MUNICIPAL LIGHT RATES RAISED

NON-RESIDENTS GET A 1 CENT RAISE AND CHURCH RATES UP 2 CENTS.

MINIMUM RATE 50 CENTS AND NO MORE DIRECT CHARGE FOR METER SERVICE.

At the Monday night council meeting made in regard to the municipal lighting service.

A resolution was passed abolishing the present meter rates and establishing a minimum rate of 50 cents per month.

The regular rates will be 12 cents for the first 5,000 units, and 8 cents for each additional thousand, which is equal to the present meter charges for houses and stores.

For users outside the corporation the rate will be 12 cents and 9 cents. The factories, churches and library will pay 6 cents. The churches have formerly been charged 4 cents, and the library has been given free service, for library purposes.

Users of power to exceed 50 units will be given a rate of 2-3-4 cents. This readjustment of rates is made in the interest of making the municipal plant self-supporting, instead of obliging the taxpayers to pay the annual deficit between expenditures and receipts as in the past. Meters will be used to ascertain just how much power is required for street lighting, and the various branches of the service. Every effort is to be made to discover and stop any and all leaks, and to put the plant on a paying basis if it is possible to put it there.

Supt. Wilkinson estimates this change will net the village several hundred dollars while it will not materially affect any single individual.

GOVERNOR FERRIS AT PLYMOUTH

As noted last week, Governor Woodbridge N. Ferris is to speak in Plymouth next Tuesday, and a lot of Northville people are intending to go over. The local automobile brigade is to assemble on the Main and Connet street square at 1:30 o'clock to take everybody over who hasn't other plans for transportation.

The committee says there will be plenty of automobiles to carry all who desire to pay their respects to Michigan's foremost citizen.

CHARLES WHIPPLE DIED TUESDAY.

Charles Whipple, a well known and respected resident of this place, died Tuesday morning at his residence at the old Thompson homestead on the Base Line just west of town. Mr. Whipple had been suffering for several weeks with a carbuncle on his neck, but was confined to his bed scarcely a week, his death resulting from blood poisoning and diabetes.

He was 52 years of age and had lived here for the past nine years, and in Salem township all his life previously. He is survived by his wife, who was a daughter of the late John Thompson, one son, a daughter and two sisters. The funeral services were held Thursday afternoon from the home, with Rev. Ralph Pierce as the officiating clergyman, the Knights of Pythias attending in a body. The interment was at Rural Hill.

HENRY MILLER DEAD.

Henry Miller, son of Louis Miller of this place died Saturday at the age of 36 years. Mr. Miller was for several years treasurer of Novi township but was forced to go west about two years ago on account of his health. It was hoped that the mountain air would cure his tubercular trouble but growing no better, he resolved to come back home, which he did six months ago.

Novi township has certainly lost a valued citizen and the community a kindly and industrious neighbor.

The funeral was held from the father's home with services also in the German church Tuesday afternoon, Rev. Lorenz of Farmington officiating.

the band concert. He will have something to say for just about 20 minutes and will finish in time for the Tabernacle services.

Following Mr. Kelley, the Hon. A. J. Kaufman of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers will speak on the question of the Proposed Fraternal Insurance Amendment.

TABERNACLE MEETING.

The meetings at the tabernacle continue to draw large audiences. The afternoon meetings have been discontinued this week, except for Saturdays and Sundays, but Monday evening services were held, the largest audience thus far in the campaign assembling to hear a talk from Alf Allen, mission worker of Chicago, formerly champion middle-weight prize fighter of Canada. Mr. Allen won general approval by the modesty and simplicity with which he told the story of his conversion to a better life and his work to win others. The choir included 120 voices.

On Tuesday evening, three automobile loads of people from Howell came to attend the services, and to endorse Evangelist-Hicks' work in the recent campaign in that city. The party was composed of influential citizens of Howell, including the clergymen, and five of the gentlemen addressed the audience during the services.

AUCTION SALE.

On Thursday, October 29, Charles Welsh is to have "some hog sale." There will be big pigs and little pigs and old pigs and young pigs, besides some regular hogs—ninety of 'em all told. The place is the Welsh farm north and west of town, the time is two o'clock p. m. and the auctioneer is Frank J. Boyle.

A few cents invested in the For Sale columns of the Record will sell anything you want to get rid of.

WANTS TO KNOW WHY.

Editor Record: I find the following in the daily press from a statement made by ex-Gov. Chase S. Osborn July 3, 1912:

"I am of the firm opinion that there is no necessity for a third party. Woodrow Wilson in character, temperament, preparation and honesty is above the high average of American presidents. He is a Christian, a scholar and a fearless citizen. I hope Colonel Roosevelt will not be a candidate for president in 1916, for Wilson without losing an iota of his party, or holding the Republican party flag, no candidate for president this year."

"If one three months later, the 2nd of October, the Progressive state central committee a better landing the third party and declaring that he would vote for Roosevelt and Johnson, and for L. Whitney Watkins for governor."

Now I want to know why Mr. Pattengill is not entitled to just a fair support now as Mr. Watkins was in 1912. Why should Mr. Osborn receive votes from the Republican party he hated in 1912 or from the Progressive party which he hated in 1913 or from the Wilson party which he also hated in 1912?

PROGRESSIVE

PATTENGILL RAPS SALOON IN POLITICS; LAUDS PROGRESSIVES.

Decriing saloon interference in politics rapping child labor and lauding the position of the progressive party on industrial problems, Henry R. Pattengill, progressive candidate for governor, spoke here Wednesday afternoon to an enthusiastic though not large audience.

"Easy means of transportation and communication have almost entirely changed economic conditions by bringing together great combinations of 'capital,'" said Mr. Pattengill. "There is no harm in that kind of business, provided strong control is exercised by the government. There should be a program that will give workers and consumers a fair share of the rewards."

"My anti-saloon talks have found favor everywhere in the 55 counties in which I have spoken, and the progressive party has made progress." He thinks the vote all over the state will be light, as "people are not talking politics."

REGISTRATION NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that the Board of Registration for the Township of Northville, Wayne county, Michigan, will be held in the Township Clerk's Office, Village of Northville, on Saturday, October 24th, 1914, from 9:00 o'clock a. m. until 5:00 o'clock p. m. for the purpose of registering the qualified voters of said township.

"GOOD HIGHWAYS OUT VALUE PANAMA CANAL"

HENRY R. JOY SAYS "THEY WILL OBTAIN EVEN THE GREAT RAILWAY SYSTEMS."

"ALL FREIGHT CARRIED BY RAILWAYS FIRST OR LAST HAILED ON STREETS OR HIGHWAYS."

Until a speech which was made by Henry R. Joy to the directors of the railroad company at the annual meeting, held in Detroit last week.

The chief handicap to American industry and commerce and agriculture is the atrocious condition of our roads and highways generally. We as a nation are in the position of having the most advanced means of a wonderfully advanced means of highway transportation, over anything known since the beginning of time, and yet we are utterly unable to avail ourselves of the great benefits of these new motor vehicle transportation methods by reason of the fact that we have no proper, suitable highways upon which to get those benefits.

"The nation now is in a position parallel to that which existed when the locomotive was being evolved nearly a century ago. The locomotive had been developed, had been proven to be capable of superseding the exceedingly crude methods of transportation of the times prior to it, and the locomotive continued to develop because of its great possibilities faster, far faster, than developed the rails and roadbed for it to travel on and draw its train upon. For years the railway transportation of the United States and the world went along, dragging inefficiently because the rails and roadbed had not been invented upon which the developed locomotive could do the work of which it was capable.

"Good, main arterial highways, hard surfaced, probably of the type of concrete highway construction developed by the Highway Commissioners of Wayne county, Michigan, and recommended by the Lincoln Highway association, are as essential to commercial and industrial economy in the United States as was the development of Bessemer steel rails to supersede the soft iron strap rails of the early locomotive days.

"It has been well said by Mr. A. R. Pardington, Vice-President of the Lincoln Highway association, that just as no manufacturer seeking to locate an industry would locate it anywhere except on a railroad, exactly so would no man about to engage in the industry of farming, locate his industry on a highway that was impassable and useless.

"The wonderful activity, largely as the result of the Lincoln Highway propaganda, which has arisen not

MILLIONS PRAY FOR PEACE.

More than 35,000,000 persons attend church in the United States on Peace Sunday and prayed for peace. There are 210,249 churches in the country, and nearly every one of these observed peace day. FERNINAND'S ACCESSION MARKS CHANGE IN ROUMANIA'S DESTINIES

LONDON, Oct. 13.—(Special)—The death last week of King Charles of Roumania and the access of his nephew, Ferdinand, probably will work an important change in the destiny of the little country.

King Charles was a Hohenzollern, a German of the Germans, a distant cousin of the reigning Prussian family. All his sympathies were pro-German. In the present war, he sought to place Roumania on the Austro-German side, and failed only because public sentiment in Roumania was too strongly in favor of the allies.

The new king, while also of German blood, has always stood in the most friendly attitude toward Great Britain. His wife, the new queen, is a daughter of the British Duke of Edinburgh, and the royal children—who are, perhaps, the most beautiful and promising of all Europe—have spent as much of their time in London as in Bucharest.

In view of King Ferdinand's friendly attitude toward England and Roumanian public sentiment favorable to the allies, England no longer regards

PHOTOGRAPHY BASIS OF MOVIE.

Analysis of Film-magic is High Technical Matter, Says Writer

Who was the first to say, "The camera cannot lie?"

The photographic record of animation which we see upon the screen is really a composite of numerous "snapshots" taken in rapid succession. They move faster than the eye can follow, and thus made us to believe that we are watching a series of events that, in fact, are a single continuous action. This illusion is the basis of the magic of moving pictures.

The analysis of the magic of the camera under the heading of "trick photography" is a highly technical matter. The use of "double exposure" and "stop and substitute" methods, and is the basis of a new trickery with the film.

A French photographer called "An Automobile Accident," recorded as seen through a lens, a car may be used as an illustration of its development.

A drunken carter in a film by Charles W. Calton in "The World's New Trick" in Motion Pictures, in the film "The Madman's Decision to Kill," in the middle of the street. A carter is overthrown, and the car is dented. The carter is not at all perturbed by the accident. He calmly gets out of the car, and places the dismembered limbs in their proper position on the street. He then gets up and walks away. Apparently, a miracle has been accomplished of a least a feat of surgery that is beyond the skill of Dr. Alexis Carrel.

To bring about this illusion on the film, two workmen of identical appearance were used. One of them "specially engaged" for this occasion, was the legless victim of some real accident of the past, and for him "dummy legs" were made. The rest is obvious. The taxi was stopped just as its front wheels touched the sleeping carter, and the picture-taking was also interrupted at that moment. Then the cripple was substituted for the pseudo victim, and the taxi rolled over its imitation legs and removed them neatly. The film was halted a second time, after the doctor had performed his casual operation, to permit the other player whose legs were still intact and in good working order, to replace his substitute. The result was that combination of precision and comic effect which is often characteristic of the film imagination.

This sort of trickery demands nothing unusual in the operation of the camera or in other phases of the photographic process beyond the stopping of the film. It is merely done by the producer, and, while in theory it is as completely "take" as any other stage-act, it is not so readily done. The use of a "dummy" in a play is a device of detection, except by those who are initiated into the secrets of the craft.

In line with this kind of work, outside the camera, though without the need of the "stop and substitute" device, is the employment of toy models and the studio stage change. Much can be accomplished by this form of trickery, but the motto of "space no expense" which has been put in practice since the film manufacturers became so amazingly prosperous, has made it more or less obsolete. To illustrate the possibilities of this variety of film trickery, however, it may be said that Robert W. Paul, that pioneer English cinematographer and one of the greatest masters of trick photography, once produced a thrilling train-wreck scene only forty feet long by containing plenty of "punch" by the use of models. The camera placed "close-up" made the toys seem like life-size railroad cars, and the picture was accepted as a scene.

THIN, DRY AIR AND VIOLINS

Instrument Maker Gives Reasons for Seeking New Location.

According to Mr. W. C. Stenger of Chicago, a well-known maker of violins, the maker of these instruments, especially high-class violins, such as the famous Italian Stradivari turned out long ago, is not a lost art, but the manufacture of these instruments is a tedious process in which no detail must be overlooked by the maker. To begin with the wood which is best suited to violin making must be grown in the high altitudes, in light soil, and must undergo a special curing process after being cut at a certain period of the year.

In order to insure a rich mellow tone permanently a pure oil finish must be given to the instrument and this, according to Stenger, is the most abstruse of the problems that confront the maker. The chemical reaction which takes place in pure oil during the hardening process has been the despair of most makers, but in thin, dry air the oil will harden quickly and develop the limpid consistent qualities that are necessary in a perfect instrument.

Believing that Arizona furnishes the most suitable air for the line of work produced by Mr. Stenger, he has gone to Tucson with a view of locating his plant there. He says the climate of that city is similar to that of Cremona, Italy, where the most famous makers of the violin have been located for centuries.

In conformity with the circular recently issued by the Department of Gobernacion of Mexico, to the effect that the reform laws instituted by President Jaurez be strictly enforced throughout the republic, Alberto Fuentes, governor of the state of Aguascalientes, has ordered that convents occupied by monks and nuns be converted into public schools.

have been emptied and the monks and nuns forbidden to reside in the community in the future, as this is forbidden by the reform laws. The furniture in the convents in the city of Aguascalientes, especially confessionals, was piled up in the plazas of the city and burned by order of the authorities.

Several new public schools have been established in former convents. Nuns and monks have gone to other parts of the republic. Most of the heads of the convents were foreigners.

DETROIT THEATRES AT THE GAYETY

The Gayety is considered, and rightfully, the leading burlesque house in Detroit. Shows here are snappy and the big orchestra, new ideas and perfect appointments—make it a house that is favored by men and women alike. The Gayety Girls are the present strong attraction and this aggregation have more ginger, life and new musical stunts than usual. Feely & McCloud, Zella Russell and the Haywards are exponents of modern fun galore. The chorus is shapely, tuneful and get over with a lot of new material. Scenic equipment is above par and Manager Rhodes may be pardoned in wearing a broad smile of satisfaction, as the houses are exceptionally good. It's a show you should not miss; in fact, no Gayety show is out of color—and the following attractions, Charley Robinson's Love Makers, is but another example of what the big first wheel shows can give to those who want the best from every standpoint. Starting Sunday matinees the Love-makers and their bevy of beautiful femininity will satisfy jaded tastes to the limit. Come to the Gayety for a royal good time at any time. Ten cent matinees for the ladies prevail.

AT THE CADILLAC

Packed houses substantiate the claims of Manager Levy for shows that satisfy. The recent reorganization along new lines gives shows of the highest class. The present show, Garden of Girls, with Ida Nicolai and Andy Gardner, is a scream. The Three Shows and a capable cast interpret a show that is full of spice and ginger. Louis Girard has always maintained that a "girly" show will be a winner, and the shapely chorus, in abbreviated costumes, will reign supreme. The Parisian scenes are well worth seeing and no man or woman who comes to Detroit for a jolly good time should miss the Garden of Girls, which satisfies every desire for lively clean entertainment of the best sort. The much heralded Follies of Pleasure follows next week at the Cadillac and the show is claimed to be far above the average. The dancing numbers are alone worth the price of admission. The Cadillac is just across from Cadillac hotel, Michigan avenue, Detroit.

AT THE FOLLY

Manager James announces that only metropolitan productions of the first class will be featured from now on at the Folly. Julia Julia dancers, vaudeville stunts and the best in burlesque circles will be featured. The recent shows at the Folly bear out the fact that visitors to the Folly get a big fun for their money. While many numbers are gingers and sappy in the very limit, this is a place where the pure theatrical appetite is satisfied to the full. The Folly is conveniently located at Shelby and Lafayette Boulevards, and popular price prevail. If looking for a show that is up to the times in every way, new music and girl-galore, don't ignore the Folly.

NEW STUNTS BY STOMACH EXPERTS

Astonishing Feats Performed For Medical Scientists and Others Studying Food Digestion

Government and university scientists engaged in making experiments on the human stomach, in their endeavor to familiarize themselves with the various stages and degrees of food digested, are now branching out into new fields for more light along this line has been shed by the "poison squads" and the salaried food eaters confined in glass cages.

They are just at present interesting themselves in all manner of human freaks whose exploits are such as to tax their stomachs to an extent that seems phenomenal, if not supernatural.

Many of our readers have witnessed the performances of sword swallowers, glass eaters and their like, and have come away with the belief that these unnatural feats were sleight-of-hand and nothing more, but, unbelievable as it sounds, there is little or no deception about their "stunts," to use a circus term for their acts.

Dr. Leonard K. Hirschberg tells how sword swallowers afforded the opportunity to learn how long a time was required for the digestion of meat. These men have so arranged their internal economy that they can swallow anything which offered Dr. Stevens, a Scotchman, the opportunity to experiment with the digestive process.

He caused the fellow to swallow small metallic tubes pierced with holes. In each tube had been placed pieces of meat. When the tubes were disgorged the various stages and degrees of digestion were recorded. Other things learned from the sword swallowers were how long the throat can be made insensitive to the touch, and that the stomach may be explored by the aid of an electric lamp.

The other day Dr. Grossman, a no red scientist, exhibited a man who was called the "human aquarium." He had such a large mouth and so dilated an esophagus that he could swallow a small aquarium in which were a dozen gold fish several tadpoles, frogs and other small creatures. He would swallow this in his stomach and then discharge first, the bowl, then the fluid and the lively wriggly denizens of the deep.

Some of these swallowers have the power to swallow lion's eyes, stomachs, broken glass and the like. A patient of Prof. William Husted of Baltimore, Md., several times swallowed several hundred separate articles. Among them were watches, needles, knives, pens, glass, tacks, nails, stones, crystal, and rings.

Few of this rare type of swallowers even have "tummy" action. One fellow whose name was Hutton, but was called "Cassandri," was accustomed to swallow live cats, mice and crabs with large claws clipped.

Chevalier Cluquet, a French Cavalier, has a stunt of swallowing a number of 19 inch-bayonet swords, and 22 inch cavalry sword all at once. This accomplished of course, by removing the handles of the swords so that they lie flat together, or without any spread at the hilt.

It has recently been discovered that the leaves of the fern plant, which grows almost anywhere, is an excellent preservative for packing articles of food, fruit and even meat.

Time is money, but it requires a great deal of time to convince some folks of that fact.

ART CRITICISMS

Orchardson's and Murray's Work as Viewed From Different Standpoints.

When Orchardson's picture, "Hard Hit," was exhibited at the Academy the artist was strolling through the rooms one day when he saw, to his alarm, an excited little foreigner make toward him with threatening aspect and brandishing a stick as he came. "Ah, sir," he exclaimed, "I thought that by killing you I could paint a picture like that I would crush your skull this minute."

David Murray, a Royal Academician, was once painting in Piccadilly when his stock of canvas became exhausted. Being desirous of securing an "impression" for use later in a more ambitious attempt, the artist did one hit on a handkerchief tacked on a stretcher. Upon his return to London this piece of work was being inspected, with others, by a wealthy old lady, who desired to purchase it. Murray thought it advisable to tell her that it had been painted on his pocket handkerchief. "On your pocket handkerchief?" exclaimed the old lady. "Then I'm quite sure you've ruined it, Mr Murray. The paint will never come off."

POLITENESS IN PARIS.

A Boston Woman Says It Can't be Surpassed.

A Boston woman was talking of Paris. The question of the relative courtesy of nations came up.

"Well, it would take a pretty good illustration to persuade me that any people beat the French," she remarked. "I'll give you an example. I was walking down the Champs Elysees and wanted to find a particular street called Rue de la Cloche. Not knowing just where to turn, I asked a young Frenchman who passed me if he could direct me. He assured me with a thousand pardons that he did not know. A few minutes later I heard hurrying feet behind me, and there was my Frenchman. 'Madame,' he said, sweeping off his hat and bowing profoundly, 'did you not ask me the way to the Rue de la Cloche? I was sorry I did not know, but I have seen my brother and asked him, and I'm sorry to inform you, madame, that he did not know either.'"

LITTLE CULBONE CHURCH.

Smallest in England, It Serves Thirty-five People.

Culbone church, which among many others claims to be the smallest church in England, its situated on the coast of North Devon, not far from the picturesque little village of Porlock, and the church is so guarded by hills and woods that the sun's rays only reach it four months in the year. The building is but 33 feet long by 12 feet 8 inches wide, and has a porch, nave, carved oak chancel screen and Norman front, an alabaster altar piece and a quiet high pew near the chancel, used by the family of Lord Lovelace, by whom the property is owned. The slanted chancel is lit by a tiny square headed iron barred window, the oldest feature in the church, being pre-Norman and cut out of a single stone. It is amply large for the population, which is about 35 in a parish of only 1,327 acres. In summer the church is crowded, owing to the influx of visitors from many parts of the world.

CLEVER TRICK WITH A STRING

Parlor Magicians Will Find That This One Goes Well.

Here is a clever boy's trick. Lay a piece of string across the palm of your hands placed side by side, letting the ends hang down, then bring your palms quickly together, at the same time secretly catching hold of the string with your fourth and fifth fingers. Then direct any person to join your thumbs together as tight as a pleaser and he will not of course be trying them, because you have hold of the string, yet it will appear to him that he is doing so. Ask him to place a hat over your hands, then blow upon the hat and say, "Be loose," slipping your thumbs from under the string. Direct him to remove the hat and show the "chumps fee." Request that the hat be again placed over your hand, then blow upon the hat as before and say, "He thee," slipping your thumbs under the string again, and when your hat is removed your thumbs will appear to be tied as at first. After you have performed the trick you must convey the string deftly into your pocket so that it may not be detected.

KEEP DYNAMITE IN BOTTLES

Air-Tight Tubes Used to Protect It From Cold.

The expediency of keeping dynamite from freezing, especially when it is being taken from the magazine to the place of use in cold weather has resulted in the invention of a non-freezing carrier constructed on the principle of the thermos bottle. When dynamite is placed in the bottles, or tubes, the corks are firmly inserted in the ends, and it will remain unfrozen for at least twelve hours, even when the carrier is exposed to temperature considerably below zero. Before placing dynamite in the tubes they are put in a room having a temperature of 55 degrees, or higher, and the corks are withdrawn for at least five minutes.

To find relief from backache;
To correct distressing urinary ills;
To assist weak kidneys?
Your neighbors know the way—
Have used Doan's Kidney Pills;
Have proved their worth in many tests.

Here's convincing testimony.
R. B. McClarren, E. Leggett and Shoup Ave., Wauson, Ohio, says: "Two years ago I gave a statement for publication recommending Doan's Kidney Pills as a cure for backache and other symptoms of kidney complaint. Since they cured me of kidney complaint, I am pleased to say that there has been no sign of the trouble. The least I can do in return, is to endorse Doan's Kidney Pills again."

USE FOR GREAT SALT LAKE

Experts Discover Water is a Natural Timber Preservative.

Experts of the Government forest service have discovered that the waters of Great Salt Lake, Utah, act as a preservative against decay in timbers. For years they have been conducting experiments to find a treatment that would preserve telegraph poles and railroad ties. As the result of recent investigations it has been found that timbers, taken from the Great Salt Lake were perfectly sound, although they had remained in those waters for many years.

Forest experts suggest that ties and poles immersed in these waters ought to be impervious to decay if the salt is not bleached out by the action of the elements. This can be guarded against, it is asserted, by painting the butt of pole with cresote, which will keep out the moisture and keep in the salt.

MANY METEORS INFEST SPACE

Scientist Estimates Number at 20,000,000 Per Day.

Multitude of meteors infest space. On a clear moonless night one person may count eight or ten shooting stars in an hour. But there are twice as many visible in the early morning hours as in the evenings, and during the last half of the year there are also more than twice as many visible as during the first half.

It is computed, says a noted investigator of meteoric phenomena, Prof. W. F. Denning, in the new Encyclopaedia Britannica, that 20,000,000 meteors enter the atmosphere every day and would be visible to unassisted vision in the absence of sunlight, moonlight and clouds, while if telescopic meteors are included the number will be increased twentyfold.

AEROPLANE BUILT LIKE BIRD

Intended to Go With the Wind, Without Aid of Any Mechanical Power.

Man has never been able to successfully imitate birds in flying, though the "inside down" and "loop the loop" aviators have come close to it. Now, however, an aeroplane without engines has been invented, and the builder, Dr. A. Magnan, says that the operator of the machine will need only the wind to help him.

Like large birds, the apparatus is provided with a spreading tail and two tapering wings, the wings being so placed as to enable it to remain motionless. The control of the machine must be acquired by practice, as in the case of a bicycle and this will undoubtedly present difficulty and danger.

POOR YEAR FOR PHILIPPINES.

Drouth and typhoons hurt the trade of the Philippines in the year that ends June 30. Exports declined to $51,000,000, a loss of $2,500,000. The imports were about $4,000,000 more than the exports.

FEAR OF LIGHTNING.

It is Natural to Man Yet is Largely Baseless.

It is hopeless to try to quiet human fears of the thunderstorms by statistics showing that lightning kills fewer persons than measles or motor cars. Lichtenberg, the eighteenth century physicist who was a satirist as well as a specialist on electricity, wrote in vain his article on "Fear of Lightning." At that moment there was dysentery in Göttingen, and six persons were said to have died—more than twice as many in a few days as lightning has killed in our town in more than half a century, and yet the public seem remarkably easy on the subject. How different it would be, Lichtenberg reflected, "if the dysentery rose above the horizon in the form of a big black cloud, changing day into twilight, and whenever it ejected a victim exploded with a violent thunderclap."

POLISH FREEDOM.

Last Remnant Went Under Austrian Control in 1846.

It is seldom remembered that one fragment of independent Poland survived long after the partitions of the eighteenth century. In 1815 the powers agreed that the town of Cracow, with its territory, should be forever a free, independent and strictly neutral city, under the protection of Russia, Austria and Prussia. But in the forties came the Polish insurrections and Austrian troops occupied Cracow. Metternich accepted the Czar's suggestion that Austria should suck to it, being influenced by the fear that Russia or Prussia would have it if Austria did not. So, in 1846, perished the last remnant of "free" Poland. Just ten years after Peel has expressed to Gladstone his belief that they would strive to see Polish independence restored.

ARGENTINA AND THE WAR.

The Argentine Republic is excited because its consul at Antwerp, Belgium, has been shot by the Germans. The reason for the shooting is not known.

THE POWER OF CASTE.

An Illustration of What It Means in India.

Many people, unless actually familiar with the ways and customs of the native of India, have little idea as to how superstitious many of these people are, especially with regard to their "caste" system.

Not very long ago a coolie, while passing through the jungle, was severely mangled by a bear. His comrades, however, although they knew that a few miles distant there was a well equipped hospital, conveyed him to a village, where he was kept without medical assistance and in a blazing sun for three days.

When eventually brought into the hospital the man's plight may be better imagined than described. The surgeon and his assistants managed to keep him alive, but his face is so disfigured that he is known in the district as the "reache wallah" (bear man).

The most extraordinary thing about this case is that the unfortunate person was, during the time he lay in the hospital, considered by the fraternity to be unclean, with the result that his own wife was through attending to his requirements, "prowl out of caste."

Maiden Meditations.

Truth is not always at the bottom of a well-like gold, it is a lot and it is.

A man who is caught in a tight place ought to make a point of having sharp wits with which to cut his way out.

Very few self-made men would find that it paid to take out a patent on the processes.

Most things we long for have lost their charm by the time we get them.

The citizens of this State must look to the Insurance Department for protection in all insurance matters. The Insurance Department supervises all Insurance Companies, and seeks to keep fraudulent companies out of this State. Let us look to the Department for information in this crisis. READ, BROTHER, AND PONDER WELL. Commissioner Winship, of the Michigan State Insurance Department says: "The adoption of the proposed Amendment would in my opinion, limit Fraternal Societies to the payment of Death Benefits only, and would destroy State supervision." "Permit me to say that I have carefully examined this Amendment and am of the opinion that it is a vicious piece of legislation and would destroy the feature which gives to a Fraternal Order its cohesive force, namely, the lodge system." Judges, eminent lawyers, numerous Insurance Commissioners well-known Fraternalists, and Citizens generally, condemn the provisions of the proposed Amendment. Every Fraternal Society, including Patriotic Organizations, Trade Unions and Commercial Travelers, has taken up arms against the proposed Amendment. Synopsis.

Boyer Curran, agent of the Hudson Bay Company's Big Loon Post, is about to start back there with supplies. He learns that Lorimer, an Englishman, and his assistant have just married Ameeo, an Indian. He sees the death notice of Lorimer's wealthy uncle, and reads a letter just arrived for Lorimer that he has an interest in the will. Curran reasons that if Lorimer should die, the money would be his wife's, then he could marry her himself and get it.

Curran sends Lorimer and Mashkaugan on an exploring trip and the Indian pushes Lorimer into the rapids and leaves him for dead. During his absence Lorimer's son is born.

Mashkaugan comes back with news of Lorimer's death. But the white man is not dead. With much difficulty he makes his way back, and just before reaching the camp of Atuk, an Indian, he finds a white baby left alone in the woods.

Curran meanwhile has schemed to have Scarface, an Indian, play a trick on Ameeo by taking her baby into the woods and leaving him for Curran to bring back.

Immediately after the discovery of her loss, Ameeo starts in her canoe to look for the child. The frightened and repentant Mashkaugan accompanies her. They find the place where the baby was left, but he is gone now. The superstitious guide is frightened away by the sight of Lorimer.

Mashkaugan goes back alone to get the baby and is rescued from drowning by Lorimer. The Indians take care of them both, and the baby.

For a time Mashkaugan glared at him, not realizing how strangely he was looking. In his mind a struggle was being fought. By this time all supernatural fears had left him and there remained but the knowledge that he stood confronting the man he had sought to kill.

Lorimer was defenseless before him yet stronger. His mere presence caused the voyager to cower.

The instinct of self-preservation was strong. A few lies were enough to protect him, or the mere withholding of the truth. Yet also there was the pressure of a conscience that had given no rest, that made him feel pitifully weak and small as he realized that Lorimer had endangered his life to save him. There was also fear that those dreadful obsessions might return.

"Wait," he implored. "Wait but an instant. My head is still dazed, although I am not crazy."

The prospect of prison walls returned to him—glaringly to a man of the wilderness. In one instant the crowds of cities and a bad enough, but to one whose life has been spent in the freedom of the pathless north; on the great wide stretches of swift rivers; on vast lakes; in camps where the air has never been defiled and the water is sweet and cool; in the breezes that have traveled over a thousand miles of glittering ice; over wide, mossy forests, the walls of prisons mean inexpressible torture.

"I shall never go back to it," he swore and glared again.

"I am perhaps also dazed," Lorimer said gently, "for I need not tell thee what my journey was through that awful wilderness, with nothing to eat but handfuls of sodden, pulvered flour. Other terrible things have happened to me, so that now I am a man to whom there is no meaning in life but to care for a little baby."

He stopped, as he was coughing terribly, and put his hand to his side. Just then the little one began to cry. Lorimer took it up, wrapped in the skin of a caribou calf, and held it against his breast until it ceased to wail.

"Here is all that I have left of the happiness that was mine," he said. "Thy face shows much sign of suffering; Mashkaugan; but I doubt if ever such pain as mine has been thy portion."

"Thou canst still have all the happiness of the world!" exclaimed Mashkaugan. "I am the only one who is doomed to misery. How terrible must have been thy journey in the woods! There are few men who could have made it. I see now that I followed thy track, made yesterday, that was as the path of a drunken man. I would that I knew I may some time reach a place of safety, as thou hast, and the child I sought for yesterday when I saw thee and fled, thinking it was thy ghost!"

"Upon earth a man's soul is within his own keeping," Mashkaugan said. "The only way to find happiness for it is to keep it clean and undefiled."

At this moment the hunchback felt that he was no longer master of his own words. He could no longer pick and choose them to tell whatever he was minded to. Compulsion stronger than his will swayed him now and the flood of his words came unrestrained.

"I am accursed!" he cried. "I sought thy death! For days and more days, for a week and still other weeks I watched and watched, looking for some way to send thee to thy doom so that no other man might ever know that I had done it!"

"Traveling up the river, I studied the White Rapids, that had already been the death of one man, and when we returned I followed thee, ready to push thee into that awful place!

"Not another man could have gone through it and lived, but thou wert saved to bring me to punishment. I will not go to that prison again. But of this thou knowest nothing. There is Atuk's gun—in that corner—and thou canst shoot me if it is thy will, for I will not hold up a finger to hinder thee. Or an ax may serve, or this sheath-knife that is sharp and keen in the point."

"If swift death seems to good for me thou canst drive it slowly, and thou shalt see that I will not move. Kill me, Yellow Hair—kill me! I have deserved death at thy hands, and the Manitou bade thee pull me from the water in order to place vengeance in thy hands!"

His hands shook as he spoke. His voice was harsh with emotion.

But at this moment they heard steps outside. It was Atuk's wife returning.

"Thou hast taken up the little one," she said. "He is surely hungry again. Fortunate am I that I have enough for thy son and mine. Give him to me. The little Yellow Hair is surely a sturdy one who will guide thy footsteps when thou art become old."

Lorimer gave her the child. For some time there was silence in the tent. Finally the woman laid the baby down again.

"He will sleep now. I go out once more. The net has suffered little and was full of whitefish. The storm has gone down. It brought us luck rather than harm."

When she went away again Lorimer had lain down, feeling much oppressed. There was a shrewd pain in his side and a cough was beginning to rack his chest.

"Come nearer to me, Mashkaugan," he said quietly. "Thy tale bears the sound of truth. I cannot tell why such a hate was in thy heart. We had hard words together in days gone by, but if thou hast been in my place what wouldst thou have done to one who did the things I blamed thee for?"

"I think I care little to hear thy reason. They must have been poor ones or thy regret would not be so great. Now thou shalt take my hand in friendship and let bygones be bygones."

"I bear no enmity. Life would be impossible for us two at the post as enemies. Try and be a friend instead, as I shall."

"I do not feel well, and think the cold has done me some harm. I will rest a while and try to sleep. Since Ameeo no longer lives I have often been sorry I did not remain in the rapids."

"I saw Ameeo a few hours ago!" cried Mashkaugan. "She lives and is longing for thee!"

Lorimer sank senseless on his couch. The toil of his journeying, his efforts in the waters of the lake, and now this sudden news proved too much for him.

When the Indian woman returned to the tent she found that Lorimer was unconscious and that Mashkaugan sat by him, holding one of his hands and weeping bitterly while he watched every breath.

Then she also knelt by the sick man, asking questions of the hunchback, after which she took from her pack a bundle tied in birch-bark, from which she obtained dried herbs and roots and bark gathered in the spring-time when the sap is pushing upward, and set them in a cooking-pot to simmer on the stove. In a few moments their dreadful odor filled the tent.

Lorimer soon revived, only to chatter in a tongue unknown to the woman, but which Mashkaugan understood, for it was English. The wife fed her brood, after giving the hunchback and her husband something to eat. The night had come and the wind had died down, while myriad stars were shining very bright and close at hand, as they do in the far north.

Then she poured the liquor of her brewing into a vessel, allowing it to cool, and compelled the patient to swallow a big dose, in spite of his protestations.

"He should have some of this about the time during the night," she said. "I hope I may wake up often enough, but I am sleepy with hard work."

"Sleep on quietly," said Mashkaugan. "I promise that my eyes will never close tonight. I will watch the seven stars that turn about the star of the north, and he shall have the medicine as thou sayest."

During the long night the man kept his word not even a nod coming to allow his head to drop upon his breast.

He gave the drug faithfully, keeping very near the sick man and listening to his labored breathing.

From time to time he raised the flap of the tent and looked at the seven stars, as he called the Great Bear. On several occasions during his long vigil his long, gnarled hands came together, and he repeated the prayers the missionaries had taught him when he was very young.

CHAPTER XIV.

Light from Darkness.

Early in the morning Curran arose after a night filled with restless dreams. His first care was to inquire whether Mashkaugan had returned. When he learned that the man had been gone during the whole night he was greatly disturbed.

As happens with most individuals who are engaged in iniquitous schemes, the chief agent felt that all men's hands might suddenly be raised against him. What business had the hunchback to be away from the post without permission? He was in the company's pay and under the agent's orders.

It really looked as if the fellow were concocting some queer scheme of his own. Most likely, however, he was still hunting for the child.

Curran was greatly disappointed at his failure to find the baby, but he took it with a certain degree of equanimity. After all, he had meant to get rid of it at some time or other. If it was gone for good so much the better. Yet he saw trouble with prying lawyers who might insist on valid proofs of the child's death, or, at any rate, on reliable circumstantial evidence.

"After all," he cogitated, "I should have little trouble in satisfying them. I'm smart enough to find some way out of it. That fool Scarface was angrier than I thought. I suppose he drank more of that stuff when he went ashore with the baby, and at the last moment he decided to take it farther and let it die. Or else he took it to some Indian, hoping to get a reward for it later on."

With this idea, Curran began again to worry a good deal. He was calm one moment and excited the next.

"If that kid is still alive, it may turn up some day and cause a peck of trouble. All the Indians will know who he is. What I've got to do is to marry that girl just as soon as I can and take her south with the spring brigade—or even on a special trip."

"I'll find some way to keep silence about the child; I can persuade Ameeo to keep her mouth shut about it after I'm her husband. Then I'll get to work about that money, and as soon as I lay my hands on it I'll get out of the country."

"The world's full of good places where a man can have a good time with lots of cash and no one to know him; but I'd give ten skins to find out what that fellow Mashkaugan is up to."

He busied himself that morning with odd matters requiring his attention around the post, though he constantly interrupted his work to look over the river lest the hunchback might be returning.

He had made up his mind to teach that fellow something, for he was getting too cheeky altogether. A good beating would do a lot of good, yet when Curran thought about administering the punishment an uneasy feeling came to him that it might be easier to think of than to accomplish.

"Of course, he's the very juice of a fighter. I bet those big monkey arms of his would come near busting a bear's ribs, and even if he was whipped he'd always be looking for a chance to get square. But something's got to happen to him, for he knows too much. Some day I'll plug him full of lead in a corner where no one will ever look for him. Who would have thought he'd turn so rusty after that—that White Rapids business? Wonder if he's got an idea I'm not going to deal square with him?"

The forenoon passed slowly. The more Curran thought the shorter his temper grew. He stormed at old Cyrien and his wife, and roared at some Indians who had dropped some fish off near the landing-place on the river.

"Here! You fellows clean this up! Do you think I'm going to have all this mess around here? Set your kids at it, and don't let me catch you doing such things again, or you'll see what debt I'll allow you next week when you start off trapping!"

When among the tents and scolded about real or fancied grievances until the Indians were merrily and casting evil glances in his direction.

Finally one, more decided than the rest, went up to him. The man was a six-footer, who could juggle with hundred-pound bags of flour.

"We know what is right," he said; "we were not through with cleaning our fish. Yellow Hair taught us the proper way, and we did what he said, because he was a man talking to men. Now we shall do as we please, or thou canst look for us a long time before we will bring thee our fur."

Curran's first impulse was to knock the man down but he thought better. In the first place he would probably get badly mauled, and it would be a serious matter to have the Indians turn against him.

Curran turned on his heels and went off toward the river, anxious to look again for any sign of Mashkaugan's return. He was glad to find that a canoe was in sight.

"Three where Mashkaugan got the others? But, no; this is a long-traveling canoe. Sure enough, it must be Father Gregoire."

"Hey!" he shouted. "Here is the old Father White Beard returning—the Manitou Hino of the white men. Burn some powder, you fellows! Show him a welcome! Be on hand to help him and unload his canoe!"

He was very eager to show the old priest much attention. A few young men discharged, and the loud detonation of Father Gregoire's ancient fowling-piece resounded.

Presently the good man landed, smiling at every one, his kindly, gleamed old face bespeaking his pleasure.

"I will only stay until the morning," he said. "I must soon hurry north to James Bay, where I am to winter. Already at night the dead waters are beginning to firm over with ice, and I don't want to be frozen in on the way. Are there any children new born or dead whose souls are to be prayed for? Any couples awaiting marriage?"

Ameeo had come from her tent and stood near the old man.

"There is one man who is dead and whose soul needs thy praying," she said. "Yellow Hair, my husband, whom the white people called Lorimer, is dead. My child, also I have lost."

The missionary placed his hand on her shoulder.

"Indeed, my poor daughter, I will pray for them," he assured her. "Also will I pray for thy comfort in thy bereavement."

Curran then took the old man into the post building, bidding him sit in the best chair, and ordering food to be prepared at once.

"I have it in mind, father," he began, "that there are people across the seas belonging to Lorimer who would be glad to hear that prayers have been offered for his soul. Would you give me a little paper telling that you have done so, which I will send to those who will mourn for him?"

"I believe his people are not of our faith," said the priest.

"Yet they may be, nevertheless," insisted Curran. "Here is my pen and pen and ink. If the pen is too rusty there are plenty of good wild-geese quills."

"Prayers are prayers, by whomsoever offered," said the missionary. "It is true that his people may be made happy knowing that we all had kindly thoughts of their dead."

After much searching in the many pockets of his coat, the old man found his spectacles and wrote as follows:

My friend Lorimer, was a very good man, whose kindness and gentleness of character I had several opportunities of appreciating in the last forty years. He had also endeared himself to the Indians. His wife is left very desolate, and needs consolation. I have prayed for the soul of Lorimer and of his little son, whom I hear is also dead. Also I shall pray that those he leaves behind may be comforted now and granted peace, everlasting in the greater life to come.

FATHER GREGOIRE.

"Send this paper to the young man's friends," he said. "It can do no harm, and may in some measure serve to alleviate their grief."

Curran folded it carefully and locked it up in a box where he kept a few other papers and trinkets. It was a good document to have, serving at least to some extent, as proof of the death of the man and his child. To any but the most prying it must be good corroborative evidence.

"The young woman is a widow," said Curran as they sat down to eat. "She is a fine young woman and used to better care than she can have among her own people. I would like to acquire the right to care for her and look out for her old father, for the man is old and cannot hunt much longer, and yet has young children. I have spoken to him, and find that he is not averse. I want very much to marry Ameeo."

"But this is surely very soon," objected the missionary, "and I am very certain that this young woman is still sore distressed at her loss. She, also, willing I must say that I should be surprised if she were."

"Here savior cannot be judged altogether from the standpoint of white people, father," said Curran hurriedly.

"Since I was a young man I have traveled much among that people of many countries," replied the priest. "Everywhere I have found that heathen surface manhood and womanhood are much the same in all races. Everywhere there are souls to save and suffering to be relieved. I shall speak to the young woman. I do not intend to seek to dissuade her, as another marriage might be best for her and her people; yet I must learn the true state of her mind."

He was looking at Curran authoritatively. The agent's eyes lowered. Curran now considered that he had been in too great a hurry. What he thought a help might turn out to be a hindrance. There was something in the old man's clear blue eyes that disconcerted him; they seemed to penetrate into his soul and see things that must at all costs remain concealed.

The two were eating silently, for men of the wilderness grow chary of conversation from mere lack of practice. The priest ignored his food, while Curran sometimes forgot to eat, so worrying were his thoughts. He seemed to be traveling on a road that was constantly filled with obstructions.

The repast was soon over. Father Gregoire arose, giving thanks, and went out among the tents. An Indian child directed him to that of Nimissuts.

"Peace be with you all," he said to the chief's wife, who met him at the entrance. "May I come in?"

"He was made welcome, for all the Indians loved him, even those he had not yet been able to rather entirely to his fold. They knew him to be a good man, always eager to help and succor, knowing a little of medicine, and ever ready to give advice."

Ameeo had been sitting in the tent, but she arose when the priest entered.

"I thank thee for coming," she said. "Indeed, I am happy for the prayers thou art going to say. It seems to me that thy voice will be harkened to, and that good may come. Sit here, good father, on this caribou skin."

Nimissuts greeted him, and the young children kept very still, looking at the long white beard with much interest. It always was a sight that puzzled them.

It took but few questions to show the priest that the thought of a second marriage was abhorrent to the young woman. When he mentioned it she bent her head hopelessly, as if she thought him, also in league with the powers that were treating her so harshly.

"The man Curran wants to marry me," she finally said. "If my child were alive I might be willing, because it might have helped my little one to become a man like his father. But now there is only the thought of Nimissuts, my father, and his wife, with the little ones. I must do it if my father insists, but I have it in mind that death would be a better thing for me."

After supper that evening, Father Gregoire went across to see Ameeo. The interior of the tent was dark, for night was falling fast.

"The young woman was sobbing bitterly, and the old man took one of her hands.

"I wish now to hear all that has happened," said Father Gregoire. "I want to know everything that I may the better advise thee. As to thy marrying Curran unless the wish to do so is in thy heart it would be a shameful thing."

The words came very slow at first. Ameeo's heart was near to breaking when she spoke of her hopes of the home-coming of her man, and when she told of the joy that had been hers at the birth of little Yellow Hair. Then she related the news of the awful disaster in the White Rapids, and of the disappearance of the child and her vain quest.

"Oh, father!" she cried. "Thou art the Manitou Hino of the white people, and the words thou speakest to thy Manitou are answered sometimes—thou hast said. Speak to Him now, and ask Him to relieve my pain and be good to the spirit of Yellow Hair, my husband and give me back my little one if he still be living!"

She knelt imploringly before him. Then the others, also, knelt in silence. Nimissuts listened, profoundly impressed, and the wife and children watched in wonder.

The priest's voice rose in rapid utterance of prayers for the dead and in slower words of consolation for the living. After these came more broken, halting sentences, in which the missionary implored mercy for the poor broken reed at his feet and humbly begged divine compassion, whereby her awful burden might be lightened.

The priest's spoken prayers were ended, yet his hands were still joined together and his lips moved.

Then, outside the tent, and very near, the subdued cry of a wailing infant was heard.

The flap of the tent was opened and a great pair of shoulders surmounted by a deeply lined head became darkly limned against the rising glow of the soft-moonlight.

The man entered, bearing something in his arms.

"Here is thy little man-child that was lost," he said. "I have brought him to thee with a message."

But Ameeo had not listened. There came from her a wild cry, a staggering effort to rise to her feet and grasp her treasure.

Her head bent over the precious thing whose tiny face was soon covered with its mother's tears. The little head was pressed to the bosom that had suffered such agony and to the heart that had been so overburdened.

Mashkaugan kept silent, and so did all the others. They were amazed at the swift answer to the missionary's beseeching words.

Finally Ameeo looked up with a wonderful deep sigh of happy relief. "Didst thou speak of a message, Mashkaugan?" she asked.

"The message is that one is very ill in whom thou art greatly concerned. He cries out thy name, fearing to die without beholding thee."

"There is no one in the world in whom I am concerned," he cried, "now that my little Yellow Hair is given back to me."

"There is one, Ameeo," repeated the hunchback. "His lips have touched those of the little child, who had also rested in his arms. He bids thee come to him, for ever in his sickness he is crying out for thee and despairing because thou art not near. Indeed, the man I thought dead has come to life."

Swiftly the hunchback clasped his hand over the young woman's mouth.

To Be Continued.

Savage's Love of Medicine.

Mrs. F. Rowling, medical missionary at Gayaza Uganda, tells many stories in the Strand Magazine about her patients and their implicit faith in the skill and knowledge of "the white medicine-woman." What she has to say on the matter is as amusing as it is interesting and instructive, and serves to illustrate a curious trait of the savage mind that has been commented upon by travelers in practically all parts of the world—namely, the keen delight which natives take in sampling the white man's drugs. It matters not whether the subject be well or ill, or whether the medicine be palatable or nauseous, they must have it if it is to be obtained.

"The native patients," writes Mrs. Rowling, "are most amusing in the implicit faith they have in the maseo (doctor), as they call Miss Polgrim, the dispenser here. Anything she likes to give them they take, but many of them cannot yet see how a pain in the head can be cured by swallowing a pill, and would much prefer to rub the pill on the place affected. One day we visited a woman with a bad pain in her ear. We gave her two pills to swallow, but instead of doing so she proceeded to drop them into her ear. Another tried to put her medicine up her nostrils!"

DOGS IN GERMANY.

Some Are Harnessed to Four-Wheel Trucks and Work With a Man.

The dachshund is the favorite dog in Germany, and a very useful and pleasant companion he seems to be. The English bulldog is a good second in popularity, and the nearer he is to our standard points the better he is liked. The fox terrier varies a good deal in size and marking and is evidently not so well known in Germany as he deserves to be.

The ladies there are as fond of their little Poms and their King Charleses as are their English sisters of their pet dogs at home.

Some few dogs in the streets are harnessed to four-wheeled trucks. Usually a man and a dog pull. The work seems too heavy and exhausting for the dogs, which are generally mongrels of the mastiff type. They look in fair condition and are not ill treated.

OLDEST WHITE MAN IN UNITED STATES

This is Thomas Morris, Who is Vigorous at 121 Years of Age on His Farm in Nebraska

WAS BORN IN 1794 IN WALES

Never Attended School, Never Married and Only Gave Up Physical Work Five Years Ago—Was a Butcher in His Boyhood.

OMAHA.—Thomas Morris, of Waterville, Neb., has lived through the terms of every President of the United States and most of the big historic events of the past 120 years, and is still vigorous on a Nebraska farm. In a few months he will be 121 years old, and is believed to be the oldest white man in the United States, and in all probability the oldest in the world.

He has lived in three centuries. He was three when Washington's term as President closed. This connects him with the administrations of every president of the United States.

Mr. Morris was aged one year when the famous trial of Warren Hastings closed, and was aged 11 when Nelson won Trafalgar. He lived in the period of the Napoleonic wars, and reached his majority six months before Waterloo was fought. He has seen the reigns of George III, George IV., William IV., Victoria, Edward VII., and the present king. He was aged 38 when the reform bill was signed, aged 64 when the first Atlantic cable was laid, aged 67 when Fort Sumter surrendered, and more than three score and ten when Lincoln was assassinated.

Morris was born January 21, 1794, at Bellefleur, Montgomeryshire, Wales. His father's name was Thomas Morris. He was a laborer, and died when Thomas was aged three. His mother's name was Elizabeth Davis Morris, and she lived until 1863. Thomas had no sisters, but one brother named Charles, who died in 1861.

He never attended school and never married. In his boyhood, he was apprenticed to a butcher and worked at this trade for eight or 10 years. But on account of a crippled foot he had to change his work and was apprenticed to a shoemaker.

About five years ago he gave up work altogether. Up to six years ago he made almost daily walks of one and a half miles to Clear Creek in Custer county to fish. This sport was his principal diversion from toil. Mr. Morris still has the use of his faculties. His eyesight is remarkable.

Mr. Morris takes tea or coffee at all meals and upon retiring takes to his bedroom a quart of tea or coffee, which he drinks during the night.

Forty-seven years ago a lad named Charles Mython went to live with Mr. Morris, then 73, and from that time the two have been inseparable companions.

In 1871 they left Wales and emigrated to America, arriving in Chicago the Sunday following the great fire. They located in Blackstone, Livingston county, Illinois, where they resided until 1872, when they moved to New Hampshire, Harrison county, Missouri. Here they lived until 1886, when they moved to a farm four miles southeast of Westerville, and a few years later moved on an adjoining farm, where they now live.

WOULDN'T ROB WOMEN.

Discriminating Bandits on a California Train.

LOS ANGELES.—Posses in automobiles scoured all the highways hereabouts seeking traces of two masked men who robbed the Southern Pacific fast northbound train No. 75 near Burbank, 11 miles north of here.

Receipts of the robbery amounted to $550, with some jewelry. The fact that it was the second train robbery at the same place within two months made the authorities especially anxious to capture the bandits. The previous robbery netted some $3,200.

This latest affair was confined to the observation car. The robbers, masked and carrying sawed-off shot guns and revolvers, swung aboard the rear end of the train.

The woman in the car was told to keep her money and jewelry. Twenty-five men were robbed in a few minutes and the bandits pulled the bell cord and dropped off at a station four miles further up the line.

Nothing can be urged against some men but their regularity and the fact that they are never in the wrong.

POPULARITY OF THE BELGIUM KING

He Takes an Active and Sincere interest in the Welfare of His People

NOT BELGIAN BY BOND OF BLOOD

His Democratic Instincts and Practices, Personal and Official, Have Greatly Endearred Him to the People—His Wife Also Popular

LONDON.—The brilliant soldierly record of King Albert of the Belgians during the European war astonished the world no less than the bravery of the Belgian soldiers in defending Liege from the Germans. Neither the soldiers of Belgium nor their king had any particular reputation as warriors before the war. Germany did not anticipate such unflinching courage and stubborn resistance as they gave her, and England and France did not expect that they would show themselves so capable in fighting.

Belgium has belonged to the Belgians only since 1839, when the people carried out a successful revolution against Holland, by whom they had been ruled.

King Albert does not belong to the Belgians by any bond of blood. He is the grandson of the first king of the Belgians, a German prince from Saxecoburg-Gotha, who was invited to rule as Leopold I. His sovereignty lasted for 34 years. The sovereignty of his son, Leopold II, lasted for 44 years. That of his grandson, King Albert, began only in 1909. Belgium has been prosperous and united under their rule. Each sovereign identified himself thoroughly with his subjects and gave his life to his adopted country so completely that the royal family of Belgium is considered by the Belgians themselves as Belgian.

King Albert and Queen Elizabeth had to sacrifice their nearest and dearest family ties to remain loyal to Belgium during the war. Both are as German as centuries of German blood can make them.

King Albert's mother was Princess Marie of Hohenzollern, of the family of the Kaiser. His sister is the wife of Prince Charles of Hohenzollern, the Kaiser's kinsman, who lives in Berlin not far from the royal palace.

King Albert is 39 years old and Queen Elizabeth a year younger. Many Americans have met the king. It is only 16 years ago that he was here for a visit of several months, which extended over the whole country. He had dinner in Washington with President and Mrs. McKinley.

He and the queen have been democratic, easily accessible to all classes of society, and they have become popular that the Socialists, who used to demand a republic for Belgium, are now seldom heard from. Their court is unusually simple and free from ostentation, while both the king and queen have tried to discountenance extravagant display in costumes as well as extreme styles in dressing. A few months ago, when the wife of a wealthy man appeared at a court ball attired in the transparent robes of the latest Parisian mode, and with a jeweled bracelet at her knees, she was quietly requested by the queen to go home. The court at Brussels has been visited by many foreigners during King Albert's reign, and it is considered one of the most delightful courts of Europe.

STRAYED—NOT STOLEN.

A Mother Who Thought Her Kid Had Been Nabbed.

PITTSBURGH.—Della Goldberg, aged 4, caused a motion picture show in Fifth avenue to be temporarily closed and secret service operatives to become active when the report spread that she had been kidnapped. The little girl left the movies while the room was dark, and discovering her absence at a time the mother cried out "Kidnapped."

After an hour's work the officers found Della asleep in the home of a woman in Stevenson street, near Forbes. The woman found her crying on the street and had taken her home.

LONDON IS EXCITED; FEARS AERIAL ATTACK FROM ANTWERP

There has been much uneasiness in London since Antwerp fell into German hands. It is but 180 miles from Antwerp to London, and a German aerial attack now seems more within the possibilities than ever before. Count Zeppelin and his staff are busy at Wilhelmshaven, 400 miles from London, with their plans for an aerial raid on England.

British strategists insist that little injury could result from such a raid. To guard against the possibility of an air attack, captive balloons equipped with search lights and machine guns will hover over London until the danger is past.

MICHIGAN NEWS

SUPREME COURT WORKS IN SPIRIT OF COLUMBUS DAY

Justices Keep at it in Lansing When Everything Else But Governor's Office is Closed.

Lansing, Mich.—Those people in Michigan who are for the judicial recall, and who think that the courts in general are loafing propositions, would have been treated to a surprise had they been in Lansing on the 12th of all state departments, with the sole exception of the governor's office, the supreme court was the only one that was "on the job."

Columbus day is a legal state holiday, yet the supreme court, busy with the argument of cases on the regular list, kept pounding away, trying to get rid of the cases listed for this term. Business there went on as if there had been no Columbus, and no legislative law-making holiday.

Otherwise the capital was closed tight in honor of the well-known Mr. Columbus. The governor's office was open, as always happens on holidays. The rest of the offices were shut, up tight, although a deputy appeared in nearly all of them early in the morning to open the mail.

Milan, Mich.—Because his divorced wife, Mary Lutz, 31 years old, refused to remarry him, Frank Lutz, a Hungarian molder, shot her twice with a revolver today, wounding her so she will die, and then gave himself up to Sheriff Renier of Monroe.

Krzysz, who is 23 years old, appeared at the home of Mary Spaulding, where his divorced wife was employed, and demanded that she marry him again.

When she refused he drew a revolver and shot her twice, one bullet lodging above her heart and the other passing through her right shoulder.

CHARGE BRANCH COUNTY VETERINARY IS "QUACK."

State Live Stock Officials Have Warrant Issued for Arrest of H. E. Pfening.

Lansing, Mich.—The state live stock and sanitary commission issued a warrant against H. E. Pfening, a Branch county veterinary, alleged to be a "quack," for contributing to the cholera epidemic now on in that locality.

He is specifically charged with practicing without a state license. The state government and agricultural college experts have been busy in Branch county for some time experimenting on the hogs with a new serum produced by the United States government. They have found, they say, that Pfening, as a veterinary, treated some hogs for their owners and only made matters worse.

The matter was taken up by the commission and it was decided to stop his practicing, if nothing else.

The commission with the government experts will begin the same sort of fight against the cholera in St. Joseph county within the next few days. Meetings for the organization of the farmers and hog owners to turn the work over to the experts are now being held.

A New Oldsmobile for $1285

Come In and See This Car

This year there is a new Oldsmobile. Naturally it stands where all Oldsmobiles of past years have stood—in that small group of leaders, five or six at the most, which have constantly made surpassing quality the all-important consideration.

For the past two years there has been an insistent call for a smaller, lighter Oldsmobile, with the characteristic completeness and refinement of the big Oldsmobile "Six."

At last it is accomplished. The new Oldsmobile is now ready for your inspection. You are invited to call and mark the difference between this car and the host of ordinary machines that sell for almost the price of this Oldsmobile masterpiece.

Priced in Your Favor. When this new "Four" was announced only a few months ago, a price of $1350 was decided upon and so advertised. But the demand was underestimated. The tremendous ovation that greeted the new car meant only one thing: Big Quantity Production. Building in thousands where it was thought hundreds would suffice, a price of $1285 can be afforded. This saving of $65 goes to you, where it justly belongs.

This is a genuine Oldsmobile—in construction, in finish, in completeness of detail and equipment. It is an aristocrat in appearance and performance.

True Oldsmobile Quality. Look at "The Greatest Six-Cylinder Car in America" through a Wide, 92-inch door. new Oldsmobile "Four." You will find the same grace and beauty springs, balanced perfectly, absorb road shocks and vibration. Cast aluminum foot and running boards; extra large gasoline tank fastened to main frame in rear. Concealed tool box, standard tool kit, tire pump and jack. Extra strong artillery wheels of solid hickory, twelve spokes front and rear, natural finish. Jiffy curtains; cape top with boot; fire iron at rear. Shipping weight only 2465 pounds.

Its low center of gravity makes it seem to "hug the ground," yet it has ample road clearance.

The Motor of Motors. American and European engineers agree to the unmistakably superior efficiency of the compact, small bore four-cylinder motor with overhead valves, for a car of this weight.

The unit power plant of the new Oldsmobile is of this modern type—four cylinders, measuring 3 1/2 x 3, cast en bloc, three point suspension. All valves are enclosed and all working parts covered. Here is a quiet motor with specially designed Oldsmobile silencer—a motor of great flexibility, equally delightful for city or country driving.

Come and Pass Your Opinion on This Car. This is unmistakably the car for the man who seeks distinction without prohibitive cost—who demands in the car of his selection all that "Oldsmobile" has meant since motor cars were first built.

By good luck we have persuaded the Olds Motor Works to allot a few of these new cars to this territory. No matter what price you are thinking of paying for a car, do not fail to examine the Oldsmobile, first. The most important points of its superiority can only be appreciated by a demonstration.

Oldsmobile $1285. With Complete Equipment, Including Delco Starting and Lighting System.
