarlane hardware business on Main street, in which he was engaged for 13 years. In 1873 he organized the Michigan School Furniture company which became one of the leading institutions of its kind in this country. Mr. Beal was first secretary and later president of the company until his retirement from business life.

Through no fault of its president, the company was forced into bankruptcy and was sold to the trust in 1898 under a contract to continue business here with even better local conditions than before. But in the same summer, only a few weeks later, during a violent storm, the main factory was struck by lightning and destroyed. Taking advantage of this seeming "dispensation of heaven," the trust refused to fulfill its promises, on the contention that no local quarters were provided for the continuation of the business. It collected the insurance and turned its attention elsewhere.

With health seriously impaired by anxiety and disappointment following the loss of his business, Mr. Beal bearing, Mr. Beal was obliged to retire from business activities, but with the consolation that he had given the best efforts of his best years to the betterment of his community.

During his business career, other concerns here in the promotion of which Mr. Beal was prominently interested were the Granville Wood & Son Pipe Organ company, the American Bell foundry, Ely Dowell works, Columbia Refrigerator company, Victor Sleigh company, Stanley Air Rifle company and several similar enterprises.

One of the ways in which he contributed to the material prosperity of the village was through his plan of purchasing lots and building houses upon them for his employees, selling them to the men on contracts, practically at cost, with a low interest rate and small weekly payments to be deducted from the wages of the purchaser. This was really the pioneer movement in the Building and Loan business in Northville.

Mr. Beal has also been long and intimately connected with the social educational and religious life in Northville. He was a member of the school board for nearly twenty-five years, and also for a quarter of a century was superintendent of the Methodist Sunday school, and an effective worker in all the enterprises of the church. His interest in Sunday school work was not confined to his local church as he organized and conducted Sunday schools at Waterford, Livonia Center, the Pierson school house in Livonia and the Griswold district in Novi township. He was specially active in the enterprise of building the present Methodist church which, at the time of its construction, was considered one of the finest churches outside of Detroit.

As a public spirited citizen and manufacturer, the fact that this church edifice was almost an entirely local product was a matter very pleasing to Mr. Beal, practically everything used in its construction with the exception of the plate glass and the windows, being made in Northville—lumber, brick, pews, pulpit furniture and organ. Mrs. Beal turned the first shovelful of earth in the excavation for the building, a task assigned her because of the high esteem in which they were both held as members of the church.

Mr. Beal's moral fiber was heightened by his course at the time of the financial panic of the nineties. To tide the affairs of the furniture company over a depression that would otherwise have been disastrous, he put into the business of the concern every dollar of his personal means that he could make available, even raising money on his home.

Left a widower about three years ago, he is spending his sunnier years on the little fruit farm just east of town which is all that is left to him of a once comfortable fortune. Far from railing at adverse fate, however, he cheerfully looks out from his comfortable home at what is going on around him, interested and interesting, meeting the friends who visit him with the old cordiality and conversational ability, and, although confined to the house from the effects of a severe illness has still the cultured, dignified manner that made him always a noticeable figure in the years of his active participation in public affairs.

OBITUARY—MRS. SHAW.

Mrs. Katherine Shaw, wife of Thomas Shaw, died Friday, March 13, aged sixty-eight years, after an illness of several months with heart trouble.

Mr. and Mrs. Shaw came to this vicinity from Big Rapids about nine years ago, purchasing the Lakeview farm east of town. Mrs. Shaw was a woman of fine christian character and of excellent mental ability, and had won many friends here. She had been, nearly ever since her arrival, a valued member of the Northville Woman's club, where she will be sadly missed and sincerely mourned. She was also a member of the W. R. C. The funeral was held Sunday afternoon from the home of her daughter, at Lakeview, where she was taken some months ago from her own home on the same farm. Her pastor, Rev. J. E. Webber, officiated, and a large delegation from the Woman's club attended in a body. The interment was in the Yerkes cemetery. Mrs. Shaw is survived by her husband, an only daughter, Mrs. S. W. Curtis, besides two sisters living in the western part of the state.

SOCIETY PLYING THE NEEDLE.

Most Feminine of Implements Comes Into Fashion Again.

"Those who are quick to observe changes in the moods and tastes of society will tell you," says a writer in the Lady's Pictorial, "that the doing of fine needlework is growing into great favor with even the most fashionable of our mondaines, whose own fingers are producing work that is fully equal to the best specimens of their much-lauded and perhaps over-lauded grandmothers."

"A lady who has had the honor to be the mistress of royalty in this craft says that hundreds come to her for counsel where tens came but a few years ago. The cause of this reversion to the pursuits of a more placid age is not difficult to discover. Such an occupation becomes virtually a 'rest cure' in this epoch of rush and motor cars, and that is why many of those who have been the most indelicate seekers after novelty and excitement are now among the most industrious Penelopes of society."

"The rhythmic movement that accompanies the plying of the needle is peculiarly soothing to the nerves, and produces much the same effect as the prayers of the Orientals, with their swaying to and fro and their apparently vain repetitions. It is a mistake to suppose that needlework is injurious to the eyesight. Old needlewomen rarely wear glasses."

The Earth as a Bell.

Studies of the violence earthquake which occurred in the Balkan peninsula April 4, 1904, made by Dr. Emilio Oddone, professor in the University of Paris, show that the shocks were transmitted through the entire body of the earth and were reflected from the antipodes back to their place of origin in about 33 minutes. Comparing the records of other great earthquakes, Doctor Oddone concludes that the average time required for a vibration to traverse the globe and return by reflection is from 32 to 33 minutes. The earth thus appears to be not altogether unlike a great bell suspended in space and vibrating throughout its whole mass under strokes, which, comparatively speaking, are no more than the tapping of a finger nail. Doctor Oddone calls attention to the interesting coincidence between the time taken for a vibration to traverse the globe and that required for light to cross the diameter of the earth's orbit.

Microscopical Tests of Metals.

More and more attention is paid to the results of microscopical examination of iron, steel and other metals, to detect faults and structural peculiarities. Several microscopes have been devised for such purposes. Mr. Thomas Andrews, an English civil engineer, reports the results of such an examination of a fractured boiler stay bolt from a British war ship, and draws important conclusions. The examination revealed many minute flaws, chiefly composed of microscopic segregations of sulphur, of manganese or of slag. The bolt had been subjected to a great strain, and Mr. Andrews believes that a little of weakness in the metal, originating at one or more of the micro flaws, promoted the final fracture. But the bolt was a fair specimen of normal mild Siemens steel and the opinion is expressed that steel is not as good a material as the best wrought iron for boiler stay-bolts.

Self-Defending Wheat.

A Belgian agriculturist, Monsieur Le Breton, has recently made some experiments with barbed wheat to determine the effectiveness of the defense which its barbs afford against the ravages of graminivorous birds. In the same field, near Antwerp, he sowed some barbed wheat and some Japhet wheat, which is without barbs. The Japhet variety grew rapidly, but every head was despoiled by the birds before the grain could ripen, but the barbed variety was so well guarded by its array of miniature spears that the attacks of the same birds were completely defeated, and the grain ripened in security. At the same time it was observed that the insectivorous birds were busy capturing their prey among the barbed heads as among those that possessed no natural defenses.

The Making of Automobiles.

It appears that France, which a few years ago led the world in the manufacture of automobiles, is relatively dropping back, at least in the number of machines produced. For instance, in 1900 France manufactured 19,029 automobiles, England 2,481, and Germany 2,312. In 1906 the figures for the same countries were respectively 55,000, 27,000 and 22,000. In the same year the United States, beginning with a few hundred in 1902, leaped to the front, producing 58,000 machines, 3,050 more than France. Italy and Belgium have also made enormous strides in the last two or three years, the figures for those countries in 1906 being respectively 18,000 and 12,000.

Sheet Silver.

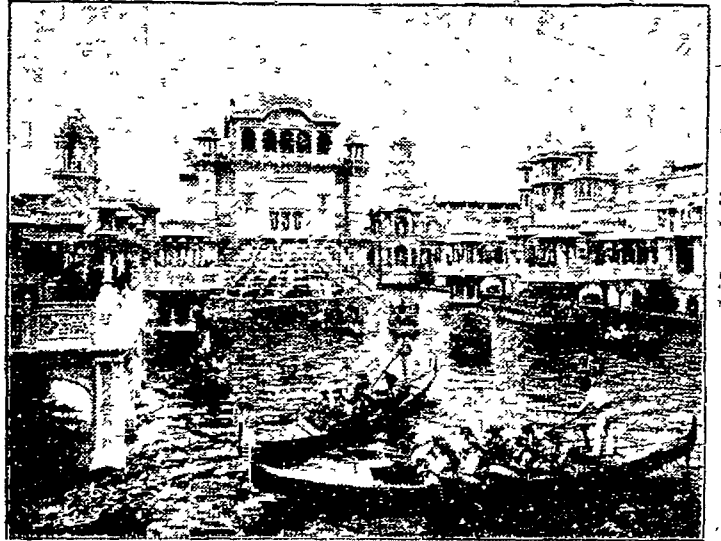

The cheapening of the price of sterling silver articles within a generation past, says a writer in the Journal of the Franklin Institute, has been due partly to the invention of methods of rolling silver into sheets, from which the articles are stamped out by manufacturers, instead of being laboriously hammered out from rods of silver, which are the old process. Nearly all manufacturers of sterling silver articles purchase the silver sheets from mills that make a specialty of rolling them. Sterling silver containing 975 parts of pure silver to 25 parts of copper. The copper gives it the requisite hardness.

PITILESS EXECUTION OF PRISONERS EVERY-DAY OCCURANCE IN MEXICO

The accompanying photograph gives an illustration of the butchery in Mexico. It shows three revolutionists who have just been executed by Federal troops after having been captured in battle. Little mercy is shown by either army toward prisoners who are recognized as having changed sides during the revolution. Without trials or even preliminary investigations they are put to death and in many instances are brutally murdered.

Mexicans are not the only ones to suffer brutalities according to dispatches from the scene of war. The recent killing of a British subject by Villa and a German disappearance, also the murder of a Texas ranchman, have precipitated serious international complications.

ANGLO-AMERICAN EXPOSITION WILL OPEN MAY 1ST IN LONDON

To Celebrate the Centenary of Peace and Progress in the Arts and Sciences, and Industries of the United States of America and British Empire.

When the hundredth anniversary of the signing of the treaty of Ghent, which will mark a century of peace between Great Britain and the United States, will not occur until the last day of the present year, the hundred years of amity will be celebrated throughout the summer of the inauguration, on May 1, of the Anglo-American exposition at Shepherd's Bush, that veteran field of expositions in London. Two peace movements, represented by two different committees, will merge to celebrate the occasion. The American committee was appointed to work for the erection of permanent memorials of the anniversary. The other, composed of eminent Englishmen and Americans, is endeavoring to show by actual demonstration the progress made in the arts of civilization during this century. Prominent among these exhibits will be a huge model of the Panama canal. The chairman of this second committee is the Earl of Kintore, a privy councillor and formerly a very popular governor of South Australia. The British people, Lord Kintore claims, are not in sympathy with the official British refusal to participate in the Panama-Pacific Exposition. When the Anglo-American fair at Shepherd's Bush is concluded, Lord Kintore told New Yorkers last month, the management, with the concurrence of the British people, will be prepared to transfer to San Francisco any exhibits that may be desired—Review of Reviews.

Southern California Floods

After 32 hours steady downpour of rain, southern California was flooded last week. In some parts of Los Angeles the streets were under ten feet of water for a short time. The Southern Pacific and other railroads had to send trains by roundabout ways. Arizona was cut off from communication. Orange orchards in California suffered great damage.

The World's Population

The population of the earth is slightly over 1,900,000,000, an increase of 140,000,000 in the past four years, according to the Bureau of Universal Statistics of Antwerp, which has just announced its figures for 1913. Asia now has 935,000,000; Europe 484,000,000; Africa, 188,000,000; America, 187,000,000; Oceania, 57,000,000. The world's commerce now amounts to $40,600,000,000, and it is carried on by 55,902 sailing ships and 17,114 steamers. Other figures show a total of 625,000 miles of railroads, or enough to girdle the globe 25 times. A debt of $42,960,000,000 is the total shown in the accounts of all the nations of the world. Of this total public indebtedness, 32 million are charged against Europe alone. A century ago the public debt of all countries amounted to only a little over seven milliards.

To Teach Seed Testing

Specialized instruction in seed testing is to be given the boys and girls who attend the public schools in Oklahoma. Robert H. Wilson, state superintendent of education, expects to add several million dollars to the value of the Oklahoma corn crop this year by the innovation.

To Discontinue Selling Liquor

After March 1 the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad will discontinue selling liquor on its passenger trains. Many other railroads have already adopted similar rules.

Railways and the Mails.

What would our government do if the railroads should refuse to make any new contracts to carry the mails? Some of the railroads—the Minneapolis and St. Louis system—are threatening to quit unless paid much more. They say the parcel post is too heavy, and thus far they have had no pay for carrying it.

Pocket Telephones

A serviceable pocket telephone is the latest innovation of the Hungarian Posts and Telegraph Administration. The appliance weighs only 120 grammes, is no bigger than a card case, and can be had by any one on payment of the price of forty ordinary telephone conversations, which cost a penny each.

The pocket telephone is adapted for use in a wall plug either in a private house, on street walls, or in a lamp-post, etc. When the user has finished his conversation, he simply removes the telephone from the plug and puts it back in his pocket.

UNITED STATES AVERTS DANGER

Officials See an Improvement in the threatened Foreign Complications.

Washington.—There was real improvement in the Mexican situation in the opinion of Secretary of State Bryan and other high officials.

The grave danger of international complications growing out of the forcible recovery of Clemente Vergara's body from the Hidalgo cemetery is believed to have been averted.

The raid into Mexican territory turns out to have been a commercial transaction, pure and simple. Relatives of the dead rancher paid $400 for an expedition, most of the members of which were Mexicans—and not one of whom was a Texas ranger—to recover the body.

And it was not until it was actually on American soil that the federal and state officials were notified.

Army officials disapproved in their official reports the claims of Gov. Colquhoun of Texas and his aids that Vergara had been tortured by fire before death. The undertaker who took charge of the body reported that there are no traces of burns on it.

Reports from Gen. Bliss, and from Consul Garrett to the state department clear the Texas authorities from the allegations that they had winked at a deliberate armed invasion of friendly territory.

SPEED UP WORK ON NEWEST BILLS

Washington.—Finishing touches were given today by the house interstate commerce committee to the administration bill creating an interstate trade commission. Chairman Adamson is forcing the committee at top speed to report both this and railroad security, regulation bill to the house.

The trade commission is expected to provide for three commissioners at $10,000 each, with jurisdiction over large corporations and discretionary authority over smaller ones, late corporations. Inquisitorial powers of the commission are limited.

The house judiciary committee today began wholesale redrafting of the three tentative bills amending the Sherman law, in accordance with President Wilson's instructions. The bill defining monopolies and trade restraints will be radically amended and ultimately may be dropped.

Rigorous prohibition of interstate direct commerce, the president contends, should also be largely modified. The trade relations bill, prohibiting "price fixing" and "exclusive dealing," has been approved by the president.

EIGHT TREATIES RATIFIED

In the form in which they were sent to the senate by the state department arbitration treaties between the United States and Great Britain, Spain, Norway, Sweden, Japan, Portugal, Switzerland and Italy were ratified by the senate. All amendments were defeated and there was no roll call on final ratification. The plan to exempt formal arbitration the Panama canal tolls question was defeated by a two-thirds vote.

RELIGION IN MEXICO

Christian Herald.—The attitude of the Mexican toward religion is a mixture of ridicule, fear and superstition. Respect he has none—except the pseudo-respect, which is a constant of fear. Profanity has become so extreme that it has almost ceased to be profanity. It has become rather a mere manner of speech. For instance, the owners of public dens, without a thought of being sacrilegious, give such names as the following to their resorts: "The Retreat of the Holy Ghost," "The Delight of the Apostle," "The Retreat of the Holy Virgin," "The Fountain of the Angels," "The Seventh Heaven," "The Hargout of John the Baptist." Church services are attended almost exclusively by the women. A man will poke fun at the church all his life; but when he lies on his deathbed he invariably calls for a priest. Religion is a matter for derision and dread in Mexico—not for respect and reverence.

HENS AS BAROMETERS

A poultry fancier near Durham has produced curious results by altering and alternating the food given to his fowls.

It is known to many who have reared canaries for the market that Cayenne pepper, put into their food, results in a notable difference in the character and shade of their plumage, giving the feathers a smoothness and reddish tinge which adds very much to the sum for which the birds may ordinarily be sold.

If the same ingredient be added to the diet, especially of white hens which have been hatched from carefully selected eggs, their feathers become pale rose, and they flash to a brilliant red when the weather is damp and a storm approaching. These hens thus become veritable barometers, and the progression of color from pale to brilliant is so exact that a searlet hen talking about the barometer is regarded as certain prophecy of a storm which may be as much as 12 hours distant.

Cherry Dumplings

Make rich baking powder biscuit dough. Roll thin, cut round, put spoonful of cherries in center and pinch dough together. In bottom of baking dish mix well one cup sugar and one teaspoonful corn starch. Put dumplings in well apart and brush with butter on each dumpling. Add boiling water enough to cover well and bake in hot oven. Serve with sauce left in dish when dumplings are taken out, adding a few more cherries.

Makes Money with Sunflowers

Having found sunflowers a profitable crop, L. C. Phillips of New Madrid, Mo., will this year plant 1,000 acres on his farm to them. Last year, following the flood, he planted 100 acres and found that it cost $6 an acre for planting and harvesting, while the yield was from $35 to $48 an acre. The seed is dried in his planting corn. The sunflower seed sells at $3 a hundred pounds.

Suffragist Refuses Police Job.

Gary, Ind.—Mrs. Kate Wood Ray, 90-pound suffragist leader, declined the appointment tendered her by Mayor Knotts to become president of the public safety commission, with control of the police and fire departments. Mrs. Ray's refusal to serve was a surprise. She declared she could not be appointed legally, and that she feared she might be forced to fight to retain the office because she was a woman.

BAKED EGG PLANT

To bake egg plant drop a good sized one into boiling water for ten minutes, then drain. Halve and for each piece scoop out the centre leaving a shell almost an inch thick. Chop the portion removed, season well with salt, pepper, onion juice, and (if liked), chopped green pepper; add an equal amount of soft bread crumbs and moisture well with melted butter. Heap this in the shells and bake in a moderate oven for three-quarters of an hour.

W. R. C. NOTES.

(By Press Correspondent)

The "Hard Times party" on the date of our regular meeting last week was a great success, both from a social and a financial view point. The program included a drill by boy scouts from the school, character songs and recitations that once again demonstrated the unusual vaudeville talent possessed by our members, instrumental music in which our favorite violinist, "Violet Dan" proved that a veteran of the sixties is not by any means a "back number, besides a good many impromptu "stunts" of various degrees of fun-making power.

A little "informal" (decidedly so) dance preceded a supper that could not by any stretch of imagination be made to harmonize with a hard-times affair. The costumes worn by the ladies were especially notable, but can't be especially noted, as the P. C. "dassant" discriminate and is incapable of doing them justice within present limits.

Regular meeting next Wednesday evening, March 25th.

We were much honored by having one of the "finest ever" eclipses of the moon on our program last week, but cannot promise another such an unusual feature for some time to come.

A very pleasant W. R. C. tea party was held Tuesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. J. G. Alexander. More to follow.

THE TOWN CLOCK.

There is much complaint in regard to the fact that the town clock is no longer to be relied on as a time-keeper for the public. It would certainly seem as if so valuable and useful a piece of municipal property should not be allowed to fall into disuse for lack of sufficient care. Arrangements could undoubtedly be made with one of the local jewelers to give the clock the technical attention it needs, putting it into proper shape and keeping it so. The expense would not be enough to make any appreciable difference in the total per capita cost to the taxpayers. With all his other cares, Supt. Wilkinson has not been able, as yet, to secure anything except promises from the expert he has been trying to get to overhaul the clock, and he surely has enough else to attend to, anyway. Formerly, the time piece was looked after for years by Ed Merrill with entire satisfaction, and this could unquestionably be done again by the proper person, and at no great expense.

Cough Medicine for Children.
Never give a child a cough medicine that contains opium in any form. When opium is given other and more serious diseases may follow. Long experience has demonstrated that there is no better or safer medicine for coughs, colds and croup in children than Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It is equally valuable for adults. Try it. It contains no opium or other harmful drug. For sale by all dealers.—Advertisement.

THE UNLOADED GUN CAUSES MUCH SORROW

Firearms Should Be Hidden from View—Their Use Is Dangerous.

FLOURISHING an old revolver as she danced about, singing a popular air, a young New York girl a few days ago shot and seriously wounded a girl companion, who was in the room with her. The injured girl is fast recovering, but the other still hears and sees the shot that she unwittingly sent into the shoulder of her friend and lies in a pitiable state murmuring over and over the old refrain, "I didn't know it was loaded."

Only a few days before that a girl and her brother had a friendly tussle over an "unloaded" weapon and the boy was shot fatally, while within the past few days, four others have been victims of shooting accidents.

Of course there is always the cry that nobody knew the revolver was loaded; always the explanation that it had been "put down just for a little while" before it was stored away out of sight, but all the pleas, all the extenuating circumstances cannot lift the weight of horror from the shoulders of those whose careless hands pulled the trigger, or the sorrow from the relatives and friends of those injured or killed by the flying bullets.

Nor can it make it any less hard to appear in a crowded courtroom on the charge of having—accidentally or otherwise—shot some one near and dear to you.

Yet the remedy for all this is not difficult, for it is simply the rule to keep firearms locked carefully away from careless hands.

There is a lure about a gun or a revolver that tempts every one to handle the shining thing. The fact that death lurks within that round, smooth barrel lends it a mystery and a fascination.

It tempts the man or woman who has grown dependent or worried into seeking the solace of suicide. It tempts the man or girl who is angry or jealous, or hysterical, to shooting quick to satisfy that just for "hurling" that springs up in the human heart during a quarrel, and it tempts the young people to "try it" to peep into the barrel to see "how hard the trigger works," and only too often leads to the accidental killing of those whose life is bright and who seemingly have years of happiness ahead of them.

Don't ever believe that a gun is unloaded, for it usually isn't, and what is more, don't have any kind around where you or your family can see it.

Give a thought to the sad homes in which such weapons have played so tragic a part during the past few weeks, and be sure that in your own home, "John's revolver" is put away where none but he can find it.

Preserving Strawberries

Put unbleached berries in a colander and allow cold water to run through them to remove sand and harden berries, hull carefully. Crush one pint of berries in an enameled kettle and add one full cup of sugar, granulated preferred. Juice will be formed with such weight that berries will not float on top of juice when in the jar. Let crushed berries and sugar boil hard, shaking kettle to prevent sticking. Drop remainder of berries in boiling sirup and cook five minutes, skinning thoroughly. Have jars ready placed on cloth, winged out of cold water, and fill in berries with a silver spoon. Two boxes of strawberries when cooked will fill one quart Mason jar, which is enough to cook at one time.

Rhubarb Tartlets

Make some good short pastry and line some patty pans with it, choosing those of deep shape. Prick over the bottom of the pastry lining with a fork and bake the pastry cases till they are cooked through.

Serve them hot or cold, filled with a stiff compote of cooked rhubarb and arranged on a lace paper doily on a dish. Decorate the tartlets with little leaves and devices of cooking pastry. Hearts, diamonds, clubs and spades are suitable shape when tartlets are for use as card party refreshments.

Washing Lace Curtains

To do up lace curtains nicely without stretchers, wash and starch without much rubbing or wringing and hang lengthways on the line. Place opposite scallops together and pull the whole curtain straight. The starch will stick the opposite halves together, no pins being needed. The curtains will be "straight and even" and no ironing will be necessary—only a pressing of the scallops.

Scaling Fish

The busy housewife will have a further dread of preparing fish for any size family if she will try dipping the fish in scalding water—the scales are then removed with no difficulty and much time saved.

Turning up hem in skirt—Have the person for whom skirt is intended put it on. Then take a yard stick, put the end of it on the floor, and have the person turn slowly around, while you mark it with tailor's chalk every little ways the number of inches it is desired from the floor. If two inches, mark it all the way around two inches up on the yard stick. Sew on the skirt and turn up hem. I find that a basting thread is put in around where it has been chalked, it helps a great deal as the chalk is liable to get rubbed off and is not as plainly seen as a thread. This is a good way and is easily and quickly done.

Natural feather quills are seen in plaid and sombre colors.

TENTATION

The breast of the green field twinkled in the early morning with sequins of dew. The great, smooth lawn was hedged with thick bushes of olive bronze over exquisite pink flowers traced exquisite patterns. The sun flamed like a golden dragon in the east, and the silver dew gradually shrank from its writhing rays. A gentle wind whispered through the flower grass and ruffled the wings of a scarlet crane that, on one black leg, surveyed the riot of gentle green.

Presently across the grass walked a girl in white. She sang as she walked, and the crane twisted its head to listen and lifted an eyelid to note the ripples of her white throat.

Her hair was jet black, and hung in gleaming masses to her knees. She swung her ivory arms as she walked and sang. Her eyes, her lips, and her gait were evidences of her happy innocence. Once she stooped to pick a stalk of thistle down, and puffed away its tiny feathers, with childish pleasure.

From the opposite corner of the field there now came a woman in black. The newcomer walked slowly, with head bent, as if thinking. Her long chestnut hair was plentifully streaked with gray, the skin of her face was drawn tightly over her bones, and glorious gray eyes alone remained to testify to a beauty that had once been hers.

They met in the centre of the field, the girl in white and the woman in black.

"Flowers for thy path, mistress," wished the girl.

"Sunlight for thee in the dark places," graciously replied the woman.

The sadness of the countenance of the woman in black puzzled the girl.

"You are in sorrow," she said gently. The woman looked long into the girl's eyes.

"Yes, indeed, sweet maid, I endure the sorrow of the woman whose beauty has faded, and I must starve in the sunshine."

"I do not understand. Your eyes are beautiful but you are old. Why do you wish to be beautiful? Why must you starve?"

"I will tell you if you wish it. What is your name?"

"Gratia. And yours?"

"Auriga."

"I live in the woods over the third hill where the gorge is most golden. My father traps the little animals that have the most velvet fur. We sell the furs to a trader and so we live. My father is always poor so he says, but I am happy."

Both now sat on the green carpet the white girl and the black woman. Behind them still nestled, on one black leg, the scarlet crane.

"I was once as pretty a child as you," said the elder, "though perhaps more nobly born. I found my pleasure in the lovely things that grow, in the birds and all gentle dumb animals. I sang as you were singing just now, and my heart was as light as yours. Then into my life came a man who loved me so that I loved him."

"A man loves me Auriga. He tells me so every evening, when the sun is low. He is a woodcutter, and very strong but he is not beautiful like the sky the grass and the water. He cannot make me love him."

"No, Gratia, love has not entered your life as yet. Love is pure and sweet, but it is sorrowful. Love and gaiety are not twins. But I must tell you of this brave lover of mine. He gave my father gold and horses and took me in exchange. I was brought to this country from a distant land and made the queen of my knight's castle. True, I was one amongst other women, but I was queen. I entered upon a new life. Growing flowers were replaced by living jewels. I trod on floors of polished green jade instead of on cold grass. I never saw the sunlight, but soft, rose lamps tinted my skin with their delicate light. Instead of the music of wind and water they entranced my ear with the notes of amber lutes. I walked and slept in clinging silks. I bathed in scented water and was powdered with the down of roses. I ate only the sweetest, rarest foods and drank only the most inspiring wines. Black servants everywhere surrounded me so that I—a statue of rose and cream—should gleam the fairer. And he, my king, was always robed in purple, scarlet and gold. He worshipped me, and we were happy. That magic life lasted long, far longer than you would imagine. Then came the day when with the years our dispositions changed. He became tired, I fretful. Another took my place. I saw my king but rarely—then not at all."

Gratia's face was scarlet. She looked up at the narrator with parted lips, all wet.

"Tell me more of the life—before he tired," she whispered.

"Would you like that life?"

"Auriga, Auriga, do you not wish to return?"

"I may not return until I bring my master a maiden as fair as I was once. Till then I must starve in the sunlight. Gratia, do you know that I hate the sunlight now?"

The girl buried her hot face in Auriga's lap. Her body was trembling.

"Tell me more, oh tell me more," she whispered passionately.

In the woman's great gray eyes there now gleamed an evil light. She drew the girl's raven hair away from her ears. Then softly and gently she whispered words of the frenzied joy and anguish of the followers of Eros, bliss of the vengery of strong lovers.

Gratia listened greedily, and when the tale was ended hung her head.

"It is wonderfully frightening."

"Have you the courage to leave nature for a life like that, Gratia?"

The girl looked up into the sky, and it seemed sickly, down at the grass, and it seemed dry. She inhaled the scents that the wind brought, and they did not satisfy.

"It needs no courage, Auriga. But such bliss is not for me. I shall be wedded to a cold and dead heart, and remembering what you have told me."

"You shall not. Be here at this hour to-morrow and you shall see my knight. If his blood be still young, he cannot resist your beauty."

"My—beauty!" Gratia paled. Then she smiled and showed her white teeth. She threw back her head and placed her hands on her breasts. The wind blew out her raven hair straight as a knight's pennon. Auriga bit her lips with envy at such young loveliness.

"I shall be here to-morrow, Auriga. The girl waved her hand and walked coquettishly on her way. She did not sing, for her mind was busy with appreciation of her beauty.

The wind blew gustily, and the scarlet crane spread its wings, drew up its legs, and floated away to the marshes. The woman in black hurried away to the north, her eyes shining with renewed hope.

In the gleam of the following morning a knight and his esquires rode into the field. The knight was a man of great stature, and his fair hair hung plentifully over his shoulders. His doublet was of silver and gold, and over it he wore a rich purple cloak. A scarlet plume nodded in his golden helmet. By his side rode the woman in black on a mule.

Auriga pointed to the centre of the field where Gratia's robe gleamed silver. The knight urged his horse forward and rode to the spot where the trembling girl lay prone. He looked at her curiously. Her face was hidden in her robe. Auriga dismounted and raised the trembling Gratia.

The girl looked up at the knight and the colors chased each other in her face. Her cheeks dropped and she clutched her robe with her fingers of pearl. And the wind rose gently and blew out her raven hair straight as a knight's pennon.

The knight smothered an exclamation and turned to his esquires as if inquiring their comments. But they were silent, each devouring the girl's loveliness with his eyes.

"And in this maid with whom you would buy luxury in your old age, Auriga?"

"Yes, my lord. Ask her if it is willing to go with you. Her name is Gratia."

"Gratia," said the knight gently, "will you come with me?"

The girl looked into his eyes, thus time without fear. She did not speak, but the knight saw with mingled pain and pleasure the longing in her face.

"Are you sure, Gratia, that nature will let you go? Are you not the gentle spirit of this fair lawn? Will the sky, the flowers and the grass let their little queen desert them? You do not realize that you will leave all that has made you happy hitherto?"

"She does, she does, my lord," cried Auriga eagerly. "I have told her, and she is most willing."

"Be silent," said the knight harshly to Auriga. "Gratia, in my castle the wind and light shall not caress your hair. You shall not hear the birds sing, nor pick growing flowers. Love and rapture await you, it is true, but of a fiercer nature than you in your innocence can ever estimate. Why do you wish to leave this sinless pleasure?"

"She has told me," said Gratia, pointing to Auriga. "She has said that life with you is the only life worth while, and, if she told me truly, I believe."

"She may not have told you truly."

"It does not matter. Her story has revealed to me that there is another life than this, a sweeter, stronger life. I feel the truth of it. Oh, will you not take me?"

"Take you, my sweet creature! Why should I hesitate? And yet I would as soon cage an Eastern bird of light in an ivory cellar. Tell me, what has she told you to convince you so absolutely?"

But Gratia hung her head and did not answer.

"Did she tell you of the lifeless hours, of the hard hurt of unbroken luxury, of raptures unquenched and the weariness of that which does not satisfy?" But still Gratia did not answer.

"Has she told you of the canker now in her heart and the bitterness of her fight to regain the luxury which was her ruin?"

"Ask me ten thousand questions, my lord, and you will never find the cause of my decision. We are women, Auriga, and I, and women alone understand the reason of what men call their madness."

"So be it," said the knight a little sadly. He took from one of his esquires a heavy purse of gold and gave it to Gratia. "Go with Gratia," he said, "to her parents. Ask their consent, and give them the purse if they grant it. Then together you may join my household."

Auriga and Gratia went to the woods over the third hill where the gorge was most golden.

Outside the gate of the knight's castle stood Gratia and Auriga. The elder woman's face shone with satisfaction and delighted anticipation, but there was a suspicion of sadness in Gratia's eager eyes. She had grieved to find her parents, so ready to exchange her for gold, and she grieved to think that the young woodcutter's body now lay among the carp at the bottom of the great pool in the woods. She did not understand self-punishment, and the young man's passionate action had shocked her who loved life because it was all so happy.

A page escorted them into the presence of the knight. He sat in a lofty chamber with velvet hangings. With him was one of his esquires. The two were playing chess.

There was no light in the chamber save one bright beam from a window where the curtains were parted to admit it. The beam fell on the chess board and made the red and white ivory pieces glitter.

The knight turned at once from his game and beckoned them into the light.

"Then, Gratia, you have said good-bye. Does not your heart fail you even now?"

"Passion and courage are the same things with women, my lord," interposed Auriga.

"Perhaps you are right, but let Gratia speak for herself."

"I am happy to be here, my lord," the knight smiled.

"Take her away, Auriga, and dress her in gossamer white silk. Give her some silver sandals as light as the first break of dawn. Set a diamond star in her hair and bid her be as happy as you women can in a gilded prison." Auriga took Gratia's hand and led her away into a magic world.

Years later the breast of the green field where Gratia had met Auriga was coated with snow. The sun sneaked out, and there a red-breasted bird scratched the flaky bed. On the bronze green hedges in place of the pink flowers there were crimson berries. A cold wind occasionally flicked the snow flakes from their resting place and ruffled the wings of a scarlet crane that, on one black leg, surveyed the lake of white from its centre.

Presently across the snow walked a girl in Our Lady's blue. She sang as she walked, and the crane twisted its head to listen and lifted an eyelid to note the ripples of her white throat.

From the opposite corner of the field came a woman in black. The newcomer walked slowly, with head bent, as if thinking. Her long raven hair was plentifully streaked with gray, the skin of her face was drawn tightly over her bones, and glorious gray eyes alone remained to testify to a beauty that had once been hers.

TOOTHACHE IN ELEPHANTS.

A Disease to Which These Great Animals Are Peculiarly Susceptible.

Elephants have good reason to thank Sir John Blane-Sutton, the famous surgeon, if they could express themselves in words.

They have long been regarded by man as great, clumsy animals, almost insensible to pain. But as a matter of fact they are often martyrs to the most excruciating forms of toothache.

Sir John Blane-Sutton has found that elephants are not only liable to toothache in their ordinary molars—there are 12 in all—but that they may even have toothache in their tusks. When one considers that an elephant's tusks are often eight feet long and weigh over 150 pounds, the severity of toothache in such giant "teeth" may be imagined.

Sir John has explained something of his studies of elephants and their teeth.

"I have been interested in this subject for some 25 years," he said. "At one time I used to make post-mortem examinations of elephants who died in zoological gardens. I then found that they sometimes suffered from abscesses in their teeth, which must have caused them terrible suffering. It has also been found that the animals may even have toothache in their tusks, owing to the formation of abscesses."

A case is on record where an elephant went mad in the Strand after its death an abscess was found in one of its tusks.

One of the keepers of the elephant house at the zoological gardens said that young elephants often seemed to suffer agonies with their teeth.

"They keep putting their trunks in their mouths if their teeth hurt," he said. "One youngster here, who seemed to have toothache very badly, sucked the finger of his trunk almost white."

Elephants, you know, keep on teething all their life. The top part of their molars breaks off and the stump grows again.

When an elephant's tooth—or rather a portion of the tooth—falls out it sounds like a plate falling. I have picked them up as big as my hands."

A well-known zoologist said that the troubling pain of toothache which human beings experience in their teeth would be just as violent with an elephant with its tusks.

Both have a nerve cavity, which when decayed or disturbed causes violent pain. Only the elephant, if one may judge by dimensions, suffers 20,000 times more than human beings.

GIGANTIC WATER WHEELS.

The Four in the Syrian Town of Hama Will Never Stop.

Hama, in Syria, says a writer, is famed for its huge water wheels, locally known as saffers. There are four of them and they are driven by the river Granter, which flows through the town. Each of the wheels bears a distinguished name and the village to the city is made aware of their presence long before they are seen by the cracking and grinding noise which greets the ear.

At first it suggests a pipe organ and later a brass band practicing.

The wheels are built of a dark mahogany, which gives them at a distance the appearance of iron. The large of them boasts of a diameter of 75 feet and is declared to be the biggest water wheel in existence.

The saffers are erected on what is known as the undershot principle—that is to say, they are driven by the water striking them at their base. They serve not only to supply the town with water, but also irrigate the adjacent gardens.

The wheels never stop, summer or winter, and day and night their creations and growling are heard. In the summer months the small boys may always be seen bathing in the river in the neighborhood of the wheels, and for a small coin they will get in between the spokes of the wheels and allow themselves to be carried around many times or hang on the outside of the wheel.

WOULD DO HIS BEST.

Senator Smith's Reply to a Maryland Office Hunter.

At the beginning of the last session of congress all the Democrats were bemoaning the fact that their constituents were overwhelmed them with requests for political appointments. Senator John Walter Smith, of Maryland, said that he had come to the end of his rope, and that there were no more jobs which he could get for anybody for love or money.

To illustrate how hard he was still being pressed by the job seekers, he told of a man having come into his office that morning with the statement:

"Senator, I know you can get me a job, and you've just got to do it. I am in the depths of despair."

The senator replied that he was sorry, and that the best he could do would be to follow the example of the drunken man who was asked for aid by another.

"Shay, old fellow," said the drunkard, who was lying in the gutter, "help me out here, will you?"

The other drunkard made several lugs at the unfortunate prostrate man, and then remarked:

"Shay, I can't get you out of there, but I'll tell you what I can do—I can lay down there beside you."

BY A CLOSE SHAVE.

"Mamma," asked a little girl of her mother one day, "do men ever go to heaven?"

"Certainly," said her mother, "why do you ask?"

"Well, then, why don't angels ever have whiskers?"

"Because," said her mother, "they get there by a close shave."

GIRLS WILL HAVE SWEETHEARTS

Their Mothers Can Help Them to Make Wise Selections.

A proper moralist would, no doubt, lecture the little girls on the wickedness of deceiving their mothers, and tell them that mother always knows best, and should always be implicitly obeyed.

As a matter of fact, a mother who takes this attitude towards her young daughter, and who tries to rule her with a rod of iron, is just as silly and knows just as little of life as the girl possibly can, and my words today are not to daughter, but to mother.

The first thing that I want to say to mothers is that in their nearly grown daughters it is a condition and not a theory that confronts them. Very likely it is better that a girl shouldn't have any beaux, or any thought of a beau, until she is a grown and mature woman. Very likely she should devote her mind to study instead of having her attention distracted by boys. Very likely it is best for her to spend her time in the bosom of her family, and never go out anywhere except with papa or mamma.

We won't waste time disputing those issues. The point is that daughter is going to have beaux. Her mind is full of boys. She is going to indulge in the pleasures that other young girls indulge in, and if you don't let her do it, openly, she is going to do it secretly. If you don't let her have boys come to the house, she is going to meet them on the street corners.

Now, mother of Mary and Sally and Jennie, which do you prefer? Which do you consider the safer course?

Of course you will say that you have brought up your children to obey, and that you are going to enforce discipline in your home. Possibly, but you are not a secret service agent who can trail Mary or Sally or Jennie every minute of the time; and you may be very sure that the minute your back is turned, and your watch relaxed, that your outwardly obedient little daughter is doing exactly as she pleases, and doing it with twice the vim and zest, simply because it is a stolen pleasure.

Nine-tenths of the trouble between parents and children arises out of the fact that fathers and mothers simply cannot realize that their children have arrived at man's or woman's estate, and they cannot bring themselves to concede to their grown-up sons and daughters the liberty of action that is their right. In her mother's eyes a daughter is still an infant until she gets married. To a man, his son is a boy even after he grows a beard.

This age is a forcing house in which children come to an early maturity. The girl of 17 is more sophisticated than her mother was at 23. It is absurd to treat her as if she were a baby, and mothers would save themselves many heartaches if they would simply face the fact, and deal with their daughters on an adult instead of a childish, ten platform.

The universe is full of mothers who tell their daughters that they are going to get into mischief, and go to strangers for advice, but it never seems to occur to the mother that the reason her daughter doesn't come to her is because the girl knows that mother will treat her as if she were a little girl in pigsties, and vice everything she wants to do. There is small encouragement to tell your hopes and plans to a person who is going to tell you that the thing you want to do you shouldn't do, and how generally silly and foolish you are.

But what I want to impress on mothers is that you can't keep Sally from knowing boys and going out with them. No matter whether you forbid her to do it or not, she is going to do it. Something stronger than all your power is urging her on. It is youth's insatiable demand for pleasure, and the question is whether you are going to take your daughter gracefully, or whether you are going to risk running your child's life to avoid your own petty tyranny.

Don't believe for a minute that you are stronger than the voice of nature. You are not. Sally is going to have her boy friends and go out with them whether you approve or not, and it's up to you to make her a decent little hypocrite or a frank, open-minded girl who really does tell mother her secrets.

Inasmuch as the girl will have beaux, don't you think you would make her a million times safer if you invited the boys to the house and got acquainted with them, and knew with whom she was going, and where she went, than she is when she meets some young man on a street corner and goes off with him to God knows where, and comes home to lie to you
