WHAT'S DOING IN POLITICS

KELLEY HAD BIG CROWD HERE; FERRIS IN BIG RECEPTION AT PLYMOUTH.

Kelley, Warner and Kaufman.
Politics may be said to be living up around here, especially in congressional and state affairs.
The band was out Saturday night and helped liven things up for Congressman P. H. Kelley and ex-Governor Warner in their talks on national and local affairs. About 600 gathered about the walks and the automobiles, when the congressman commenced speaking and they all stayed to the end. Mr. Kelley confined his remarks almost entirely to the tariff question and received a splendid reception.

Ex-Governor Warner, who was present, also was called on and he made a very interesting talk on his observations of the working-out of the tariff and spoke of his personal observations, and of the numerous men out of employment because of its effect on business. The governor paid a pretty compliment to Ed Gayde of Plymouth, the Republican nominee for the legislature from this district and urged a hearty support for that hustling business man from our neighboring village.

Following Governor Warner Mr. Kaufman of Chicago, spoke in the interests of the laboring men and fraternal organizations against the proposed fraternal insurance amendment to be voted on Nov. 3. Mr. Kaufman said the amendment was dangerous to all holders of insurance policies.

Governor Ferris.

A large delegation went from here Wednesday afternoon by automobile to Plymouth to help give Governor Ferris a welcome. Several hundred from Northville added to the thousands from Plymouth and vicinity packed the hall there beyond its capacity.

Governor Ferris made one of his characteristic speeches, full of humor, spiked with some sharp thrusts at his opponent, ex-Governor Osborn. He challenged any one to show where he had neglected his duty in any way. The audience was enthusiastic and it numbered as many republicans, or more, as democrats.

JUDGE DUFFEE HIGHLY ENDORSES JUDGE HULBERT

Edgar O. Duffee, veteran Judge of the Probate Court, has come out with an endorsement of his two colleagues, Judges Hulbert and Hanley, the one a Republican and the other a Democrat, and commends them to the electors on the ground of their personal fitness for the work. Although a staunch Republican himself, the judge takes the ground that a court which is established for the protection of the widow and orphans should not be made a political machine, "and it never will be if I can help it," he says.
"Judge Hulbert has been on the bench over five years, taking charge of the juvenile division and, until Judge Hanley was appointed, taking a large part of the work in the Probate division. He still takes the inheritance work in addition to his juvenile work. He is thoroughly posted and competent, and does his work in a most conscientious manner."—Adv.

LOTT-LAURAY.

Miss Ethel Lauray, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lauray of this place, and Ray Lott of Portland were united in marriage at the former's home on Thursday evening of last week. Rev. R. M. Pease performed the ceremony at which only relatives were present. Mr. and Mrs. Earl Lauray attended the bridal couple.

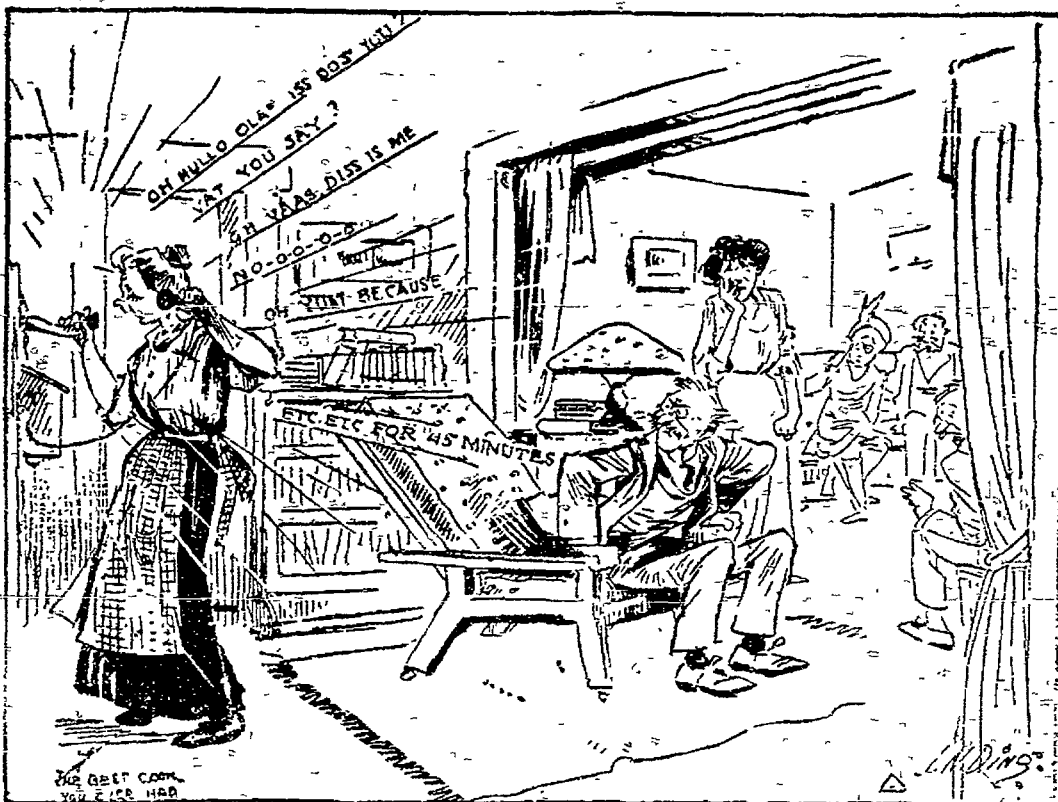

The bride was attractively gowned in embroidered voile combined with white satin. She is a graduate of the Northville High school in 1911 and has taught school in the Thayer district the past two years.

A wedding supper was served at the conclusion of the ceremony.

Returning Saturday from a brief motor-trip, Mr. and Mrs. Lott were honor guests at a reception given by the bride's parents.

They will be at home to friends Nov. 15 at Lansing where the groom has apostrophe as salesman for the Lawrence Bread Co.

THE WORLD'S GREATEST PROBLEM IN DIPLOMACY.

KILLED BY RAILROAD TRAIN

FREE RIDER ON FREIGHT FELL BETWEEN CARS NEAR WIXOM.

BADLY CUT TO PIECES; IDENTITY IS STILL UNKNOWN.

The early morning train from the north on Saturday brought here the mangled body of a man whom the crew stopped the train and picked up about three miles north of Wixom. He had evidently fallen from a freight train upon which he was looking a ride. The body was terribly mangled, the fingers and feet being badly crushed and the upper portion of the head completely severed.

The body was taken to Schrader's morgue where it remained unidentified. The coroner's inquest was held Monday and the man was buried in the Potter's field in Rural Hill Tuesday.

The coroner's verdict was in keeping with the above statement, but brought nothing new to light. The man was about 45 years of age, 175 lbs in weight, comfortably dressed, smooth face and black hair. The only thing found on his person was a comb and a piece of soap.

TABERNACLE MTGS NEARING CLOSE

THE OUTCOME PROMISES TO BE VERY PLEASANT.

The Tabernacle meetings which will probably close next Sunday night, have been a great success, both in point of attendance and spiritually. Last Sunday's was probably the most interesting meeting held, it being estimated that over 1,000 were present. The High school were special guests at the meeting on Friday night of last week and helped liven things up by giving class plays and songs under the leadership of Yellmaster Kestell.

The street meetings under the direction of Alf Allen, ex-pugilist, who is now carrying on evangelistic work in various parts of the country, drew big crowds. The noon meetings at the factories and cottage prayer meetings are also doing much good work.

Over 100 collections have been made and it is expected that by Sunday night the number will reach 200 or more.

Rev. Ira Hicks, who has charge of the services, certainly has conducted them in an able manner and has won hundreds of friends for himself as well as for the splendid work he has done. He has been ably assisted in his efforts by local pastors Webber, Pierce and Brass and by Messrs. Cheek and Knight who have been in charge of the music.

CARD OF THANKS.

We wish to express our sincere thanks to our friends and neighbors who so kindly assisted us during the death and burial of our beloved father and husband, Charles Whipple. We especially desire to thank the minister for his comforting words; the singers and music furnished; the benevolent order of Knights of Pythias, the High school and Sixth grade, and also the ladies of the various churches for beautiful flowers.

MRS. CHARLES WHIPPLE AND FAMILY.

ED GAYDE OF PLYMOUTH FOR REPRESENTATIVE

Every person in Northville, whether Democrat, Progressive or Republican, need have no hesitation in voting for Ed Gayde of Plymouth for Representative in the State Legislature at the November election. Mr. Gayde can be depended upon to faithfully and well represent the people of the Third District. He is an honored citizen and a prominent and hustling business man of our sister town of Plymouth and has always been dependable, faithful, progressive and the possessor of a reputation beyond reproach.

Two years ago Northville can not be said to have been faithfully represented in the Legislature, when the township was allowed to be gerrymandered over into the 6th Congressional district without the consultation of a single citizen so far as can be learned, and without a single protest. Mr. Downey of Romulus was the Representative at that time and he was very remiss apparently in his duties to his constituency in that respect. We do not know as the people of Northville object now to being in the 6th district but at least they should have been consulted.

Mr. Gayde can be depended upon to look after every township in his district with equal faithfulness and fairness.

USE LANTERN OR TORCH.

Interurban Local Car Patrons Should Not Depend Upon Electric Lights.

Attention is called to the fact that at the points along the interurban lines where local cars make stops on signal, at which individuals have placed electric lights, these lights are not a sufficient signal to the motormen to stop their cars. The lighted globes are not always clearly seen by the motormen and frequently they are left burning when there are no intending passengers. In view of these facts it is suggested to interurban patrons of local cars that they continue the use of the swinging lantern or torch as a signal to stop. In so doing they will obviate the possibility of cars running beyond them because of insufficient signals.—D. U. R. News.

Lansing, Mich., Oct. 29.—If Coach Macklin, of M. A. C. and Coach Vest, of the U. of M., will consent to keep their teams in training after the regular schedules have been played an effort will be made to bring the Aggies and Whites to a battle here.

Thanksgiving day. Whether the two coaches would consent to another big battle the latter part of November is a question. Neither has been approached on the subject, but the proposition was favorably discussed on the grounds of the two institutions and it was generally agreed that another battle between the Aggies and Whites, would draw a crowd of 50,000 fans but fans from all sections of the middle west.

Last year when the Aggie and the Michigan football teams played a second game played a battle of hundreds of alumni were disappointed. However, it is said that the two coaches will be approached on the subject this year and that attempts will be made to have the game played at Ann Arbor Thanksgiving day.

decided to cut the appropriation asked for by the county road commission in 1910, and there seems to be a growing sentiment to cancel the new 1915 work altogether. The commission asked for $35,000.

Dinner Stories

—Last year, 29, when the speaker Cannon was a plain member, he took some of his constituents to dine with him at a rather good hotel in Washington. It was in the fall and Mr. Cannon ate very heartily of that American edible, sweet corn, in fact, almost his entire dinner consisted of corn. The waiter looked at him and said: "Say, Mr. Cannon, what does it cost you to board here?" "About $3 a day," said Mr. Cannon. "I'll be damned," growled his constituent, "I don't think it would be cheaper for you to board at a livery stable."

A canvasser stepped briskly up to Mr. Meekens' desk and laid a small article close to his right hand. "I have here a new letter opener," he said. "A handsome article to be kept on the table of your library, and—" "Pardon me," interrupted Mr. Meekens, without turning his head, "but I have already the best letter opener and the quickest." "How long have you had it?" persisted the canvasser. "You know there are constant improvements always being introduced." "Mine couldn't be improved," responded Meekens. "I've had her for about two years now—anniversary of the wedding next month."

"I should think that sometimes you sailors would get dreadfully homesick," remarked the sweet young thing to the first officer of the Bright Star boat Quadratic.

NEW KIND OF PNEUMATIC TIRE

A new kind of rubber automobile tire has appeared in Paris. It is called "Non-puncturable."

Instead of being a rubber tube inflated with air, this tire has the air blown into the rubber, in very small bubbles, during the process of manufacture. It is never necessary to inflate the tire afterwards. If a tire is pierced by a nail, the damage is done, for only a very small quantity of air escapes.

The Fifth grade has chosen for one of their mottos: "Each One Do Right," adopting E O D R. as their emblem. On Monday morning all were pleasantly surprised to see these initial letters on the blackboard in Old English form and in colors, by Lawrence VanValkenburg of the High school drawing class.

We guarantee that our pictures will never fade. C. O. Wisdom, Photographer.

When the furnace fire must be started in the fall, one may find that the pipes are rusted in spots and unsafe to use. By applying strips of wet asbestos paper on the hot pipes the paper will adhere closely and so seal the pipes. This has been found a great economy, as the furnace pipes last a year longer without repairing them than they otherwise would.

It requires but a few minutes each day to fortify the system against such dread diseases as Rheumatism or Bright's disease.

Impaired action of the kidneys is a forerunner of the two diseases, and if prompt and effective treatment is not begun it often means either of the two.

The time required to take a few doses of

AT BIG LOON POST

Synopsis.

Mayor Curran, agent of the Hudson Bay Company's Big Loon Post, is about to start back there with supplies. He learns that Lorimer, an Englishman, and his assistant, who has married Ameon, an Indian. He sees the death notice of Lorimer's wealthy uncle, and reads a letter just arrived for Lorimer that he has an interest in the will. Curran reasons that if Lorimer should die, the money would be his wife's, then he could marry her himself and get it.

Curran sends Lorimer and Mashkaugan on an exploring trip and the Indian pushes Lorimer into the rapids and leaves him for dead. During his absence Lorimer's son is born.

Mashkaugan comes back with news of Lorimer's death.

But the white man is not dead. With much difficulty he makes his way back, and just before reaching the camp of Atuk, an Indian, he finds a white baby left alone in the woods.

Curran meanwhile has schemed to have Scarface, an Indian, play a trick on Ameon by taking her baby into the woods and leaving him for Curran to bring back.

Immediately after the discovery of her loss, Ameon starts in her canoe to look for the child. The frightened and repentant Mashkaugan accompanies her. They find the place where the baby was left, but he is gone now. The superstitious guide is frightened away by the sight of Lorimer.

Mashkaugan goes back alone to get the baby and is rescued from drowning by Lorimer. The Indians take care of them both, and the baby.

"No! Do not cry out! In silence must thou come! There is one whom I do not want here. In silence must we depart. We will start at once, for I can travel but slowly, having done my utmost to get here swiftly and lay thy little one on thy breast. I must have a few moments' rest, for I am nearly done."

"My two kids are strong," said Father Gregoire. "I will call them at once and we will start in the canoe. I can paddle, also."

In a very short time they were afloat on the now placid river, paddling down the scintillating path of moon-rays.

For a time Mashkaugan rested quietly, like one who knows he has done all that can be asked of the things of a man; but after a while he felt strong again and once more took up his broad paddle.

Ameon was kneeling in the bow, with the precious little bundle of humanity lying before her, comfortably ensconced in the narrow point. She also, was paddling with a magnificent sweep of her arms, and behind her the missionary, the hunchback, and the two men followed her stroke.

The canoe dashed ahead so fast that the thwarts groaned against the long bindings of spruce root, and the thin cedar ribs cracked and the birch-bark complained. The breaths of the strong men began to come out in sobbing grunts, as when one smites with all his force with a rune-pound ax.

Thus they heard nothing of the splashing of muskies or the cries of nightbirds, none of the whispers of the gentle breeze through the reeds of the dead waters. The rapids were easy, and the craft flew upon them until the affluent river was reached, and the paddles struck the calmer water as with one blow.

At the outlet they were compelled to slow down for a moment. At this point the river curved sharply, and the canoe grated for a second on the sandbar until it passed on to deeper water.

"A journey to be remembered," whispered one of the priest's men. "We have traveled through the water as Uapishk, the wild goose, wings her way through the sky."

"They had reached the place of Atuk's fishing-camp, and ran into the beach between the high jutting rocks.

Leaping out, the men dragged the canoe ashore, and Ameon jumped out with her baby and followed Mashkaugan to the tent that was concealed among the trees.

"We will wait here," said Father Gregoire. "Too many mourners are bad in sorrow, too many witnesses also in happiness. We will pray here that the sick man may become well again, and then ye two may light your pipes. Soon I will go up and see whether I can do anything for this man who is so ill. Get me the little box of medicines from my pack."

In the meanwhile Ameon had entered the tent where a man was tossing upon blankets resting on balsam-boughs.

To the young wife neither the long hair nor the straggling beard, nor the face that was so worn with suffering, mattered a whit. She bent over and kissed them tenderly and reverently.

"Ameon! Ameon! My wife!" cried Lorimer without looking at her.

"I am here," she said softly, and then his eyes opened and he looked at her blissfully.

"I had such evil dreams—thou wert being taken away—away from me," he whispered hoarsely.

"I am with thee now—never to leave thee," she answered.

Lorimer smiled at her, and his head fell back contentedly in peaceful sleep.

CHAPTER XV.

Reaping the Whirlwind.

Quite late that evening Curran was turning over the pages of an old magazine. He was very restless. Finally he hurried the book recklessly across the room. This was unusual, for the slightest printed word is of the greatest value in the far wilderness, being commonly treated with the greatest respect.

"I wonder what that old sky-pilot is doing with himself?" he said. "He should have come in and gone to bed long ago. Likely he's found some Indian kid with a stomachache and is sitting up with him."

He consulted his watch—the only one within a radius of some hundreds of miles.

"Eleven o'clock! Hanged if I'm going to wait up any longer for him!"

He had gone to his room and was beginning to undress when he decided that he had better take a turn outside and see for himself whether he could find any explanation for the priest's absence.

He lit his pipe, and opened the door. Absolute silence reigned. For some minutes he listened for human utterances that would carry far in the still night, but heard nothing.

Then he went toward the tent of Nimissuts, his soft moccasins making no sound; but somewhere a dog began to growl. The ample snore of the old man assured him that the inmates were sleeping. The agent scratched his head.

"Seems pretty queer," he muttered, and moved off toward the landing-place, where many canoes were pulled upon the shore and could be clearly seen in the moonlight.

For a moment he searched among them, but could find no sign of the missionary's long, traveling canoe. Curran then uttered a curse.

"He's gone! That was a great trick to play on me. I suppose that devil of a girl told him she didn't care to marry me, or else he told her that he didn't approve of the marriage. Some day I'll get square with him for putting in his car that way—the old fool! He's just gone so that I can't be married now, and told her that no Indian marriage would be any good. Well, I'll take the best of him, anyway. I'll take her down in the spring and marry her when we get south."

He returned to the post, where he took a drink from his bottle of diluted alcohol before he sought his bunk and tossed restlessly all night. In the early morning came a few hours of sleep, and he awakened later than was his custom.

He clamored for his breakfast and questioned old Cyprion when he brought it to him.

"When did White Beard the Manitouling go away?" he asked. "I found last night that his canoe was gone."

"I saw this morning that it was no longer at the landing," answered the old fellow. "Yet he cannot have gone for a long time, because he was to take flour and kumash, the meat of pig. He cannot go to the great water in the north without more provisions, for he is nearly gone."

"That is so," agreed Curran. "I laid the stuff for him on the floor of the storeroom."

Investigation showed that the provisions were still there, untouched.

"Well, he isn't gone for good yet! Intends to come back soon, that's sure. Wonder what kind of a dodge he's up to now?"

Curran also inquired about Mashkaugan, but found that no one had seen him. Curran was growing more and more nervous, vaguely scenting something that might be affecting his plans.

He judged it best not to go to the old chief's tent, deeming it likely that the girl, after her conversation with the priest, might not be in a mood in which it would be best to talk with her.

He would have to get hold of Nimissuts alone. Inquiring for the chief, he learned that the old man had taken his gun and gone out on the barrens to try for a caribou.

During the next two days Curran made rather large inroads on his supply of strong drink and began to fume because the old priest had not returned. As for Mashkaugan, Curran heartily hoped he had broken his neck somewhere.

"Perhaps he's gone and made away with himself with all his crazy superstitions. I hope he has; 'twould be a good riddance of bad rubbish. Best thing he could have done."

Wandering over to the landing, he counted the canoes there—ten in all. A peculiar mark on one of them attracted his attention. This canoe had been there for a number of days, he felt sure, and looked like the others, so that he had hitherto paid no special attention to it.

Curran turned it over. There was no doubt it was Mashkaugan's.

The agent looked about him. An Indian squaw was coming down to the waterside, bearing a kettle she wanted to fill.

"How long's this canoe been here?" he asked.

The squaw looked at him in some surprise. To her these white men were beyond comprehension. The canoe had been there four days in all. Any one who had seen it once should have been able to recognize it at the merest glance. Here was a man who had never noticed it. Such blindness was amazing.

She held up one hand with four fingers outspread.

"Four days," she replied. "Time when Mashkaugan came in the night."

"Did you see him?"

"No see him," she replied. "Canoe gone and then canoe come back, so Mashkaugan here."

She shrugged her shoulders and went up the sloping bank, bearing her heavy black kettle.

Curran dashed off to the chief's tent. It suddenly struck him that he had not seen Ameon for some time. As a rule, she was always busy before the tent, over the cooking fire, or doing some of the endless jobs Indian women always find waiting for them. He must ask if she was ill or had disappeared.

"This time he laid aside the usual formality of asking for admittance. He found the old chief just returned with a big quarter of meat. The wife and children were also in the tent, but there was no sign of the young woman.

"Where's your daughter?" he demanded harshly.

The old man pointed to the north with his thumb.

"Gone away with White Beard, the Manitouling," he answered quietly. "Why didn't you tell me of this? I've been expecting all the time to see her. What are you hiding from me?"

"I hide nothing," replied the old chief. "You never ask me."

Curran swore loudly.

"Where have they gone? What do you know about all this? If you're trying to play tricks on me you'll go hungry this winter. Not a pound of flour will you get. You'll just take up your tent and your woman and the brats and get out of here. You knew I wanted Ameon for my wife, and now you've gone and sent her away, have you? You're going to have to deal with me now!"

He hammered the palm of his left hand with his fist, raging so that the children cowered in a corner of the tent; but the old man looked at him quietly, his serene and wrinkled face displaying not the slightest trace of emotion.

"Gone to camp of Atuk, the Nascaupce, on Many Heaver Lake," he answered. "Go look see, if you want."

But Curran had already dashed out of the tent, shouting: "Hurry! Hurry! Here! Akutek! Kaku! Hustle along here! Get my canoe ready at once and get your paddles! Run over to the post and get bread and meat and tea for a day or two! Never mind the cooking things, for we're going where we can burn our own!"

Hurry up, and don't keep me waiting, or I'll pull the pelt off you!"

He ran to the post, yelling orders to old Cyprion. From his room he took a pistol, which he stuck in his hip-pocket. He was mad all through, and felt that he was in the mood to hurt somebody.

"Let any of these chaps play any dog tricks on me and they'll get holes punched in them!" he exclaimed.

When he entered the canoe he also took a paddle. As a rule, he considered it beneath his dignity to work where there were men to do the sweating; for him, but now he was in a hurry.

In another minute they were afloat, and the canoe was going downstream at a good pace. The Indians seemed to work more easily than the agent, doubtless, they labored more effectively. But Curran was not satisfied with the speed, and kept urging them on ceaselessly.

"You men get confoundedly lazy, sitting around the post for the whole summer, doing nothing," he sneered. "I could have taken your two squaws and got a better gait out of them."

The Indians made no reply. Their faces remained impassive. Nevertheless, this sort of speech offended them deeply and they made a show of urging the canoe to greater speed.

Curran was too excited to notice it, and while they seemed to bend harder to their toil, the canoe distinctly lost headway.

It took them considerably over two hours to reach Many Heaver Lake. Atuk's camp was not visible from the outlet. The men did not know the exact spot where it was located.

They sniffed like moose scenting an enemy and looked carefully over the tree-tops at the margin of the lake. Then one of them pointed and the other nodded.

"Fire over there," he said.

Curran stared, seeing nothing; but he knew the ability of the Indians to smell smoke or to see a thin wisp of it far beyond the limits of a white man's vision.

It was not until they were halfway across the lake that he was able to distinguish curling above the dark firs and spruces a tiny column of smoke that rose above the trees.

When they landed the first person Curran saw was Father Gregoire, who was pacing up and down the little cleared space before the tent, reading his breviary. He came toward the agent, who approached him truculently.

"I am glad you have come," said the missionary pleasantly. "We are all rejoicing over many blessings. The man we had thought dead is now becoming well again. He has been very ill. It seems to me that you look angry over something, but you will dismiss all resentment when you discover what happiness lies before you and join us in the giving of thanks. This is a Sunday marked with felicity for all. Our hearts must hold only gratitude."

"What's all this rigmarole?" interrupted Curran brutally. "What I want to know is, what you've done with that girl?"

"Ameon has met with great happiness," answered the priest quietly. "She is duly grateful."

But Curran no longer heeded him. In his exasperation he roughly pushed the old man aside and dashed up to the tent, throwing the flap open.

He was faced by Mashkaugan, who placed one of his long, gnarled hands on the agent's breast and held him back.

"Thy place is not in here," said the hunchback.

Curran grasped him and would have flung him aside, but he could hardly budge the half-breed. Father Gregoire, who quickly followed, laid a powerful hand on the agent's shoulder.

"I will not have any brawling on this day," he said gravely. "Loosen your hold, men! I order peace among you. Mashkaugan, stand thou back! Curran has surely the right to be with us and join in our rejoicing. Enter quietly now."

The agent walked in, glancing furiously at Mashkaugan, and the old missionary.

But when he was inside the tent he remained like a man transfixed by an arrow, or as one lost in a blizzard, who has leaned against a tree and there been frozen stiff and stark.

Lorimer had been lying down, but now he had raised himself on one elbow.

The thin, drawn features looked to Curran like those of a corpse that has been taken from a tomb, notwithstanding the smile that was upon them.

Casting a bewildered glance about him, he saw Ameon, with the child lying upon her breast. The gentle smile of happy greeting with which she met his look he translated in his excitement as a grin of triumph over him.

"You have all been plotting against me!" he raged. "All have sought to make a fool of me! I suppose you'll be telling lies to the company about me, won't you? You can't prove anything. You take me for one that may be gulled and spurned and laughed at, do you? Where's that devil of a half-breed?"

The man dashed furiously out of the tent.

"Peace! Keep still. I command you!" shouted Father Gregoire.

But Curran paid no heed and ran toward Mashkaugan, who stood at a short distance with folded arms.

"I have no fighting!" cried the priest again. "Run away, Mashkaugan! I'll be quiet this madman. Help! You men by the canoes!"

The Indian canoesmen came running up as Mashkaugan turned away. Mashkaugan ran a few steps like a deer, paying little heed to his direction. The infuriated man followed close.

In a few seconds he was on the ledge of rock which overhung the lake, and was compelled to turn at bay.

Curran flung himself upon him, and they grappled as wild beasts, panting like bull moose in deadly fight. For a moment the agent tore a hand free from the grasp of the hunchback's long arms, and an explosion was heard.

For another brief instant, Mashkaugan loosened his hold, but one of his great fists came crashing against Curran's lower jaw.

The agent fell like an animal that has been poleaxed and slipped inertly from the shelving rock into the deep blue water, which closed over him—dripping at first, and then smoothing over as if to cast a veil over the gory evidence of his blind, wild fury.

The Indians leaped into their canoes and paddled swiftly to the spot. For a time they searched with long, sitting poles, but the water was deep and they could find nothing. In a short time they ceased, fearing the spirits that gather about the places of sudden death were about them.

Mashkaugan was lying on the ground. The men carried him close to the tent, where the old missionary knelt by him, weeping.

"I should have permitted thee to defend thyself," he said sadly. But Mashkaugan smiled at him.

"It is for the best," he said in a low, halting voice. "I would speak to thee, father, and be shivered by thee if my sins may ever be forgiven. Put thy ear near my mouth, for I can speak but low."

The old man listened. For some minutes slow words that hurt continued to come. Then Father Gregoire made a sign and Maku came to him.

"Bring Lorimer!" he ordered.

The sick man was brought, supported on both sides, and knelt by the reclining man.

"Mashkaugan begs thy forgiveness," said the priest.

"Indeed, I forgive thee all, Mashkaugan," said Lorimer. "I would give much to know that we two soon might travel again as friends together in the greatness of the woods."

The hunchback smiled at him gratefully and spoke in a stronger voice.

"If I am forgiven of God and man," said he, "there will surely be happiness in lying over there between the two great birches that overlook the water and the glory of every rising sun."

For many days it seemed as if they would have to bury him beneath the silvery trees, yet he recovered and was Lorimer's staunch, devoted friend.

One morning all the canoes were loaded, and every one returned to Tenemuck Post, where many pounds of valuable black "pouk" were burned in long-barreled guns in honor of the tiny fleet bearing Lorimer, Father Gregoire and Ameon with all her happiness, and Atuk with his family.

Indeed, no man was ever known to camp again or to stretch meshes for whitefish in the place at Many Beaver that became known as "La Pointe au Mechant," the Bad Man Point.

When Lorimer finally discovered that much money was awaiting him he was rather puzzled in regard to its disposal. The greatness of the north had its hold upon him, and Ameon was more than all else in the world to him.

He amply supplied the needs of his sister across the water, who had a large family to bring up and educate. The share he kept for himself will doubtless be put to good use when his own boys grow up. He has moved to a post nearer civilization, where books are easy to secure, and where children may be taught the wisdom of white men and the craft of red men. A clever young woman teaches them the first in a neat clapboard house, while Mashkaugan and old Nimissuts give them lessons in the lore that is only found in the wonderful book of the great wilderness.

DETROIT THEATRES

AT THE GAYETY

First the Ginger Girls, then the Gayety Girls with one of the liveliest bunch of fun makers in the business; and now those swell Carnation Beauties with Charlie Robinson heading the bunch in a rapid fire comedy part that carries one off his feet. The singing of the principals and chorus in the Carnation Beauties is a revelation to burlesque patrons, and the scenic equipment and wealth of rich costumes as an eye opener. Manager Rhodes surely knows what constitutes a clean, up to the minute show and the ladies are flocking in ever increasing numbers to the Gayety, on Cadillac Square, where golly, reigns supreme with never a dull moment.

And look out for next week as the Million Dollar Dolls are on their way to titillate and delight the audiences of Detroit—visitors in this city will find time spent at the Gayety well worth while, and it is announced that only the "big wheel" Columbia shows will be the attraction during the coming season. This means the very height of perfection.

AT THE CADILLAC

Manager Levy now perfected arrangements for the season in fine shape, with the result that good old fashioned burlesque is available in Detroit at the Cadillac at all times. The shows for the past three weeks on the arrangement have been of the highest run class and well worth witnessing. Visitors to Detroit who are looking for spice and a lot of new gingers dancing and music will find the cozy Cadillac an ideal spot.

The present show of the Follies of Pleasure takes one into the realms of fun, with a chorus that is remarkable for beauty of face and figure. In fact the Follies of Pleasure is one of those shows that one can see a couple of times and heartily enjoy. The attraction will be on for the balance of this week and will be followed by that popular and drawing aggregation known as French Models, which has created a furore all along the line. Sensational surprises in specialty acts will be a leading feature and every one should make arrangements to "get in" on this one.

AT THE FOLLY

This popular house will now present a new line of sterling burlesque stars, and many new faces. Tom Deacon as the comedian is making the hit of his life, and the nifty chorus get by with dancing and singing which pleases mightily. The favorites who have been here for the past three weeks give way this week to a new bunch who surely give a show that makes the old timers sit up and take notice. The Folly is a show place for the "hows" who appreciate a show that has plenty of life, fun and pretty girls galore. If looking for a good time and pleasant hours in Detroit, drop in at the Folly, smoke and make yourself at home.

Concerning next week there will be a series of sensational Parisian dances that will beat everything in the dance line ever produced in Detroit.

Anemia Cured

Two cases of anemia are reported cured by Dr. S. Powell Burdick by the use of Calcarea and Ferrum Phos for six months (details given page 144 in the Drs. Boericke and Dewey authoritative book on the Tissue Salts). On the same page Dr. W. Rowley also reports a cure of anemia. Symptoms were: Pale, anemic countenance, great exhaustion, depression, headaches, constipation, no appetite, chlorotic, emaciated and ambitious.

We prepare NUTRIENT SALTS which contain the tissue salts so necessary in order to cure anemia and every other diseased condition. Nature cannot heal without the twelve mineral NUTRIENT SALTS, and as modern foods like white flour and sugar are deprived of these necessary elements everyone feels the bad effects of mineral salts starvation.

NUTRIENT SALTS are beneficial in all diseases. Send money order or check for $1.00 for a month's supply of Nutrient Salts; six months' supply $5.00. Sold by mail only.

ALBERT L. HILL FOR REGISTER DEEDS

NOVI MAN IS RUNNING ON PROGRESSIVE TICKET.

Albert L. Hill of Novi is a candidate for Register of Deeds on the Progressive ticket. He has taught school in Oakland county for over 24 years and is a splendid type of citizen. Hewould make a first-class register of Deeds and is deserving of a good big vote at Tuesday's election.

NOT ASHAMED OF HIS RECORD

SHERIFF OLIVER HAS REASON TO BE PROUD OF HIS RECORD.

D. I. Oliver, who has just completed a 21 months' service as sheriff of Oakland county, and who is asking for re-election to that office by the voters of that county, has no cause to blush for the record he has made during that time.

It is certainly commendable when an official can show where he has saved the taxpayers a large sum of money, and yet handled the affairs of his office in a most efficient manner.

It may interest the readers of this paper to know in the way of comparison, that his bill for services filed the board of Supervisors in Pontiac last week, completing twenty-one months service, has cost the county $1,162 less per individual arrested than for the same time, during his predecessor's incumbency. While his bill for services is a few dollars more than his predecessor's for the same period of time, nevertheless, there have been made 739 more arrests and notwithstanding the further fact that the apprehension of some of them has necessitated considerable travel out of the state. To illustrate, he has apprehended and convicted 11 out of 15 horse-stealing cases, that have taken place in Oakland county during his tenure in office, and not only recovered the horses but the men guilty are now serving time for the thefts.

His record is as an open book and he invites investigation of it. For he knows that when the nature and volume of work done during his term of office is compared with any of his predecessors, he will have gained materially in every respect.

This paper honestly believes the only thing that can defeat Mr. Oliver this fall is the fact that his friends being so sure of his election, will not take the trouble to go to the polls and vote. So do not neglect this very important duty on November 3rd. One exceptionally good term deserves another, and a proven man is worth more to the county than any other.

If the kitchen range contains an ugly crack you may fill it with a cement made by heating the egg, to which add suited ashes and stove polish until thick enough to spread. Work the paste into the crack with an old knife and press down with your thumb over the top. This will harden almost like iron and will take a polish that will render the crack unnoticeable.

FRANK L. DODGE FOR CONGRESS SIXTH DISTRICT

He favors the policies of President Wilson. His record in the State Legislature, as a member of the Lansing City Council, as a member of the Board of Supervisors of Ingham county for many years, and Secretary of the State Supervisors' association for sixteen years, Lansing Board of Education, and President of the Charter Revision Commission, is most favorably commented upon by all who know his work. Interested in agriculture all his life, he knows the needs of the district, and especially of the laboring man and wage earner. He is proprietor of a State land pony stock farm. His interest in the whole district entitles him to the support of the voters of the district, regardless of party. He will honestly and faithfully represent you, and in Congress which will be Democratic can be of real service while any candidate of other policies will only hamper its progressive work. "He will be on the job."

Don't fail to vote for him next Tuesday.—Advt.

At this meeting the ladies planned that with the assistance of this large community they will have the Universalist church property graded and made into a beautiful park of trees and pretty outbuildings, walks, etc. The plan for the park for the convenience of the people. They expect to commence the work this week by having the church sheds removed so the farmers can commence the plowing and grading as soon as possible. If these improvements and beautifying of the church grounds can be carried out as planned the church park will be a handsome addition to the village. The church building will be left standing for the purpose of holding services in, as usual.—Pontiac Gazette.

DR. WILEY AND HIS SERMON ON FLIES.

D. Wiley, our foremost expert in the pure food crusade, is responsible for the following:

"Four flies, which have forced their entrance into a certain pantry, were bent upon having a feast. One flew to the flour and ate hurriedly; but soon died, for the flour was loaded with plaster of paris. The second perched himself on the sugar can, but he fared no better, for the sugar was full of white lead. The third decided to sample the syrup, which stood temptingly near; but his legs were shortly raised toward the ceiling for the syrup was colored with aniline dyes. The fourth and only surviving one had been coquettishly hovering around the different receptacles, apparently unable to choose. But finally overcome with grief at the death of all his friends, he also decided to end his life and drank deeply of the fly poison which he found in a convenient dish. But he is still alive and in excellent health."

FRED SIMMONS COMMENDS OLIVER

Northville, Mich., Oct. 21, 1914.

Dwight I. Oliver, Sheriff, Pontiac, Michigan.

Dear Mr. Oliver: At this time I am taking the liberty of writing you and congratulating you on the good work you have done since taking charge of the sheriff's office.

Although I am a resident of Northville, Wayne county, my farms are located in Novi township, Oakland county and I am one of the heaviest taxpayers of the township. However I wish to inform you that I shall do all I possibly can to induce my friends in Oakland county to support you for the re-election of sheriff.

If the people could realize the fine work you did in locating and arresting "Doc" Stewart who stole my horse and disposed of it at Petoskey, Mich., they would not hesitate in casting their vote for a sheriff who can run down and capture the criminals.

This is only one of the many cases of good work and untiring efforts on the part of yourself and your able assistants.

Expressing my thanks and wishing you success, I remain,

Very truly yours,

F. P. SIMMONS.

A GOOD SHERIFF.

Sheriff Oliver of Oakland county, is a good sheriff. He has made good in that important position and is entitled to a second term. The magnificent record he has made is one that will win him support from all parties and we look to see him returned on election day by an overwhelming majority. Reports from the county seat town, where they know him personally, are that he will sweep Pontiac, and we know from what we can hear of him in the township, that he will be given a fine endorsement there. Oliver looks like a sure winner and we hasten to congratulate him and the county.—Advt.

BETTER EAT LOTS POTATOES

DAIRY AND FOOD COMMISSIONER SAYS IT'S A RHEUMATIC AND GOIT KILLER.

DR. KELLOGG SAYS THEY BEAT BEEF AND BREAD ALL HOLLER.

According to the Federal census the state of Michigan last year produced more potatoes than any other state in the Union and the three states of Michigan, New York and Wisconsin produced over 60 per cent of all the potatoes used in the United States. The potato crop of Michigan is this year exceptionally good and it is the one food stuff now in common use which is now selling at a very low price. Potatoes in the potato districts of Michigan are at present wholesaling from 35 to 40 cents a bushel and they are by far the cheapest form of starchy foods which starchy foods are necessary in the human system to produce heat and energy. Dr. J. H. Kellogg of the famous Battle Creek sanitarium, says:

"The potato is more easily digested and appropriated by the body than the starches of wheat, corn and other cereals. In laboratory tests it was found that potato starch digested in less than one-sixth of the time of cereal starch. One-fourth of the weight of the potato is food substance, and eleven-tenths of which consists of starch. Of the remainder, three-fourths is protein and two-fifths alkaline salts in combination with citric and malic acids, the acids of the lemon and the apple. The potato is deficient in protein and fats which can be easily supplied by other foods."

One pound of baked potato has the same food value as 5 7-8 oz. of beef, one pound of chicken, 10 pints of beef tea or 7 oz. of bread. The potato is not rich in protein and this should be supplied to the ration by the addition of milk or eggs. Half a pint of rich milk will thus balance a pound of baked potato. The potato is the most valuable of all known foods in furnishing alkaline salts to purify the blood and the free use of the potato combats rheumatism and gout which are the results of chronic intestinal poisoning.

In view of the fact that potatoes today constitute the cheapest food stuff on the market and the further fact that the prosperity of Michigan is dependent largely upon the potato farmer of the state, who raises one of its chief products, we deem it timely to advise the people of the state to eat more potatoes and thus contribute to the physical and financial gain of the state and the individual.
