THE RECORD: NORTHVILLE, MICH., FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1914.

NOT TO SELL BY BIG VOTE

ELECTRIC LIGHT PLANT WILL BE RETAINED BY THE VILLAGE.

LARGE VOTE OUT AND STREETS STREWN WITH VOCAL ARGUMENTS.

NO, 225—YES, 106.

The proposition to sell the Northville electric light plant to the Edison company for $36,000 was defeated Monday by a very decisive vote. Evidently the people do not want to sell it. At least a big majority expressed it that way.

That being the case there ought to be some sort of a plan formulated to run the electric light plant in such a way as to assure its paying expenses or find a reason why it doesn't.

If, as has been asserted, the Plymouth electric light plant has been run so as to pay a profit for the village then in some way Northville might learn something from the experience and management of that town's lighting system.

Some of the business men and citizens of the village are advocating the hiring of an efficiency expert to go over the Northville plant and see where the "leaks" are and to formulate a plan, if one can be formulated, whereby it can be so managed that it will pay expenses, or at least come some where near it.

Others are also advocating a Commission term of government for the village. However that seems impossible as that form of government it is claimed, only applies to cities.

Monday's election has had one good effect anyhow. The people of last week up and set themselves to thinking and talking, and when people get interested and start thinking and talking, good is bound to result.

The Record believes that if the Northville plant is to continue to be run along the same lines as in the past then it was a mistake to not sell it. We shall be glad to learn of an early initiative movement inaugurated for the improvement of past and present conditions.

COMMUNITY CHURCH DAY NEXT SUNDAY

On Sunday, Sept. 20, Northville will observe its Second Annual Community Church Day. Special services will be held in every department of the churches, with a Union evening service in the Methodist church. Rev. Brooke H. all they can to insure a success. An immense banner, bearing the date and notice, has been strung across the Main street, special labels will be put on all milk bottles and finally, on Saturday from 11:30 to 12:30 all persons having a phone in residence or in office will be called up by the telephone operators, and invited to attend these services.

The Orpheograph will show Hearst-Seebe pictures of European war scenes, and the Orpheum orchestra will continue its half hour concerts at 2:00 p. m. and 7:00 p. m. before the afternoon and evening performances.

MASTER OF MANY TRADES IS PORTER

It is a well known saying that he who is "Jack of all trades is master of none," and also that "It is the exception that proves the rule." One of these exceptions to the first mentioned is a well known citizen of this village, M. A. Porter, in whom it would seem as if Northville may safely lay claim to the vernacular championship of Michigan, if not of the United States. There are many "Jacks of all trades" but very few of them could do, and do it more than ordinarily well, at that, as Mr. Porter can, the following list of vocations, in all of which he has, at some time or other, made good: Electrician, telephone expert, undertaker, photographer, furniture dealer, carpenter, commercial traveler, miller, plumber, painter, moulder, engine and boiler setting expert, machinist, tax expert, glassing firm, musician, bridge builder, competent work constructor, and practically a few other things, perhaps that do not come to mind at this time. In a few of the activities mentioned Mr. Porter may be a little out of practice just at present, and not much at that, but in the course of his business he has, at one time or another engaged in them all, and has made good in every instance. Who can beat it?

DEBIT AND CREDIT.

A Bit of Wit and a Bit of Wisdom Apropos of Unpaid Bills.

One of the most amiable men who ever dunned a delinquent debtor has condensed the argument of his calling into an epigram and pasted it on the back of his collection book. It reads:

MAN CAME FROM DUST—DUST SETTLES ARE YOU A MAN?

In one of the offices of the Department of Education, New York City, hangs a card which gives the other side of the philosophy of owing money. "There is something appalling," it says, "about the patience of our creditors."

Women Like Pockets.

"Talk about the small boy and his desire for plenty of pockets," remarked Harry New, manager of one of the biggest concerns in the city, or in the west, manufacturing women's garments, "no youngster with his first pair of trousers is half as excited about his pockets as is the average woman buying a cloak or suit. Within the last few years the question of pockets has come to be an important matter in women's garments. Women not only like pockets for carrying various small articles, but they can even like them so placed in their coats that they can walk with their hands in them, the same as a man. It's getting so that we manufacturers hardly dare put out a garment without paying attention first of all to the pocket feature."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

It is All a Matter of Taste.

A strange fact is told by travellers who declare that the Arabs in the desert of Africa have contracted a violent dislike to running water, and will only drink from stagnant pools when on journeys. This has become so much a matter of habit, that while the most poisonous-looking water agrees with them perfectly, pure running water will in a few hours make them violently sick. This prejudice against fresh water is common amongst the animals of the desert also, and is frequently acquired by European travellers. At first, however, when the latter drink of stagnant water it produces nausea and even fever, but when once the system becomes inured to it, running water affects them in precisely the same way as it affects the Arabs.

Her Answer.

An Atchison girl had a proposal of marriage Sunday night and asked a week to think it over. She went to all of her married sisters. One, who used to be a belle, had three children, did all her own work and hadn't been to the theatre or out riding since she was married. Another, whose husband was a promising young man at the time she was married, was supporting him. A third didn't dare say her life was her own when her husband was around, and a fourth was divorced. After visiting them and hearing their woes, the heroine of this little tale went home, got pen, ink and paper and wrote an answer to the young man. "You may think it was refusing him, but it wasn't. She said she could be ready in a month."

NEW KIND OF TRUNK.

Top Tray Slides Out at Side Instead of Lifting Out.

An improvement to the ordinary type of trunk has been designed by a Virginia man. The improvement consists in a top tray that slides out sideways instead of lifting out, as most of them do. The tray does not set down in the body of the trunk, but hangs on rollers along its bottom, and slides backward and forward in grooves along the top of the front and back of the trunk. The lid is deep enough to receive it, of course. The merits of such an arrangement will be readily apparent. When anything is desired from the bottom of the trunk, it is not necessary to lift the top tray, carry it to some other part of the room and carry it back again, but merely to slide it to one side. As heavy objects are seldom placed in the top tray, there is no great strain on the guideways. Another feature of this trunk is a shelf arrangement on the end, which ordinarily folds close to the body of the trunk, but which can be lowered and used in various ways.—Boston Post.

An Ancient Lizard.

The tuatara lizard found in New Zealand is one of the most ancient forms of animal life now found on earth. Originally this lizard possessed four eyes, but in the course of the ages it has lost one pair and must now get along with two. The tuatara lays eggs which are remarkable in that they require fourteen months to hatch, the embryo passing the winter in a state of hibernation.

These small survivors of past ages are found only in a few localities and are becoming very scarce, collectors from every part of the world being continually on their trail. They are about two feet in length, and in common with other lizards have the fortunate characteristic of being able to replace portions of their limbs or tails which have been destroyed. It is asserted that one of these lizards owned by a naturalist had the misfortune some time ago to lose an eye and that a complete new eye, perfect in every way, has grown in its place of the old one.—Harper's Weekly.

RATS WRECK CRIB, CORN FLOODS YARD

Six Thousand Bushels Spoiled Over Ground by Outrages of Rodent Pests Start War in Which Farmers Get a Card of Title.

Findlay, Ohio.—A cord of rat tails is proof of the vengeance of an outraged Hancock County townsman. The pile of tails, which is four feet wide, four feet high and eight feet long—as all rat cords are—was taken from 21,983 rats, and represents the rodents killed in a campaign conducted by farmers of one township against the innumerable and provoking pests of the barn, granary and cellar.

A farmer awoke one morning to find his crib of 6,000 bushels of corn scattered over his backyard because rats had chewed off the earlier ends, causing the crib with its load to collapse. He vowed vengeance. Another was induced to war when one rat caused $6 damage in twelve hours' time by entering the engine hood of an automobile and chewing off the soft copper wire cables and rubber hose water connections. Still another awakened to find sixteen of a flock of nine-toed ducks lying about with throats cut by rats.

These outrages and many others of similar nature caused the farmers of the township to organize in two parties, each trying to outdo the other in the number of rat tails collected. Armed with almost every conceivable weapon, they went forth in search of the enemy and with a will to dare and do. One man shredding his crop of corn from the field hired an extra employee at $2 a day just to catch rats. His day of greatest success produced 165 tails.

An army of men with bee-smokers attacked an afflicted corner and with candles blotted eighty seven rodents from the landscape as they sought to flee, terror-stricken and blinded by the smoky fumes forced into their retreat. Traps without number gathered in rodents from the buildings, and farmers in parties accompanied by terriers and mongrels, went from house to house to clear up on the rodents.

After the war was over, and the rats defeated and annihilated except in a few isolated outposts, the victors held a big oyster supper, the regiment having the least number of rat tail trophies to show being compelled to pay for the feast.

Unlike most wars this township's campaign was not a costly one for the farmers, either in killed or wounded, or in a monetary way. Instead, the farmers figure they profited by the battles for the Government estimates that one rat will do at least $1 worth of damage in a year. At this conservative figure the township saved $22,983 by the extermination of the rodents.

Diamond Industry.

The diamond industry which in 1908 suffered severely from the effect of the 1907 financial crisis in the United States, commenced to show decided improvement in the beginning of 1909. The rapidly increasing prosperity of the United States, which absorbs 60 per cent. of the diamond production of the world, caused renewed purchases, so that in the early spring all the diamond shops of Amsterdam were at work in full force to supply the demand. Conditions have steadily improved, and the trade prospects are exceptionally good.

200 SNAKES MAKE VOYAGE

The British Bark, in New York After One Hundred-and-Fifteen-Day Trip.

FIVE YAKS RUN AMUCK Lascars, Chinese Wed Hindu Crew Add to "Danger" by Fighting.

New York.—Two hundred "deadly East Indian snakes, overrunning the ship, five heat-crazed yaks doing everything but climb aloft and a crew of thirty-five Lascars, Hindus and Chinese threatening every minute to cut one another's throats—such was the combination which added ten years to the age of Capt. Grant of the Brilliant, a four-masted British bark.

The Brilliant is now in New York Harbor after a voyage of 115 days from Hongkong. She began to be just one strenuous minute after another almost before Victoria Island had faded over the horizon, the excitement continuing unabated until the Jersey coast was sighted. With the Brilliant safely secured to her pier in New York, Capt. Grant and his officers heard a sigh of relief which might have been heard a mile away. The captain's hair had turned gray and his weather-beaten features had several more wrinkles as a result of his experience.

The Brilliant, carrying Standard Oil stores, had an uneven voyage outward bound to Hongkong and Kobe. She carried an able crew of Swedes and Norwegians, but they tired of the long grind and deserted the ship between washes a few hours after the vessel dropped anchor in Kobe Harbor. With the holds filled with Japanese merchandise, Capt. Grant was compelled to sign a nondescript crew composed of no less than ten nationalities in order to man his vessel for the homeward bound trip to New York. He cleared at Kobe, stopped at Hogo, and made Hongkong in two weeks. The entire crew deserted at this port and the seamen signed at their place represented, said Capt. Grant, the scum of the far Eastern ports.

Squared away to the southward with the Straits of Sundae as the objective, the Brilliant became the theater for a series of events which made sleep a matter of three winks at a time for the officers. First of all his "seamen" had never seen any more experience than would be necessary to handle a rowboat. When most of the men were suffering from weakness and lying in their bunks a big Lascar deserted his post at the wheel and made for the forward hatchway like a streak of brown. Two seconds elapsed and he came up from below with the entire crew at his heels. If or well, they were in the cargo at one leap and all speculated wildly as they directed the attention of Capt. Grant to several suspicious objects on the deck.

Four boxes filled with coils and other poisonous reptiles had broken loose from their fastenings. Two hundred snakes had been given the liberty of the Brilliant. The Orientals would not go near the snakes, and Capt. Grant and his officers were compelled to kill them with clubs. Snakes appeared from hiding places. However, for three weeks after the boxes had been broken, and until the crew was sure that the last had been done away with they persisted in sleeping in the rigging. They had to make themselves fast with ropes during rough weather, but it was better than sleeping below, with the possibility of waking up and finding a full-grown cobra as a bed-fellow.

After passing through the Straits of Sundae the five yaks on board began showing signs of suffering from the heat. As the Brilliant hovered near the "line" they went crazy one by one. "They couldn't do it in a bunch," said Capt. Grant. They had to do it one at a time in order to prolong our voyage."

The snakes and the heat-crazed yaks had practically scared the crew out of their wits before the "line" was well to the stern. About the time the last yak had been killed and cast overboard the Lascars and the Chinese engaged in a pitched battle.

The Hindus and others took sides in the argument. Their fights were a daily feature until after the Cape had been rounded. Instead of trying to prevent trouble, knowing that any interference on his part would only complicate matters, Capt. Grant allowed them to fight it out among themselves. At times, however, the friction assumed a serious turn, when some of the men displayed knives. Although they never actually carried out their threats to cut each others' throats, the situation continued to be tense and called for the utmost diplomacy on the part of the officers.

When the Brilliant made fast in New York Harbor, Capt. Grant withdrew his servile lance with the remark that they could go as far as they like in marrying each others' countenances, but that he would teach each man hand and foot and cast him overboard if they so much as made a dent in the polished deck of the Brilliant.

HAS WEASEL'S BODY CLAWS LIKE CAT'S

Connersville, Ind.—Will Hanson and Fred Volz, are displaying a strange animal which they captured in a thick patch of brush north of the town. The animal is the size of a rat, with a body like a weasel, a head like a squirrel and claws longer and sharper than those of a house cat. It has thin, light brown hair, is very quiet and sleeps most of the time.

DETROIT THEATRES

AT THE CADILLAC.

Manager Levy has been making the Progressive Wheel in Detroit a winner this season. The Moulin Rouge Girls was one of those shows that hit the nail on the head, and in fact every show so far this season is more than worthy of commendation.

The Cadillac is a house well decorated, sanitary and in a location worth while. Every Detroit visitor should make it a point to take in the Cadillac shows—ladies' matinees at popular prices are featured each afternoon.

The Follies of Pleasure, the present attraction, is a bit risque and a very attractive bit—it is pulling in fine shape. The chorus is lively, well trained and there are numerous special features visitors won't care to miss. Taken all in all the Cadillac Burlesque House in Detroit is a winner and deserves all the patronage extended.

AT THE FOLLY.

Murrah, for Lulu Beeson seems to be the verdict of the visitors to the Folly this week. Sam Rice is some comedian with a droll lot of new bits that come across the footlights in no uncertain manner. The Folly is catering to the stag class, and while some of the material is rich and spicy, it is the sort that makes a hit with those who want the best in burlesque. Watson's Orientals is also one of the better burlesque shows and will make a drawing card. The Folly is spending a lot of trouble and money to come across with the right sort of shows and every day sees increased attendance at this popular house. Popular prices prevail for plays that please.

AT THE GAYETY.

Folks who like to be entertained in a wholesome and up-to-date manner should have their quota well satisfied when Sam Howe and his famous "Lovers" Company appears at the Gayety Theatre, Detroit, week of September 13, 1914. Probably no better equipped or more meritorious organization is now touring over the Columbia Circuit than this self-same aggregation. Taking it from any angle the troupe is a winner and should pay large audiences during its brief stay in town. The quality of the entertainment offered is a notch or two higher than the average theatre goes for expects in the burlesque firmament. The production is composed of able and competent funmakers, vocalists, dancers and budding femininity, who do ample justice to a rollicking musical comedy in two acts and four scenes, entitled "In Russia." In the way of scenic investiture and other essential details nothing is said to be lacking. Twenty-four wonderfully gowned and very shapely females comprise the big chorus, while Mr. Howe, who as in former seasons, will be seen in the leading male role, is capably supported by Countess Rossa, a prima donna of surpassing beauty and talent, Vera Desmond, Bessie Riesa, Adelaide Adair, Albert Marks, Wm. Wiant, Wm. Arnold, W. Webster, Joe Barrett and others.

THE BOY SCOUTS.

People who had never before been particularly interested in the Boy Scout movement, and also, perhaps some persons who had considered it merely a sort of game for the amusement of school boys, and even a few who had looked upon it as another new-fangled way of wasting "time," were certainly compelled to "sit up and take notice" during the recent G. A. R. meeting in Detroit.

From Maine to California people are still sounding the praises of Detroit's young citizen army that so gallantly supported and assisted the vanishing army of half a century ago, and who again demonstrated their efficiency during the State fair.

Two weeks ago the Record made mention of the condition of the Farmington crosswalks. The Enterprise replied last week by saying that "carpets would be spread when certain Northville people came over."

It seems strange, after the returning tourist has tipped the Pullman porter, that he slims out of sight without also seeing the conductor, baggage master, brakeman, engineer, pop-corn boy, and the president of the road.

All other churches are joining with us, and we expect that the larger majority of our townsmen will be at some church. Spread the news; get some one to come to church with you. Morning subject: "Message Bearers of the King."

In the evening, a great Union Mass Meeting in the Methodist church. There will be a choir of 50 voices that night. We expect Rev. Mr. Brook of Howell to address the people.

Next week we will open the churches on alternate nights for prayer. The first meeting of this sort will be held in the Presbyterian church, on Tuesday night at 7:30. These meetings will be held continuously until the time of the Tabernacle meetings in October.

The Queen Esther Circle will hold an International supper at the church next Thursday night from 5:30 to 7:00 o'clock. Remember the date, Thursday, Sept. 23. Price, 10 cents per plate; 25 cents per couple.

The Sunday morning service will be the last before the pastor goes to Conference. Because of this he is very anxious to have as many of the members present as can possibly come. Bring your company for that service.

The October committee of the Ladies' Aid are collecting paper. If any one has paper on hand, please notify Mrs. W. D. Stark by telephone or Mrs. N. I. Coll. Please attend to this at once.

The chorus which will sing at the evening service Sunday, are to meet in the church at 3 o'clock, for practice Sunday afternoon.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH NOTES. (By the Pastor.) Members of the church and congregation are reminded that next Sunday is to be the Second Annual Community Church Day. The subject of the morning will be "Specialized Living." Other churches will be crowded at the morning service and it is hoped that all will help to make it the same in the Presbyterian church. The Annual Rally of the Sunday school will be held immediately at the close of the morning service. The teachers have personally invited every member of their classes to be present and this, with others who will be present, gives promise of a banner attendance at the Sunday school. If it should happen that any have been overlooked let this be an invitation to be present. The C. E. society is making preparation for an enthusiastic meeting. A special program is being prepared for this service. All the young people urged to be present. The Union Mass meeting will be held in the evening in the M. E. church. There will be a chorus of fifty voices and the address will be delivered by the Rev. L. S. Brooke, pastor of the Howell Presbyterian church. Mr. Brooke is one of the ablest Presbyterian ministers in the state. Just now he is engaged in building a new sixty thousand dollar church. It will be worth while to hear him.

No one is supposed to prepare their own supper tonight (Friday) but to get it at the Presbyterian parlors. An excellent menu has been prepared and after the dinner Rev. W. G. Evans will speak on his work among the American Indians. Twenty-five cents pays the bill. Public welcome to both or either.

All who sing are requested to meet in the M. E. church Sunday afternoon at three o'clock to rehearse for the evening meeting.

Announcement has been received that the Pipe organ has been shipped and will be installed as soon as it arrives. Work will probably be begun during the first of the week.

The contract has also been let for the installation of an acousticon. Four of the instruments will be installed at first and others added when necessary.

Friends are requested to support the preliminary prayer meetings to be held in the churches during the two weeks preceding the "Tabernacle Meetings." More detailed notice later.

AN ADVERTISING MEDIUM.

Arthur Brisbane, who is said to be the most highly paid newspaper man in the world and whose genius is everywhere recognized understood the truth of this statement when he said:

"The local newspaper in proportion to its circulation is, in my opinion, infinitely the most valuable advertising medium we have. The value of the country newspaper is based largely upon the fact that the man who reads it looks upon it as a neighbor and friend, a personal acquaintance, and attaches to the printed statements and advertisements of the country newspaper far greater importance than the big city attaches to the statements and advertisements in the big city newspapers. As a friend talking to another about a certain kind of goods can influence a friend more than a stranger, so a country newspaper, standing on a footing of friendship with its readers can talk to them about goods for sale in any other topic and impress upon them more strongly than the big metropolitan newspaper, which is really a stranger."

Music by Heeneys' orchestra and by Guy and June Filkins were pleasing features of the occasion.

The Wayne Baptist association meets with the Plymouth Baptist church Wednesday and Thursday, Oct. 7 and 8. This annual meeting includes the churches of that denomination in Detroit, Howell, Brighton, Milford, Holly, Novi, Northville, Wayne and several other places. The Ladies' Library has recently received from Lansing a set of reports of the state geological and biological surveys of the past few years, making a valuable and interesting addition to the reference works of the library. The subjects include mineral deposits, birds, insects and aboriginal remains found in our state, and the books are accompanied by comprehensive maps.

Besides its "Milk Day" write up, the Milford Leader in last week's issue had accounts of five different reunions, local and at near-by places, in which Milford people participated. And then a lot of them went to the big G. A. R. meet in Detroit, near the top of the first prize for reunions; even in this season of unprecedented activity in the reunion business. It is planned by the Library board to permit every card holder who wishes to do so, to draw, each week, any book of reference, history, poetry, etc., desired, in addition to the book taken, as usual, on the card, without extra charge. This plan is in the hope of making the patrons better acquainted with the more solid reading matter of which the library has an excellent and varied supply. If the interest manifested seems to warrant it, the plan may be indefinitely continued.

Seven Northville Ladies were very delightfully entertained at a four-course luncheon Wednesday by Mrs. Cass R. Benton at the pleasant Benton home south of town, for the pleasure of her house guest, Miss Mary Power of Detroit. The table decorations were goldenrod, small sprays of which were on the unique place cards, on which the names of the guests were transcribed, causing considerable amusement in the translator. Miss Power returned to her home in Detroit Thursday.

In writing up the wedding of a prominent young lady of Northville recently the Record of that place says she now has the distinction of being the wife, daughter and sister of a clergyman. Don't exactly see how this can be accomplished—South Lyon Herald. It's easy enough if you are not too "pernickity" about it. She certainly couldn't very well be more'n one of either, as this is her first matrimonial venture. Her father is a Methodist preacher; her brother auto, her husband also. Sent du?

The streets and crosswalks of the village are now in excellent condition, and Street Commissioner Cochran, is certainly to be congratulated on the practical success he has attained in the laying out and supervision of the work. The crosswalks especially, were never in better shape. Mr. Cochran says that later in the season all gutters and sewer basins are to be cleaned out and kept clean so that in the event of heavy fall rains the surplus water can be carried off without overflow. The sides of the streets are littered with dirt and scraps of paper and it seems a problem as to whose duty it is to clean that up.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS.

J. D. Thompson is the new night operator in the telephone office, Russell-Stewart having resigned. Regular meeting of Orient Chapter, No. 77, O. E. S., this, Friday evening, Sept. 18. A special musical program will follow the regular meeting. W. L. Cook has a very complete tire vulcanizing shop and is doing some very clever work along that line. Shops and work in the big cities have nothing on him in this respect.

One of Northville's well known manufacturers, Jas. A. Dubuar, suggests that it would now be an opportune time to hire some young hustling business man, or a man with business experience, to systematize Northville's electric light plant and to superintend and manage it in such a way as will make it pay or find out the reason why. Mr. Dubuar's suggestion coincides with that of a large majority of Northville's citizens and the council might well give some such a plan consideration. It is believed that there is talent which can be found in our own village equal to the task.

T. G. has a new idea that will be appreciated by the dairymen of the state. It is to prevent the fooling of the cowsens to the proper time to be milked. The idea came to T. G. on Tuesday of this week while he was feeding corn stalks into the ensilage cutter. At the proper mixture, time he fed his nice gold watch, and chain into the machine and it is now thoroughly mixed in the silo with other milk requisites and the mixture, T. G. figures, is so thorough and accurate that as it is fed to his herd of Holsteins each animal will have a nice little watch attached to her system so that the will have the milking hour always with her.

W. R. C. NOTES. Regular meeting next Wednesday evening. Our Corps is to be honored this year by having its annual inspection conducted by the Department at President, Mrs. Anna Bailey of Detroit. A practice meeting was held in the hall Thursday afternoon. The members of the Corps have been invited to attend the meeting of the Post next Saturday afternoon after they will be entertained with a program provided by the "old boys."

It is expected that the next social afternoon and supper will be held on Thursday afternoon, Sept. 24, at the home of Mrs. John Walker on Cadz street. W. C. T. U. NOTES. A goodly number responded to the regular meeting call of W. C. T. AT BIG LOON POST

By George Van Schaick

Copyrighted

Author of "Fearth of the North," "Ishmael of Grand Lae," Etc., Etc.

Synopsis

Dover Curran, agent of the Hudson Bay Company's Big Loon Post, is about to start back there with supplies. He learns that Lorimer, an Englishman, and his assistant has just married Ameon, an Indian. He sees the death notice of Lorimer's wealthy uncle, and reads a letter just arrived for Lorimer that he has an interest in the will. Curran reasons that if Lorimer should die, the money would be his wife's, then he could marry her himself and get it.

CHAPTER II

Curran's right-hand man is Mashkaugan, an escaped convict rescued by Curran. This is a hunchback of great strength and very superstitious. They both hate Lorimer.

"Let me see," he said, after he had added the date. "I have no doubt that this will be all right, though I don't know much about such things. But it must be witnessed, and if the witnesses should ever be needed they'll be hard to get at. I think I'd better ask every man here who can scratch his name, then they'll always be able to find some of them."

Among the Canadian voyageurs Clairay and half a dozen others were able to affix their signatures after a fashion. Mashkaugan blinny said he could not write, which was untrue, but Curran affixed his name at the bottom of the page with a fine flourish.

"Looks like quite a document," he commented. "I don't expect any one will ever be able to go back on that. It looks coppers-bottomed and riveted and clinched on the inside."

"I'm sure I hope so," declared Lorimer earnestly. "I think it will be better for you to keep it for her. She might not realize its importance."

"Just as you say. It's only a kind of a fool thing, anyway, and won't ever be needed," said Curran lightly.

"You keep it with the books," said Lorimer hurriedly. "I've wasted a good deal of time and ought to be on my way."

They returned to the landing once more, where Lorimer had to shake hands and receive good wishes. Then the young man entered the canoe, taking the bow, and dipped his new apruce saddle in the stream.

Mashkaugan jumped in the stern, lithe as a great cat, justly shaking one foot that had been in the water for every drop and every grain of sand that lodged between the ribs increases weight on the portage. After a hard month's usage a canoe may increase ten pounds in weight or more.

Lorimer and Mashkaugan turned when they had reached the middle of the current and waved their caps. Ameon remained on the bank even after the boat had disappeared around the point. The Indian was not to be seen until he came to the work of sympathy for the white man. She was the only one about the river who had not heard of her husband's death. She might have been a ghost, but she was not.

The young wife turned to the post and began to pack up the things she had brought with her. Her belongings and the things she had packed in the canoe were all packed in the canoe. Curran had been back in the room, which was separate from the dwelling, but returned in time to see Ameon carrying out the last article.

"Under what name is it?" he commented. "Looks as if she was robbing the house and taking everything out to that old rascal, her father."

He walked over to the tent and waved until Ameon came out again. "Why didn't you get Cyren to help you?" he asked.

"It was not much," she answered, looking straight into his eyes. "Only my blankets and my clothes for now I live in my father's tent until Yellow Hair, my husband, comes back to me."

"What do you want to do that for?" he asked sharply.

"Eshi lakala (antagonists), she replied softly in the words that signified it was the custom of her people. "You know you can always have all the grub you want from the store," he said, trying to speak pleasantly. "I'll look after you all right. Come to me for anything you want."

"I know what I may take," she answered quietly. "Uapishu has given me the full tale of what I may take."

Posts that had been very prosperous were deserted with remarkable suddenness, having been abandoned by trading Indians for gausses that might appear absolutely futile. The mere statement by some buck that the white man was locking up his goods because he feared that some one was a thief might have sufficed to send them all away.

On every possible occasion Curran did his best to be as courteous as possible to the young woman; but for days at a time she seldom appeared, remaining within the tent, which he could not enter without invitation from the old man—or disappearing into the woods to snare rabbits, or partridges, or gather herbs for sickness.

Often he came and sat with old Nimissuts on a big log that had been rolled close to the camp-fire before the tent, and asked the ancient chief to share his plug of tobacco, which was used and gravely returned. The old man was sparing of words. He gave brief answers to all questions, while his seamed face remained like a graven image.

As the days wore on the agent began to get nervous. At times he watched the river intently for some minutes as if he expected an arrival. For a week or two the trading had kept him busy, as new families came in, but finally they were all accounted for.

The long haggings were somewhat ruffled by his temper, which was none too good. He had some well-filled days when the brigades were sent off, but afterward the time began to drag heavily for him.

"What do you know of the country of the Utsuk, where Yellow Hair has gone?" he asked Nimissuts one day.

"I know it well, as thou dost," replied the old man. "One river of Nukumeshu has good country where there is fur, but the other two go into waste places where there is little game, where it is more easy for men to die than to live. But the white men surely know their own schemes best."

"Under if the old devil suspects anything?" Curran asked himself on his return to the post.

That he went into his own room and diluted a little pure alcohol with water and drank alone.

CHAPTER V

Foul Play

After a few days, when the distress of parting with Ameon had least some of its keenness, Lorimer began to obtain some enjoyment from his trip. It was a change from the routine of a post. There was the constant delight of seeing new places, of camping each night in a different spot, of the long days of paddling up rivers whose every winding revealed fresh beauties.

As they went on they quickly investigated tracks of game on the shore, and the shore, for their kind of security was of importance.

but soon the tactfulness of his companion became tiresome. Hardly a word came from him except a brief answer to questions. Lorimer took a keen interest in the folk-lore of the Indians.

He often tried to get information from Mashkaugan, but the mere mention of beliefs and superstitions of the savages caused the hunchback to withdraw further into his shell. It made the voyager uneasy.

One day they reached a place known as the White Rapids, where the river descended rapidly for several hundred yards before engulfing itself in the chasm of a granite hill. Just beyond the canyon it leaped fiercely into a foam-flanking pool where great rocks overhung the water.

"A fine place, this, for the windigos and their devils to gather and plan presents for the spirits of departed men," said Lorimer, standing on a shelf of rock, somewhat awed by the majesty and grandeur of the spectacle.

Mashkaugan actually shivered. "One must not speak of such things in a place like this," he answered uneasily.

The young man looked at him in some surprise. It had become evident that the stream or white blood in the man had not prevented him from remaining under the influence of the superstition that prevails among northern Indians.

They hastened over the portage and resumed their journey. Lorimer was wise enough to allow Mashkaugan to decide every course of action. He was an experienced voyager, quick and strong of body, with splendid ability to meet every one of the problems constantly presented by travel in the wilderness.

Lorimer, also of sturdy body, and possessed of a keen intelligence, had been quick to grasp all the essentials, but he recognized that in the woods the hunchback was his master.

would leap into dead water again and they would float, while the alders, birches and dark fire appeared to rush by them like things endowed with life.

At all times the stroke of the paddle astern was timed to a second or the drive of the iron-shod pole quickly averted impending disaster.

"Traveling with you is a liberal education," he once told the voyager or after they had passed a particularly dangerous place.

But Mashkaugan only grunted, having failed perhaps to grasp the sense of the words, and paddled on with great driving strokes which he could keep up long after Lorimer's arms were aching.

"It would be hard going for a brigade," remarked Lorimer, at the boiling of a noontime kettle of tea.

"Indians come this way with pelts. Not so very bad," replied Mashkaugan, shrugging his shoulders.

Finally they reached Nukumeshu Lake. It was like a small inland sea.

They were held at the outlet by the wind, as the waves were dangerous and the storm-blasts, alternating with pelting squalls of rain, could not be affronted.

It was their first day in idleness, for they had not rested on Sundays. They spent it in making needed repairs to their clothes. Toward nightfall, when the rain had ceased, they carefully attended to a few small leaks in the canoe, drying the bark with a torch of birch bark, for the melted gum will not stick to a wet surface.

It proved to be a long day. The half-breed could hardly be made to talk, and Lorimer's thoughts reverted to "Ishmael Post" and the woman who was waiting for him.

The reflection of the immense sheet of water, whose further shores were invisible, the sodden moisture of everything, the growing chilliness of damp bodies conspired to dull Lorimer's mind until he became conscious of a sense of distress.

From time to time, as he looked at his companion, he found Mashkaugan's eyes fixed upon him strangely; but whenever this happened Mashkaugan would look away, apparently unperceived, and scan the raging waters of the lake through the opening of the tent.

But on the next day the sun was shining brightly again, and great fluffy clouds journeyed peacefully while the waters rippled peacefully on the gravel of the shore.

They left the outlet and paddled to the northern shore of the lake. Toward evening they arrived at an encampment of Indians and remained with them for the night.

As they set about the cheerful fires before the tents, Lorimer questioned the men carefully.

A tall youth showed surprise when Lorimer announced his intention of exploring the river, but the older ones merely nodded, saying nothing, for they believed that white men were apt to be foolish or else were ever searching for rocks and other things that were of no concern to sensible people.

Lorimer sought his tent and blankets early, but Mashkaugan remained up late with the Indians, who were only too glad to talk long to one who had not arrived.

"What is in the mind of the white man I know not," he said negligently in answer to some questions. "Nev'er do I care, for my time is paid and we have plenty of food with us."

"We do not like those other rivers," said a very old man, shaking his head. "Our ancestors have told of evil things upon their waters."

Mashkaugan appeared to be startled at the information.

"Of course, now I must go and look for myself," he cogitated. "One can never be altogether certain that these fellows are saying one straight talk. Yet I don't see how there can be any Indians lying up the river to the east or these people would know about them. Of course they're always scared at the mention of dribes they're not acquainted with; but they don't even give me some cock-and-bull story about bad people living somewhere in that direction."

Five days were enough to explore the northern river. It proved to be fine ground, but it was all carefully trapped over until it ended in tiny streams issuing from great marshlands.

The first eastern river only took four days to explore. It soon proved to be a fine river.

The remaining stream flowing into the lake not more than a mile from the inlet of the previous one, at first promised fair travel; but nowhere on the banks could they discover any trace of Indians.

After some days they came to a long canon walled in by cliffs of the great height, where the waters narrowed into a seething torrent, which made navigation impossible. They made a long, hard portage, but at only brought them onto a barren land where trees were dwarfed and great tracts of gray moss, edged by rank, sour grasses, extended beyond their vision.

For several days they progressed noting a few old tracks of caribou, although they saw none of the animals. Wild fowl were plentiful, and they shot some geese and ducks.

But soon Lorimer was compelled to acknowledge that the outlook was hopeless and they started back.

"It has been a wild goose chase for fair," Lorimer told Mashkaugan. "Still, I'm glad enough to have seen all this country."

As they retraced their way the going was easier. The provisions were gradually diminishing, and the canoe rode lightly on the water, while the portage could be passed over more rapidly. They again took what seemed to be desperate chances in boiling rapids, but always went through them in safety.

They crossed the big lake again. It was a long journey. The frail craft could not be trusted far from land. Big squalls came up very suddenly and compelled them to follow the shore and cut across from point to point when the water was calm enough.

Finally they reached the outlet of the big lake. They were obliged to halt for one day while a gale abated. Lorimer felt more contented now than at any time since the beginning of the trip. Was he not going back to the cherished woman he had learned to love so dearly? The flood bore them so swiftly that in three hours they covered a distance that had taken a long day on the upward trip.

Lorimer for some time had been conscious that Mashkaugan was watching him in a strange way. Over rapids and in dangerous places the half-breed would hesitate at times, as if he had lost some of his nerve.

One day, in camp, the hunchback had taken up Lorimer's gun and had cleaned it with a gray rag, but when the young man changed to look at him he had an uncomfortable feeling that the Indian was staring at him strangely, and that some queer notion possessed his mind.

Mashkaugan put the gun aside quite suddenly and buried himself with the making of batter for flapjacks.

It was on the day after this that they reached the great White Rapids again. They took a part of it at tremendous speed but stopped in a bit of dead water above the place where the narrowing river seemed to rest for an instant before it entered the chasm and took a thirty-foot leap into the turmoil below.

Here they landed on a great flat rock and unloaded. Mashkaugan found a small leak in the canoe and built a tiny fire to heat some gum.

When everything was ready Mashkaugan lit his pipe. His hands were somewhat unsteady. Lorimer made up his pack, which consisted of his own war-bag and a partly filled fifty-pound bag of flour.

"Leave that behind," granted Mashkaugan. "I come back for it."

But Lorimer had already swung the load to his forehead.

For a second before taking the long stride, Lorimer stopped to assure himself of his balance.

At this moment, just as he began to move, the point of the canoe that was born on the great shoulders of the half-breed touched his left side very lightly, yet hard enough to push him slightly to the right.

Lorimer staggered and clutched at the air helplessly. With a cry that was unheard he pitched down thirty feet into the chasm beneath.

Mashkaugan stepped back quickly and laid the canoe on the rocky shelf.

Then he hurried forward and glared into the foaming waters.

For a moment he saw a ghastly, distorted face struggling in the flood; then a body helplessly rolled between rocky spurs.

But now there remained no trace of any man; yet the half-breed searched the foot of the cliffs with eager, staring eyes, and peered through the sudding foam at the bottom of the fall, over the frothy black waters of the pool, and along the rugged sides that were deeply worn by uncounted ages of whirling flood and grinding ice.

He did not see the slightest sign of Lorimer!

Mashkaugan then sat down and with trembling hands tried to cut tobacco for his pipe. But he put it in his pocket again, and passed his sleeve over his forehead, streaming with sweat.

He shivered like one with some malignant ague. He could not remain in that spot for suddenly it seemed to him as if out of the roar of the crashing water there burst forth voices that were calling him a murderer and swore vengeance everlasting upon him!

In a frenzy of haste he carried the canoe to the end of the portage. Dreading the sight of the raging waters, he took a long detour over the cliffs for the remainder of his load, and returned the same way, clambering with catlike ease over some awful going.

Yet when he came to a place where the walking was easy he began to stagger like a drunken man.

He put the canoe back in the water and loaded it in desperate haste. After he entered it the swift current bore him very fast, yet his long, sinewy arms plied the paddle as fiercely as if some gruesome thing were following him.

As he went on he scanned the surface of the water, fearing to see an awful, upturned white face that might reproach him and hover above his canoe while he journeyed.

Until after sundown he drove the canoe with utter recklessness into the middle of boiling waters, yet always emerging safely; but in the long dead waters there was no excitement. The wind had fallen, and the stillness of the dark forest seemed to penetrate his soul with terror.

It was so late and dark when he stopped that he was unable to pick out a fair camping place.

He lighted a tiny fire on poor ground full of rocks and stones and goid his tea, but when he tried to eat the morsels seemed to cleave to the roof of his mouth. The scalding drink alone was grateful!

He did not try to put up his tent—merely rolling himself in his blankets; but sleep would not come.

His evil deeds had hitherto been limited to various pilferings and the breaking of laws which he considered unjust. The promises and the threats of Curran, and the dislike he had for Lorimer, made him a ready tool in the hands of the chief agent.

ting?" asked the chief agent mockingly.

"This is the day of the feast of the birth of the son of Lorimer Yellow Hair," answered the old fellow. "Indeed, it is a son, strong and lusty, according to the old women. The dawn upon his head is of golden color. He sleeps now as does any child. Never have I seen a child more sturdy in limb. Doubtless he will grow to be as I was during the days of my youth, when I bore two bags of flour and a three fathom canoe over Long Portage, without resting and returned for another load."

"Art thou not afraid to boast so much, old man," asked Curran wickedly, "lest the evil spirits overhear thee and play their pranks upon thee or upon the child?"

The chief looked scared. He believed in this sort of thing.

"Indeed, I was not boasting as to the little one," he said. "I repeated that which the old women told me, and spoke only of things I once could do and never will be able to do again. A man may surely be glad to have seen the son of his own daughter, who is a stronger bond between her and Yellow Hair."

Nevertheless, the old man returned to his tent and donned his old clothes. The rest of the day he moved in a manner that was quite subdued.

But Curran returned to the post and thought deeply, biting at the stem of his empty pipe as if his strong jaws were eager to destroy something.

"The will is in my own hands," he said; "but if anything has happened to Lorimer, this child is now the heir, will or no will. I suppose that a court would appoint guardians for him, so that I might not have the handling of much of the money, even if I married Ameon. Now to get rid of the brat!"

He had already thought much about this complication in his original plan. One crime that he had planned was by this time probably carried out. Another would have to follow.

Curran took his gun and went into the woods toward the Long Barrens, where, at this season, there might chance to come across a caribou. He only managed to miss an easy shot at a young stag, and returned in a dark mood as restless as ever.

Father Gregoire, the missionary, who intended to winter in the North that year, arrived next morning.

"I have a letter for you and a couple for Lorimer," he said. "They were glad at Big Rat to have a chance of sending them on by me."

Curran only obtained them after the old man had conducted a long search through his pack. The agent stood by him so anxious that he dug his finger nails into the palms of his hands. The venerable priest made his way to the tent of Nimissuts, rejoicing at the opportunity of adding to his list.

Rut Curran rushed into the post and shut himself in his room. His own letter bore the name of a firm of lawyers in Quebec. He opened it with fingers that shook with excitement. As he read it his eyes glistened with an evil light.

Dear Sir: Pursuant to your instructions we have caused a search to be made of the will of the late Sir John Conway Lorimer, of which a true copy is herewith inclosed. You will see that by its terms a number of charitable bequests are made, the balance of the estate being left to a relative—one Lawrence Alston Lorimer. This balance is estimated at a value of seventy thousand pounds sterling.

Awaiting your further commands, Very faithfully yours, OMBAGHER, MACDONALD & QUINCY.

"That makes three hundred and fifty thousand dollars!" Curran muttered between his teeth. "And this infernal little half-breed whelp is in my way! That's got to be attended to! Why doesn't that Mashkaugan get back?"

FIND GOLD IN HIDDEN TOWN

Wealth, Buried by Old Residents and Long Sought, Believed to Have Been Located.
Blythe, Cal.—Three strangers came into Blythe in an automobile. They remained here a day and the next morning they crossed the river at Ehrenberg ferry. Since that time reports have reached here that they went directly to the old town of La Paz, ten miles northwest of Blythe on the opposite of the Colorado River, and after a search there in the ruins of an old adobe building, succeeded in uncovering and carrying away gold to the amount of $60,000.
That the men went to La Paz, and did considerable excavating inside the old ruins and that they claimed to have found $60,000 has been verified. The fact that the old building in which they dug was the principal store and saloon of the town in the early and palmy days of La Paz gives credence to the report of the wealth the three men found.
The saloon was owned and conducted by one Francisco Rabana, a Portuguese.
Rabana, in addition to conducting a general store and saloon, was the principal buyer of gold dust in La Paz, gold dust being the common medium of exchange in the camp in those days. One day while at the Goodwin mine, which he owned, Rabana received serious injuries, from which he never recovered and in a few days died.
Rabana had no family, his wife having died previously, nor any very intimate friends. It was generally known that he had much gold dust stored about the place, as that was the only way he had to keep it, there being no banks and transportation was slow. People had seen this gold in Rabana's possession, which he kept in sacks, dishes, and cans.
However, when Rabana died the only thing found on his person or about the premises was a deposit check in a foreign bank for a small amount of money. No cash or gold dust of any considerable amount could be found.
The fact that no gold was found on the Rabana premises, led to numerous efforts on the part of many to search for the lost treasure.
Like all things of this nature, the fever became contagious, and men have spent years, looking and digging for Rabana's gold, which, so far as known, was never found.
After the Government had declared La Paz to be located on an Indian reservation, and the inhabitants were forced to move off, many a man returned and dug in the old town looking for lost treasure, and in this way the earth about the old Rabana house has been turned over many times.
One hole excavated by the last party was dug to a depth of about twelve feet, where water was encountered. An old resident of La Paz tells that Rabana had a well at that point to furnish water for the store and saloon.
Gold was first discovered in La Paz wash in the 'fifties. Government and private records show that more than $2,000,000 were taken out during the life of the camp. The gold came principally from places, and nuggets were frequently found valued at more than $100 each.

"Dew Ponds"
Among the most singular archeological remains found in Great Britain are the ancient "dew ponds," the construction of which is attributed to people of the Neolithic age. The purpose of these ponds was to furnish drinking water for cattle. An exposed position where springs were abundant was selected and a broad, hollowed surface was formed, and covered over with straw, or some other non-conducting material. Above was spread a thick layer of clay strewn with stones. During the night the cold surface of the clay caused an abundance of moisture to condense from the lower layers of the air. Some of these ancient dew ponds are still in working order.

The Praetorian Guard.
The Praetorian Guard was a select body of troops instituted by the Emperor Augustus to protect his person, and consisted of ten cohorts, each of one thousand men, chosen from Italy. They had peculiar privileges, and when they had served sixteen years were retired on a pension of about $500. Each member of the Guard had the rank of a captain in the regular army. Like the bodyguard of Louis the Fourteenth, they were all gentlemen, and formed gradually a great power, like the Janizaries at Constantinople, and frequently deposed or elevated the very Emperors themselves.

At times I was dizzy and nervous and had headaches, too. My kidneys were out of order. Doan's Kidney Pills had been used in my family with such good results that I took them. WORKS ZEBRA WITH HORSES

Finds Best, Heretofore Considered of No Use, Best Worker in His Stables.
Mt. Vernon, Ind.—Dr. W. S. Hastings, a Posey county stock breeder and farmer, is using a zebra, valued at $2,500, on one of his farms in place of a horse.

Dr. Hastings brought the animal and its mate from Mamburg, Germany, two years ago and placed them on his farm for the purpose of cross-breeding with native mules. The original cost of the animals and their transportation here amounted to $5,000.
One of the zebras was accidentally kicked to death last year, and in order to give the other exercise, Dr. Hastings put it to work several days ago. The zebra is thoroughly domesticated and proved a better worker than the horse which it replaced. It did not become fatigued easily and the cost of its feed is less than that of a horse. In fact the animal is harder in every way than the ordinary farm or draft horse.

The zebra has long been known as an animal which is most difficult to domesticate and it has been considered impracticable to use it for farm work. This fact makes Dr. Hastings' success with his animal a most unusual thing.
Dr. Hastings is farming on a rather expensive scale, as in addition to working a $2,500 animal in the field, the land he is farming is valued at $200 an acre.

BATTLES EAGLE IN A TRAP

Fur Trapper Bearly Bitten and Clawed in Fight With Bird.
Edmonton, Alberta.—Tom E. Mason, a fur trapper, has come to Edmonton for medical treatment, following a fierce fight with a golden eagle, which clawed and pecked his face, neck and left shoulder and arm. He killed the bird, which had a spread of wings of 8 feet 2 inches from tip to tip.
"I was attracted to a trap," Mason said "by a strange noise, and as I got closer I saw a huge golden eagle held by one foot.
"My first thought was to release the bird, not thinking that it would venture to attack; but that is where I was fooled. I was quickly made aware of the fact when I was sprawled upon my back with the eagle and the trap on top of me."

THE AGED MAN.

Much has been said and written of late years in regard to the present age being "a young man's era." The fact that a few gray hairs, or possibly a bald head, have in many instances deprived men having (otherwise) excellent qualifications, of their chances of livelihood, has been much commented on and greatly deplored. Societies have been formed in protest against the enforced retirement to the background of industrial life of hundreds of men in their very prime of usefulness because they had reached the meridian of years, and the frosts of time had begun to show on their heads—outside.

A somewhat significant comment on this modern tendency to assert the arrogance of youth is found in the many references in the daily papers when chronicling the events of life.

One reads a headline—probably the work of a man who isn't yet aged—like this: "Aged Man Injured," etc. in the article itself—obviously written by another young man—as read that the person referred to is, perhaps 50 or, perhaps, 55 or 60 years old.

In the dictionaries we are told that "aged" implies greatly advanced in years, extreme age. Thus we see that the application of the term to people under three score and ten at least is incorrect, to say nothing of the way it makes a person feel who knows himself to be still young in vigor, endurance and mental power, in spite of his 60 or so years. The designation is only used as a general term, however, as it would certainly make folks laugh should many well known public men be referred to in that way. For instance, no one would think of calling President Wilson, Governor Parry, Ex-President Taft, or Theodore Roosevelt all men who have reached or passed by several years the half-century mark "aged."

Then what would refer the flower Watson, Edwin Douthy, James Conant, Henry Ford, and a whole lot of others, active and efficient in the public life of our nearby metropolises, to the papers as "aged" men? And think of the knockout blow it would be to Secretary McAdoo, just when his assignment to the youthful daughter of our chief magistrate and his prowess as a tangoer have been alluded to, to see himself expounded the laugh and breadth of the land as an "aged" lover!

These reporters will see these things very differently in just a few years, and the "old" days will be upon them before their half realize it when they, too, will resent the implication of being "aged" at 50.
