VILLAGE TO BUILD CEMETERY BRIDGE

ACTING ON ADVICE OF VILLAGE ATTORNEY YERKES, WORK WILL SOON COMMENCE.

Village Bought Right of Way and Built Bridge Twenty-Eight Years Ago.

Action in the rebuilding of the bridge abutments of the Rural Hill cemetery bridge was taken by the council Monday night, based upon advice of Village Attorney Yerkes.

Mr. Yerkes stated that the village had acquired the highway and built the bridge originally and that as a public highway the village was bound to maintain the bridge.

The road to the cemetery was bought by the village from Mr. C. M. Thornton in 1886 and at that time bids were called for to construct the bridge and its approaches. Following is a copy of the ad. for letting the contract:

Sealed proposals for the filling and grading required for constructing a highway across the Simmons mill pond will be received by the Common Council of the Village of Northville, county of Wayne, state of Michigan, from the date hereof until 8 o'clock p. m. January 8th, 1886. Plans and specifications are now on file with the undersigned at the office of the U. S. Fish Hatchery, Holcomb Block, Northville. The amount named in proposals will be understood as referring to one cubic yard of earth. The said grading will involve the moving of about four thousand cubic yards of earth an average distance of about three hundred feet and is to be completed on or before the first day of April, 1886. The contractor will be required to file a satisfactory bond insuring the completion of the work in the time specified.

Sealed proposals will be received by the said Common Council, in like manner and under the same conditions for the construction of a forty-five foot pile bridge in connection with the above highway. Plans and specifications for said bridge are now on file with the undersigned. The amount named in proposals for bridge will be understood as referring to the entire cost of all the labor and material required to construct the same according to the specifications. The contractor will be required to file a bond insuring a completion of the same on or before March 1st, 1886.

AMERICA'S BEST MALE QUARTET TO OPEN CHAUTAUQUA HERE.

ILLINOIS GLEE CLUB.

HIGH class singing, bell ringing, humorous readings and varied entertainment will feature the work of the Illinois Glee Club on our first days Chautauqua program. They do everything worth while in the way of singing and entertainment that any quartet does and do it better. All their work is distinctive. They have the snap, dash and originality that make a decided hit. From the moment of their appearance on the platform until they leave it they have the entire attention of their audience. There is not an uninteresting part in their program. It all attracts. Their quartet numbers are well selected, their bell ringing most pleasing, their harmony magnificent and their solo work of such a character as to show each member to be the possessor of a fine voice and an artist of merit. A special is the reading of Mr. Frank Buzza. There are any number of readers, but only a few who make good. Mr. Buzza is one of the few. He doesn't tire an audience with semidramatic recitals that have no special point to them. He gives the people what they like and never fails to "bag his laughs". Much more could be said of the Illinois Glee, but we prefer to let their work speak for them. We consider ourselves particularly fortunate in having such a noted company with us at the Chautauqua, for it will be some time before they will again appear in America. They leave in 1915 for a tour of England, Scotland, Belgium, Switzerland, France, Austria and Germany, in the principal cities of which countries they are booked for concerts.

build, or keep in repair, this bridge comes up about every time anything happens to it. Mr. Yerkes holds that it is a public highway and the bridge must be maintained by the village regardless of any Potters field agreement or whether the village ever used the field for the burial of its poor.

Councilman Fikins made the motion to commence the work and it is expected the bridge will be repaired before many weeks go by.

MRS. MARY BEAL NORTON DIED SUDDENLY IN KANSAS.

Mrs. Mary Beal-Norton, wife of Frederick B. Norton, passed away suddenly at her home in Arkansas City, Kansas, Sunday, June 7th. The remains were brought to the home of her mother, Mrs. Martha Beal, in Detroit, where the funeral was held Wednesday. The funeral car came here at 1 o'clock with the body, accompanied by the husband and relatives and temporarily the casket was placed in the Neal vault in Rural Hill cemetery until such time as the proposed new Beal vault is completed or other arrangements made.

The Science service held at the cemetery was in charge of Reader Mrs. Steers, and here was gathered many Northville friends to pay a last tribute of respect and love to their friend of former days who had so suddenly passed away.

Both Mrs. Beal-Norton and Mr. Norton were former residents of this place. Mr. Norton is a nephew of Mrs. Hiram Holmes and a cousin of Don, Will, George and Robert Yerkes. Mrs. Norton lived here for many years previous to her marriage, and is well known to many of our people. Her sisters are Mrs. Chas. REJECTED A PROPOSITION THAT NEVER WAS.

The Council Monday night for some unaccountable reason was induced to pass a resolution rejecting the offer of the Edison Electric Co. of $32,200 for the Northville electric plant. As a matter of fact the Edison company has never made any offer to the council or to any one else so far as is known, or either $32,200 or 30 cents for the Northville plant.

Pennsylvania Earnings

For April Show Result of Drastic Retrenchment Policy.

The report of the earnings of the Pennsylvania Lines (east and west) is especially interesting as it shows plainly the results of the drastic retrenchment policy recently inaugurated and practiced by the company. Both gross revenue and gross expenses show substantial decreases compared with those of April, 1913, but the net income shows a marked increase.

Gross operating revenue was $23,692,615, a decrease of $1,547,687. Gross operating expenses, plus taxes, were $23,414,728, a decrease of $2,948,334. Operating income was $5,187,886, an increase of $1,400,647.

Vanderbilt Estate Goes to U. S.
The beautiful mountain estate of the late George W. Vanderbilt in western North Carolina, is to be added to the national forest reserve. His widow offered it at an average price of $5 per acre, and it was accepted. This estate contains 86,700 acres. It is on the crest of the Allegheny Mountains. The sale does not include the residence, "Biltmore."

ECONOMICAL GOWN FOR SMALL DANCE

How Business Girls Can Make Dainty Frock at But Little Cost.

"I'd love to go, but I haven't a thing to wear, and I simply can't afford a new frock."

How many, many times the girl who earns her own living has to give that answer to some alluring invitation to a small dinner or a dance? For she cannot afford to pay dress-makers' bills, and party frocks already made are rather expensive.

Now, however, it has become a simple thing to evolve a dainty gown within a few hours at about $7 or $8, or even less.

On sale in all the department stores there are well cut princess slips of soft silk as low as $4, they come in all colors and a becoming shade is not difficult to choose.

Then there are not waist patterns embroidered in yards for $1.50 which may be cut off short to make an empire waist, and need only a bit of ribbon to bind the rounded neck and sleeves.

Two yards of the wide slit a suit will make a nice skirt to gather onto the waist, and a cashlike grille with a flat "fold" bow and ends in the back will complete a costume that will prove both effective and becoming, and which has got little to show that even the busiest girl can find time to stitch it together.

It is wiser to choose a pretty color for the slip and make the lining of black. A thin, more decidedly, and is really smarter at the present time, to say nothing of the fact that it makes black shoes and stockings appropriate, and slippers and stockings are a big item, you know if you have to buy light colored ones.

The same silk princess slip will answer for under one or two dresses of this style, and can, of course, be had for less than $4 if you have time to cut and make one, but great care must be exercised in the fitting.

A ONE COLOR GOWN.

The color is a bright sulphur yellow, so the effect is not so demure as might be imagined. This color, though bright, seems to be universally becoming. The material is a soft crepe, and self-covered buttons and buckles are used. The vest is finished with embroidery and a frill, wired at the back and sides. There is a tiny

The Canadian government tender Eureka was the first rescue ship to come to the aid of the Empress of Ireland, ocean liner lost in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. This picture was taken on the scene of the disaster. In the distance shown by the arrow is Father Point and Rimouski, where the rescued passengers were taken.

Quebec. — (Special) — Perhaps the most graphic account of the terrible disaster in the St. Lawrence river when the ocean liner Empress of Ireland went to the bottom, carrying almost a thousand of her passengers, is given by Rev. J. Waller, pastor of an English church who was returning after a visit to America.

"At about 2:12 o'clock Friday morning I was awakened by three melancholy blasts of the siren of the Empress of Ireland," relates Rev. Waller. "The ship appeared to be cut in two, and the last note and died away. I heard a horrible grinding crash, and the ship seemed to shake from stem to stern. I jumped out of bed, ran along the starboard side, where my berth was situated, and saw out on the upper promenade deck.

"There was a light haze on the river and the Danish collier Storstad, that had crashed into us and hips, was slowly backing away from us.

"I saw that things were very serious and rushed back to my berth in order to don some clothing. My idea was thus to avoid exposure and cold, and I put on a pair of trousers and a coat, a heavy overcoat, over my pajamas, and was soon prepared to go on deck. Almost by accident that afternoon I had noticed the life preserver on the top of the wardrobe. I hastily seized it and rushed out on deck. One of the stewards was already unfastening all the deck chairs, that they might serve as rafts in case of emergency, and the sailors apparently had been for some little time attempting to lower the boats.

Many Died in Berths.

"Many people were by this time on deck, but very, very many never managed even to get so far as that. The list to starboard had increased alarmingly, indeed the port side had assumed the position usually occupied by the deck. There was very little excitement among the women, and the passengers of the English-speaking races behaved splendidly. The same could not, however, be said of some of the others, principally steerage passengers, who swarmed up on the promenade deck, many of them yelping like terror-stricken animals.

"By this time several hundred people were sitting on the side of the ship, which assumed an almost horizontal position. So markedly was this the case that one man was seen stooping down to fasten up his boot laces as though he were doing it on deck. Near where I sat on the side of the ship a man who appeared to be a fireman sat with his head between his knees, calling loudly on God for help.

"Suddenly, without any warning, the vessel plunged into the depths, taking with her all of us who were seated on the side. To me it appeared not so much as though the ship had gone down as that the sea had risen. Naturally, we went down with her and at that moment I remembered all the stories I had heard of people in such plights having been rocked down head to toe again.

Struggles of Dying Horrible.

"After a little space I was conscious that I was coming to the surface. Of course I had been treading water vertically all the time and soon felt the welcome air blowing on my face. At first I was so dizzy that I was unable to feel the countless arms and legs of people wildly struggling. It seemed almost impossible for me to wade through, but it was, however, accomplished at last and soon I was swimming in the direction of the nearest boat.

"On the way there several men clutched at me, fortunately without dragging me down. One big man seized my life preserver and I begged him not to struggle, as we might both be saved. A few yards away was a piece of timber only about five feet long by three inches square, but when I reached it it heaved so greatly. We swam toward the boat we saw, hearing on every side the fearful cries for help. I did not see a woman alive in the water though a little later I saw many floating about dead.

"Just as we reached the boat I pulled strongly away from us. It was full and there was no room for us. For a moment despair seized me, only to be followed by the determination to live, if possible. I instructed my companion to make for the collier, and we slightly altered our course to do so.

"At this moment to our joy we saw bearing down upon us one of the Storstad's boats, and very quickly it was alongside of us. Although up to this point I had not been conscious of the cold that many people complained of, I was almost unable to grasp the gunwale. As I attempted to sit myself up, the water I lost the support of the life preserver, and my clothing seemed to weigh a ton. The sailors, however, hauled me aboard, and I sat parting on a seat at the forepart. My companion in this swim was also saved.

Scandinavian Goes Mad.

"Soon after we picked up a Scandinavian who had gone stark mad. He claved and yelled and shrieked like one possessed. As we came along some of the sailors, who represented us as a very harbor of refuge, threw us a rope.

"After we had the collier we made our way quickly down into the storeroom. There most of us cringed and attempted to dry our things before the furnaces. It was a wild sight to see a group of men, some of whom were of a back ground of glowing red. There was very little water in the room. Indeed there had been little time for any.

"Presently we were transferred from the Storstad to the Lady Evelyn, a government boat which had come to the rescue and so began our journey to Rimouski. On the Lady Evelyn we were crowded into the engine room and stood on the grating. One man who stood by me seemed to be deeply affected and on speaking to him he pointed to an adjacent door. I opened it and there stretched along the deck just outside was the body of a woman.

"I looked afterward that it was Mrs. W. Another man told me the story of his loss. He had been married four years and had a son, a boy of five, who he was carrying to the bodies of his wife and child amid the crowd of the dead. He landed at Quebec from Rimouski.

both passengers on the Mauretania returning to the United States. Howard became involved in some difficulty in the smoke room where he said he had lost heavily at cards and had given checks for part of his losses. Miss Dale gave him worldly-wise counsel and a sterned the checks when he came ashore. The marriage followed.

Oklahoma farmers expect to harvest 40,000,000 bushels of winter wheat, and will need 15,000 extra farm hands to do it. In the southern part of the State the harvest begins the first week in June and continues about a month.

The Department of Agriculture now estimates the total wheat crop, winter and spring, at 850,000,000 bushels.

LINCOLN MEMORIAL HIGHWAY

May Pass Through Washington—Wilson Favors Plan.

Washington.—President Wilson assured a delegation of Baltimore and Washington business men that for sentimental reasons he thought the proposed Lincoln Memorial Highway should pass through Washington.

The delegation asked that the President employ his influence to change the highway's course between Philadelphia and Gettysburg so the route would be from Philadelphia to Wilmington, to Baltimore, to Washington, thence to the battlefield.

He promised to investigate. The road is to be constructed by private subscription.

MONEY-LOST BY GAYNOR

When Mayor, Say, Friends After Inheritance Tax Statement.

New York.—That the late William J. Gaynor lost money when Mayor of New York City, his friends declared, is shown in reports that executors of his will have arranged to pay a state inheritance tax on only about $750,000, when it was generally thought the estate would total a million dollars or more. A check for $9,500 has been forwarded to the State Comptroller on behalf of the estate in payment of the tax.

Friends of Mr. Gaynor believed that his salary of $15,000 a year as Mayor was not sufficient to meet his expenses.

ENGLISH ATHLETIC CHAMPS WIN THEIR TITLES AT A RIPE AND RARE OLD AGE.

English and American athletes differ in a number of respects, a fact that has been observed before, especially at the Olympic games. However, since the golf tourneys a new distinction has been brought to our notice. An athlete in England doesn't reach his prime till he is the grandfather of many bright and merry little ones. To be a success in athletics in England one must wait till one has attained what in this country is regarded as an approach to the boner.

The famous young Britisher who recently triumphed in the golf set-to was a mere child of sixty-one. Most of the other English contestants were well beyond forty. In America an athlete of more than twenty-eight or thirty summers is thought to be trailing a long luxurious beard. Most of our tennis and golf stars are well on the side of thirty and the big percentage are of an age when they are expected of them to devote serious thought to anything other than their play. Our English cousins, however, have a little on us there and though they may enter the world of matrimony in the manner and pastimes of the younger generation, they don't expect to play a first-class game much before they are ready to go to the grave.

HIS SHIP AT BOTTOM OF THE ARCTIC SEA

Capt. Robert A. Bartlett.

Word was received a few days ago that the steamship Karluk, which carried the Stefansson expedition to the Arctic, was sunk in an ice crush on January 16 near enough to North Herald island for the crew to find refuge there. Though the ship went down, there was time to unload provisions and fuel and get the men safely ashore.

Having thus provided for the safety of his mates, Capt. Robert Bartlett set out with sledges for the mainland. He reached the Siberian coast and later was conveyed by a whaling ship to St. Michael's, Alaska.

WOMEN SMOKERS ABOUND IN LONDON

They Use Cigarettes as a Matter of Fact and Now Incline to Russian Tobacco

MORE LUXURIOUS THAN MEN

Jewelled Cases and Holders of Ivory and Amber Some of Novelties They Affect

London.—London, so far has not followed the example of Chicago in opening a clinic for the treatment of thousands of girls and women who desire to be cured of the cigarette habit, but the cigarette habit, nonetheless is apparently becoming a confirmed one among women in England.

The manager of a leading firm of cigarette makers in Piccadilly confessed that he had a large and increasing number of women clients on his books.

"Women smoke as a matter of course now," he said, "and it is the fashion for them to have their cigarettes specially made for them. Turkish tobacco has held the field until lately, but fashion is tending toward coarser cut Russian tobacco made into cigarettes with maize paper, which slows down the combustion."

"Women are more luxurious smokers than men. They are now going in for most elaborate holders of amber and ivory, inlaid with gold or studded with diamonds and other jewels. And of course, they have their gold and silver cigarette cases specially made to hold the particular size of cigarette they smoke, and charming little jewelled match boxes."

Physicians have something to do with the growth of smoking among women. In prescribing for nervous women they often include one or two cigarettes a day as part of the treatment, and so the habit starts until you find a woman smoking half dozen cigarettes with her coffee after lunch."

Several London hotel managers unhesitatingly agreed that for a woman not to smoke in the restaurant after lunch and dinner was now the exception, and that smoking with afternoon tea was not unusual.

"The cigarette habit is undoubtedly becoming a social evil among women," said the manager of the Grosvenor Hotel. "The old social tradition and law of etiquette are dying out. On the continent women have smoked for years, and it is from them that the women of this country have caught the habit. In a young woman who now started smoking light cigarettes, but I don't believe that example will be followed here."

"The part remarkable development of the cigarette habit among women is that many of them are patronized by men."

MAKES FORTUNE BY WORKING OVER TUB

Texan Woman Forced to Support Family Builds Up Large Laundry Business

San Antonio, Texas. In San Antonio there is a woman who has made such a success over the wash tub that she has not only been able to support a crippled husband and a large family but is becoming rich. She is Mrs. Mary Smith.

Like most washerwomen, Mrs. Smith became one because she had to, because the wolf was at the door and her husband was unable to work. But she did each washing so well that the yard of the little place called home was always filled with clothes hung out to dry. Her business increased so rapidly that she was compelled to hire several Mexican girls to help her.

Even then the work assumed the proportions of a laundry, Mrs. Smith clung to the old-fashioned wash tubs and irons and has them still in use. The husband delivered her washings on his shoulder at first, but they were soon able to purchase a horse and wagon. Mrs. Smith's customers never care to complain of torn shirts, wrinkled dresses or half-cleaned clothing. She gives the work as careful attention as when she was poor.

Mrs. Smith has a weekly payroll of $50, has a comfortable home and has several thousand dollars in a bank. And all of the money was made in her back yard.

BUSY BEAVERS CUT THREE-FOOT TREES

VICIOUS ROOSTER ATTACKS WOMAN

Royersford, Pa.—While Mrs. Mary Medlar was feeding her chickens she was attacked by a rooster. She was severely scratched and cut by the fowl's spurs and beak.

Hen Awfully Chicken-Hearted.

Charlottesville, Kan.—When dressing a chicken, Mrs. L. M. Burke discovered the fowl had two hearts. Dissection showed that the hearts were not complete, each being only one-half of a whole organ. However, the arteries and veins were connected in such a way that the two did the work of one heart.

WEST NOVI D. C.

ANNUAL REUNION

THE FIFTH SUCCESSFUL ONE
HELD LAST SATURDAY.Mexico Problem Was All but Settled in Heavy Debate.

The fifth annual reunion of the W. N. D. C. was held last Saturday at the West Novi school house, as previously announced. Like all the former meetings of its kind, it was an occasion of long-to-be-remembered pleasure to all present, despite the underlying sadness because of places made vacant by the passing of two valued members who had hitherto been present each reunion—Mrs. Gage and Mr. Lovewell. But the loss of these friends and what it portended of future probabilities also served to draw the remaining members closer to each other, and make more valuable the hours of association in the dear old familiar room. At the inception of these meetings, it was realized by all interested that such losses must inevitably come, even as the reunions must begin with but memories in place of some members once invaluable.

This ever-present uncertainty makes it incumbent to make the most of every opportunity of pleasure in the association with those still remaining.

The customary banquet "fit for the king" was served at noon, followed by an exceptionally interesting and instructive literary program, with a most enjoyable discussion, pro and con, of the desirability of annexation of Mexico to the U. S., some of the best debaters of the earlier and later years of the club participating. The debate and the several talks preceding it provided truly a feast of reason.

The officers, all re-elected, are N. A. Clapp, Northville, pres.; T. E. Johns, Novi, vice pres.; Della F. Harmon, Northville, sec. retary; J. A. Richardson, Novi, treasurer.

Among the former members present from a distance who took part in the program were A. N. Kimball and Capt. J. H. Woodman of Detroit. Others were in attendance from Novi, Walled Lake, South Lyon, New Hudson and adjoining neighborhoods.

Little Bobbie Cavell, aged 6 years died on Tuesday of last week from accidental poisoning. Bobbie had gone thru the Kindergarten and First grade with his mistress, little Ida Rose Cavell, and had just got partway thru the A class of the Second grade when his school days were forever ended. The younger school children will grieve with Ida Rose in the loss of Bobbie for they all loved him dearly.

A Milford lady has a four legged chicken, one of a flock of thirteen hatched last week. Another illustration of the unlikelihood of that famous number. Just think of the execution that fowl can do in a posy bed or a vegetable garden when it has learned to scratch.

In last week's issue of the Record Lucile Lanning's name was unintentionally omitted from the list of graduates. The type setting machine just happened to skip one name and that one name happened to be "The Girl Next Door," Miss Lucile. A correct list appears in this issue.

Col. Neumann of Denver, Colo., a partner of Royal Starkweather in the Hotel Savoy, was shot and killed a week or so ago. One half of the life insurance policy of $25,000 carried by the hotel company on each of the partners reverted to Royal, the other half to the family.

The invitations now being sent out by the class of 1914 for this year's commencement, issued from the Record office, are probably the most nifty ever sent out by the Northville High school. They are engraved in beautiful plate script type and the embossing is in green and gold on white in keeping with the class colors.

A carload of oil arrived here Monday and work was begun on the streets Wednesday, under the direction of the street commissioner, a man and wagon from Plymouth being secured to do the sprinkling stunt. The cost will be charged up to owners of property sprinkled. Marshal Bogart has had charge of the work and the Plymouth men know how to do the job correctly.

The Aid society of the M. E. church will offer a splendid entertainment in the church this Friday evening in the form of a recital. The Misses Gladys and Ruth Withey of Detroit will render selections on the violin, cello, mandolin and piano and Miss Elisabeth Emery also of Detroit, will sing. Mrs. R. M. Pierce will assist with readings.

Many friends here will be interested to hear something of the present whereabouts of Jamie Dubuar, one of the numerous fine young men Northville has sent out into the world's work. He belongs to the Utah division of the National Forestry service, and is now attached to the Payette national reserve in Idaho. This work in his chosen profession involves inspection of vast reaches of the wonderful primeval forest, surveying, inspecting of timber, soil and insect life in connection therewith, camp life and many other interesting experiences. Jamie is to return to his native state in October, to take his final year in the five-year forestry course at the U. of M., when he will receive his degree.

Remember the recital in M. E. church tonight. Music and readings. Admission—25c and 15c. 46w1c.

The Mysterious Monogram

An Absorbing New Novel

SYNOPSIS OF PREVIOUS CHAPTERS.

The morning after a dinner given at his club by Lord Harcourt, an English nobleman, to announce his engagement to Miss Grace Marston, one of his guests, Townshend by name, is found dead, evidently stabbed while sitting at a table in one of the card rooms. Later the old door man is found back of the club strangled to death. The only strangers at the dinner were Kandwahr, an Indian prince, and Cornish, an American.

Harcourt, having been intoxicated, remembered nothing of what he did after dinner, and his valet, having found a stiletto in his pocket and blood on his clothes, is afraid he might be guilty of the murder.

On the stiletto is carved a strange monogram, which Harcourt finds later on a cigarette stub on the table by the dead man and another in the Marston's drawing room and still another in a flower box near Miss Marston at the Cornish reception.

Returning home early, Harcourt finds Kandwahr has broken open his cabinet and is taking the stiletto from it. Harcourt realizes it is best not to call the police but later Kandwahr is arrested while attempting to throw the knife into the river.

Harcourt nearly distracted with worry over the affair receives a new surprise when he finds a pendant with the mysterious monogram carved in silver which Grace claims is hers. A warrant is issued for Harcourt's arrest but his friends cleverly contrive to get him away and aboard Cornish's yacht.

He rebels at being kidnapped but is not a captive. Melie has discovered that Kandwahr was a half-brother of Townshend. Later he finds by the roadside near Southampton an unmarked grave, which is a man's unmarked grave.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE CRUISE OF THE MORITA.

Meanwhile the Morita was steaming rapidly out to sea, and immediately upon leaving Harcourt in his cabin, Cornish joined the yacht's captain on the bridge.

"Any signs of pursuit?" Cornish asked.

"None," the captain said. "I've taken a northerly course to keep out of the path of the big liners—just far enough out to avoid being sighted from shore."

Cornish nodded with satisfaction as he regarded the bluff New England captain, a man who knew the Atlantic as well as he did the narrow path leading down from his home on Cape Cod to the village tavern nearby. Capt. Whitford was a man of few words—and of fewer words that were suited to the ears of polite society. He was reputed to have the gift of swearing for a longer period without repetition than could any scoundrel afloat, and to his crew he was master both nearly loved and cordially feared. Whitford was absolute ruler of his yacht, and it is his owner had ordered him to attack a battleship or scuttle a steam yacht he would have done so without question if the thing were possible.

When, two days before, Whitford had received a telegram from Cornish, instructing him to be in readiness to sail at a minute's notice, with fuel and provisions for an extended cruise, he had followed his instructions to the letter. The notice had been brief, but Whitford had overlooked nothing, even to the laying-in of a complete wardrobe for the mysterious guest whose measurements, the yacht's owner had sent him.

"See here," said Cornish, lighting a cigar and leaning against the bridge rail. "I'm going to tell you a few things. Do you know who this Englishman is?"

"No and I don't care," snapped Whitford. "He looks like a damned fool and probably is. Whatever else he may be is none of my business."

"You're a man of sense," Cornish congratulated him. "This much, however I want you to know: There are a great many people in England who do know him, and who are wondering where he is at this minute. I don't intend that they shall find out. While he is on this yacht they are not likely to do so. How long do you think we can cruise without touching port for supplies?"

"Six weeks if necessary—or even longer if we rough it a bit."

"Good! I don't care where you go, but keep out of sight and don't communicate with any ship we pass. There may be a man-of-war or a cutter or two on the lookout for us, but don't pay any attention to their signals. If anyone shows a disposition to come too near or to talk to us, simply give them the ship. Have you a wireless operator on board?"

"Yes."

"Well, see that he doesn't use the apparatus except to listen to other ship's conversations. I don't suppose there would be any trouble even if the crew did know who I have aboard, or why he is wanted ashore, but it's just as well that they don't know anything about it."

"They won't—and if they should find out, I'll answer for them. I'm captain of this ship and my orders are obeyed," said Whitford stately. "You tell me what you want, and I'll see that you get it. If that wireless fellow tries to monkey with his keys, I'll throw him overboard!"

"Don't," Cornish advised. "We may need him later on. If we can keep hidden we'd better remain out for a month at least. Then I'll figure out what is best to be done. Eventually, when it is safe to try, I want to make New Orleans and go home from there by rail."

Whitford nodded. "In case we are overhauled," he asked abruptly.

"In that event keep safely ahead until you can run close enough to shore to enable us to make a quick landing in the launch. Once I get my guest on land turn the yacht about and give our pursuer the longest chase you can."

Planning his way down from the bridge, Cornish walked slowly aft to find Harcourt talking quietly with Adele under the deck-awning. Adele, in her neat yachting costume, looked the picture of health, and she was laughing at Harcourt when her father joined them.

"Mr. Cavendish is trying to convert me to his cause," she said laughing. "Cavendish," Cornish said. "Oh, so that's the new name you've selected in it? I'll not have you plotting treason, sir!" he added with a grin.

"Isn't he ungalant?" Adele said.

"He really prefers the interior of an English prison to sitting here with me. If he was not engaged I should never forgive him!"

Cornish smiled. "Sorry you're so restless," he said to Harcourt. "But I'm afraid you'll have to put up with our society for a little while longer. We won't see land again until some time next month, I hope."

"I cannot make you out, Mr. Cornish," said Harcourt in perplexity. "You have been kindness itself to me since you brought me on board this morning, and under other circumstances I should enjoy the trip immensely, but I simply cannot understand your forced detention of me here. It is an interference with my personal liberty which is absolutely unwarranted, and I assure you that at the first opportunity presenting itself, I shall make good my escape."

"Fire ahead!" Cornish chuckled. "I haven't heard of anyone walking on the sea recently, and that's about the only way you're likely to get back to England for a long time to come. You've a difficult proposition ahead of you, and what is more, I meant exactly what I said when I told you I'd put you in irons if you try any monkey business."

"You don't really?" Harcourt gasped.

"I most certainly do, and don't you forget it!" came the prompt response. "Have a cigar?"

Realizing that he could not move Cornish, Harcourt gave up trying, but for the remainder of the day the American's attitude rankled in his breast. Nothing that would add to his comfort was left undone and both the millionaire and his daughter exerted themselves to the utmost to make the days pass pleasantly for Harcourt, but whenever he brought up the subject of returning to London his suggestion was flatly and unceremoniously vetoed by Cornish.

And as the days passed Harcourt tried to content himself with his situation. But he could not help thinking of his fiancée, and wondering what had happened since his disappearance. The thought that Grace might now be deeply involved in the affair, troubled him. Times without number he told himself that it was absurd to connect her with the murder yet her wearing of the mysterious and constantly recurring monogram, fed his suspicions until he could not lose them.

What was it she had done that she would not tell him about? What did she know of it all he wondered. And sometimes still doubtful as to his own part in the crime, he thought he could go mad. Since the first day out he had eagerly watched the horizon for signs of other craft. Whenever Whitford observed a sail or the smoke from a steamer's stack, however, the yacht's course was promptly altered, and soon all of them were left far astern.

For more than a week now there had been nothing on any side but the broad expanse of sea, and the Morita, with all on board, was as completely isolated from the rest of the world as if the yacht had left it. Yet Harcourt was sure that England lay not far away to the east. He realized, too, that he was but seldom left alone, and that during the long daylight hours, either Cornish or his daughter were constantly near him. He was free to do as he liked, but at all times he felt keenly the fact that he was a prisoner.

At night, after the others had retired, he frequently paced the deck alone, smoking and wondering what was being said of him ashore. He wondered, too, how Kandwahr fared, and then he would recall the dagger with its strange marking, until the curious monogram, flashing through his brain, brought back again the horror it had first struck into him. There was a weird sense of terror for him in the thing, and he asked himself a thousand times what the symbol might represent. To him it meant only haunting doubts and strange fears, yet he knew that the character held a meaning that would solve the whole problem if he could only discover it.

Gradually he struck up a friendship with Benson, the second officer, who always stayed nearby when Harcourt walked on the deck at night. He was a young man of good looks and pleasant manners, and he seemed ready enough to talk when Harcourt approached him. Often as the yacht plowed through the swelling seas, the two talked for hours, and frequently Benson told Harcourt of the country that he and Cornish claimed as home.

Sometimes Harcourt wondered how much Benson knew concerning him, but as Cornish had warned him not to reveal his identity, he refrained from questioning the man on the subject. Talking to him seemed to relieve the strain of the long nights when he could not rest alone in his cabin, and gradually, after several extended conversations, Harcourt wondered if he could not make use of Benson.

He considered the idea carefully and at last resolved to try it. If the Morita would put in at any port, Harcourt knew he could reach Scotland Yard by telegraph within a few hours and advise MacBee of the reason for his disappearance as well as his desire to return. So, when they were alone again on the deck the following night, he made his first attempt.

"Benson," he began, as he leaned against the rail, "what would you consider a great deal of money?"

"I—I don't know—why?" said the officer.

"I mean what do you consider your prospects worth—what do you expect to have when you go back home and ask some girl to marry you?"

Benson laughed. "I'm not likely to marry," he said. "There's only one woman I'd care to have and I'll never win her."

"Perhaps you would if your career offered greater opportunities," Harcourt suggested.

"I'd need a fortune greater than I'll ever get," Benson told him.

Harcourt stood silently looking out through the darkness at the great black waves rolling as far as the eye could see. "Benson," he said at last.

"There is a woman back in England who is waiting where I am—why I do not come back at a time when the needs are for reasons that I need not explain. Mr. Cornish is determined that I shall not go to her. I am a very rich man—a man of some influence in the kingdom—and if I could do so, I would return to that woman."

He stopped and felt Benson looking at him strangely. "What do you mean, sir?" the man asked.

"I mean that if I could be put ashore anywhere I would willingly pay $50,000 to the man who made that possible."

Benson stared at him in astonishment. "Fifty thousand pounds!" he said.

"Why, sir, that is a quarter of a million dollars!"

"It is," Harcourt said quietly. "And I mean exactly what I say."

Benson laughed. "That's funny," he said. "Are you trying to kid me?"

"I don't think I understand," said Harcourt.

"I mean you're surely not in earnest—you're joking?"

"I was never more serious in my life. If you can win over enough of the crew to secure command of this yacht, and make the nearest port at once, I will pay you $50,000 the day you set me ashore."

"It couldn't be done, sir," Benson said, at first doubting the sanity of the man beside him.

"A great many things can be done with that much money, Benson," Harcourt urged.

"I know it, sir, but what you suggest means mutiny and you could not turn this crew against Captain Whitford even if you promised every man of them a reserved seat in Heaven."

"You might suggest the thing to Captain Whitford himself," Harcourt suggested.

"Bribe Whitford!" Benson threw back his head and laughed heartily. "And be knocked flat for my pains. You don't know what you're saying. If he even knew I had let you talk to me like this, he would have me in the jug."

"You believe him absolutely loyal to Cornish, then?"

"I am sure of it."

"Mr. Cornish is a very rich man, Benson, but I am richer than he."

"Isn't money with Whitford, sir?" Benson exclaimed. "He is a rough man and not a saint by a long shot, but he has the good old New England ideas of right and wrong."

"You might strongly developed in him, and he wouldn't do a disloyal thing no matter what you offered him."

"Then he will do what I wish," Harcourt said. "That is, his very sense of honor will win him over. A great wrong is being done to me and to persons ashore. A crime has been committed there and—well, I am concerned in it. If I do not return speedily, an innocent person may be made to suffer for my absence."

Benson gave a little exclamation of surprise, and stared sharply at Harcourt. "He had been ashore the night before the Morita sailed, and had heard a great deal of comment on the mysterious crime that everyone was interested in. 'Why are you?' he demanded suspiciously. 'Not—'

"I am the Earl of Harcourt."

"Good Lord!" Benson exclaimed.

"Now you understand my wish, to return—as a man of honor, who gave his word not to leave the country. In fact, there may even be a warrant for my arrest."

"What is Mr. Cornish's object in keeping you here against your will?"

"He has reasons of his own, opposed to mine," said Harcourt. "It is my wish to land and give myself up to the police."

"You want to give yourself up?" Benson repeated dubiously. "Say, you are a queer one."

"My offer still stands," said Harcourt. "Thank it over carefully."

Benson stood there silently, looking out over the yacht's side. He was thinking, formulating a plan in his own mind—one that appealed to him strongly. The ship's bell clanged sharply, interrupting his thought, and he turned to Harcourt with a start.

"I don't know," he said slowly. "There's almost no chance, and I'm taking my life in my hands when I do it—but I'll see what can be done."

"You'll have to take your chances while you're on the yacht," Harcourt told him. "But once you are on shore I can guarantee that your work will cause no trouble."

"Remember, I'm not promising anything," said Benson, "but if there is any chance of putting this over I'll let you know. Don't question me. When the time comes—if it does come at all—I will let you know."

"Thanks," said Harcourt. "Good-night."

He threw his cigar into the sea and went to his cabin, leaving Benson alone with his temptation on the deck.

CHAPTER XIV.

MUTINY ON BOARD.

At breakfast the next morning, Harcourt watched Cornish and Adele carefully. It had occurred to him that Benson might repeat and report their conversation to his chief, but if the two did know anything of the matter they gave no sign of it. The thought that the absence of his plan might implicate Cornish when his action should come to MacBee's attention, also disturbed Harcourt and angry as he was at being held a prisoner, he appreciated his abductor's motive and asked no harm to come to them.

When the meal was over he walked on the deck with Adele for more than an hour, trying hard to conceal the impatience he felt. At last, however, she left him, and shortly, to his little surprise, Benson approached and nodded pleasantly. "They were standing apart on the after deck and although striving to conceal the impatience that their conversation was purely a casual one, Benson signalled to Harcourt that he had something important to say."

One of the seamen passed and Harcourt commented upon the weather, but as soon as he had gone, Benson stepped closer, and pretending to point out something off the port bow, said: "I think what you wish may be possible."

Harcourt's pulse leaped. "What have you done?" he asked.

"Found five of the crew who will help us," Benson said in a low tone. "With you and me that is seven. If everything goes well we should be able to overpower the others, even though they are three to our one. They will be surprised and I think it can be done. The five who are with us will be on watch with me at 11 tonight. The others will be asleep below. We will simply fatten down the hatches and land the yacht ourselves. The captain will be in his cabin, and Pierce the third officer on the bridge. Two of us can easily handle them, while you must see that Mr. Cornish does not leave his cabin. Have you arms?"

"No."

"Take this then," Benson slipped a big revolver into his hand and Harcourt slipped it into his pocket quickly. "I hope this won't be necessary," he said.

"So do I," Benson agreed. "But Whitford wouldn't hesitate to shoot and we can't afford to take chances. The moral effect of a gun is good, you know."

"How soon can we land?" Harcourt asked.

"In a few hours we can make the coast of Scotland," Benson replied. "My plan is to run in as close as is necessary for the seven of us to go ashore in the launch, leaving the others on board. I don't want to run the yacht into port under the circumstances, but I figure that in view of the whole situation, Cornish won't dare to make any trouble after we have gone."

"Once on shore the police will be with you, naturally," Harcourt assured him.

"That is what I told the boys," said Benson. "Now, until you hear the signal, don't come near me. Remain in your cabin until 11 o'clock, then go right to Cornish's door and see that he doesn't get on deck. When we have done our part I will come to you."

To Harcourt, hoping earnestly for success, the day seemed endless. He spent the afternoon in his cabin, feigning a headache because he wished to be alone with his thoughts—to plan his course once he was free to return to MacBee.

In the evening, after dinner, he joined Adele on deck and for the first time, she told him of the part she had played in his abduction. Harcourt looked in admiration at the girl by his side, doubting, in spite of her words, that she could have played the role of which she told him.

"You don't know what an actress I am," she said laughing. "I've always wanted to go on the stage, but, of course, dad wouldn't hear of it. Oh, it was glorious, and my only difficulty was not to laugh in the man's face—he was so completely deceived. It was a chance of fortune that he had never seen you."

"But I can't imagine you masquerading as myself!" Harcourt protested.

"Oh, I say, can't you really!" she drawled in perfect imitation of his voice.

He stared at her for a moment and then he laughed outright.

"Now are you satisfied that I did it?" she demanded.

"You're wonderful!" he exclaimed with enthusiasm. "Really, Miss Cornish, you and your father have done too much for me. I wish I could appreciate it as I should, but I'm afraid I can't."

"You don't imagine we're doing all this for your sake, do you?" she retorted.

"Not doing it for my sake?" he asked in a puzzled tone. "Then why on earth are you doing it?"

"For Grace," Adele said simply. "Lord Harcourt father and I have become very, very fond of Grace. If anything should happen to you, it kills her. Don't you think you owe it to her if not to yourself, to avoid the danger of this situation if you can?"

Harcourt stood silently, avoiding her searching gaze. He wondered what the girl would say if she knew the grave suspicion in his own mind—if she realized that his greatest desire to return was prompted by the thought that his absence might mean greater danger to the girl for whom the American felt so deeply.

"Miss Cornish," he said after a moment. "There are several phases of this affair that you do not understand clearly. I cannot discuss them with you any more than I could with Grace."

"What is the trouble between you two?" she asked abruptly. "Oh, I knew there was something the moment I found Grace unconscious by your side the night of our reception."

"Please don't question me," he begged. "I cannot say more now. Some day, perhaps you will understand—although I hope you never will!"

"Poor boy!" Adele said feelingly. "For, do you know, Lord Harcourt, you are just a giant overgrown boy. We all admire your courage, your high sense of honor, and your absolute indifference to your own life—yet we cannot but feel that the strange situation in which you have found your self has carried away your good judgment. Try to content yourself here. I am sure an innocent person will suffer through the fact that you are here, and by accepting your present position philosophically, you will surely preserve your own future happiness and that of the woman you love."

She spoke very seriously, and put her small hand upon his arm as she leaned close to him. "Can't you see that we are right?" she urged.

"I wish I could feel that you are," Harcourt replied. "With all my heart I do—but I am afraid I cannot."

He saw the disappointment in her face as she withdrew her touch. "Please try," she begged. "I know that time will straighten out all of this horrible tangle."

And she turned to leave him alone.

Harcourt watched her cross the deck and enter her cabin and with a little sigh began to pace up and down nervously. Perhaps he was making a mistake in trying to outwit these good friends who were determined to save him in spite of himself, and he wondered if he was justified in attempting to carry out the plans for the mutiny. In any event he resolved that no harm must come to Cornish and Adele—that if necessary he would run MacBee that he had deliberately run away, and lie as to his whereabouts during his absence. A change of heart—repentance at having broken his word—would be sufficient explanation of his return.

Struggling with himself, he passed the remaining hours until midnight. To avoid all chance of suspicion, he forced himself to dine with his hosts, and was more or less successful in making Adele feel that he had at last become resigned to his enforced presence aboard the yacht.

Slowly the early evening passed. Adele amused herself by playing quietly at the piano in the corner of the salon, while Cornish and Harcourt smoked in silence, each occupied with his own thoughts. Now and then Harcourt stole a glance at the great figure of the American and marveled at his great strength. Determination of purpose was plain in every line of his splendid physique, and in the strong lines of his face Harcourt observed a strange mixture of kindness and brutality. Unquestionably Cornish was a man of tremendous force, a man not to be trifled with, and as he watched him, Harcourt knew that unless he succeeded in gaining control of the yacht that night, Cornish would certainly carry out his threat to put him in irons.

Parental Vigilantes

FATHERS and mothers in Kansas City, Mo., have organized a secret society known as the "Parental Surveillance Association of North America," the object of which is to determine the intentions and eligibility of the young men who call on their daughters, future action by the parents to be based on what the association regards as the girl's best interests.

The plan on the surface looks easy and wise. A young man calls on a girl once; no surveillance. He calls the second time. Mother puts on her arctic and furs and braves the frigid temperature of her daughter's displeasure by going into the parlor to take a look at him through glasses which rapidly get frost covered.

The parental Surveillance Association of North America is notified of the second call a report on the young man is asked for, and, if he calls a third time, he is handed the following letter:

Dear Sir—We wish to have a word with you in regard to your courtship of Mr. _____'s daughter. Whether or not your intentions toward her are serious, we have been in doubt for some time. You have told her that you love her, but do you mean it? Young man, you have already frequented his home, and monopolized the company of his daughter, sufficiently long to make a declaration of your intentions. If you mean business, say so. If you are not serious, then gaze on some other pasture. His daughter's welfare must be protected.

Yours truly,
PARENTAL SURVEILLANCE ASSOCIATION OF NORTH AMERICA

All of which may seem in the eyes of the P. S. A. of N. A., an insurmountable tear-barred fence around Daughter, but which, to her, is a fence so low she can clear it while wearing a hobbie skirt—if she wants to!

It all depends on the kind of creature inside the fence. The P. S. A. of N. A. takes it for granted that her views are in perfect accord with those of the members above mentioned slice of the alphabet. They expect her to say at breakfast, with the humility and downcast eyes that characterize the kind of a maid they think they have in the enclosure:

"I wish to inform my respected parents that I have called on me last evening, to return an umbrella he borrowed two weeks ago. As it was his second call, I ask you to submit his name to the Parental Surveillance Association of North America. I feel highly honored at an opportunity to abide by any decision made by that honorable body."

But the modern daughter, be she from Kansas City or Kalamazoo, is not the kind of a creature the members of this great reform association imagine. If its decision stamps approval on the young man, she will begin to regard him with suspicion, and if it disapproves she will tell it "to go hang."

If the association gives a man the eligibility medal, he doesn't marry the girl, for how long is the medal good? Will there have to be a monthly auditing of his moral accounts, or will an investigation of his supply of grace be asked only when he looks at a girl?

If he is a widower, will the number of his children serve as a handicap or an asset? How much credence will the association place on the testimony of his first wife's relatives?

Will the fathers and mothers agree on the standard of eligibility? The soup that is seasoned to suit Mother is too fat and insipid for Father. The young man may have a soul that is always on the hill-tops, and every sentiment of his heart be garlanded with roses, and Mother, reflecting the glamour of romance and rose color from Daughter, will approve.

But Father will brush all sentiments aside and demand to know the young man's income. If he is afraid of work, has he good horse sense, and, above all, does he know how to be good to a woman?

One of the by-laws of the association demands that, when a man tells a girl he loves her, they must marry. But how many of our fathers and mothers married their first loves?

Have the members of the association taken into account what will happen when some mother-director discovers that her own son is under surveillance?

If parents want their daughters to marry wisely, their training should begin when, as babies, they cry for things that are not good for them. The mother and father who surrender good judgment to foolish sentiment, then, will find themselves facing an established precedent when Daughter wants the wrong man, after she is grown.

All of the decisions of the Parental Surveillance Association of North America, if sustained with a whoop by all the mothers and fathers in the world, will not change such a daughter's decision.

The Parental Surveillance Association of North America should gather up its microscopes and reports and adjourn from the parlor to the nursery. There is where the trouble begins.

Breakfast Recipes

Gems

One egg, one pint of sweet milk, a pinch of salt, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, and enough flour to make a stiff batter. Drop small spoonfuls of the batter in hot lard and fry as you would doughnuts. Serve hot with syrup.

Fried Eggs and Apples

Peel and core two large firm apples, then cut in slices about a quarter of an inch thick, sprinkle over them salt and pepper, melt two tablespoonfuls of butter in a frying pan, add the apples, fry them two minutes, turning on each side. Break six eggs over the apples. Season and fry for a minute. Then set in the oven for five minutes. Remove and serve on hot dish.

Corn Bread

One pint cornmeal, one pint clarified milk, two eggs, one level teaspoonful soda, carefully pulverized before measuring, one tablespoonful hot bacon drippings or lard, pinch of salt. Have well greased pan and moderately hot oven. Put cornmeal into mixing bowl, add soda and stir thoroughly, beat eggs and add sour milk to them, stirring the milk and eggs together slightly. Now pour the liquid into the meal and when well mixed, stir in quickly the hot bacon drippings. Pour immediately into pan and bake 25 to 35 minutes, according to size of pan.

Mushroom and Bacon

Pick the mushrooms carefully and stew for a few minutes in a little brown sauce or stock and one tablespoonful butter. Have ready some rounds of hot buttered toast and crisp fried slices of bacon; on each slice of toast place a slice of bacon and on that a mushroom, or if small two or three, sprinkle with finely chopped parsley and pour sauce around.

French Dressing

I have seen so many try their hand at the simplest form of French dressing without success that I venture to give this process to the inexperienced. Have a clean quart fruit jar with a good rubber and lid. Into the jar put two tumblerfuls of best salad oil, one-half cupful of white vinegar, a heaping teaspoonful of salt and a salt spoonful of cayenne. Place on the rubber and lid, screw lid down tight, then shake until the whole is mixed and forms an emulsion. Shake the jar sideways rather than up and down. It is then ready to pour over the salad. Will keep for weeks in an ice chest and is ready for use when wanted. Always prepare the salad at table, when convenient.

Mothproof Bags

How to keep fur neckpieces, muffs and jackets from the ravages of moths had long perplexed me until I thought of the following plan, which has proved to be absolutely safe. Take newspapers, two thick-sheets, place two full sized sheets together, stitch three sides on the sewing machine—that is, the sides and bottom, put the articles to be preserved into the bag, thus formed and stitch across the top of bag, completely sealing it in. Hang the bag by pinning to a discarded garment in the attic, then rest in peace regarding your furs through the summer. I have followed this plan for several years with perfect success.

To Wash Quilt

Dissolve a bar of white soap in a cupful of water, run into your bathtub sufficient warm water to cover one quilt, make a good suds, put in the quilt and let soak for a few minutes. Do not rub, but use the washboard, top end down, to press or pound out the dirt. Never wring but with the washboard press out the water. Rinse several times. When you have pressed out as dry as you can, pin the quilt closely on the line to drain. When thoroughly dry, whip with the carpet beater, until fluffy before removing from the line. This method is especially fine for tied quilts. The bathtub is preferred because of shape and water conveniences.

Making a Pad

I found when making a pad for mattress a great improvement on the old way. I made it of cheese cloth, measuring it a quarter of a yard all around larger than the mattress. Then spread it on the mattress, padding it thick with cotton, just the size of the mattress. I tied it, leaving the quarter of yard around without any cotton in to tuck in around mattress. This does away with any clumsiness and does not pull away from the edge.

To Clean White Fur

To clean white furs, heat cornmeal in a pan until it is as hot as the hands can bear. Put the fur in the meal and rub them as one would if using soap and water, keeping the meal hot. After a few minutes of hard rubbing shake them out thoroughly.

WOMAN KILLED IN BATTLE WITH BEAR

Prospector Finds Skeletons of Both and Also a Dog That Had Fought.

Helena, Mont.—Tattered remnants of a woman's dress, the skeleton of a bear with a bullet hole through the head and the skeleton of a dog beneath an outstretched paw, are the mute evidence of a tragedy on the wooded slope of Jackson Creek beyond Montana City, discovered by a prospector while exploring for minerals.

Pierce is the finder's name, and he told Thomas Sweeney, assistant cashier of the Thomas Cruse Bank, about it when he was out there recently, and the two of them are going back to try to find the woman's remains.

There is no doubt at all in Pierce's mind that the woman had been berrying when she encountered the bear. As the animal charged her she fired, and the bullet penetrated the brain, but did not cause instant death. The brute kept coming, and struck her down with a single blow from its mighty paw, then scurped her clothing off in huge sweeps with the claws. The dog sprang to the defence of its mistress. Turning, the bear struck at it, and itself fell dead, the crushed body of the dog pinned tight by the heavy paw.

The tragedy could not have happened very many years ago, or else the faded bits of woman's clothing that Pierce found hanging on the brush near the two skeletons would have rotted away. Coyotes could pick the bodies of the dog and bear clean in a night, and the frost and sun would quickly bleach the bones.

Pierce does not believe the woman was killed instantly by the bear, but that she was badly wounded and lacerated by the sharp claws. When the dog rushed in and the bear turned to it, the berry-picker crawled away in the thick brush and expired.

CAT SWIMS RIVER TO FIND COMPANY

When Master Returns Pet Feline Rejoice Performance to Welcome Him Home.

Dulsero, Colo.—Braving the ice-cold waters of the Grand River, rather than stay on a ranch alone, Murphy, a Maltese cat belonging to Ad Hockett, a wealthy rancher near here, swam a mile when he was left on the ranch while Hockett went to Glenwood Springs on a business trip.

The day after Hockett left his ranch Murphy went to the river bank, where he sat for an hour, and then swam the stream to the opposite side where he sought company at a neighboring ranch.

Four days later, when Hockett returned and found Murphy missing, he began a search for his mascot.

Standing on the river bank, he saw his cat swimming back. When Murphy reached the shore he jumped on his master's shoulder.

At the point where Murphy swam the river the stream is treacherous, and several men have been swept down the stream by the swift current.

ROOSTER SAVES CHILD FROM DEATH IN WATER

Runs to House, Flaps Wings and Crows Till Father Goes to His Drowning Girl.

Perry, Kan.—The intelligence of a Leghorn rooster saved Hilda, 4-year-old daughter of the Rev. Sven Jorgensen, from death by drowning here. The child slipped into a pond, ten feet deep while playing in the rear of the Jorgensen home and undoubtedly would have drowned had not the rooster hastened to the house, and by crowing and flapping his wings on the door attracted the attention of the girl's father.

The Rev. Jorgensen followed the rooster to the pond where he found his daughter sinking for the last time. He rescued her and succeeded in removing the water from her lungs and saving her life.

CUTS GLASS WITH LOST GEM

Boy Finder Keeps $200 Diamond in His Tool Box.

Logansport, Ind.—Mrs. John Maurice has recovered a $200 diamond earring which she lost more than a year ago. While sitting in a vaudeville theatre waiting for the performance to begin Mrs. Maurice related to a friend the loss of her diamond which fell out of the setting. A boy who was sitting beside Mrs. Maurice overheard the conversation and told her Eddie McDowell probably had it. Mrs. Maurice called at the McDowell home and found the boy using it to cut glass in his workshop. He had run over it with his bicycle and thought it was a hard piece of glass.

Dog Bites Fowl Meads Off

Defiance, Iowa.—A mad dog which appeared at farmhouses two miles northeast of town, apparently had declared war on everything that wore feathers. It visited many barnyards but attacked only the fowls, biting their heads off neatly. At the farm of E. White twelve African geese were killed in this manner.

RISE OF GENERAL BLANQUET TO POWER HAS BEEN THROUGH BLOOD

Mexico City.—(Special).—Despite rumors to the contrary, Gen. Aureliano Blanquet still remains loyal to Dictator Huerta. Since the overthrow of Madero he has been Huerta's right hand man and one of his closest counselors.

The story of Blanquet's life reads much the same as the biography of many other men who have risen to power in Mexico. His road begins with his being thrown into the army as a penalty for alleged disloyalty. Knowing how to read and write the young soldier was made a sergeant, and in that position he claims to have turned part of the fighting against that executed Maximilian of Hapsburg. Very little is known of Blanquet until 1910, when in the campaign in the north against the Madero forces he made a reputation for whole sale murder of non-combatants.

Blanquet's name is linked inseparably with the slaughter at Vatummas, in the State of Puebla. The Maderista rebels had taken the town and passed on before Blanquet's federal force arrived. Occupying the place without opposition, Blanquet ordered the life of the place to be the residence of all rebel sympathizers. The male occupants of these houses, irrespective of age, were arrested at Blanquet's order, and in this way sixty-four inhabitants of the little town were lined up and shot. Blanquet's official report described "the capture of Maderistas after severe fighting in which the enemy lost sixty-four."

Under Provisional President de la Barra, Col. Blanquet was promoted, with other Federal commanders, to the rank of a junior general and given

HE LEADS THE BEST TROOPS IN MEXICO

General Blanquet.

A large command of troops, but was relieved from field duty by Madero after a year because of his brutality and Blanquet, like Huerta, who also had been demoted by Madero became a malcontent. When the conspiracy to overthrow Madero ripened, Blanquet threw in his lot with Felix Diaz and Huerta.

THE NATION'S DARKEST STAIN.

According to Joseph Strong's 'Social Progress,' the average number of murders in the United States annually during the twenty years from 1885 to 1904 was 6,597. In 1895 there were 10,500 murders and in 1896 there were 10,662. In Germany the convictions equal more than 95 per cent. of those accused of murder. In the United States the convictions are 13 per cent. The outline is startling.

These amazing figures are cited chiefly by way of calling attention to a remarkable address recently delivered by Hon. Andrew D. White former president of Cornell college and late American ambassador to Germany. Dr. White gave it as his deliberate opinion that the alarming prevalence of crime in this country is chargeable to the practice under which the administration of criminal justice has become largely a game played by clever lawyers. He pointed out that there are forty-three times more murders in the United States than in Canada, and eight times more than in Belgium, which has more than any other European country. Dealing with the matter of penalties, Dr. White declared that in the United States only one murderer in seventy-four is punished, and that the average criminal serves but seven years of a life sentence.

For the dangerous conditions revealed by these figures Dr. White would institute measures of the most radical character. He ridicules the vicious theory that crime is a disease to be treated as such. It must be dealt with as crime alone, and rather than continue the present defective administration of justice he would put the professional criminal to death as a measure of public safety. The proposal is startling, but as between society and the habitual criminal, whose interests are entitled to first consideration?
