LEAD BUILDING

ASSN'S ANNUAL

GOOD REPORT PRESENTED BY SECRETARY VAN ATTA.

The annual meeting of the Northville Lead & Building association was held in the library last Friday evening.

It was stated that at this time there is a balance of only $2,000, showing that the advertising campaign during the past year has brought a good number into the town.

Several good loans made during the year amounting to nearly $7,000.

The following officers and directors were elected: President, J. A. Dubuar; Vice President, Spencer Clark; Secy, I. E. Van Atta; Treas., F. A. Miller; At-Large, C. C. Korman; E. S. Neal, J. W. Perkins, E. A. Wheeler, Peter Barlett, C. A. Eddy, A. K. Carpenter and S. E. Cranston.

A POUND IS A POUND, SAYS JAMES.

Editor Northville Record:

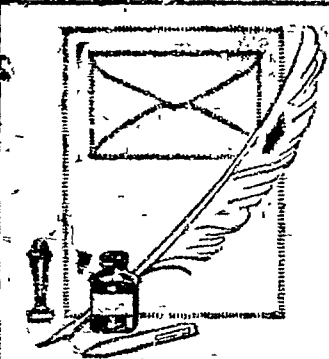

My attention has been called to a communication in your paper of recent date signed by a "Northville Householder" complaining that butchers are allowed by this department to weigh up wrappers in the sale of meat. Such is not the case. We have distinctly warned all dealers, and we have also informed the customers, that when they buy a pound, or most or a pound of anything else they are entitled to a full pound and that lard pails or butter dishes or paper must not form a part of that pound. In the weighing of meats where a paper is generally placed on the scale, the butcher generally gives what is called "down weight" which means that the beam goes up. This "down weight" is generally enough to make a full pound unless a wooden dish is used or other receptacle in which case he must give the full weight outside of the wooden dish.

Yours truly,

J. W. HELME,

State Dairy and Food Commissioner, Lansing, Mich., July 29, 1914.

The Wonders of Panama Illustrated and Explained at the Chautauqua

Many Travelogues are made up by the company that furnishes stock slides and descriptive material, and are given by those who in most cases have never been abroad in their lives. In the "Story of Panama," an illustrated account of the great engineering enterprise will be given by a man who spent five years in the canal zone. Professor Gause, the eminent educator, was selected by Uncle Sam to take charge of the schools in Panama. He had under his supervision 5,000 Americans and native children. His frequent visits to the several schools took him over the entire country many times and brought him into familiar contact with all the aspects of the progress of the canal. He knows his subject. His book on Panama has had the largest sale of any relating to this subject and has already gone through three editions.

The audiences are invited to ask questions, and after the evening of the third day of our Chautauqua we are sure that many will feel that they have a satisfactory knowledge of the greatest engineering accomplishment of history. Beautiful slides and several thousand feet of films are aids to Professor Gause's splendid description of American enterprise and achievement.

WITH CENTRAL CHAUTAUQUA MEET IN NORTHVILLE, AUG. 16-20.

COUNTY FAIR AND A CAMP MEETING

MANY BIG SPEAKERS ARE ON THE COMING CHAUTAUQUA PROGRAM.

Sam Jones used to say that "a Chautauqua was better than a dog fight, and was a cross between a country fair and a camp meeting." While the sentiment was cloaked in his usual uncouth style still the idea he conveyed was about right. Nothing creates more interest than these popular summer assemblies. In a few instances street fairs and Chautauquas have conducted at the same time. Without exception the Chautauqua had the larger crowds and the best elements.

The programs are of a high tone and the influences wholly uplifting. A well known Chautauqua manager explains the great drawing power of the Chautauqua by pointing out the fact that the programs are built about personality. People are interested in people. Human interest is one of the strongest elements in our makeup. The Chautauqua presents brains and character and human achievement.

Dr. Bible of Philadelphia will be the first notable speaker on our local program. A recent clipping from a newspaper in a Chautauqua town says regarding Dr. Bible's lecture, "Humor of a marked degree featured the lecture. He brought the audience to its feet and set it in an uproar of applause. The audience went wild when the last remarks were made."

Prof. Gause and Mr. Barkley talk to both eye and ear. One by means of the stereopticon and the other by means of crayon and chalk. Prof. Gause lived in the Capitol zone for five years, where he inaugurated a splendid system of education under the support and control of the United States government. Mr. Barkley is a lawyer by profession but his artistic ability secured him a place on the platform. His pictures are beautiful and brilliant. He has a happy way of pleasing the oldest and youngest in his audience.

We will try to give our readers next week some interesting facts regarding the musicians and entertainers.

Joseph A. Moynihan, the subject of this sketch, who has recently announced his candidacy for the nomination on the Republican ticket for Circuit Court Commissioner of Wayne county was born and raised in the City of Detroit and has lived here all his life. He is a product of the local public schools and is a graduate of the Detroit College of Law.

Mr. Moynihan has been engaged in the active practice of law for the last seven years, with offices at 619-23 Majestic Bldg. His extensive practice pertaining to matters involving the law of real estate has especially qualified him for the office he seeks.

While this is Mr. Moynihan's initial bid for public office, it is generally conceded that he will receive one of the nominations by a large majority.

Mr. Moynihan has received the unqualified support of the members of the Wayne County Bar.

OBITUARY.

Charles Sumner Stark was born April 15, 1867 and died July 30, 1914.

In 1881 he was married to Miss Lucetta Cary of Plymouth who died May 18, 1895. To this union was born one child, Effie May, who made her home with her father near Ann Arbor. In 1896 he was married to Mrs. Ida Ollisple who died in 1898.

On Nov. 12, 1901, he was united in marriage with Miss Carrie A. Brown of Gaines, she dying April 27, 1910. To this last union was born one child, Ruth Sarah, who has been with her mother's people at Gaines.

Mr. Stark attended the State Normal at Ypsilanti and taught some years in the district schools. Later he taught in different high schools of the state. He had engaged in farming at different times and at his death owned a farm five miles west of Northville on which he was born, and which was purchased by his father, John F. Stark, in 1846. He had also represented seed companies as traveling salesman and was to have been on the road this year.

Mr. Stark underwent an operation at Harper's hospital, Detroit, in May which was considered successful, but later complications set in which caused his death.

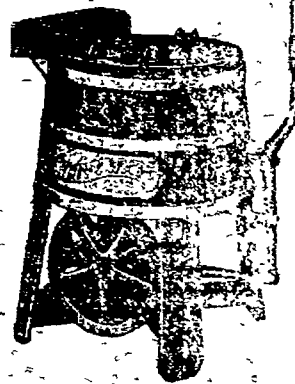

He was a member of the Congregational church of Salem and often expressed his faith in the Lord. Just a short time before his death, he said, "My work is done; I am now ready to go." His last three weeks were spent in the home of his niece, Mrs. Clayton Deake, three miles west of Ypsilanti, where he received every care and attention that willing hands and kind hearts could give.

THE USUAL LOCK.

A farmer sends us the following wail: "It's scarcely any wonder that lines are on my brow, it's hard to make a living as things are going now. I plant nice potatoes and sit down to watch them grow; then comes the frost a swooping and lays the blighted things low. I plant some little seedlings to raise some succotash; my neighbors hen come over and knock them all to smash. I had a little arbor in which to snooze and rest; a cow came in and climbed it and sent it gally west. I bought a dozen egglets, (which cost so much I cried); they hatched a lonely chicken and it went off and died. The insects ate the cabbage, the worms have bailed the corn, my horse has got the glanders, my cow has lost a horn, my pig has got the measles and squeals unseemly tunes, my ducks are hunting water and I am full of prunes."

CAR LINES PASS ALL SACRED SPOTS

Scene of Crucifixion, Mount of Olive and Holy Wells Stations for Trolley

News Returning to Home City Bring Demand for Many Modern Innovations.

Jerusalem—The historic streets of ancient Jerusalem; the Holy City, will have with the noise of electric cars, and brilliant electric lights will illuminate the streets at night. Many of the old, picturesque towers and walls are to be torn away and a modern system of water works will be installed.

The rapidity with which the Holy City is being extended outside the old walls by the return of the Jews to the land of their forefathers has made the improvements necessary. To the north and west of the old city there have sprung up populous Jewish residential colonies and to-day there is a greater Jerusalem without than within the walls. Four separate tramway routes are to be laid. They will start from the Jaffa Gate, the principal entrance to the city. The first will have a length of two miles and will pass through the business quarter of the Holy City.

Another will link the Jewish colonies to the north of the city, and a third will encircle the old city, passing many of the most interesting historical points. Among them the spot supposed to have been the scene of crucifixion, the Tomb of the Kings, the Mount of Olives and the Valley of Jehoshaphat.

The fourth line will run to Bethlehem, some six miles from the Jaffa gate, traversing the most sacred thoroughfare in the world. It is lined with reputed holy places, wells, tombs and convents. The work of laying the rails for these roads will begin in April.

The old walls of the city, which have a circumference of 3 1/2 miles and at places are 35 feet high, are being offered for sale by the city as building material. A society has been formed for the purpose of saving isolated sections of the walls and some of the historic towers. David's Tower is planned to be converted into a museum.

For many years Jerusalem has suffered for a lack of fresh water. With the exception of a small quantity brought into the city from the ancient pools of Solomon near Bethlehem, by means of a small pipe line, the inhabitants have been compelled to depend upon rainwater.

Now large reservoirs are to be built in the upper part of the valley of the Brook Shiloah at the springs of Ain Fariah and Ain Fouwar, where the water will be stored and piped into the city.

The Holy City has rapidly become westernized. The streets are sprinkled with modern tank wagons instead of with skins as was done until a year ago. A complete telephone system has been installed and the police department has been supplied with bicycles.

Modern farming machinery has replaced the old fashioned hand reapers in the nearby region and the orange groves are irrigated by water pumped with a power pump. At Jaffa the French are planning to build a harbor. Motor boats are in service on the Dead Sea, the Sea of Galilee and the Jordan, carrying both freight and passengers.

FREAK VEGETABLES USED

Memphis, Tenn.—C. F. Mason, a negro preacher, who is pastor of the Holiness Church, uses the rarest collection of freak vegetables ever gathered in his sermons to convince his congregation of the power of God and the truthfulness of the Good Book. These strange freaks of nature do more good than his sermons, the preacher declares.

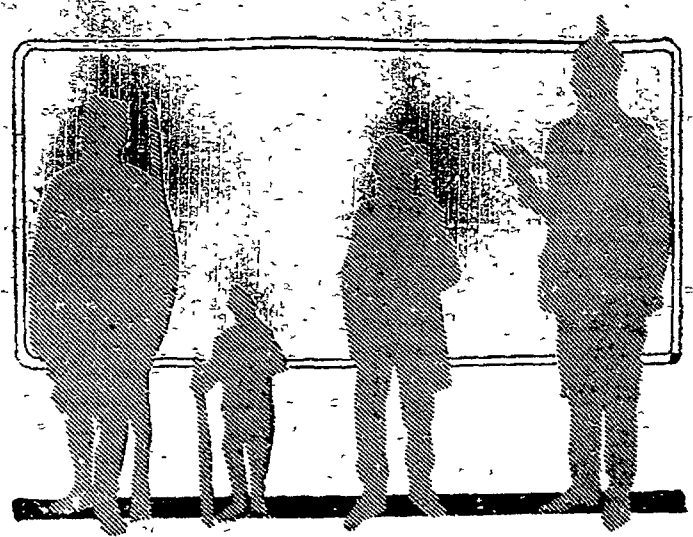

Five states contributed to the collection, any one of which would be a valuable asset to a dime museum. Mason has sweet potatoes closely resembling a coiled rattlesnake, a sea gull, a parrot, a strutting turkey, and two specimens resembling a duck. He has an Irish potato which closely resembles a hen and anokra pod which is the exact replica of a small green snake coiled. Most of the specimens came from Arkansas and Mississippi, Mason declares. Others were gathered in Virginia, Tennessee and Texas.

Besides his zoological collection Mason has a huge sweet potato shaped like a human heart. That he uses to convince his hearers of the necessity of keeping their hearts untroubled and unafraid. The snakes, the most remarkable freaks in the collection, are used in illustrating his "fire and brim" sermons. Mason did not state, but the fowls are doubtless used as a warning and the parrot in addresses before the "Ladies Aid."

The negro and his religion some times take strange turns. The interpretation to any astronomical disturbance is usually a harbinger of the world's end. Any unusual happening in the heavens is generally declared to presage a like calamity, but the freak vegetable idea is new.

DIAGRAM SHOWING COMPARATIVE OF THE ARMIES TO BE FIRST INVOLVED

RUSSIA SERBIA AUSTRIA GERMANY The Kind of Woman Men Admire

Of course, viewed from a standpoint of pure art, "a daughter of the gods, divinely tall and most divinely fair," has the gall over her abbreviated sister. The Gibson girl, the Fisher girl, the Christy girl, all of the various girls with whom we are familiar on the backs of magazines and in the Sunday supplements, would undoubtedly be about 7 feet high if they were translated into real life. Also, they all have a lean and hungry look which goes all right in a picture, but it is doubtful if any man would care for it in a lady love.

In this connection it is interesting to remark, that, in a previous age, when there was more marrying going on than there is now, and a lot more love making going, the popular ideal of feminine beauty was not the telephone pole woman of today, but the small, delicate woman that was just a good armful.

The immortal Shakespeare set the proper height of woman as just as high as a man's heart. Dickens made his Bella Wiffler, his Ruth Pinch, his Dora, his Dot, all of his most adorable women, not only short, but plump. All of Scott's heart smashers were little women. The big woman did great, heroic stunts, but it was the little woman that men loved. Thackeray's favorite heroines, even to Becky Sharp, were all small.

These great writers knew the hearts of men and they huddled on the fact that while men reverence and worship at the shrine of the tall, majestic woman, ninety-nine times out of a hundred, it is the cute, little, cunning woman, with kittenish ways, that can wrap them around her finger.

Of course there are many explanations of this phenomenon. The most obvious is that it flatters a man's vanity for a woman to look up to him physically as well as mentally. A man likes to feel that he is superior to his wife and it takes one with as much courage to marry a woman larger than he as it does for one to marry a woman that is more intelligent and better educated than he is.

A superior height, like a superior mind, is really a handicap rather than an advantage to a girl so far as getting married is concerned. If you will look about you you will see that the girls who have the most beaux, and the women who hold the matrimonial records, are nearly always small women with a very limited supply of brains.

Of course tall women are admired and do get married, mostly to very small men, but that is nature's effort to hold the balance steady and keep up the average height of the species, and by the same token and for the same reason the bigger man is the more the little woman appeals to him.

It is, however, absurd to claim that men, as a whole, especially admire either the short or the long type of woman, or that her height, unless she is a dwarf, has anything to do with a girl's chances of getting married. Cupid doesn't go about with a yard stick and whether a man falls in love with a young woman or not depends upon something much less tangible than her size.

Probably every man has a theory, before he meets her, that the divinity who will stir his pulses will look as if she had just dropped down from the top of Mount Olympus, just as every man imagines that he is a worshipper of beauty, and that no woman who wasn't a real, genuine, bonafide Venus could ever make his heart go pit-a-pat.

Yet in spite of this alleged devotion to beauty men continue to pick out as wives women who have no standing in the good looking class. In fact it is notorious that beautiful seldom make good marriages and that while men delight in burning incense before a living picture, when they want to get married they generally go off and pick out some lady in the chromo style of art to take home with them for keeps.

It must be a wonderful pleasure and solace to a woman to be tall, and slender and queenly in appearance and able to contemplate the reflection of her figure in every shop window she passes without getting heart failure; but her looks do not cut as much matrimonial ice as she supposes. Men may be drawn to her by her beauty at first, but they soon drift away unless she has some charm more potent than mere good looks with which to hold them.

Sympathy, comprehension, good nature, a willingness to amuse and be amused, all that we comprise in the cryptic phrase "winning ways"—these are a thousandfold more potent in securing the admiration of men than any height, or peaches of complexion. And in this is the gospel of hope for my short and sawed off correspondent. By taking thought, she cannot add one cubit to her stature, but she can cultivate a charm of manner and personality that would back the poor goddess of the beach.

DESERTS DON'T Baffle HOUNDS

Dogs, Not 2 Years Old, Follow Scent of Two Escaped Convicts, Leading to Their Capture.

Tucson, Ariz.—Three bloodhounds, not yet 2 years old, are disproving the old adage that "deserts can hold no secrets." Paul H. Cobb, captain of the convict camp near Bisbee, showed two prisoners while here, whom he was returning to the penitentiary at Florence as proof that the dogs can follow a trail despite dry Arizona sand and light Arizona air.

The two prisoners, George McDaniel and J. Espinosa, escaped from the convict camp and procured a good lead before they were missed. McDaniel was trailed first and was caught near Bisbee. In the meantime Espinosa made for the mountains, but the dogs followed the scent unerringly and chased him into a trap.

GIRL TEACHER PULLS TEETH OF HER PUPILS

School ma'am Takes Business From Dentists, Who Complain to Board of Education.

Blue Rapids, Kan.—Miss Frances Ross, a teacher in a primary grade in the public schools here, is setting an example which, if followed by other young women who teach youngsters, will drive the dentists of Kansas out of business, and probably the children from the schools.

During the present term of school Miss Ross has pulled more than fifty teeth that have bothered the children in their studies. The parents do not pay any attention to this condition and care of the children's teeth, and so the teacher has added that to her other duties. Primary teachers in Irving, Marysville, Frankfort and Waterville, too, have taken the liberty to examine the teeth of their pupils, and they are removing them when it is necessary.

Local dentists have made objections to some members of the school boards in these towns, and have complained that the primary teachers are encroaching upon their rights.

Miss Ross has removed fifty teeth from the mouth of the children here with her fingers. She says a pair of forceps are not necessary. When she gets hold of a tooth that cannot be removed with the fingers she uses a strand of very stout thread which she purchased for the purpose.

BRAISED BEEF—When selecting beef for braising, choose a thick, square piece from some of the cheaper cuts, such as the shoulder or cross rib. It should be first browned quickly in a little, suet melted in a pan, laid on a bed of sliced vegetables—preferably onions and carrots—such seasoning added as is desired and about a pint of either boiling stock, water, stewed tomato or brown gravy poured round. It is then closely covered and cooked in a moderate oven, allowing forty minutes to the pound.

MILLION DOLLAR MYSTERY DEEPENS

T. L. Ford.

"I did not know that the $1,096,300 had been diverted from the United Railroads' treasury to Mr. Calhoun," recently declared T. L. Ford, general counsel for the United Railroads of San Francisco, testifying before the California railroad commission.

The commission is endeavoring to trace the million dollars which Calhoun as president of the road was authorized by the stockholders to invest in the Solano Irrigated Farms, a California venture. The money was all lost.

IRRIGATION TO TEACH

Kansas Installs Windmills and Builds Reservoirs and All Accessories for Thousand Dollars.

Leoti, Kan.—The first State-owned experimental irrigation plant in Kansas, has been completed and is now in operation on the old Wichita County poor farm, which consists of 160 acres. The plant was established under the law enacted by the last Legislature, which appropriated $125,000 for experimental irrigation work.

The plan of the Leoti plant is a windmill proposition, six modern mills furnishing power and six four-inch cylinders, lifting the water seventy-four feet and throwing it into a reservoir, 100x150 feet in size and six feet deep. The reservoir is made of dirt. The soil to a depth of four inches is removed from the top of the ground and the banks made from dirt taken from adjacent land. The reservoir was thoroughly puddled by turning water into it, running a drag over it and allowing horses to tramp the earth. It holds water perfectly.

The cost of the plant complete was in round numbers $1,000. This includes all labor, as the State had to hire everything done. The settler who would make his own reservoir and work with his team on the wells and other parts of the plant could install one for considerably less. In a good breeze the pumps will throw somewhere from twenty to thirty-five gallons of water a minute each.

Windmills are used as power for several reasons, the first and principal one being that the test did not show enough water to operate a centrifugal pump. Secondly, the cost of operating windmills in practically nothing, there being no outlay for fuel or an engine. The item of repairs is another thing taken into consideration, being very small in the case of windmills. Also there is the assurance that the plant will be able to furnish water all the time, it not being likely that more than one or two mills will be out of repair at the same time.

The water is pumped into the reservoir until the latter is filled. The flood-gate is then opened and the water carried out over the fields. This is kept up throughout the year, even in winter. Winter irrigation is as beneficial and as necessary as that in summer. The best reservoir in the world is the subsoil itself. With the land thoroughly soaked in the spring there is little danger of crops being a failure during the summer. At least a crop is almost assured if it be possible to irrigate the growing crop once during the critical time of the growing season.

All expenses of operating the plant are borne by the State, the country's obligations costing the moment the land is deeded to the State. All crops produced are sold and the money turned over to the State Accurate account is kept of all things pertaining to the cost of putting the water on the land, producing and selling the crops, etc.

The State Board of Irrigation has caused to be installed two other windmill irrigation plants—one at Dighton, Lane County, and the other at Tribuna, Greeley County. Different makes of windmills, other kinds of pumps, etc., will be tried out at these plants. The idea of the law is to find out for the settlers the cheapest means of power, the most practical pumps and such other knowledge as is possible. The best and cheapest means of construction reservoirs is being tested.

The World's Disease. Mammonism is only an effect of which selfishness is the cause. Selfishness—the assertion of self against the law of the universe, self-gratification instead of the general good—that is the disease of the world, and we can never have social health until society is saved from selfishness.—Homiletic Review.

The Flea. Oh, there's nothing quite so maddening as a pesky, crawling flea, when the little cuss is biting in a spot you cannot see! Nothing which drives man or woman to the point where they will swear, like this hopping, frisky critter, when he's out upon a tear!—Los Angeles Express.

Men's Measurements. For the athletic type of man the average chest measurement is 39 inches, with the waist 34; while the motoring man, though shorter, demands a 36-inch waist.—Boston Globe.

Spread of German Language. In China there are regions where there are so many Germans that the native servants learn their language.

Fair Warning. "You are a likely looking chap," said the glib-tongued proprietor of the summer hotel, "and there are lots of pretty girls around here. Why not spend your time love-making?"

"I may," responded the young salesman on vacation, "but there is just one thing I wish to impress upon your mind."

"And what is that?"

"I am not one of those chaps who would rather make love than eat."

"I cannot say the war is popular in Hungary," Count Karolyi stated. "No country wants to be at war with its immediate neighbors. The present war is the result of the bad Balkan policy of Austria, which instead of making friends with the Balkan nations made enemies of them, and especially so in the case of Serbia."

Counting first and second generations and including Magyars, Slovaks, Bohemians, Slovians, Croats and Austrian Poles, there are 200,000 Austro-Hungarians in Cleveland.

WAR INVOLVES CLEVELAND.

Thousands Are Now Preparing to Leave.

Cosmopolitan Cleveland, with the country's greatest recent immigration from southern Europe, facing a crisis which involves more than half of her citizens, turns her face to the east and impatiently awaits the signal which will unleash the wardogs of a vast continent.

Thousands of Austro-Hungarian soldiers and patriotic Serbs, the war fever tingling in their veins, are packing up and standing ready to answer the call of country at a moment's notice as Europe stands on the brink of the greatest conflict since the Napoleonic wars.

Consulates, in direct communication with the embassies at Washington, D. C., seeth with excitement. Momentous messages cross the wires and plans are rushed to transport armies of fervent reservists and volunteers to New York and thence to the scene of hostilities.

Count Michael Karolyi, leader of the Hungarian Independent party, rose from a bed of sickness at a Cleveland hotel, canceled the remainder of his American speaking tour and wired to New York for a passage on the first steamer leaving for Europe.

Before leaving Cleveland for New York, Count Karolyi visited Lorain, O., where he had an engagement to talk on Hungary's struggle for liberty, but Hungary's fight for political emancipation pales into insignificance beside an issue which may devastate Europe and the count had purposed to speak on one topic which today grips the whole civilized universe.

Between 5,000 and 6,000 of these Hungarians are members of the first reserve of the Austro-Hungarian army, and John Illos, managing editor of Szabadsag, the most widely circulated Hungarian paper in the United States, estimates that over 6,000 Hungarians, and probably 400 to 500 Serbs living in Cleveland will leave to take up arms the moment war is declared.

THE COUNTRY BOYS' CREED

"We cannot do too much for the country boy and the country girl, they should stay on the farm and we must make them realize it is the best place to be," says G. W. Dickinson, Secretary-Manager of the Michigan State Fair. "Nowadays, with the telephone, the automobile, the rural free delivery and the centralized school, children in the country enjoy all the advantages of city children and they are not brought into constant contact with the evils of city life. Many young people think farming is just work, like ditch-digging. The State Fair School, which will be one of the features of this year's Fair, serves to correct this impression. The boys are taught that farming is as scientific and as highly organized as any business or profession and that a person can get to the top by it as quickly as by any other way."

"In every schoolhouse in Prince Edward County, Va., the following creed for the American country boy is posted: To me it puts the matter in a nutshell as I was brought up on the farm, and I would like to see the 'Country Boys' Creed' posted in every rural school in Michigan."

"I believe that the country which God made is more beautiful than the city which man made; that life out of doors and in touch with the earth is the natural life of man. I believe that work with nature is more inspiring than work with the most intricate machinery. I believe that the dignity of labor depends not on what you do, but how you do it; that opportunity comes to a boy on the farm as often as to a boy in the city; that life is larger and freer and happier on the farm than in the town; that my success depends not upon my location, but upon myself; not upon my dreams, but upon what I actually do; not upon luck but upon pluck. I believe in working when you work and playing when you play, and in giving and demanding a square deal in every act of life."

DOLLARS COME HOME TO ROOST.

Every farmer who makes our town his market place has an interest in this community. The fact that he is a member of the community makes much difference to him when he considers that the prosperity of our town is his own prosperity.

But when he sends his money to the mail order houses he does not stop to think that he is not helping to pay the required taxes in his own community; not that he does not pay his own legally assessed taxes, but that he is not helping our local merchant to pay the taxes necessary to support the community.

The mail order man has absolutely no interest in the community. He plays the part of a fisherman—strolling about, casting a line here and there, where he thinks the best fishing is to be found, and after pulling out the fish he departs. The mail order man does not contribute to the upkeep of the community. He merely takes away from it.

When a farmer sends his dollars to the mail order house he prevents a certain amount of improvements, say, for instance, in road building, here in our country. The mail order man does not help to build up, but the local storekeeper does.

If we keep the dollars at home they will keep on helping us all. Dollars spent at home, come home to roost. They come back in the upkeep of our town and county institutions. We have done too many dollars at the most in our community and it seems a shame to send any of them away to the mail order houses, where we will never see them again.

The dollars we send away helps the mail order man to take a vacation in Europe or at the seashore. They help him to maintain his automobile and to ride on paved roads.

If we keep these same dollars at home they will help us to have better roads in our own county. Of course the mail order man pays his taxes in the city, which helps to pave the streets of the city, but we here in our town don't benefit by that. Therefore, the best thing for us to do is keep our money at home, where it will do us some good.

Our local merchants will use the dollars to good advantage by helping to pay the taxes here—the taxes required to build good roads. Every dollar spent in our home own means improvements at home.

HADLEY'S FAME SOON GONE.

V O Lawrence, an Oakland business man, was talking to the Rotary club about advertising.

"If you want to get results you must advertise continually," he said. "The public forgets. Just to prove this to you, I will give a prize to any man here who can tell me off-hand who was President Taft's running mate at the last election. I'll venture there isn't a man here who can remember the name, although it was a household word with all of us at the time."

The speaker paused while the 100 men in the room pondered. Finally one said:

"Do you know yourself who it was?"

Lawrence laughed. "I do not," he admitted. "I intended to call up one of the newspapers to find out, but I forgot it."

The question remained unanswered.

Some complaint has come regarding the giving half the road in case of an automobile coming up behind a team. The parties claim that when they come up behind a fellow with a team he stubbornly refuses to give any of the road, no matter if there is plenty of room to turn out. Now the law recognizes the rights of both the man and the team and the man with the auto, and these rights should be respected. There are plenty of men who are running autos who should be driving on teams and vice versa, but all men should not be treated that way. The law says that when a man is overlooking the slower vehicle, the man driving the slower vehicle shall turn out and give half of the beaten path.

A statistician has figured that to raise a boy in the simplest way from babyhood to 18 years of age costs $4,000. If that is true, let the statistician figure out the problem of how a man who earns $150 a day rears four boys and three girls without begging, borrowing or stealing. And it has been done, is being done and will be done.

CLEAN ADVERTISING.

Oldsmobile Sales Manager Makes Plea for Constructive Methods.

"When you consider the keen rivalry that has always existed in the automobile business," said Mr. J. V. Hall, general sales manager of the Olds Motor Works, "it is gratifying to note how clean automobile advertising has always been kept. Seldom, if ever, do you see one company using the space it buys at considerable expense in attempting to belittle or detract from the value of a rival product. This attitude is not only highly commendable from an ethical standpoint, but it is sound business policy as well, for the public are naturally suspicious of the manufacturer who attempts to boost his own sales by attacking a successful competitor.

"The real salesman will always find it more profitable in the long run to put his time and effort into telling the story of his own product than to indulge in the questionable and dangerous tactics of attempting to tear down the reputation of his rival.

"The announcement of our new Oldsmobile Light Four, which sells at the remarkably low price of $1285, has naturally created a great deal of comment, especially among the makers of popular priced cars, for it means much to them to see a car that, on account of its recognized quality, has for years been classed among the higher priced automobiles, enter their field with such an astonishingly low price. One manufacturer evidently so far forgot the ethics of the business as to quote, however incorrectly, from our first announcement, in a way that would seem to indicate some disturbance of mind.

"In my opinion there is room enough in this country for so many different kinds of motor cars to find a ready sale that there is no necessity for any manufacturer to attempt to disparage the product of any rival, even if he could hope to profit by such tactics. Clean advertising has been, and will continue to be for many years to come, the foundation on which the successful sale of meritorious cars will be built."

RHODA'S SECRET

A Story of Love and Intrigue

By Sylvia Chester

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Rhoda Dering, daughter of the black sheep of a good English family, goes to England to be her cousin's governess.

CHAPTER II.

That February morning, so bright and sunny in Paris, was bitterly cold in England. The woods round Dering were white with snow, and large icicles hung from the tracery of the windows of the beautiful old house. It had a great marble terrace, with iron steps descending to the lawn. From this terrace the snow had been carefully swept, and some hardy shrubs, gay with berries, had been placed in groups on each side of the great windows.

Mrs. Dering's morning room was at the end of the terrace. It had two windows, one looking out upon the terrace, the other upon a rose garden enclosed by high box hedges, with a fountain in the middle. The upper part of each window was emblazoned with the Dering arms and crest. The same arms and crests were stamped upon the backs of the high leather-covered chairs and carved on the high oak chimney-piece. It was a severe looking room; but a spirit of disorder had entered there; that morning. The large armchair which regularly stood against the wall, had been dragged before the fire; a book lay open face downwards on the floor; some knitting was on the table, and the ball of wool had fallen upon the floor; where a white kitten was playing with it. A bunch of flowers had been thrown upon Mrs. Dering's writing-table and lay in a heap across the blotting book.

Mrs. Dering, entering from her daily interview with the housekeeper, raised her fine eyebrows as she caught sight of all these things. With a little indulgent smile on her stern face, which wonderfully softened it, she proceeded to put the room in order. Her task was still unfinished when there came a clatter of high heels on the stone terrace, a merry voice singing, "Two Lovely Black Eyes," in a high key, and Mrs. Dering turned to the window, trying to crown as she met the laughing glance of her daughter's blue eyes.

"Open the window, mother," cried the clear voice. "I am half frozen with cold! Quick!"

"My dear Mary, how often am I to say that I do not like that song!" said Mrs. Dering, as she unfrosted the window and admitted her daughter.

"That song—what song? Oh, I forgot! I heard Jack singing it just now, and I caught it up. Where is my knitting, mother?"

"I found it on the table and the wool in Kitty's clutches. You naughty child, what kind of a home will you have of your own I wonder?"

"Jack has brought me a puppy," said Mary, sitting down upon the hearth rug and picking up the kitten. "One of Bruno's—such a little beauty!"

"Is Jack here, then?"

"Yes, he's with father in the stables. He is going to stay till lunchtime."

"Adrian is coming,"

"Well, there will be enough for both," said the girl carelessly. She was a pretty girl, small and slender, with soft brown hair curling round her temples and with the merriest, sweetest blue eyes, which were sparkling with fun now as she glanced up at her mother; I wanted him to amuse me."

"My dear Mary!"

"Adrian does not like Jack, does he, mother?"

"Adrian naturally disapproves of him," returned Mrs. Dering, drily. Mary pulled her kitten's ears.

"Poor old Jack! We approve of him don't we, Kitty? Even if he did get plucked at Oxford and get into debt and into disgrace with his tutor. If I had gone to Oxford, mother, I should have been plucked too and got into debt and into disgrace with my tutor."

"I do not like to hear you talk so lightly," said Mrs. Dering gravely. "I should not like Adrian to hear you say such things."

Mary's eyes twinkled.

"Let me see—Adrian got a Trouble first, didn't he? But that must have been centuries ago!"

"Adrian is just thirty years of age," was Mrs. Dering's grave answer—"you know that as well as I do!"

"Thirty years younger than father! Mother, dear, confess now—shouldn't you believe that he was thirty years older?"

"You know how it pains me to hear you speak like this of Adrian, Mary," said Mrs. Dering with a little tremor in her voice. "It has pleased Heaven to give me no son of my own, and Dering must be Adrian's after your father's death. Your father and I are very proud of our heir."

"Oh, as heir to Dering I am proud of him too; but, as a companion, I prefer Jack!"

"You will have a companion in Rhoda now," said Mrs. Dering, smoothing back the curls from the white brow with a little sigh. "That is why we want Rhoda."

"Poor Rhoda—only wanted because of me! But I am going to be so fond of her! I wonder what she will be like, mother?"

"Millicent saw her mother once. I hope she will be like her mother, she was a very pretty, fair, gentle little thing."

Mary looked up with a serious expression of her face.

"Is Uncle Arthur very wicked?" she asked, in a low tone.

"Do not speak of him," said Mrs. Dering sharply. "Never mention him to Rhoda; I wish her to forget that she has a father living."

"She has not seen him for years, has she?"

"She has not lived with him. Do not speak about your uncle, Mary; he is the first Dering who has disgraced the name, and we wish to forget him." Mrs. Dering sat down at the writing-table and gathered up the flowers. "Take away your flowers, Mary."

"Oh, I forgot my pretty roses! They are for the luncheon table; I will go and arrange them." Mary rose and picked up the flowers. I will run away and leave you in peace, mother."

"Do not go into the stables, Mary." "I am going to change my frock and tidy my hair to do honor to the heir of Dering," the girl answered, with a gay laugh.

Mrs. Dering sat at her writing-table for a short time with a sheet of note paper before her; but she wrote nothing. Presently she got up and went out into the great hall and up the low wide stone stairs. She stopped at the first door in the west corridor, and after a low knock, opened it. A thick curtain was drawn over the door inside, and, raising this, she entered a little ante-room, where a pleasant-faced woman sat sewing by the fire.

"Is your mistress up, Stanton?"

"Yes, ma'am, she will be glad to see you."

Mrs. Dering went into the inner room. It was a beautiful room, with a bedroom beyond it. On a low couch by the fire lay Millicent Dering. A cross-colored curtain was drawn over the window behind her, and the soft light fell upon the rich, exquisitely draped draperies of her morning dress and set off the handsome outline of her pale cold face. She looked about twenty-eight or thirty in that light.

"Well, Millicent, I hope you are better," said Mrs. Dering abruptly, as she crossed the room.

Mrs. Dering raised her beautiful slender hand with a gesture of appeal.

"Will you speak more softly, Agnes?" she said in a low weary tone. "My head is still very bad."

Mrs. Dering sat down opposite to her, surveying her with a cool critical glance.

"Are you coming down to luncheon? We expect Adrian."

"Jack is here. I may as well prepare you, you know what it is when he and Molly and father are together."

Mrs. Dering raised her hands. "That's my dear again! Agnes I wonder at you!"

Mrs. Dering frowned.

"I do so know what to do. I cannot forbid him the house; his father is George's oldest friend."

"And his son is Mary's dearest friend."

"That is why I want Rhoda here," Mrs. Dering went on. "You know how opposed I was at first when George proposed it. George cannot forget that she is a Dering; but I do not look at it like that. I want her because she will be useful as companion to Mary."

"Will she be as amusing as Jack?"

"Miss Dering, in a meditative tone."

Mrs. Dering frowned again.

"I shall make Rhoda responsible for Molly's French and music. And George must talk to Jack; I will not have him here so often."

"I should like to make somebody else responsible altogether for Mary," Miss Dering said gently. "It is quite time that Adrian proposed to her."

"Molly is a child—a perfect child! She laughs at Adrian and hasn't a thought for the future."

"But Adrian should have. He quite understands what is expected of him, doesn't he?"

"Really, Millicent, one would think that we had threatened Adrian with disinheritance if he did not marry our Molly."

"The estate is entailed, isn't it?" said Miss Dering. "But I am sure Adrian means to marry Mary."

"You know how much I wish it—not because he will have Dering, but because he is what he is."

"Of course."

"Come down to luncheon, Millicent. They are always quiet when you are there."

"Won't Adrian be enough? He is sufficient to awe Jack, I am sure."

"But not Molly; Molly loves to defy him."

"They say that you ought to begin with a little aversion," said Mrs. Dering. "I will come down to luncheon. Let us hope that Rhoda will captivate Jack. That will be a simple way out of the difficulty."

"Rhoda and Mary will work hard together, and Jack will go back to Oxford, let us hope, and get his degree."

"I hope so. Molly won't care half so much for him when he is respectable."

"Boy and girl friends are such a mistake!" said Mrs. Dering, with a look of vexation. "Jack was such a bonny boy too! We were all so fond of him."

"You see Molly had no brother," said Miss Dering.

The remark brought a look of pain to the mother's face. It was the great trouble of her life that Molly had no brother.

"If Adrian and Mary would marry I should be satisfied," she said, gravely.

"And we should live happy ever after," returned Mrs. Dering, with a little sneer. "Go away now, Agnes, and leave me to get a little rest. I will come down to luncheon."

Mrs. Dering heard sounds of gay laughter and talk coming from the dining-room as she went downstairs. She walked quickly across the hall and opened the door sharply.

Molly's roses lay on the table beside the glass bowl she had brought to arrange them in; and Molly herself, with a black puppy in her arms, was standing on the hearthrug, and talking to Jack. Jack's broad shoulders were leaning against the oak mantelpiece, and he was looking down with laughing eyes at the little figure beside him.

"Don't I remember?" he was saying, when the door opened to admit Mrs. Dering. Both started, and Jack's face grew red.

"Don't scold me, Mrs. Dering," he said, with a smile that made Mrs. Dering's frown disappear despite herself. "I am going to a tutor to-morrow. This is my last day of laziness."

"I am glad to hear it," replied Mrs. Dering, trying to speak severely. "Molly, I thought you were going to arrange these roses."

"So I am. Look at my puppy, mother. Isn't he a pet? We are going to call him 'Bill'."

Mrs. Dering glanced coldly at the puppy.

"Arrange your roses, Mary; then I want you in my room. Mr. Matland will be able to find your father, I dare say."

She left the room, and Molly and the young man looked at each other with conscious faces.

"Mr. Matland!" repeated Molly, under her breath.

"Mr. Matland!" echoed Jack, with a rueful look. "Oh, Molly!"

Mary picked up her roses with one hand, hugging the puppy to her with the other. She pushed the flowers all into the bowl, which she placed in the middle of the table.

"Mr. Matland," she repeated again. Then she met Jack's glance and the faces of both turned scarlet.

"Molly, what shall I do?"

"Go away to your tutor's, my dear boy, get your degree, and then—then you will be Jack again."

"There's that Adrian—your mother adores him!" "Yes, she does."

"She hates me!" "That seems plain to an average intellect."

"Molly!"

She looked up at him and then kissed the puppy again. He came close to her, and his hand touched the soft hair about her brow.

"You don't hate me?" he said pleadingly.

"Isn't he a darling?" the girl said, holding up the puppy to him. "Kiss him, Jack, the darling pet!"

"Molly, just one word. I am going away to-morrow."

"Mr. Matland, I think you are very cruel to my pet!"

"You are very cruel to me!"

Molly looked up into the young man's face, and her own changed and softened as a warm wave of color passed over it.

"Not cruel, Jack; don't say that of your little Molly!"

"Are you my little Molly?" he said eagerly, bending down to her. But she drew away and went quickly to the door.

"I must go to mother," she said; "and you—Jack, must go and get your degree!"

The girl did not go straight to her mother's room; she went into her own little sanctum and sat down before the fire, then she put the puppy carefully into the softest chair and covered him with her prettiest antimacassar.

"Dear Jack!" she whispered to herself, as she patted her puppy's sleek head.

Left to himself, Jack stood some moments in silent contemplation; then with a look of decision that gave a new character to his face, he went out towards the stables. He found Mr. Dering still busy with the head groom and waited very patiently until he had finished and then walked with him towards the house. When they had entered the broad walk that led from the stables to the house, Jack stopped.

"Mr. Dering, I want to tell you—"

"Well, Jack?"

"You will be angry—I know you will be angry; but I cannot go away without telling you."

Mr. Dering looked wonderingly at the young man's pale face.

"Jack, you have got into debt again—broken your promise to your father."

"No—it's not that—I won't break that promise—it's nothing like that."

But I will make a clean breast of it, and you may forbid me the house if you will!"

"Go on; let's hear what it is."

"I love Molly, sir!"

Mr. Dering stepped back to the other side of the path; he did not speak, and Jack went on.

"I love her, sir, with all my heart and soul! I can't help it! Who could help loving Molly?"

"Does she know?" asked Mr. Dering, after a moment's pause.

"I don't know; yes, I do know. She must have guessed; but I never said anything till this morning."

"Well!"

"I didn't say anything plain, and she put me off. She said I must take my degree. Of course, I must. But, when that's over and I come back, I must speak to her!"

Mr. Dering shook his head.

"It won't do, Jack!"

"Why not, sir? I know I shall never be rich; but my father has enough, and I am his only child."

"It won't do, Jack," Mr. Dering repeated. "Molly is going to marry her cousin!"

Jack turned pale.

"It can't be true?"

"It has been arranged with Adrian for years," returned Mr. Dering. "Molly laughs at him. He is too old, too grave for her."

"Not at all. You and Molly are two children! Jack, and you must forget all this. Go away, my boy, and learn to forget it!"

"I am going away," Jack repeated with a dreary smile; "but I shall not forget it, and, when I come back, I shall do my best to win Molly, sir!"

"She and Adrian are meant for each other. Mrs. Dering will be shocked at this, Jack; she trusted you so!"

The young man drew himself up with a look of pride.

"I love Molly," he repeated firmly; "I have no reason to, feel ashamed! You have let us be friends together, and I love her. I mean to tell her so when I come back!"

"It won't do, Jack," repeated Mr. Dering, shaking his head; "Molly must marry Adrian! You were right to tell me, but you will see that it will not do. It would break Mrs. Dering's heart."

"I thought it right to tell you," Jack said, ignoring the last remark. "I will promise you that, and I won't come in to luncheon. Make my excuses to Mrs. Dering."

The young man shook hands and strode away. Dering looked after him with a fond look.

"But it won't do," he repeated, as he turned toward the house.

He went straight to his wife's room and found her speaking gravely to Molly, who was standing on the hearth rug, listening very demurely to her mother's speech.

"Run away, Molly," said Mr. Dering, sitting down upon one of the great oak armchairs by the fireplace. "I want to speak to your mother."

"Go and change your dress, Mary," said Mrs. Dering, "and get your hair done afresh."

"I shall look so neat that Adrian will ask to be introduced," the girl answered lightly. "Don't be cross any more, mother dear."

"I am not cross," replied Mrs. Dering, "only anxious that you should remember that you are no longer a child."

"I will be so good that you won't know me! Molly went lightly to the door and then turned round. 'I may invite Bill to luncheon, mayn't I?'"

"Bill—who is that?" said Mr. Dering, who had been watching his daughter's every movement with admiring eyes.

"My darling puppy—may he come?"

Mr. Dering laughed.

"Go away; and bring Bill if you like."

Molly shut the door and her father turned to Mrs. Dering.

"She's a perfect child still, isn't she?"

"I have been speaking to her about her childish ways. I am glad that Rhoda is coming. She wants a companion."

Mr. Dering moved uneasily in his chair.

"I have been talking to Jack," he said, with a troubled glance.

"To Jack? What have you been saying?"

"He has been speaking to me. He says he is in love with Molly."

Mr. Dering did not meet his wife's glance, but bent over the fire to arrange the logs. Mrs. Dering got up and crossed over to him.

"George, the boy must be mad! You told him it was out of the question, of course!"

"Yes, Agnes—I told him so."

"Well?"

"Well, the boy is in earnest. He has gone to his tutor's, but he intends to speak to Molly when he comes back."

"You must forbid it! Write to his father, George, and forbid it absolutely. Mary must marry Adrian. This must be put a stop to at once!"

And Mrs. Dering looked towards her writing table as if she would then and there write a final letter.

"My dear, you are not quite just about this. I do not want Molly to marry Jack, but what are we to do? I told him that it was out of the question. I told him it wouldn't do."

"I shall write to him!"

"No, Agnes," Mr. Dering spoke firmly. "He has gone to Oxford, and he will be away for three months or so. If in that time Adrian can win Molly, well, then, that will be all right!"

Mrs. Dering stood looking into the fire with a frowning brow and compressed lips. She completely ruled her husband in small matters, but she knew she must yield in this.

"Mary must marry Adrian," she said again with emphasis.

"That is what I want. But I will not have her forced into it, Agnes!"

"Jack is a boy. Molly cannot care for him. Adrian will find it easy to win her!"

Mr. Dering said nothing, but shook his head as his wife turned away.

CHAPTER III.

At Mr. Dering's request, Mrs. Amelle had sent two lay sisters with Rhoda as far as Calais. At Calais she was met by her uncle. As the train drew up at the platform she was looking out, expecting to see some tall dark man like her father. It was a great surprise when a somewhat short, burly, cheery little gentleman bustled up to her and held out his hands.

"I should have known you anywhere, my dear," he said warmly. "You are a thorough Dering. We have ever so many good likenesses of you at home in our picture gallery."

They had only just time to catch the boat, and Mr. Dering hurried his niece away, only giving her a few moments for a hasty farewell to her two companions.

"Very kind, good women they looked too," he said, referring to them when he and Rhoda were safe on the boat. "And they must be so fond of you, Rhoda. I'll bound you shed a good many tears last night. How many years have you been there?"

"Ever since my mother died," Rhoda answered steadily.

"I wish you had come to us before, but there were circumstances which I do not care to mention."

He looked at the girl uneasily. "Your father and I are not friends, Rhoda. You must not talk about him at Dering."

"I understand," she replied, and turned to hide the quiver of her lips. Her uncle patted her shoulder gently.

"I wouldn't say it to you if you knew him better, my dear. But he has not been a good man. Now you are coming home, my dear, and you will have a father and mother and a dear little sister, Heaven bless her!"

Rhoda's heart was swelling with wounded feelings, but she kept her voice steady as she asked:

"How old is your daughter?"

"Just eighteen. Three years younger than you are. But you look older, than you are, Rhoda. That is because you are dark!"

"And she is fair?"

"Blue eyes and light brown hair—a regular English beauty. You will see her this evening. She is prepared to love you dearly, and I want you to love her very much, Rhoda—to love us all. You are going home, remember. It will be as much your home as it is Molly's. You are my daughter now. You understand that, don't you, my dear?"

"Thank you," the girl said faintly. The warm tones the kindly looks only served to increase the feeling of misery at her heart. As she stood there watching the coast of France disappear in the cloudy distance, it was with difficulty that she prevented herself from telling her uncle all the truth. But her father's words were in her ears—"If they knew the truth, the doors of Dering will be shut to you for ever." And these words kept her silent.

It was quite dark when they reached Dering. The carriage was waiting for them at the station, and they drove quickly through long avenues of stately elms and limes that led to the house. Rhoda's uncle half lifted her out and led her up the steps.

"Welcome home, my dear!" he said, kissing her, as they reached the door. Then he led her in.

Rhoda had one glance at the great hall, with its glorious arched roof and panelled walls, and then two loving arms were clasped close round her, and Molly's sweet voice repeated her father's "Welcome home!"

Mrs. Dering waited at the drawing room to greet Rhoda.

"We are very glad to see you, Rhoda," she said in her kind firm tones.

The calmness of this greeting restored Rhoda's self-possession, which had nearly given away. She answered questions about the journey with perfect calmness, conscious that Mrs. Dering's eyes were surveying her with critical surprise.

Mrs. Dering turned to her husband when Molly had taken Rhoda away to her room.

"I had no idea that Rhoda would be like this," she said. "I expected a girl, a shy young girl."

"She is a perfect Dering!" returned Mr. Dering heartily. "She is exactly like that beautiful portrait of Prudence Dering in the hall."

"I do not see much likeness. Rhoda's eyes are gray."

"How quick you are to see that, Agnes!" said Mr. Dering admiringly. "I thought they were dark at first. She is beautiful and exactly like my poor brother Arthur."

"Do not mention his name!" Mrs. Dering returned sharply. "I hope we may never regret having Rhoda here."

"My dear Agnes, don't say such things! She is such a sweet girl. It is easy to see that she has never been out of a convent in her life."

"She has only been there since her mother's death."

NO REASON FOR IT

You Are Shown a Way Out.

There can be no reason why any reader of this who suffers the tortures of an aching back, the annoyance of urinary disorders, the pains and dangers of kidney ills will fail to heed the word of a resident of this locality who has found relief. The following is convincing proof.

Mrs. Lloyd Swarts, 802 Third St., Monroe, Mich., says: "For quite awhile I had been troubled by kidney weakness. My head ached, I had pains through my loins and was nervous and dizzy. When I stooped over, sharp pains darted through the small of my back. I saw Doan's Kidney Pills advertised and asked different people about them. Everyone said that they were good and I began taking them. They soon relieved me of the trouble. It is a pleasure to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills to anyone who has kidney trouble."

Price 50c. at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Swarts had. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

HOWELL, Mich.—Joseph Kirtland, 22 years old, of Sowerville, was drowned in Long Lake in 90 feet of water when he dove from a boat in the center of the lake, and after coming up once, sank.
He was alone and a good swimmer, and how he lost control of himself in the water is a mystery. Many people on the shore heard his cry for help as he came up the first time, and saw him sink, but he was so far out that when aid reached the empty boat he could not be found.
Kirtland came to Long lake with a party of Sunday school picnickers.

New officers with Charles S. Davis as president were elected and arrangements and funds provided to enlarge and remodel the offices in this city.

Sione for Postoffice Is on the Way.
Big Rapids.—The dressed stone for the postoffice building is now on its way to this city and is expected to reach here not later than Monday. This would seem to indicate that the work on the federal building, which has been delayed for some time, will begin at once. The people of this city have been considerably annoyed over the delay, many fearing that the structure would not be ready for occupancy before winter comes.

SAGINAW.—The army worm made its appearance in Saginaw county today. It was discovered on two farms in Bridgeport township, but the farmers are not worrying much about the present danger from the worm as the crops are nearly harvested.

HURRY HARVEST TO CHEAT WORMS

Farmers Near Owosso Have a Desperate Battle as Pest Appears.
Owosso, July.—The farmers of Hazelton, Venice and New Haven townships, Shiawassee county, are fighting a desperate battle with the army worm.

The worm was first noticed yesterday in the seven acre field of oats on the farm of George Harmon, in Hazelton. This morning Mr. Harmon and neighbors from miles around started cutting the oats, hoping to get them off the ground before the worm has devastated the crop.

WANTS FAIR GROUNDS USED MORE

Manager Dickinson, of the Michigan State Agricultural Society, has stated that he would favor more general use of the fair grounds than is now the case. Much money has been invested in the grounds and buildings and to simply use these for an occasional event is wasting a big opportunity. If special events, conventions, etc., could be held at the grounds during the year it would be a wise plan. Mr. Dickinson will gladly welcome any suggestions along this line.

Thick in Saginaw County.
Saginaw, Mich.—The army worm made its appearance in another part of Saginaw county today, when thousands were found on the farm of John Kessner, near Hemlock. They were in such large numbers that they could be shoveled from the roads and fields. The department of agriculture has taken steps to wipe out the pest before a stronger foothold is secured.

Gratiot County Loses Heavily.
Alma, Mich.—The army worm has been found in several places in Gratiot county out fields. Farmers all over the county are hurrying their oat harvest, but rains are hindering them greatly, giving the worm a good chance and causing a loss that will run well into the thousands.

MISSING EATON RAPIDS GIRL IS BROUGHT HOME

Father Finds Hazel Kidder in Racine, Clearing Up Mystery of Three Weeks.

NILES, Mich.—Ralph Kidder, of Eaton Rapids, arrived in Niles recently with his 15-year-old daughter Hazel, which solves another mystery case.

Kidder bought a ticket for his daughter at Kalamazoo three weeks ago to go to his mother's, who lives near Jonah, Cass county, the parents being separated.

The girl was placed on the train and that was the last seen or heard of her, except for a note received by Kidder, which the girl admitted she wrote herself, saying that it would be useless for him to hunt for her, as he would never find her.

Kidder heard she had gone to Racine, and without any definite clue he asked the first boy he met on the street if he knew of any such girl, and by a lucky chance, the boy gave him proper directions. The girl was working as a domestic.

MURDERS WIFE IN WINDOW

Woman Demonstrating Before Crowd Topples Over With Bullet in Heart.

DULUTH.—Martin C. Johnson, former proprietor of a cigar factory here but recently of Chicago, shot and killed his wife while she was demonstrating a corn cure in the show window of a drug store on West Superior street. Johnson ran with a crowd in pursuit and after a spectacular chase was captured by a teamster who knocked him down and disarmed him. Police rescued him from the crowd which seemed bent on lynching him. Johnson had forced his way into the store and commenced quarreling with her. The crowd outside watched the couple with interest. Then Johnson suddenly drawing a revolver fired point blank at the woman, who toppled over dead in the window with a bullet through her heart.

HOW TO READ.

Read, not to contradict and confute, nor to believe and take for granted, nor to find talk and discourse, but to weigh and consider. "Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested; that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously; and some few to be read wholly, and with diligence and attention. Some books, also, may be read by deputy, and extracts made of them by others, but that would be only in the less important arguments and the meaner sort of books; else distilled books are, like common distilled waters, flashy things. Reading maketh a full man; conference a ready man; and writing an exact man; and therefore, if a man write little he had need have a great memory; if he converse little, he had need have a present wit; and if he read little, he had need have much cunning, to seem to know that he doth not.—Francis Bacon.

ARTERIOSCLEROSIS.

After the laborious examination of the arteries of a number of mummies, the man who did the work says "the old Egyptians suffered as much as we do now from arterial lesions identical with those found at the present time. When we consider that few of the arteries examined were quite healthy it would appear that such lesions were quite as frequent 3000 years ago as they are today.

Why they should be frequent to-day medical science has not discovered. There have been guesses, otherwise hypotheses, but some of them are contradicted by the postmortems lately held on ancient Egyptians. Meat-eating cannot be the cause, as some have alleged, for the Egyptians were near-vegetarians. It cannot be tobacco, for the Egyptians had none. The lesions have been ascribed to muscular exercise. But some of the mummies examined were those of priests, not given to hard work, and yet their arteries were in bad shape.

THE HUMAN HEART.

High among the marvels, revealed more fully as science goes forward, ranks that machine which is called the human heart. Imagination and administration greet its mysterious efficiency. Consider what is called "the refractory phase"—what a startling self-protecting habit of the heart it is. The organ spends its life in a series of regular contractions and expansions, with separating pauses. If a stimulus, however powerful, is applied to the heart when it has already contracted, it refuses to respond. It is resting, and it must relax its appointed time. Were it not for this "refractory phase," almost any strong stimulus, coming at the time of contraction, would be fatal. Shakespeare, in a few phrases, has perhaps outdone other poets in praise of "the innocent sleep." "A balm of hurt minds." If we were Shakespeare we should spend a few strokes of genius in dramatizing the heart. Another of its qualities is shown in "the law of all or none." When the heart does contract, it contracts with all its might, regardless of the degree of stimulus applied. If a pin is stuck an inch into your nose, you jump further than if it pricks the skin; a cannon shot just behind your back startles you more than a pop-gun. Not so the heart. It responds to the slightest electric spark as completely as to a powerful current. When science, in the nineteenth century, was establishing its domination of the world, some feared the end of mystery, poetry, awe and wonder; but are not those qualities being fed with vaster materials than ever encouraged them before?—Collier's.

Wanted—Ideal Husband Standard

EVERY WOMAN CARRIES in her head a certain definite standard of perfection in the hang of a petticoat, the favoring of a plum pudding or the length of a social call, which never changes. She uses the yardstick, the scales, the measuring cup, and the hour glass, and is exact and to be depended upon in her ideals in every relation of life with one exception. Man! It is impossible for him to be so mixed and measured and weighed that he is today what she yesterday wanted him to be.

Do you deny it, sisters? Then gather around the platform and behold the two men there—Oscar C. Feullert, who is paying rent at No. 1527 Park avenue and can't get in, and James Eagle, who pays rent on an apartment at No. 499 West One Hundred and Thirty-fifth street, and for twenty-five hours couldn't get out. Both have wives, alas and alas again, and both wives agree on patterns for clothes and recipes for puddings, but one husband was locked out for trying to get in, and the other was tied in for trying to get out.

Sisters, you must get together and draw up a set of weights and measurements for ideal husbands before your changeable notions cause every man in the world to go spinning around and around like a mad dervish and, perhaps, if history were investigated with the fire tooth comb and microscope and every ending carefully investigated, it would be found that this changing standard of the ideal in man is what the dervish got mad about.

Any way, it is enough to make any man clap his hands to his head and begin to wail.

Oscar Feullert, who had been raised on the theory that to be an ideal husband a man must love his home, went to his home as regularly as his employer and the street cars would let him, and one day when he arrived there, filled to the brim with pride because he is a home-loving man, he found his key wouldn't fit the lock on the door of his apartment. This has happened to many a husband many times and at hours when their employers and the street railways were not to blame—but Feullert was not that kind of a husband. It was not his habit's that had changed, but the lock!

Mrs. Feullert had grown tired of having her husband come home faithfully and regularly and had changed the lock and refused to change his key. Perhaps in these days of untrammeled freedom for women, she had her rights, but how about him? He had lived up to what he believed was her ideal of a perfect husband and found when he had reached the heights that her ideal had changed!

The other man on the platform, sisters, is named James Eagle, and having such a name who but a woman could blame him for occasionally trying to soar? Like an ideal husband he told his wife of his intentions and never sneaked out of the house when she was absorbed in a novel or the looking glass, he always said to her boldly and, as he told the brave, "I am going out this evening," and perhaps, who knows, he may have given her a farewell peck on the lips, and urged her not to sit up for him!

At noon, Tuesday, he announced he was going out in the evening, and then took the nap so needful to those who occasionally stay out till the owls come home, and while he slept his wife grew very, very busy. She got out an injunction the length of the wash line, and she went around and around the doors of his room till she had him all bound round with a hemp rope, and when he awoke he couldn't get out, and for twenty-nine hours he couldn't get out. She didn't even grant him the privilege of postponing the little engagement that awaited him, she didn't give him a chance to be the perfect gentleman he desired to be. She kept him in and the clock hand went around and around and when it was eating time, she handed samples of her best cooking over the fanlight, and all that made her triumph less was that there were no women there to see.

She even refused to let their son call a policeman to rescue him, though he offered to give that son nine dollars. It was a splendid chance to lecture the boy on the crime of bribe-taking, and she improved it, and the hands of the clock went round some more. When the time came to liberate her bird of freedom she sent for an officer herself, and her husband walked out of their home and has not returned. And there they are! Look at them, sisters dear. Two victims of your feminine changeableness: One man wandering the earth because he can't get a key to fit the lock on his own door, and the other fleeing, always fleeing, with a spectre behind, and that spectre trailing a clothesline.

If Feullert and Eagle are tired of the humdrum business lives they lead, a great opportunity awaits them. They can appear in vaudeville as the Twin Victims (or Twin Victim suits Eagle just as well), and tell the sad story of what happens to man when he has become a husband. If the wives have grown weary of the round of beating eggs and rugs the lecture platform awaits them: Just why one husband failed to suit who wanted to come home, and the other failed to please because he wanted to leave it, will be interesting to students of human nature.

Who knows what great benefits might accrue? The woman whose pudding rises too high and the woman whose pudding falls flat finally agree on the exact amount of baking powder and a perfect pudding results.

The men are nothing more than the ingredients. It is the fault of the women with their varying notions about the measuring cup that makes the trouble.

Let them get together, and after bearing these two wives tell their story, agree on a standard for an ideal man.

DETROIT THEATRES

AT THE GAYETY

The Behman Show is making good this week at the Gayety, and in spite of warm weather, the crowds are in attendance. Producer Jack Singer has brought together a fine company headed by that popular comedian, Lew Kelley, who is given enthusiastic support by Laura Hayden, Lon Hascall and other principles, with a gingery beauty chorus that is fitted with costumes of the most elaborate sort. It is emphatically a show well worth seeing. The next Gayety attraction will be an entirely new production, the Strolling Players. This bid fair to be one of the strongest on the road. Among the principles will be seen Tony Kennedy, Harry Van, Wm. West, Hickman & Grey, Benton & Clark and Beulah Benton, always a great Detroit favorite. Manager Rhodes is catering to the ladies this year and the burlesque attractions are all such that any lady can attend without fear of being offended in the least. Special matinees are offered for ladies and are being well attended.

AT THE FOLLY

Redecorated and with many improvements the ever popular Folly Theatre, at the corner of Shelby and Lafayette streets, Detroit, is ready to welcome the "boys" on Aug. 5th. The opening show will be Hugh Shuttles' stellar attraction, The Folly Burlesques. This show has been in rehearsal for a long time, and advance reports are that it will be a real surprise. The principles include Tom Beeson, John A. Grant, Babe Rag, Lou Golden, Connie Lehr Fuller, Hazel Grant, Meehan & Pearl and a dandy chorus of sixteen. The scenic effects, costumes and entire production will be on a lavish scale. Manager Jimmy James, who will have charge of the house this season, states that the productions will all be the best procurable, booked thru the well known Columbia booking offices. Wm. Trueheart will be business manager of the Folly Burlesques, which will go on the road from Detroit with many good wishes, as the majority of the company are all old time Detroit favorites. Following the Folly Burlesques the Parisian Belles will show a week, starting Aug. 16th and then the Tango Queens will come Aug. 27. The Folly is a "stage" house and always well worth a visit when in Detroit.

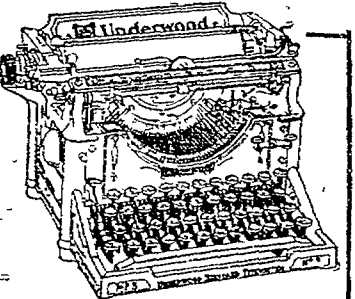

THE MICHIGAN STATE FAIR

On Sept. 7th-18th Detroit will have thousands of visitors, for on these days the biggest fair and carnival exhibition of the year will be offered by the Michigan State Agricultural Society. The free attractions will include some of the most daring aerial flights in aeroplanes, and balloons ever witnessed. The races will be of great importance, both horse and auto contests will be held. The fair will be open evenings, as well as during the day, and at night there will be a magnificent horse show. The Midway attraction will be on a higher plane than usual, for the management have secured one of America's foremost carnival companies, and this company will have supervision of the show. There will be more shows and surprises than the fair visitors have ever beheld. Interest in the Michigan Fair is wide-spread, many visitors will attend from surrounding states, and special plans have been arranged to care for the largely increased attendance that is bound to be present this fall on account of the greater magnificence and drawing power of the exhibitions.

The Traveling Men's Tale.

"I had a strange experience with an intoxicated man in a telegraph office down State the other day," says a traveling man. "Was in a hurry to send a message myself, but this fellow was leaning against the receiver's window as if he was camped there for the night. He muttered a lot of fool stuff to the man behind the screen, but I couldn't hear what it was. Finally I got impatient and shoved my message over his shoulder. At the same time I saw the scrawl this scound was endeavoring to get on the wire. It was addressed to somebody in New Orleans."

"He fumbled in his pocket, produced 62 cents in small change and started away. 'Hold on,' the clerk said, 'this isn't enough. It will cost you $1.40 to send this to New Orleans.' 'A right ol' man,' waved the intoxicated angrily, 'that's all I got with me right now. Just send it as far as you can fr'in' money!'—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

CHAUTAUQUA ACROSTIC

CHAUTAUQUA spells the biggest movement for uplift that our civilization has produced in a century. It also spells

HAPPINESS for all children under a hundred years of age.

ANY child is worth the investment of 75 cents for a season ticket covering the entire program of instruction, entertainment and healthful amusement.

UNTIL they have experienced the real thing many people do not know the difference between the Chautauqua and the show.

TAKE thought. Be at least a man, if not a booster, and don't let the committee have to ask you to take a ticket. Take ten or twenty. Sell them or give them away. It's an investment that pays real dividends to present a season ticket to one unable to buy.

ASK 1,500 towns in the Mississippi valley why they have lined up permanently with the Chautauqua movement in the past ten years.

UNDoubtedly they recognize that an institution which brings culture, instruction, amusement, business and a touch with the greatest and best minds that the big round world possesses, with no downward pull anywhere along the line, is to be liberally supported.

QUICKLY the man who considers the matter at all perceives that if such an institution costs the town many times the amount he must secure it. But, when it actually pays for itself and brings trade, nuf said.

USE your thinker. Be a Chautauqua booster. "Holler" loud and long. But also get in line with the public spirited, home loving, town boosting ticket sellers who are trying to make your town the center of advantages.

AT the cost of a few hours of real work, even at the cost of a few dollars of real money to a few of your real citizens, make up your mind that this wholly good and really enjoyable thing they call Chautauqua shall not fail in this man's town either with respect to its now coming or its future permanent staying.
