

THE NORTHVILLE RECORD.

VOL. XLV. NO. 34.

THE RECORD: NORTHVILLE, MICH., FRIDAY, MARCH 19, 1915.

$1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

TOWNSHIP CAUCUSES ON NEXT WEEK

REPUBLICANS HOLD THEIR SAT-URDAY AND DEMS ON MONDAY.

NO CONTESTS SO FAR IN SIGHT AND THINGS LOOK SMOOTH AS GREASE.

The Republican town caucus is to be held at 7 o'clock in the village hall at 2:00 p. m. on Saturday of next week. The Democrats will hold theirs on Monday evening, March 22 in the same place at 7:00 o'clock.

The Republicans it is understood will re-nominate the same set of officers as are at present holding places: Supervisor, W. Judd Lansing; clerk, Ernest Miller; treasurer, James Huff; overseer, highway, Harry Johnson.

The Democrats hold the office of highway commissioner, Stewart Montgomery, and it is reckoned that he will be a hard man to beat, no matter who the Republicans select. Stewart is not only popular but he has made good as a Highway commissioner. The mile of good roads built by him last year on the Eckles road and the Northrop road, passed quick inspection by the State Highway department and he was informed that it was as good a mile of gravel road as had ever been built in Michigan.

The Democrats are somewhat at sea as to who they will nominate except that Montgomery is sure to be re-nominated.

The Republicans would like to nominate Jesse Clark who was a most excellent commissioner for some years in the township but because of his probable other engagements in road building in Oakland and Washtenaw counties, it is understood that Jesse hesitates about accepting a nomination here at this time.

Auction Sale.

Geo. Bryant will sell his stock, farm tools, etc., at auction Wednesday, March 24 on his farm 1-2 miles east of D. U. R. Loud's crossing, at Waterford, 2 miles southeast of Northville. Frank J. Boyle, auctioneer.

NORTHVILLE TALENT PLAYS TONIGHT

A treat is promised Northville people this Friday evening when the Alselum curtain goes up on "Uncle Si's Predicament."

The cast of characters for this comedy includes Donald Safford as the hero; L. L. Ball as Uncle Si, supplying for Edward Bogart, who is ill with quinsy; Ross Van Valkenburg as Si's adopted son; Nelson Schrader as a colored gentleman; Ed. Fuller, a tramp; Marion Johnston, an orphan; Isabel Gorton, Si's niece; Mrs. Mabel Hills, an old maid and Helen Elliott, a colored lady.

Mrs. Arthur Griffin, a talented contralto singer, will render several selections between acts, and Nelson Schrader will also give some of his inimitable coon selections.

The proceeds will go to enrich the treasury of the Methodist Ladies' Aid society.

K. P. BARN DANCE A GREAT SUCCESS

The Third annual K P barn dance has gone into history as the really biggest success of them all. There were 500 people present and it is estimated that at least 200 couples participated in the dancing.

The music furnished by the Northville orchestra from the hay mow was fine, the 7 pieces being under the capable management of Harold Turner.

The decorations were both unique and appropriate to the occasion. Appetizing and original was the midnight lunch and the quick manner in which it was served created much favorable comment. A pretty sight of the evening was noticed when, after the seats around the hall were filled, 200 couples perched themselves on the barn floor for the spread.

The executive and various other committees deserve much credit for the management and success of the occasion.

Many were present from the nearby towns and a number from Detroit partook of the fun.

WEEK'S CALENDAR

BAPTIST CHURCH NOTES.

(By the Pastor.)
The subject for Sunday morning will be "The Christian's Greatest Need Supplied."

In the evening the topic will be "Things That Follow Us."

These beautiful spring days ought to fill the churches of Northville to their full capacity.

We appreciate the good attendance last Sunday evening, and hope for a continuance of the same. Don't be satisfied just to be a member of your church, try and be a pusher.

Remember, the social at Mr. Lawrence's home on High street tonight.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES.

(By the Pastor.)
Sunday morning sermon topic: "Christianity, a Legacy and an Achievement." My third Lesson.

Evening: "Can a Man Lose His Religion?" This is the second subject in the popular series: "Questions People Are Asking."

We expect 300 at Sunday school on Palm Sunday, March 28. A photograph of the entire school will be taken that day. This will be Rally Sunday.

On Friday, April 2, the pastor and his wife will entertain in the parsonage all those who have joined the church since Conference. We are counting much on having you with us for that evening, and are sending out notices early that you may be sure to come.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH NOTES.

(By the Pastor.)
Morning service at 10:00 o'clock. Subject: "The Presbyterian Forward Movement," being an outline of the nation-wide movement in the Presbyterian church that looks to a more efficient financial program. There are many in our church who feel that present methods for raising money are crude and inefficient. It will be worth your while to hear of this new campaign that is now being waged in the interest of a more efficient church.

The Sunday school and Endeavor societies at the usual hours. An increasing attendance over two previous Sundays was noted in the Sunday school. Let the increase continue. We are not yet up to our standards.

Evening service at 7 o'clock. Subject: "Gambling." This is the second in the series on Prevalent Evils. This subject is of interest to all. This is an evil that is very prevalent in unexpected places and unexpected guises. The question of playing marbles for kegs and playing games for prizes will be discussed.

SPRING DECORATING

Walls Made Washable

"I like kalsomine effects, but I want a wall finish that can be cleaned or washed."

This is a frequent inquiry at our store because the up-to-date housekeeper demands a sanitary finish that doesn't need replacing every year.

ACME QUALITY—No-Lustre Finish

is a sanitary, washable finish. It is put on like paint, but dries quicker and with a surface that is "flat" and velvety in appearance. Comes in shades and tints especially adapted to artistic interior decoration.

SERVIAN FATHER TRACES SON TO BLOODY BATTLEFIELD AND KISSES CROSS MARKING LAST RESTING PLACE OF HIS BOY

This most pathetic scene was enacted on one of the bloody battlefields, which marked Serbia's sturdy resistance to the invading forces of Austria. An old Serb peasant had received the formal notice from the war department that his son had sacrificed his life in the worthy cause of the defense of the Fatherland. With his simple wife he laboriously tracked his way to the battlefield and there he found the cross on which his son's name had been painted and which marked the last resting place of the brave soldier boy. He stooped down and in his simple peasant way kissed the wooden cross. His wife is standing by, grief-stricken.

SECRET OF YANKEE SUCCESS

Not Confined to Trade of Forefathers Nor Diminished by Failure.

In that plain old way, a Yankee every time the wheel turns and the mill rolls into its place, a Yankee finds the secret of success. He is not a man of money as a farmer, a merchant, a school teacher, and suddenly rises to wealth as a builder. The secret has found the hole at last.

An Englishman in appreciation of the way one would have been changed to failure by the precedent of centuries. He would have argued that he had always been a farmer, that his father was a farmer, and his uncle a dairyman. Therefore it was plain, impossible that he could ever make money as a builder. In conclusion he would have quoted that fact of all time proven, a rolling stone gathers no moss.

I say, there are no secrets. For other than it is an up-to-date man to know the way to success, to say remains a secret, and a lot better.

The stationary stone is liable to accumulate a quantity of moss that it is only fit for a cushion—to be sat on by all and sundry. There is in America today an accumulation of the principle of the very old in the way of property with some things that are a year to be credit. Until he has over fifty years of age, he is a farmer and not a very efficient farmer at that. Then he finds his paper and away he goes on the road to success. How many of our farmers could change their lands into a city? London, England.

Baizac and His Debts.

With Baizac's long line, rises the mountain of his debts. Writes a critic: "These, starting from his two disastrous years of printing and publishing in Paris, accumulated until at the top of his literary career, he had to hide from his creditors in a garret under the name of his beautiful wife, who was in the habit of taking out the best known and the most famous novelists in France, owed him money—about $12,500. Then he must needs buy a cane which was the staff of Paris, some gold buttons for a new coat, a divine opera glass and a diamond ring beyond words and give a dinner to the dainties of the day, respecting which Rosamond said that he had not seen more magnificence when he dined at royal tables.

Baizac three times a millionaire would still have buried himself in debt for the mental exaltation of his creative hours was reproduced when he broke loose from the galleys.

He lavished in anticipation the wealth he had dreamed would be his. This was the borrowed money or devised another of those schemes that were to catch him beyond the possibilities of literature. His schemes were essentially a part of Baizac's over-eggs, unconquerable visionary.

"He would transport oaks from Poland to France, nothing but oaks from Poland to make him own fortune three times over." He held him as a man of words, and his plan to make a corner in all the arts and put him up the Apollo Belvedere for a system among the nations to get an auctioneer to Europe. The child man, as his devoted sister, Miss Sullivan, used to call him.

Breathing Microbes.

In the course of an interesting talk recently on the subject of London fogs, Mr. Sydney Brooks makes some surprising statements. One is, that the city of London is a great microbe, that you feel in mid-ocean, or you find later in the atmosphere of the fourth of July. Among the mountains, you breathe with every cubic inch of air 1,000 particles, in London 10,000.

Black Smoke as Power.

A novel method of putting black smoke to practical use has been discovered at one of the large factories in Belgium. The smoke is taken from the chimney and run through a place that is filled with a stream of petroleum which absorbs the smoke and generates a gas which is burned and used to run gas engines.

REVOLUTIONIZES CONSTRUCTION OF MOTOR CAR AXLES

Experts have long acknowledged the serious drawbacks of gear differentials, either of the bevel or spur-pinion types, but since differential action is considered essential to a motor car, the disadvantages have been accepted as necessary evils. The average motor car owner does not care so much about technical descriptions as actual facts, which mean money saving, economy, labor saving, and ease of operation with service lengthened, as well.

That there is now upon the market a device which overcomes the many drawbacks of the usual balance gear is a fact which auto owners will be glad to learn. This new mechanism takes the place of the gear differential at the center of the rear axle, and one axle can be substituted in a four-wheel axle without in any way altering the axle housing, ring shafts or bearings. Many prominent users have testified to this mechanism and it has proven every single claim made for it. A saving of time and fuel is made that cannot be ignored. In fact, there are so many good features it will pay every automobile owner on earth to write at once (a postal will do), to the Gearless Differential Company, Department "R", Detroit, Mich., for full details of the patented Gearless Differential. No obligation will be incurred and the information will be an eye opener. Send today.

Memorial to Woman-Physician. What is said to be the first statue erected in honor of a woman physician in the United States has been unveiled in Fullerton Memorial Hall at the Art Institute.

The friends of the late Dr. Mary Harris Thompson have presented a portrait bust of her to the institute. Dr. Thompson was the founder in 1865 of the Mary Thompson Hospital for Women and Children, and was the pioneer woman physician of the Northwest.

The memorial cost $2,250 and is the work of Daniel C. French the sculptor.

Early History of Sugar.

"Sugar has modified the history of Europe and of the world in more ways than one," says a writer. "Used four centuries ago, almost exclusively in the preparation of medicines, and long afterward an article of luxury only accessible to the rich, it has by enlarged production and cheapened manufacture been brought within the reach of all. The universal use of this practically pure carbohydrate, which is not only a freely burning fuel and protein sugar but a muscle food, increasing the power of doing work and lessening fatigue, must have had widespread and beneficial effects on the general health of Europe."

pecially in the case of children, whose greed of sugar is the expression of a physiological want, has that food been valuable in conducting to growth, contentment and well-being."

Overrated Ancient Babylon. Ancient Babylon was not such a great city as some have supposed, according to H. Valsenburg Geere, the archaeologist. He says: "The idea of Babylon's vastness and magnificence, to which we have become accustomed, has been practically exploded. Dr. Kodewy told me that the site of the city was larger than that of any other ancient city, but even so, the idea that it could be compared with London and its suburbs, which has been very generally held, is entirely erroneous. In point of fact, it appears that its walls were not more than eight miles in circumference. Moreover, the great palaces are shown to have been poor affairs after all, with wretchedly cramped apartments, and next to no pretensions to architectural style, and the temples were exceedingly crude buildings."

"Lady" and "Woman." As to the rather subtle question of "gentleman," "lady," "man," and "woman," there is a difference (writes a correspondent) between the sexes. A duke must always be a man; unless he be, for the purpose of the conversation, a "gentleman," with great emphasis of voice. Without emphasis, every man of gentleman's rank is a "man" always and in every social circumstance. But with women it is entirely a matter of the adjective. Without an adjective a woman is a "lady." Who ever asked, on hearing that a friend was to marry, "Who is the woman?" Nor do we say that we met a woman at dinner who told us so-and-so. But introduce the adjective and the "lady" is at once a pretty woman, a well-dressed woman, rather a dull woman—London Chronicle.

Mistake Made by Many. "The smart man," said Uncle Eben, "is likely to get along just as well until he starts in fingerin' 'round an' tryin' to make his brains wake de place of his conscience."

Women ARE IN Danger When Some Burly Tramp COMES TO YOUR DOOR

Be On The Safe Side

There are so many bad characters who travel disguised as book agents, or delivery men that it is best not to trust any stranger within your door. Our Safety Latch can be connected in an instant and the wife, daughter or mother can converse with the caller without being at the mercy of some deception or trick to gain an entrance to your home. You should have one on every door. It allows you to open the door for six inches and it cannot be unfastened from the outside. It is easily unfastened from the inside, however, if you wish to open the door. When not in use, the fastener swings back out of the way—it is an ornament to any door—comes in polished finish—made of steel—complete with screws ready to put on.

Takes but a touch to connect the safety device. If can not be unfastened until the door is closed. Make it SAFETY FIRST.

ENTRANCE TO HINDENBURG'S FIELD HEADQUARTERS IN POLAND

The inconspicuous little wooden sign nailed to the tree at the right of the picture announces that this is the camp of Field Marshal von Hindenburg. In his recent drive toward Warsaw, Hindenburg had the aid of several corps of Austrians. A few of them are seen here guarding the approach to the commander's headquarters to which the path leads. In the background to the left the subway-entrances to the German trenches are seen. It is through these that the troops get to their outposts without exposing themselves to the fire of the enemy.

AMERICAN NURSES ON WAY TO WAR HAVE EXCITING EXPERIENCES ON BURNING SHIP

American nurses aboard La Touraine, photographed just before leaving New York.

These American nurses on their way to the war zone in France got a very good taste of danger while yet on the Atlantic. The La Touraine, the French liner on which they sailed, was taken afire at sea, and for a time it was feared the ship would be lost. She was saved by the wireless, however, and towed into port with all her passengers unhurt. Mrs. William J. Fitzgerald of New York donated $100,000 to equip these nurses and five doctors for field service.

MICHIGAN NEWS

IMMIGRANTS TAUGHT HOW TO PROGRESS IN NORTH MICHIGAN

Houghton, Mich.—The Oster lake district, 16 miles south of Houghton, has been likened to a little Finland for its population of Finnish farmers is represented as living under conditions quite similar to those in old Finland itself. The country lies somewhat back from the copper mine locations and has been a well-settled, but properly directed, these Finnish farmers are regarded as just the people to make the wilderness blossom. They are a sturdy folk and by old associations an agricultural and especially a stock raising folk, but they have needed educational facilities, and this the board of education of Portage township, in which they live, is seeking to furnish.

In a number of areas of 40 acres belonging to the school district the township has secured a school possessed of the equipment usually looked for in a city school only—electric light, water under pressure, and steam heat, and what many rural schools in the United States are still without. Facilities indoors and out for the study of farming, gardening, and household economics. There is a well equipped laboratory and kitchen indoors and cleared land outside for summer crops. For work of some sort the school lasts throughout the year. There is no cemetery nearby, so the school buys milk of the farmers from it. It is made at the school and sold in town. A cream separator and butter churn are part of the equipment. It is also a flock of high grade fowl and some pigs.

The boys and girls practice training in carpenter work to erect the buildings for these animals. An all English runs the machinery. Parents' meetings are held regularly in the school assembly room, where subjects of local improvement are discussed by them and by experts brought there by the language used being Finnish as well as English. The older people have been so isolated for the last quarter of a century here in one of the most populous counties of Michigan that many of them cannot yet speak the English language.

THE NEWSPAPER MEN IN HOUSE AND SENATE HAVE FORMED AN ORGANIZATION

Followed the Lead of the Farmers, and Will Have a "Brain Trust," as They Say

Lansing, Mich.—Newspaper owners, publishers and writers among the membership of the house and senate have followed the lead of the farmers and organized a club which they proudly style the Brain Trust of the legislature.

Rep. Rogers of Muskegon has been elected president and Rep. Witty of Presque Isle is secretary. The secretary accepted this office only under assurance that there should be no records to keep and no official duties. This is purely an honorary proposition and the Presque Isle newspapermen insisted there be no deviation from this rule in the matter of officers. Unlike the Farmers' Club, the Brain Trust is not organized for legislative nor even for political purposes. It is a social proposition with regular meetings called for the banquet table.

TON OF COAL SHOVELLED IN BED BY DRIVER'S ERROR

Grand Rapids, Mich.—Teamster Chooses Wrong Window in Apartment Building.

Grand Rapids, Mich.—Because all windows in the Miami apartment building looked alike to a teamster employed by the A. Himes Coal Company, there is much cleaning being done in the upstairs flat in the basement of the building.

The teamster placed the delivery chute against a window which he thought led to the cellar near the furnace and shoveled in a ton of soft coal.

SEEK WAY TO USE WASTE POTATOES

Farmers' Clubs Will Ask for Help From Legislature.

Over 1,000 Carloads of 1914 Crop Likely to Go to Waste.

Lansing, Mich.—The surplus of potatoes in Michigan from the 1914 crop is said to be so large that James N. McBride, president of the State Association of Farmers' Clubs, estimates upwards of 1,000 carloads will go to waste unless some way is devised to find a market for the surplus.

Facts About the Jews.

The number of Jews in the entire world is, approximately 12,000,000—scattered among all the nations of the earth.

Of this number, about 2,000,000 are in America. Half of these in New York; 130,000 in Chicago; 100,000 in Philadelphia; 80,000 in Boston; 50,000 in St. Louis, and the rest distributed chiefly in other large cities. In an area of a single square mile, in New York is a population of more than 400,000 Jewish men, women and children.

The Jews almost control the wealth of the world. In Germany, nearly one-half of the rich people are Jews. Six sevenths of all the bankers of Prussia are Jews, while only one in 550 is a day laborer.

A Cement Grindstone.

A grindstone made from one half Portland cement and one half silica sand may be used in grinding glass to take the place of the wheel.

The materials must be thoroughly mixed and evenly tamped. The advantage of this stone is that when properly made there will be no hard and soft spots, and it will grind glass without scratching. The cost is about ten per cent of that of the common grindstone. The Onward Magazine, turning Community, of Menasha, Wis., in which we are indebted for this information has been using cement grindstones successfully for a year.

GRANDDAUGHTER OF ALABAMA SENATOR

Miss Marian Bankhead.

Miss Marian Bankhead, queen of the cotton ball, with which Washington recently closed its social season, is the granddaughter of U. S. Senator Bankhead of Alabama and is known as one of the most beautiful girls in the national capital. She is a student at the exclusive Fairmont Seminary in Washington.

KING EDWARD'S RACEHORSES.

Only Two Have Been Winners in Great English Turf Events.

Probably no owner ever had such a persistent run of bad luck as his Majesty, King Edward, during the early years of his racing career. At his first modest appearance on a race course, thirty-seven years ago, his horse Champion had the misfortune to fall early in the race, and although he made a game effort to recover, lost ground he could only finish second.

Six years later—at his second appearance—at the Newmarket July meeting, his horse Alep was badly beaten by Lord Strathmore's Arrow, and it was not until 1880 that Leonidas II, ridden by Capt. Wentworth Hope-Johnstone, scored his first victory in the Aldershot cup.

Six years more elapsed, making fifteen years in all from his racing debut, before the royal colors were carried to victory for the first time in flat racing, when, amid a scene of great enthusiasm, Countess, ridden by Archer, won a maiden plate at Sandown.

What's in a Title?

Judge Gray of Delaware, was talking recently about the foolishness of American girls for English titles. In speaking of how empty and meaningless such titles usually were, he illustrated it with the following:

"Titles are just as meaningless in the United States. Take my own title—the title of judge, for instance. I was traveling in the country a short time ago, and, at the table of the hotel where I was stopping there was a man whom every one present addressed as 'Judge.'"

"When this judge got up and went away, I said to the man sitting next him at the table, 'Is the gentleman who just left a United States judge or a local judge?'"

"He is a local judge, sir," was the reply. "He was a judge at a horse race last week."

"Titles at home, and abroad amount to about the same thing. Nothing counts but the man."

Liquid Helium.

In his recent experiments with the liquefaction of helium, Professor Onnes, performed a labor of the most exhausting description. "Not only," we are told, "was the whole apparatus, with its subsidiary arrangements, tested to its utmost capacity, but the physical energies of the professor and his assistants were well-nigh exhausted by the prolonged struggle." This is likely to give to most readers an entirely novel idea of the labors of the laboratory. When the absolute zero is approached, the obstacles that have to be overcome in order to lower the temperature a few degrees are immense. The boiling-point of liquid helium is four and one-half degrees Centigrade above absolute zero. By great effort the temperature was reduced to three degrees, but without affecting the mobility of the liquid.

At a dinner one day, says a writer in the Philadelphia Public Ledger, some men were discussing the merits of different kinds of game-birds. One preferred canvas-back, duck, another, woodcock, and still another thought a quail the most delicious article of food. The discussion and the dinner ended at about the same time.

His Favorite Game-Bird.

"Now, Frank," said one of the men to the waiter at his elbow, "what kind of game do you like best?"

"Well, sub, to tell the truth, almost any kind of game suits me, but what I like best is an American eagle served on a silver platter."

A Bird Census.

Under the direction of Prof. S. A. Forbes of the University of Illinois a summer bird census of that state has been taken. The method was to enumerate the birds seen on a strip 150 feet broad and 425 miles long, running across the state from north to south. This strip covers an area of 12 square miles. The count showed 7,740 birds of 80 species. On this basis the total summer bird population of Illinois was calculated at 30,750,000, of which 7,500,000 are English sparrows. The meadow lark is the next most numerous. The English sparrows were found to decrease in number from north to south. On the contrary, the native bird increased.

Few Large Greenbacks.

Somewhere in the United States presumably, is held the single $10,000 greenback which is still outstanding and which for a considerable period the Treasury Department has been awaiting an opportunity to retire. The amount of United States notes originally issued in the $10,000 denomination was $10,000,000 and the same amount was issued in $5,000 notes. Of the former there remains but one that has not been surrendered for retirement, and only two notes of the latter denomination are still in the hands of the public. It would be interesting to know where these three greenbacks are held if indeed the fact that they have not yet come into the hands of the Government is not due to their having been lost or destroyed. In pursuance of the policy adopted several years ago the great bulk of greenbacks have been called into notes of the denomination of $5. Of the total of about $24,000,000 of United States notes now outstanding $10,000,000 of the denomination of $10, about $10,000,000 of the denomination of $5 and about $24,000,000 are still outstanding in the form of $1,000 notes. Whereas in the twenties times that preceded the operation of the silver agitation in 1896 it was an easy matter to gather together any quantity of greenbacks for the purpose of withdrawing them from the Treasury, the same thing now would be attended by much greater difficulty.

Whips from a Tree.

In the island of Jamaica there grows a tree with the botanical name of the Daphne lagetta, from the branches of which native workmen make peculiarly strong and excellent whips. These whips have the handle and lash all in one piece. The handle consists of a part of the stem retaining the bark. For the lash the stem is deprived of bark and then spun into strips, which are woven together in a flexible cord six or seven feet long. The proper labor is afforded by detaching more and more of the strips as the end of the lash is approached.

It Does Not Pay. "Quarreling is not at all. No man who resolves to quarrel the most of himself can spare time for personal contention. Still, less can he afford to take all the consequences, including the ruining of his temper and the loss of self-control. Yield larger things to which you can show no more than equal right, and yield lesser ones though clear your own. Better give your path to a do, than be bitten by him in contesting for the right. Even killing the dog would not cure the bite."

To Bar Christmas Solicitors.

Boston—The Salvation Army ladies and volunteers of America "Santa Claus" cannot hereafter solicit funds on the street for Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners for the poor, according to Police Commissioner Stephen O'Meara. His report says the custom has grown to such an extent that annually more than fifty different organizations seek the privilege of soliciting aid.

NEW AUTO TAX LAW.

The House of Representatives at Lansing has passed a horse power automobile tax similar to that of two years ago to take effect in 1916. If it becomes a law it will raise upwards of a million dollars a year for the building of highways. Detroit politicians as heretofore opposed the measure, though their efforts have not yet prevailed.

The political end of Detroit is scared to death because it will take a few hundred thousand dollars from the tax rolls of Wayne county, which might prevent further salary raises or the creation of new offices in the city for a few years.

A few hundred thousand dollars could be saved to the taxpayers in Detroit and Wayne county, by stopping the salary raise business, and then abolishing of useless jobs and the doing away with useless clerks. No one thinks of that however. Millions upon millions may be added to the tax rolls but the taxes continue to raise a little each year and if a million or two comes off it seems to make no particular difference. The new auto tax law, it is believed, will eventually prove a profitable thing for the whole state.

DONE BORROWING.

Some time since a little girl who lived in a rural community appeared at the back door of a neighbor's house with a small basket in her hand. "Mrs. Smith," said she, as the neighbor answered her timid knock, "mother wants to know if you won't please lend her a dozen eggs. She wants to put them under a hen."

"Put them under a hen?" was the wondering rejoinder of the neighbor. "I didn't know that you had a hen."

"We have," was the frank rejoinder of the little girl. "We are going to borrow the hen from Mrs. Johnson."

Numerous complaints have reached the department of state, from European countries as a result of Americans attempting to enter those countries without passports and the department has announced that it is imperative for all Americans who wish to be provided with passports, property made out and entered in Germany has made it clear that no one will be allowed to enter that country who is not provided with a passport bearing his or her photograph and duly entered on the proper authorities. Americans are not going.

One burden follows another. The revenue department has announced that the average tax on income is more than $21.60 per annum, ten times as much as the cash dividends in comparison of the amount of your income tax.

It is peculiar that a man who owns a bunch of cattle will go out to look at them every few days, but not once during the whole year will you catch many of them at the schoolhouse where his children are getting their education.

If the number of people in prison is an index of the morality of a state, then South Carolina is the most moral state in the Union, for Gov. Lee has recently cleared out the whole penitentiary.

As a rule, the man that is worth anything to his country and the world is he who, when a boy, had learned to work. The only worth, the only truth, the only happiness is in doing.

Those Mexican revolutionaries are mad enough to say "Don't get at being eclipsed by the war-lords of Europe, who are now occupying the spotlight all the time."

After a while it will not be so popular to attack a manufacturing institution or a corporation simply because it is making money.

TRI MANAGEMENT OF OLDSMOBILE

In April 1913, a system of management was put into effect at the Oldsmobile plants which perhaps was unique in the motor car industry and the progress made by the Oldsmobile company since that date tends to show its efficacy.

Under this system which is described as a "three-man" method of management, responsibility for the affairs of the company rests with an executive and manufacturing committee composed of D. F. Edwards, comptroller, J. V. Hall, sales manager and E. Ver Linden, factory manager. The duties usually assigned to a general manager are vested in the committee and its limited action is sought in matters of general policy.

Among certain advantages attributed to this type of management is the fact that all members of the executive committee share equal responsibility in the conduct of the business and are given the opportunity to make recommendations for the improvement of the business as a whole.

CANADIAN SILVER BARRED.

The Detroit United Lines Cannot Accept Such Coins for Fare.

The Detroit United Lines have been compelled to decline all Canadian silver coins presented for fare on its city and interurban railways in Michigan and Ohio.

This is not of our seeking but is due to the fact that at the present time the banks have a large amount of Canadian coin on hand, and cannot take more for deposit from the Detroit United Railway.

In ordinary commercial fields the possession of a few Canadian coins, under the circumstances mentioned, would make no particular difference but when it is remembered that not infrequently upwards of two thousand dollars a day of Canadian silver have been taken in by the Detroit United Railway in payment of single fares and for tickets, we feel sure our patrons will readily understand why we cannot, upon conditions change, accept such coins when tendered.—D. LARGE AND COMPLETE ASSORTMENT OF FURNITURE.

An honest dollar from a counterfeit. A cracked bell makes a noise, but it doesn't peal out a harmony of perfection. There is that same difference in stores, in advertising, in merchandising. The brass-band methods and big wordy announcements that are raising such a din nowadays in the city store ads. cannot drown the plain statement of facts that our honest stock makes possible. The flashing of a string of sensational prices won't tempt a thoughtful housewife. She wants value at a fair price. It's an easy matter for us to win in any comparison that's made because we offer nothing that isn't reliable and everything that is. We challenge lower prices than ours for like qualities. An $18 Table in pictures may look like a $30 one but there's a big difference.

Carload of Mattresses

For our Two Stores we have just received another Carload of Mattresses. Bought cheap because of the quantity and will be sold cheap. They range from $3.00 for Mattress worth $4.00 on up to the Silk Floss kind that we sell for $15.00. City stores usually charge you $20. Splendid Cotton Felt Mattress at $8.00 and $10.00. That's less than city prices by at least $2.

Room-Sized Rugs

We have a Big Line. Bigger than ever. Good Axminster, 9x12, for only $18.00. Columbia Brussels, 9x12, for $15.00. Fine Wood Fiber Rug, just the thing for Bed Rooms, 9x12, for only $8.50. Colors to match room. Big assortment of Ingrain Carpets.

COLORFAST MATTINGS that are guaranteed fast colors. Neither sun or water can affect them.—And 38 cents per yard takes what you want.

THE BLUE BOMB

By J. V. Gisey

Copyrighted by the Frank A. Munsey Company

SYNOPSIS

Ned Gafford, who has been unjustly accused of treason when at West Point, and gone to Japan, has become an opium slave. While in an opium dream, he overhears a conversation between two Japanese who want a war against the U. S. for the sake of selling their "Blue Bombs," which are an invention of Karloff, a Russian nihilist.

Oshituchuckled. "Thou hast said it, Yamata," he said lightly. "Karloff is apt to disappear. He came from a Russian cruiser, as you will remember. He is doubtless reported lost in action in his own country."

"And you are sure these things are practical—there can be no mistake?"

"None. Personally Karloff has demonstrated to me with a small one. The coming demonstration is for the government."

"It is wonderful," Yamata exclaimed. "It means that we hold the world in our hands," declared Oshitu, with his first trace of excitement. "One will destroy the greatest ship afloat. A dozen will lay waste a city or annihilate an army. The yellow race will triumph. What cares Nippon how terrible war becomes so long as she holds the instrument of supreme destruction?"

"There," said Yamata, "is your cause of war, my Samurai. There could be an accident. The Americans fought quickly enough when they lost their Maine. If one of their vessels on a friendly call were to be destroyed—"

"Or," interrupted Oshitu, "if one of their diplomats or high officials or a member of his family should drop out of sight—"

"Excellent!" gasped the other. "What dost thou mean?"

"Perhaps," drawled Oshitu, "you noticed the cruising yacht in the harbor, my good Yamata?"

"Yes, I saw it, as you suggest."

"Or noticed the man and woman who came from it this evening?"

"Then, too, I saw the girl is a beauty, Shu."

"That is still the man is a high government official of the United States on a secret mission. His presence is not supposed to be known here."

"Yamata looked at him. 'What Oshitu! He is probably in danger. They would have to fight and a bomb would destroy the vessel as though it were a mere toy.'"

"Are you sure?"

"We are fools not to have made use of that Yamata."

Gafford had barely time to relax himself on the bunk before he heard the man's feet on the floor and an instant later the bamboo curtain was swept aside.

"By the two worlds of my father," swore Oshitu, "look at this!"

A few moments of silence elapsed.

"Gafford lay still."

The two Japs approached his side and bent down. Gafford felt their breath upon his cheek as they sought to discover if he really slept. Presently one of them spoke.

"There is only one thing to do, Yamata. If he sleeps we may leave him and thank the gods for it. If he is feigning—dead men speak little, my friend."

Gafford thought fast. There would test his apparent slumber, and his was the task to make it seem genuine. Escape from that underground room was not to be even considered.

"Experience had taught him that a person normally asleep will respond readily to reflex irritation; also that a person opium drugged reacts but sluggishly. He decided that his course lay between normal and insensibility, and prepared for the ordeal which he knew would inevitably come."

Oshitu and Yamata whispered together so low that he could not catch their meaning. Then as he lay with closed eyes and regular breathing he felt one bare foot tread and experienced a darting, itching pain. In dazed anger, he realized that the man who held the foot had deliberately slashed its sole with a knife.

The mean white burst from his lips was not at all acting, but the effort of will which held him from a violent wrestling away of the foot was worthy of supreme self-control.

As one roused against his will, he turned his head and half opened his eyes. "Take 'em away—please take 'em away," he begged in maudlin fashion. He let his lids fall again in simulated stupor and drew a deep breath.

Inwardly he found his brain on fire. For an instant he had looked into the cruel, sneering face of the man Oshitu, who bent above his wounded foot with a blood-stained knife in his hand. It was the face he had sometimes dreamed of finding in those days when he had hoped that he might be able to prove his innocence.

Oshitu cast the foot he held from him and addressed Yamata again. "A sodden pig," he sneered. "Lucky for him that slumber wrapped him. Come, we will go."

Their footsteps moved to the door. Gafford heard it close behind them. Bathed in a sweat of pain and unaccustomed self-control, he moved out of his couch and sat dizzily up. He lifted the foot and examined the wound. The under side of the instep was wickedly gashed. The blood had stained the canvas of the couch. Gafford whimpered in pain. A sense of giddy sickness gripped him and held. He struggled feebly to reach his tray, and lighted the little lamp he had accidentally extinguished while smoking his last pipe. By a great effort he prepared a pellet of rum and placed it in the pipe.

Through what seemed long minutes he sucked hungrily at the mouthpiece until it ceased to give off the least particle of smoke. He was sick and giddy and sleepy all at the same time. His fingers relaxed on the pipe which fell to the floor. A great lassitude laid hold upon him, which he did not seek to resist. He seemed to be floating softly away from all conscious perception. In the end he slept.

CHAPTER III

First Steps.

Gafford came out of his drugged sleep with recollection of three things: a girl with brown hair and blue eyes, who had smiled at him; a something vaguely described as a "blue bomb"; and the knowledge that Irawaya Oshitu was in Nagasaki, in some way mixed up in plots and counter plots.

They were all things to bring back from the sleep of the poppy. He lay for some time after he woke, trying to decide whether he had really heard the remembered conversation and seen Oshitu's evil face bent to scrutinize his own.

At least he was satisfied that the man had failed to recognize him in the slatternly thing he had become. Had a suspicion of his identity waked in the engineer's mind, Gafford felt certain that he would not have been permitted to live. So far as Oshitu was concerned, therefore, his secret was safe, and he might, if he wished, hunt his man without that man's knowing.

The pain in his foot finally brought him quite awake and convinced him of the reality of last night's experience. He dragged up the injured member and inspected it. It was a nasty, blood-soaked gash which Oshita had made. Gafford cursed him as he looked at it and wondered if he could hobble the few doors to White Kate's tea house and find relief of a sort.

He crawled off the couch and moved toward the door.

His wounded foot made a spotted trail across the matting, but he paid no heed to it. He slipped on the stairs, fell, and finally from behind the curtain and out to the street. There he turned and set haltingly off for the House of Moon Faces, cursing Oshita as he went.

No one paid any attention to him. Wounded hulkers are not uncommon in the streets or shops. He came after a tedious progress to the place which he sought, and found it as he had expected. He made his way back to the city and found a way of entrance. Presently he entered a teahouse, with his foot in White Kate's lap.

While he washed and dressed and bound up his foot, he told her what was his story. That a day there had flashed into his mind at Oku Kobe's and vowed that he would be revenged. Kate laughed her merriments and advised against any violent reprisal. Then she set a cravat for food.

Food, not with his wound dressed, Gafford slept.

An inconspicuous object in his dirty rag, he lay upon a richly tapestried couch, with a cover of braided silk drawn across the foot of White Kate's bed. After a time his fever came upon him. White Kate, near by, listened to his muttered fragments of speech. "With a blue bomb I could own the world—own the world and have a—have a—blue-eyed girl—with brown hair. And I could—break Oshita—break him—into bits."

"With a rustle of soft silken things Kate rose and approached the side of the sleeper. He was hot and tossed in his sleep. The woman put down a hand and laid it on his forehead. His hand came up and his fingers closed about hers.

"That's good," he murmured. "That's good." He pressed her palm against his face. The eyes of the woman who watched lost some of their heaven-dazzled glitter and grew almost soft.

Four days passed.

In the interval Gafford's foot mended apace. His blood was at last free from taint, and it built back the broken tissues at a wonderful rate. His habit may or may not have had something to do with that, for it is a fact that opium users are rapid to heal of their wounds.

On the afternoon of the fourth day Gafford insisted on going out. Walking was still painful, but the wound did not bleed, and it seemed to Gafford that something drove him forth. He badgered Kate until she wound a fresh bandage about his foot, gave him an old pair of sandals and laughingly told him he was the worst patient she ever had.

Gafford turned and caught her hands. "You're good, Kate. You're too good to a thing like me, and I'm an ungrateful pig."

"You're a man," said White Kate, looking down as she spoke.

"I wish to God I were!" flashed Gafford. "Honestly, Kate, I'm sick of the whole game. I wish I could be a man."

Kate shook her head. "Oh, no, you don't, Gafford," she told him slowly. "If you did, you would be, you know."

Gafford regarded her for some time out of narrowed eyes. His head drooped forward. "I guess you're right," he said shortly, and turned away.

He left the room and went out through the tea-house. The geishas lounging about the inner room paid no heed to his passing. They knew him for White Kate's friend.

The few patrons in the outer room, which fronted on the street, saw only the familiar sight of a poorly clad man in threadbare though now clean garments, who passed by.

A brilliant sunshiny lay over the street of shops as he reached the door and paused to look up and down. There was no particular place he wanted to go. His desire to get out had been compounded of a restive hatred of restraint and a desire to escape for a time from the intimate sense of his obligation to the white-waif who had proven his friend.

His foot was not sufficiently strong to permit his return to his previous way of living, as he realized from the twinges of pain it sent up his limb. He stood and surveyed the scene, debating whether to walk farther or return and confess that he had been premature.

A few doors up the street a goos-sized curio-shop flaunted its red and gold ideographs before the eye. It was frequented more or less by tourists, and Gafford had even received a few stray commissions for guiding them to it on their rounds.

For a moment he was tempted to go up and extract some possible yen from the proprietor for past and prospective services rendered. He had even taken the first two steps in the direction when he stopped and forgot his intention in a greater interest. From the door of his destination a woman came forth. She was clad all in white, even to the shoes she wore.

A white parasol dangled in her hand. She glanced up and down the street, and turned directly toward Gafford. Beyond any doubt she was the woman he had seen at the quay.

Gafford's heart recoiled from her presence. With an instinctive shrinking he desired to avoid the meeting. But remnants of pride were still his urged him to remove himself from the range of the blue eyes which had smiled so understandingly into his a few nights before.

Acting purely on impulse, he swung around and retreated to the House of Moon Faces, entered, and sat down at a little table, from which he might see her as she passed with a snap of the fingers he called an attendant and ordered a cup of sake, but not for a moment did he take his eyes from the outer street.

But the girl did not pass. To Gafford's amazement, a white-clad figure darkened the door of the tea-house, paused an instant, and came forward. The girl selected a vacant stall, sank upon one of the backless stools, and laid her parasol and one or two parcels upon an end of the table.

With a frank interest she turned her eyes about the room, taking in all its details of lacquered ceiling, lacquered stool and table of lacquered lacquered streamers of painted banners, and the other patrons of the place.

Her gaze was the glance of one who did not understand, but found much of interest. It answered Gafford's mental question as to why a woman of her evident station should walk the streets of Nagasaki unattended.

It came to him in that moment that her act was that of ignorance and ignorance emboldened. Doubtless he felt she had been shopping, and, wanting a cup of tea, had dropped into the first tea house she found.

A tea house would be a tea house to her comprehension. She was unaware of the lines of distinction which put the better houses on the second street of shops instead of the first, or that the geisha houses were not frequented by women, either yellow or white.

In the use of the Setting Sun, a street beyond, a would have been as safe as in any tea-room of her own country. Gafford stiffened in his seat and was glad that her back was turned toward him.

The girl bent her head above a menu-card and studied it with an attentive eye. She asked her table.

"Tea," she ordered quite distinctly. "And cakes—some of those little rice-cakes of yours. I like them."

She smiled quite frankly into the waiter's eyes.

The attendant scurried away, attended a hurried boy, and Gafford continued to study that alluring back. It was while he was so engaged that there came between it and him a vision of a small figure, brave in frock coat, silk hat, and tan gloves, carrying a ratian cane.

Gafford stared as though hardly believing his eyes, and then, without any apparent good reason, picked up his cup of sake, moved to a seat in a booth directly behind the carved screen, which separated his table from that of the girl in white. Moreover, one might have noticed that he worked with a head down, and in a course calculated to keep his own shoulder turned against the figure in the frock coat.

The latter, in apparent high good humor, and puffing a cigarette, had now surrendered his rat, coat and stick to an attendant, and was surveying the room.

Peering from a booth, Gafford saw his dark face suddenly light with a smile. A moment later he was hurrying directly toward the table where the girl in white sat. As he approached his hand came up before him and his teeth gleamed between his lips in what he evidently hoped was an ingratiating manner.

"Miss McRae," he exclaimed, as the partition cut off Gafford's view, "there is so great a pleasure. I am so bold as to hope that you remember—night before last—at the hotel."

"Of course I remember you, Mr. Yamata," said the girl, while Gafford's pulses leaped that he had learned her name. "Won't you sit down?" she invited. "I was just having a cup of your tea. It is rarely the only tea there is. We Americans don't know the real beverage at all."

A stool scraped, and Gafford could fancy the little boulevardier taking a seat opposite the girl. "I, too, shall have tea," he began speaking, "and your commendation will give it added savor. Your honorable father—how is he?"

"Quite well, thank you," replied Miss McRae. "I shall tell him I met you. This is awfully jolly—having tea like this. Are all your tea-rooms furnished in this way?"

"Oh, these," depreciated Yamata. "These is but one of the poorer sort, Miss McRae. You should see some of the others. They far surpass these poor place. If you will accept my most humble service, I should be pleased to show you."

"You are a fully kind," said the girl's voice.

They drifted on in small talk, and Gafford, listening, frowned. Four nights before he had looked for an instant into the swarthy face of Yamata in the house of Oku Kobe.

He had smiled then as now, because Oshitu had slashed a sleeping man's foot. He recalled what he could of the conversation he had overheard between this man and the officer of engineers. He had recognized him as soon as he had come into the tea-house, and it was that which had made him change his seat.

It had seemed to him fancy that Yamata turned, too, directly to the table where Miss McRae sat. He wondered if the man might have followed the girl from the street. Yet, if so, what was his object?

The conversation which filtered to him through the screen was innocent enough, in all conscience.

The attendant came back with the girl's tea on a tray, with a little inverted, bowl-like cup and a plate of sweetmeats and cakes. Yamata gave an order for a second service, and urged Miss McRae to allow her own to grow cold while waiting for him.

Presently he was served in turn. Gafford signalled for another cup of sake, and consumed it without having perceived any real reason why he should have constituted himself a sort of invisible guardian for the woman in the booth at his back. He set down his empty cup, half determined to remove himself elsewhere, when Yamata began speaking again.

"The traveler in Nippon sees but a part of the things which are, Miss McRae. They see only the surface. Take these tea-houses, which I call the House of Moon Faces. The traveler like you comes in and buys the little cup of tea, and he thinks he has seen. Does he see the moon faces?"

"He fancies the name is, but a pretty appellation. He does not know that the moon faces are here in reality. He does not know that he has seen a girl, and the poorer half of which is no index of real homeliness. He does not know that beyond the door where the waiter goes for his order is a bigger and far more beautiful room, where are beautiful women—those we call geisha—who play on the samisen and sing."

"That beautiful room is the real House of Moon Faces. It is only those who know who go there, where the moon faces shine and they are of men. Our women are not as yours are, and they go not to the cafe. But our men—yes, an' come of your men—who go, go into the 'con room, where the moon faces are. No white woman, so far as I know, has ever been there. It would be a bit dangerous, an' would not be allowed. But if you should want, I will show you—just once. It would be an adventure; yet safe—with me—for I know an' am known."

"You mean you could really show me this room, Mr. Yamata?" There was a thrill of excitement in Miss McRae's voice now.

"Precisely, Miss McRae. I, Yamata, can so do—if you wish, an' would not be afraid."

"And," questioned the girl, and Gafford felt himself stiffen to attention. "Afraid of what, if I went under your escort?"

Yamata laughed softly. "Ah, yes," he made answer. "Of what? Should I be afraid?"

There was a sound of dashes being shoved aside. "I am ready, if you really mean it," the girl challenged.

A stool scraped its legs on the floor. "Come, then," Yamata replied.

Instantly Gafford was on his feet. Digging along the partition, he peered around it in time to see Yamata lift the heavy curtains at the end of the outer room and permit the girl in white to pass.

The next moment he had followed her into the room of the geishas. In his soft sandals Gafford slipped out of his booth and followed at their heels.

He had no difficulty in going, whether he pleased. He was too well known in that place. He slipped into the inner room and found himself a partly secluded seat, waited until Yamata and the girl were seated and the swarthy host had called a geisha with a samisen and bidden her play; then slipped to a little table not too far off and sat down with his back to the pair. He mumbled an order for sake to a girl who approached and sank his face in his hands. The observer would have said that he needed the sake not at all.

But, despite his seeming intoxication, he was straining his ears to hear through the samisen's strumming what Yamata might say.

Conversant with the ways of the inscrutable men of the east, he knew that the girl's companion spoke the truth when he said no white woman tourist had ever penetrated to the inner rooms of the tea-houses. If perhaps they had done so, certainly they had not departed to tell the tale. They would constitute another instance of mysterious disappearance.

What, then, was Yamata's object in leading this daughter of an American diplomat behind the forbidden portals? Another fragment of the conversation in the house of Kobe flashed momentarily in his brain, illumining a picture beyond any imagining of his narcotic slumbers—a picture of possibility, though not of proven fact. But Yamata was now addressing an attendant, who was taking his order. Gafford put away conjecture and gave ear.

Yamata was speaking wholly in Japanese. The fact mattered little to Gafford. Three years on the waterfront had taught him the language, so that he both understood and spoke it like a native. The samisen of the geisha had dropped to a low strumming, out of deference to the voice of Yamata, and Gafford could catch each detail of his speech.

As he listened one might have noticed the hands on either side of his bowed head, gather themselves together and clench. The muscles along his spine stiffened and drew him inward against the table. His feet crept backward a round his stool.

and rested on their toes, ready to hurl him erect.

For as the sing-song directions went on Gafford began to understand all the answer to his mental questions, and the why of his inward mentor, which had kept him close by the girl. An icy tremor gripped him, turned into a burning tide of rage, and ebbed, leaving him cold and calm.

The servant bowed before Yamata and departed, and Gafford came to his feet. Swinging on his heel he turned to the table where sat Yamata and the girl. With swift strides he approached and bowed before the woman. "Perhaps you recognize me, Miss McRae," he began.

The blue eyes came up and swept his face somewhat coldly. Gradually, however, their scrutiny underwent a change and softened. "An' you the gentleman we saw on the quay the other evening?" she asked.

"I am," Gafford assured her quickly. "That being the case, perhaps you will believe me when I say that I am thoroughly conversant with native customs and place some credence in my statement that you are at present in deadly danger."

The eyes widened, and the woman's lips half opened. One hand gripped the edge of the table. "Danger?" she repeated and paused.

Gafford's gaze left her and swung upon Yamata, who had moved on his stool as if to rise. "Mr. Yamata has told you the truth in part," he stated briefly. "Women are not allowed in the geisha houses. Whether you are the first who has ever entered, as he says, I do not know, but, if others have, I can assure you they have never returned to their friends."

Yamata interrupted on the instant. "The man is drunk," Miss McRae. I heard him order sake when he came in. Pay no attention to his savings. He is a poor wharf louser, an opium user, a low theng. He speaks without any true understanding. I shall have him removed."

Gafford leaned forward, and his face was unpleasant. "You'll do nothing of the sort, Yamata," he rasped. "You'll sit down and keep still, or I'll break you. You heard me order sake, but I didn't drink it, and I'm not intoxicated in the least. I heard you order tea for Miss McRae, and I'll tell the attendant to drop it. The game's up, Yamata. Miss McRae won't drink that tea, and she'll leave this room with me, either without trouble or after a fight."

The woman rose slowly to her feet. "Did he really tell them that?" she faltered. "That was what you meant?" Oh! I will go with you. You are a white man. I believe you. I will go."

"I thank you," snapped Yamata. His hand darted beneath the table and came up clutching something which glittered blue-black.

Gafford laughed at the instant. His crashed against the samisen face of Yamata. His left hand caught at the wrist of the hand which held the revolver, and wrung it with all his might. The weapon fell from the hasty clutch of Yamata's fingers and rattled to the floor.

Miss McRae stooped quickly and picked it up in a manner which showed she was familiar with things of the sort. Gafford followed up his advantage of the moment, and pinned her an back against the wall. "Go out the way you came in," he cried to the woman. "Wait for me at the street door."

She obeyed without question. A moment later the curtains fell behind her. Gafford relaxed his hold on Yamata and stopped back. "Be good, now, and don't try to follow, or you may get hurt," he cautioned, and went backward toward the door. Yamata, straightening his disarranged clothing, said nothing, but scowled in his face.

As his hand, groping behind him, reached for the curtain, it encountered a soft touch of flesh. Gafford, turning quickly swung directly face to face with the girl who had gripped his hand and guided him through the door. He stared for an instant in surprise. She had evidently remained on the other side of the draperies during his retreat, and she held Yamata's revolver firmly gripped in one hand.

"Come," snapper Gafford, rousing from his surprise. "We must get out of here. Why didn't you do as I told you and go outside?"

"Take the gun," she answered as shortly as he questioned. "I am waiting to see if you could let go of the bear you had caught."

Gafford shot her a glance of admiration and laughed. "Bully!" said he and took the weapon. He seized her arm and led her quickly to the street and along it a ways to the door of the curio store where she had shopped. Even in those few steps she reached his limp.

"Are you injured?" she asked as they paused. "Did he hurt you—that dreadful little man?"

"Not yet," Gafford returned with another laugh. "I had my foot cut by the other day. It is practically well, but tender. You stop at the Nippon, I think. We would better return there without delay."

"You mean we are not yet out of danger?" said Miss McRae.

"It is well to play safe," returned Gafford. "Yamata is rich. He is a power in his way, with extensive financial interests, and government pull. People can be hard to do strange things in this country."

Miss McRae's face flushed. "I've acted like a fool and caused you to make an enemy on my account. I am sorry, and deeply grateful. I shall always thank God that I met an American gentleman when I was in danger."

"You must be careful how you go about in this place," Gafford cut in almost shortly. "It isn't like your country—women aren't safe. I shall call a rickshaw. There's an empty one up the street. As a favor, we will walk up there."

"She nodded, and they set off. Presently she broke the silence. "Don't you want my thanks, Mr. Gafford?" she supplied as against his will. "I value your thanks above all things, Miss McRae; but the service was nothing more than any white man would render a woman in danger. Please forget it. I have to go."

it make you more careful in going around."

"Still," said the girl as though of some set purpose. "I'm glad it was a countryman of mine who saved me from my folly."

Gafford flushed slowly; then as by an effort, "I am not an American, Miss McRae."

"Australian?"

"I have no country, Miss McRae," he replied after a painful moment. He smiled to the rickshaw boy.

"Oh—" Shieela McRae caught her breath as she took his hand to step into the rickshaw. "I beg your pardon, Mr. Gafford. Will you forgive me, and let me see me at the hotel, where I can thank you more fully than here?"

"You are very kind," he made answer. They he laughed. "What's the use of pretending, Miss McRae? He burst out in an irony that was bitter. 'The clothes I stand in are as good as any I have. One does not call upon a lady at the Nippon in rags.'"

The girl's blue eyes looked full into his. "It was the man I was asking to call," she told him. "Please come." She put out her hand.

Gafford wavered. "Perhaps," he said in the tone of goodby. "Goodby," Shieela told him. Her face was almost wistful.

Gafford took the outstretched hand. "Good-by," said he, and stepped back.

He stood looking after the vanishing rickshaw for some time. As he turned away with a sigh to retrace his steps to the tea-house, a heavy object in his pocket thumped against his thigh. His fingers stole into the pocket and closed on the butt of Yamata's revolver.

Gafford grinned.

JAPANESE DWELLINGS.

Where White Paper Screens Take the Place of Windows.

The houses are built upon uakawa stones or large beams, placed at regular intervals upon the ground. One or two of the four sides of the house are made of panels of wood, or posts of bamboo filled with plaster. The remaining sides are inclosed by screens made of white paper to let the light through, for windows, such as we have, are unknown in native Japanese houses. These screens are frail, and the rains in Japan are often drenching downpours; therefore, on these unsubstantial sides of the house verandas are built, which are closed in at night, or during severe storms, by wooden shutters that slide easily to and fro in grooves in the floor, as do also the white paper screens. The roof is thatched, angled or tiled. The interior of the house is divided into rooms, mainly by screens covered with thick colored paper that form the background for exquisite decorative work. Arizona's Unique Jail.

Granham County Jail, at Clifton, Ariz., is probably the most unusual in America. It comprises four large apartments hewn in the side of a hill of solid quartz rock. The entrance to the jail is through a box-like vestibule, built of heavy masonry and equipped with three sets of gates of steel bars. Here and there in this rocky walls holes have been blasted for windows, and in these apertures a series of massive bars or steel have been fitted firmly in the rock. The floor of the rockbound jail is of cement, and the prisoners are confined wholly in the large apartments. In some places the wall of quartz about the jail is fifteen feet thick. Some of the most desperate criminals on the Southwest border have been confined in the Clifton jail, and so solid and heavy are the barriers to escape that no one there has ever attempted to make a break for freedom. The notorious Black Jack was there for months—Tombstone Epitaph.

The United States As Others See Them.

One brother is a rich merchant in the Straits Settlements on the Malay peninsula. The other brother was, until a few weeks ago, the cook in a cheap restaurant on South Clark street.

The merchant sent to the cook a draft for sufficient money, to pay his expenses out to Asia, and the cook gave up his job and has started for his brother's home. The interesting thing about the whole incident is the letter, written by the wealthy merchant, which accompanied the draft.

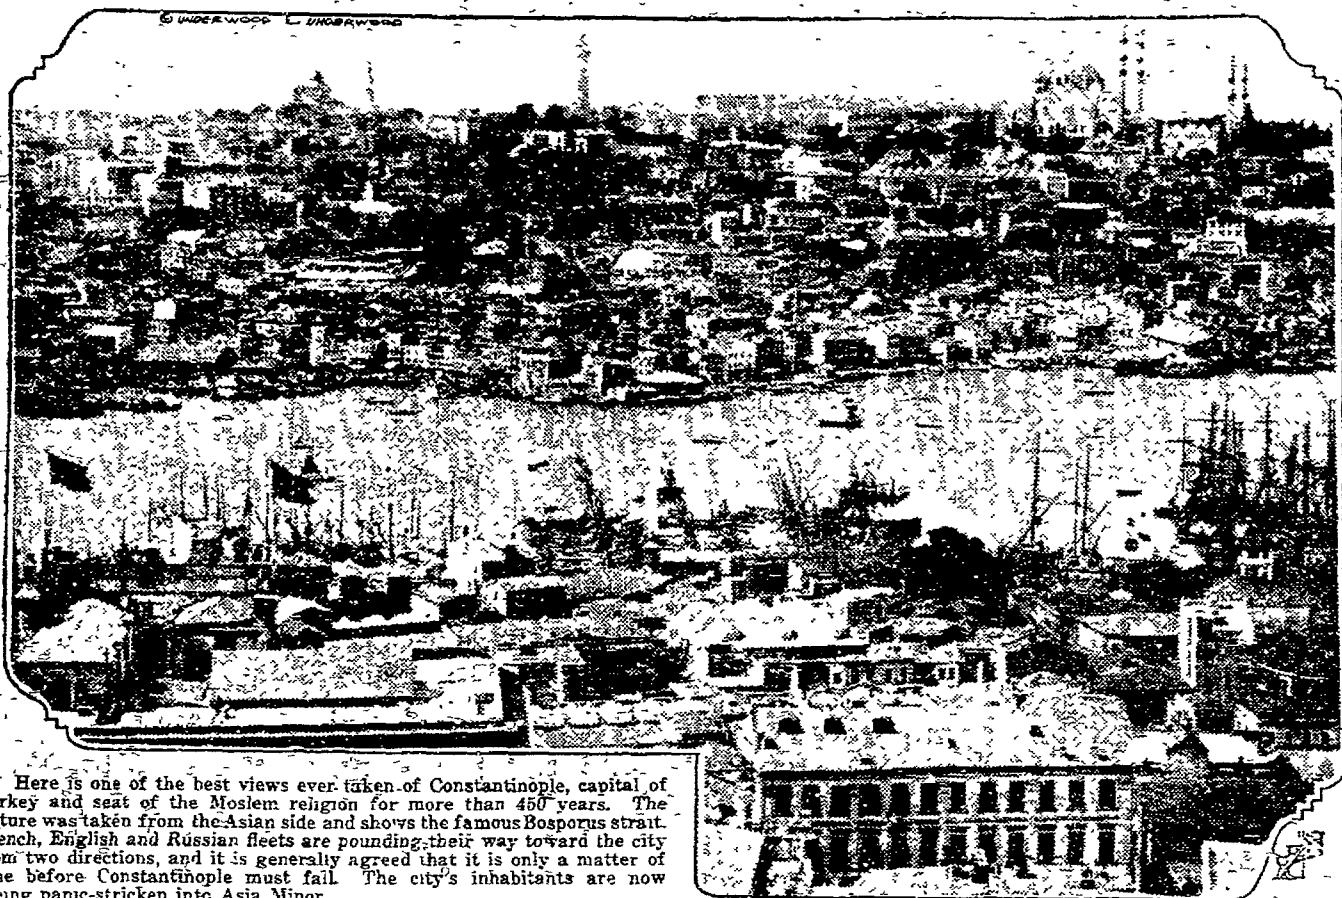

In the first part the draft was made payable in New York.

"I send you the money in a draft payable in New York," wrote the brother from far off Asia. "You can go over and get it cashed there. On the way I wish you would stop at Texas and see brother Thomas. HERE'S DOOMED CAPITAL OF THE TURK; INHABITANTS FLEE AS ALLIES APPROACH

Here is one of the best views ever taken of Constantinople, capital of Turkey and seat of the Moslem religion for more than 450 years. The picture was taken from the Asian side and shows the famous Bosphorus strait. French, English and Russian fleets are pounding their way toward the city from two directions, and it is generally agreed that it is only a matter of time before Constantinople must fall. The city's inhabitants are now fleeing panic-stricken into Asia Minor.

Household Hint

WORTH-KNOWING

Spots on Polished Furniture—Take fine table salt, sprinkle thick enough to cover spot nicely, then saturate well with olive oil; let stand fifteen to twenty minutes, then rub with soft cloth. If it does not remove all at the first application, try again. It will not injure furniture, but the salt must be as fine as possible.

When cooking one is at to add too much salt. If a piece of bread is thrown in it will take up the salt and can be removed.

Saving School Shoes—Try a good varnish for children's school shoes. Apply to soles of shoes three or four coats of varnish, letting each dry before the next is applied, and see how much longer the shoes will last without half soiling.

Paste on each bottle or box of poisonous drugs a strip of sandpaper. This can be easily distinguished in the dark.

CANDIES

Delicious (cracker Jack which can be made at home at very little expense—Get five cents' worth popping corn and five cents' worth peanuts. Pop corn, shell peanuts and put all together in large kettle. Then put in a sauce pan one cup molasses, one cup sugar, one tablespoon vinegar, boil till a little will harden in cold water, then pour mixture over corn and peanuts; mix thoroughly. This forms a candy coating; can be formed into balls or left in clumps.

Walnut Creams (a never-fail candy)—Two cups brown sugar, one cup water, one pinch cream of tartar (to prevent from going into sugar). Put all ingredients in sauce pan on fire. Stir until it boils, then leave lid until it foams soft ball in cold water. Remove from fire and beat until it hardens. Have large flat plate ready with piece of waxed paper on and another piece of paper to drop your ingredients on. Then take small portion of it in your hands and roll a little butter in and roll in a ball. Place a walnut on and proceed.

UP-TO-DATE RECIPES

Hominy Points—Two cups hominy cooked till well done, three tablespoons sugar, two teaspoons salt; add two beaten eggs, one-fourth teaspoon nutmeg, one-half teaspoon vanilla. Pour in pan to cool. Shape, dip in egg, roll in fine cracker crumbs, fry golden brown in deep hot fat.

Branolin (substitute for coffee)—Six cups wheat bran, three cups corn meal, one cup molasses, two or three eggs. Rub all well together with the hands and brown in oven. Inexpensive and fine.

Cheese Fondue—One cup scalded milk, one cup moist stale bread crumbs, one-fourth pound mild cheese grated, one tablespoon butter, one-half teaspoon salt, three eggs. Mix first five ingredients, add egg yolks beaten until they are lemon colored; lastly cut and fold in whites of eggs which have been beaten stiff. Pour into buttered dish. Bake in moderate oven twenty minutes.

Sausage Dumplings With Tomatoes—Put into double boiler, one quart tomatoes seasoned with two tablespoons butter; salt and pepper to taste. Sift together two cups flour and two level teaspoons baking powder, add one cup sausage meat partly cooked and enough cold water (or milk) to make soft dough to drop from a spoon. Drop batter from spoon on boiling hot tomatoes, cover and steam half hour.

Apple Dumplings—After removing skins and cores from six apples, steam apples. Make a soft custard of three eggs yolks only in custard and Whip whites stiff, add a little lemon juice and pour over apples. Then pour yellow custard over all and serve at once. This dish may be served either hot or cold; delicious when the custard is allowed to cool before it is poured over cooked apples and dish placed in cold place until ready to serve. An excellent dish and a favorite with the children.

OUR FAILURE IN GUAM

We Have to Raise Too Much Money on the Little Island.

"There's the devil and the deep sea about our uncommercial conquest, and a big interrogation point at the door of the Treasury." This is the terse way in which Willard French sums up in the Booklovers Magazine his indictment of the federal administration for its failure to look after the people of Guam. Successive governors, Mr. French declares, have done their best, but they cannot accomplish the miracle of increasing benefits on decreasing revenue. Under Spanish rule only one-fifth of the expense of the government was ever collected in the island. Four fifths was always paid out of the home treasury.

"The cost of living in Guam has been increased several hundred per cent since the American occupation, so that in reality our governors face the necessity of raising twenty-five times as much money from the people of Guam as was ever demanded before our flag was raised. And this only by neglecting incidents, without a thought of schools, sanitation, or other desirable improvements."

Some one ought to stir up the authorities on this matter or we shall continue to bear the reproach of being worse masters than the Spaniards were, even in their most rapacious days.

boy was learning to ride erect on a quiet horse with a broad flat back.

"In some towns they won't let us show," said the man, "unless we have no camels with us. Camels are a serious drawback to shows. Horses are so much afraid of them that lots of towns won't let a camel enter their gates."

"A horse won't go near a piece of ground a camel has stood on. The very smell of a camel in the air will make a horse tremble and sweat. And this fear isn't only found occasionally in a horse here and there. It is found in every horse all over the world. Quaker, isn't it? I often wonder why it is. Camels bite dogs in the same way and cats hate dogs so, too. Here though we can account for the hatred. Dogs in primitive times fed on cattle, no doubt, and even today, here and there, they will kill and feed on kittens."

"Horses love dogs, I'm sure. I don't know why. Dogs fear no animals but pumas and leopards. You can take a dog into a lion's or a tiger's cage and he will show no fear. But take him up to the cage of a bear or a leopard, and he will tremble and moan and shrink away out of sight."

"All very 'parlor' isn't it?" Philip Gelpia Ballou.

Glimpses of Married Life

BY MRS. EVA LEONARD

When it was barely light, Nell was awakened by a step on the stair, and it flashed upon her that her guest was up. She soon heard her husband's mother vigorously wielding a broom in the living room.

"Well, I guess she won't find much dust; the rugs have not been down two weeks," reflected Nell angrily. She thought of getting up, but Dick was asleep and she creaked so face the old lady alone. Soon she heard her pouring water and wringing out a cloth. "She must be cleaning," said the house barely settled. Then it flashed on her that she might be washing the floors that had just been varnished.

Nell slid out of bed and putting on her bathrobe and slippers went out. Madam Morton was on her knees rubbing soap on a cloth preparatory to scouring the new varnish. What should she do?

"Oh! good morning," she called. "You are up early."

"Early!" snorted the old lady. "It must be six o'clock."

She was just ready to plump the soapy rag on the newly varnished floor.

"Please don't put soap on the new varnish, mother; the workman told me not to touch it with soap."

"It must be a queer sort of a floor that you can't wash with good soap suds," her mother-in-law exclaimed, her rag poised in air.

"You see, it was varnished only last week," explained Nell in a conciliatory tone. "I keep it waxed and use my oil mop on it."

"Well, of all the new-fangled notions that ever I heard of!" And the astonished woman dropped the soapy rag in the pail.

"We don't want you to be working while you are here," continued Nell in her most persuasive tone. "You should have a good rest during the visit."

"I'm no hand to sit around or lie abed in the morning. People who sleep the morning away lose the best part of the day," proclaimed Madam Morton.

"We enjoy the evenings so much that we never go to bed very early, and Dick is so tired mornings that we sleep until the last minute," said Nell.

"Why don't you call him Richard? That's his name, and when a man's married it's time he had a little dignity."

She had risen from the floor and was wiping her hands on her apron. Nell did not reply, but two bright red spots burned in her cheeks.

"I'll go and get dressed and get breakfast. Don't you want to take a look at our yard? We think it is going to be very pleasant." Nell felt it would be safer to have her guest out of the house while she dressed. "Here's a shawl to throw over your head."

Nell breathed a sigh of relief when she heard the door close behind the old lady.

"What you up so early for?" asked Dick, as she re-entered the bedroom.

"I rushed out to save the new varnish from a baptism of soap and water. Your mother has swept and cleaned for the last hour." Nell began dropping on her skirts.

"If that's not like her," laughed Dick. "That's her way of enjoying herself. In her early days she had to work hard and now she doesn't know how else to put in her time."

"I am going to take special care that I do not form such habits," laughed Nell.

The Dismemberment OF THE Pere Marquette

DISMEMBERMENT MAY BE EITHER COMPLETE OR PARTIAL—EITHER KIND IS A PUBLIC CALAMITY.

It will be COMPLETE if the underlying bonds foreclose—PARTIAL, if the junior bondholders foreclose with conditions as they now are. This is our judgement. No one can tell positively what is going to happen. But we know what we fear is going to happen and we know whereof we speak.

THE UNDERLYING BONDS

The underlying bonds do not cover the system as a whole but are mortgages on the constituent parts, such as the Chicago & West Michigan; the Detroit, Grand Rapids & Western and the Flint & Pere Marquette, having been issued before the consolidation. The interest has not been paid on these bonds for over a year because the revenues of the system are less than the expenses. The bondholders are now demanding their interest on their security and will foreclose if the present conditions continue. The dismemberment of the system will follow, with a consequent severe loss to the state in transportation facilities.

BEAR THESE FACTS IN MIND

The Pere Marquette system has 17,000 cars available for freight business. The demand for these cars is not equal all over the system each day in the year, but varies day by day on different sections of the road. As the demand comes from one part of the system, and then from another, these cars are marshaled like an army, to meet conditions, and the onrush of traffic. For instance, during the fruit season there is an extraordinary demand in western Michigan and the system mobilizes its transportation equipment in that section; then comes the demand from the "Web" territory for cars to market potatoes, beans, etc. and then it shifts to the "Thumb" district to move hay, sugar beets, etc. If the system is divided, the cars must be divided, and car shortage will result. This phase alone of dismemberment is most important to the business and agricultural industries of the state.

REDUCE CAR LOANING FACILITIES

As a system the Pere Marquette can secure cars from other large connecting lines at its three important terminals—Chicago, Toledo and Buffalo. This valuable reserve facility will be reduced to not more than one terminal for each road in case the system is divided. For instance, the Chicago terminal connection; the Detroit, Grand Rapids & Western will be limited to its Detroit terminal and the Flint & Pere Marquette will be confined to the Toledo terminal. It stands to reason, does it not, that one small road can not secure as good reciprocal car loaning arrangements at one terminal as the big system can at three terminals? This means congestion in terminals added to car shortage on the lines.

SET BACK TRANSPORTATION FIFTEEN YEARS

Transportation facilities will be set back fifteen years to the point where they were when the consolidation was effected, if the system is torn apart. It was good railroading to tie together these three roads, situated as they are, into one system whereby their combined equipment and resources are available for any part of the state served by the Pere Marquette.

SLOWER SERVICE EAST

Shipments east from the branches are delivered at Buffalo 24 hours quicker than would be possible if the system is disrupted. For example, business from the St. Louis section of the state now goes to Saginaw and connects with our through "expedited" freight; business from Greenville and Howard City sections goes to Grand Rapids and at that point is put into a through train to the frontier. Handled by independent lines this business would have either to go to a connection down the Chicago division or to a connection at Detroit. The business of the old Flint & Pere Marquette, which now goes east by the direct Frontier route, would have to be largely turned over to connections at Toledo. Either movement would mean delay. From many branches where cars go into through freights the moment they reach main lines, the business would necessarily at least three handlings through terminals with all the delays incident thereto. The "Thumb" territory now has fast service into and out of Chicago. That business would have to be handled through two terminals—one in Saginaw where the D. G. R. & W. has only contract terminals with the Michigan Central, and then into Grand Rapids where it would be delivered to the C. & W. M. Today such business goes from the "Thumb" into Grand Rapids under one movement into a Chicago train. Today there is through Chicago service for the Ludington and Manistee sections, with only one change in engines.

SYSTEM HANDLING WOULD BE ABOLISHED

BAD BEGG TO COAL TRADE
The Saginaw valley has built up an extensive commercial and domestic fuel trade in the "Web" territory. The mines are all located on the old F. & P. M. in Bay and Saginaw counties. The system provides for distributing this coal in western Michigan under traffic conditions which have been largely responsible for getting the business. Dismemberment would mean added expense of delivery, less efficient service and doubtless loss to the valley of a large portion of this trade because of added expense and delay. The Ludington and Manistee coal fields had this region of Michigan practically to themselves before the organization of the system opened the way for the Saginaw coal to compete.

SERIOUS LOSS IN TERMINAL FACILITIES

Dividing the system means that the Detroit, Grand Rapids & Western would be without locomotive shops and would have no yards in Grand Rapids, which would be a blow to that city and its contiguous territory. The Michigan Central has not at this time proper terminal facilities in Saginaw for the D. G. R. & W. and the road would have to use other terminal in that city. The business of the old F. & P. M. which now goes Grand Rapids way would all go to the Toledo or the Greenville as it does from points on the Ann Arbor.

SOME SERIOUS BUSINESS DISADVANTAGES

Many of the low grade commodities are made on a strictly lump-sum basis for one road haul and when such commodities move on two road hauls, through rates are made by adding the two rates together. To illustrate, take sugar beets from Hemlock to Bay City. The present rate is 50 cents on one road Pere Marquette haul. This would be a two road haul for the D. G. R. & W. and F. & P. M. with a 40 cent rate Hemlock to Saginaw and a 50 cent rate Saginaw to Bay City, or a through rate of 90 cents. The same principle would apply in making rates on logs and lumber, and numerous other commodities such as brick, sand, gravel, crushed stone, fuel-wood, and in certain instances on ice. You shippers should take into account the points along the Pere Marquette with which you trade, examine the map to find out in how many instances the division of the system would affect your rates and facilities, and then you can appreciate the importance to the state of keeping the system intact.

Another factor of no small importance is the transit privilege enjoyed at Grand Rapids, Saginaw, Big Rapids, Reed City, Ludington, Flint and Lansing. The more mileage there is embraced in the system the more valuable these transit privileges become.

IT'S GOOD BUSINESS TO PRESERVE THE SYSTEM INTACT

The Pere Marquette Railroad is a great big Michigan institution in which every citizen has a direct interest because, reaching as it does such a large and important territory of the state, its prosperity and the prosperity of the state are too closely interwoven for one to be adversely affected without the other suffering serious consequences. With the state so vitally interested in the welfare of the road by virtue of the benefits accruing to the people and good service, there should be no question as to its right to expect fair treatment from the state. The road is being operated with its expenses exceeding its revenues. It is a public servant working at less than a living wage. Your grocer says his stock has cost more, therefore he must raise his price to you, and you accept the raise without expecting him to present you with a statement of the exact cost and without questioning his truthfulness. Figures of revenue and outlay are prepared by railroad officials under a federal law which imposes a jail sentence as well as a fine, if they are false. In view of the fact that Michigan men are operating the Pere Marquette as receivers and are presenting the case to you, don't you think their statements are worthy of confidence? You can help them preserve this system to Michigan.

The Federal Court will pass on any reorganization plan which may be worked out. The Michigan Railroad Commission will have absolute control of the amount of capitalization under such a plan. There is no danger whatever of stock or bond manipulation.

Write Senator Hilsedeger and Representative Gayde of this county, now at Lansing, at once to vote for the bill for higher rates for passenger service. The raise asked is reasonable and absolutely necessary as a means of helping to keep the system intact. The latter will prove a good investment. Do it now. It is imperative to secure action at this session.

ELECTRICITY LESSENS LABOR.

Eighty per cent of the people in the United States are families of two to four people, and the demand for a Washing Machine for these families have forged the manufacture of the Thor Junior.

The Thor, Jr. is a cylinder type of Machine. It is beautifully white enameled and all parts are completely covered. The Wringer is equipped with a safety guard, which makes accidents impossible. The Machine sets on smooth rolling casters and can be moved without effort; goes thru a 24-inch door; fits in any small closet. You may learn all about this Machine and see it demonstrated at our office in the Alseum Building.

With this Machine you can do a washing for less than one cent.

A Success.

The conversation had turned to the many men who had met success. "There, for instance," said one man, pointing down the street, "goes a man who began life in poverty and now lives on the fat of the land." McFee looked "Yes, I know him," he replied. "He's an agent for an anti-falx concern."—Judge.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the payment of taxes, insurance and certain instalments of principal on a certain mortgage made by Frederick F. Gault and Clessa I. Gault, of the township of Redford, Wayne county, Michigan, to William Rosenburg, of the township of Livonia, Wayne county, Michigan, dated December 13th, 1909, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Wayne county, Michigan, on December 14th, 1909, in Liber 550 of mortgages on page 523, and said taxes, insurance and instalments of principal having remained due and unpaid for the space of thirty days, the said mortgage hereby exercises its option granted by said mortgage and declares the principal sum of said mortgage, together with all the arrearages of interest, taxes and insurance paid, to be due and payable immediately. There is now claimed to be due and payable on said mortgage and note accompanying the same for principal, interest, insurance and taxes paid, the sum of $1,397.22, and such further sum will be claimed at said sale as the undersigned shall pay for taxes and insurance to protect his interest in the premises described in said mortgage; and no proceedings at law or otherwise having been taken to recover the same, or any part thereof, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and of the statutes of the State of Michigan, the undersigned will sell at public auction to the highest bidder on Monday, March 22nd, 1915, at 12:00 o'clock noon, standard time, at the southerly or Congress street entrance to the Wayne County building in the city of Detroit, county of Wayne and state of Michigan, (said being the building in which the Circuit Court for the county of Wayne is held) of the premises described in said mortgage, or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy said indebtedness, costs and expenses of sale, including an attorney fee provided for in said mortgage and allowed by law. Said premises being located in the township of Livonia, county of Wayne and state of Michigan, and described as the north half of the east half of the southwest quarter of Section number twenty, containing 40 acres of land, be the same more or less; also six acres from off the north end of the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of said Section twenty.
