NORTHVILLE-PLYMOUTH GAS CO'S PLANT

MAINS AT PLYMOUTH COMPLETE AND WORK TO COMMENCE TO NORTHVILLE AUGUST 1.

A FEW SIX PER CENT BONDS WILL BE OFFERED FOR SALE.

The work on the Plymouth and Northville Gas plant is fast nearing completion. Six miles of mains have been laid in Plymouth. Service work will begin within ten days and it is expected gas will be turned on not later than August 1st. Work on the Northville extension will follow immediately thereafter. The plant will be complete in every detail and has been pronounced by expert gas men one of the most up-to-date gas works in the state. The gas company which is composed of representative business men of Plymouth and Northville, assures the public they will furnish a good quality of gas and the best of service. They have $10,000 in bonds unsold in denominations of $100, $500 and $1,000, bearing 6 per cent interest and tax free in Michigan. The Detroit Trust company are trustees for the bondholders. This is an excellent opportunity to invest in a gilt-edge security.

Frank S. Harmon of this place, is president of the Gas company and Charles Fisher president of the Plymouth United bank is the treasurer.

NORTHVILLE CHAUTAUQUA COMING AUG. 5-9

Laughter, music and instructive entertainment will abound throughout the entire five day's program of the Northville community Chautauqua which begins here on August 5th.

Two sessions will be held daily, according to the program which has been announced—an afternoon session and an evening session. Each day's program includes a popular lecture and a concert or novel entertainment. There will be music at every session of the Chautauqua.

The directors of the Community Chautauqua, under whose auspices the Chautauqua here will be given, state that entertainment of the highest grade will be provided on this year's program, at a price of admission which has been kept at a minimum.

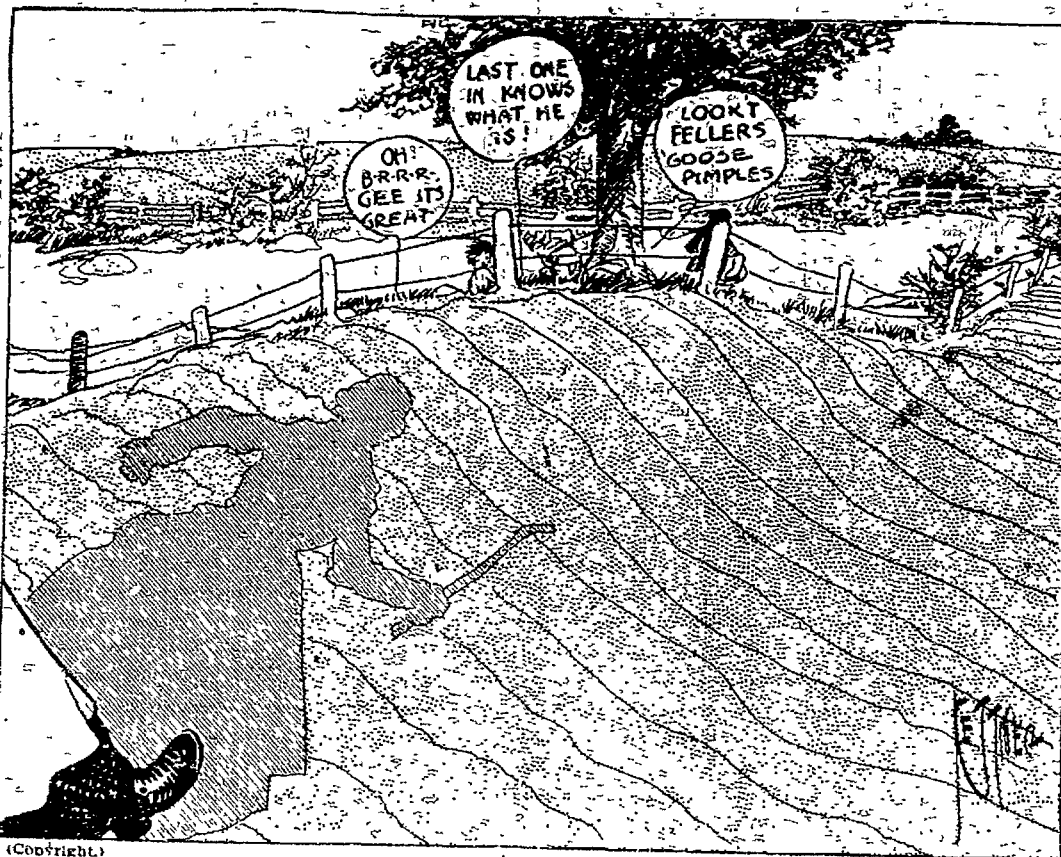

The feature of the entire five days' program will probably be the concert to be given by the Kittles Band, a Canadian organization of nineteen pieces. This band appears in full Scottish uniform and will give a program of Scottish music and present day airs.

Complete program next week.

Library association of Northville—which is the full official name of this worthy institution—was held last Friday afternoon in the library. The officers and directors having proved a harmonious and satisfactorily working body, those whose terms expired were all unanimously re-elected. With these members and those holding unexpired terms, the personnel of the board is as follows: Kettle Harmon, president; Sophia Benton, vice-president; May Filkins, secretary; Mary Anbler, treasurer; directors, Mesdames Sarah Parsons, Elizabeth Wheeler, Estella Clark, Arabella Tinkam, Lucy Filkins, Etelvyn Lapham and Della Harmon and Miss Frances Yerkes. The annual reports of the secretary and treasurer showed that the expenditures for the year had been $308.72; receipts $358.66. New books have been purchased at a cost of $75, and $21.40. She was a bride of less than a year, but she had her troubles, and naturally made a confidante of her mother. "My dear child," said the mother, "if you would have neither eyes nor ears when your husband comes home from the club you might be happier."

"Perhaps so," answered the young wife, with an air of weariness, "but what am I to do with my nose?"—Boston Transcript

CELEBRATION FOR JULY THE 3RD

BIG EVENT IN THE WAY OF BALL GAMES AND HORSE RACES.

HUNDRED DOLLARS IS HUNG UP FOR PRIZES FOR A BIG DAY

Northville will celebrate the Fourth of July on Saturday, July 3, this year. Athletic Park is to be the scene of activities beginning at 2 o'clock with the horse races. A purse of $25 is offered for the best 3 in 5 free-for-all, trot or pace, $20 for the 2.30 pace and $20 for 2 35 trot or pace; all one mile heats.

Harry Robinson will, as usual, act as starting judge.

Another attraction will be a ball game, Northville Independents vs. Southbards of Detroit. Last Saturday's game was the best advertisement these two teams could have had. At the close of a 12 inning game Northville held 6 scores to the Detroit team's 5. An exciting game is thus assured for July 3. The winner gets $20 and loser $15.

NORTHVILLE ALUMNI TO ORGANIZE

FOURTH OF NEXT AUGUST IS THE DAY SELECTED FOR EVENT

Efforts are being put forth to organize an alumni association of graduates from the Northville High school. Such an organization has not been active here for about twenty-five years though several efforts have been made without results. This promises to be a success, however, judging by the number of people who have expressed themselves as favorable to such a project.

August fourth has been selected as the most promising date for Organization Day. This comes the day before (Continued on page 4)

HEYN'S BAZAAR CAN SAVE YOU MONEY

Nearly four years ago this store inaugurated Department Store Merchandising of Automobile Supplies, and each day and each month since Detroit and Michigan motorists have come here in increasing numbers, until today it is said that Heyn's Bazaar is Detroit's greatest accessory store. Experienced motorists find it profitable and practicable to patronize this department. They know our prices are consistently the lowest; it is possible to buy reliable accessories oftentimes less than half what the little dealers ask. They know that every article they buy is guaranteed and that Heyn's Bazaar will be here next week or next year.

"You will always find the majority of the people to be in the right"

We have sold more high grade new and used cars than any other firm between New York and Chicago. The probable reason for this is that we represent the car only as its actual condition justifies, and purchasers have come to know we are a reliable firm to deal with.

The extensiveness of our business calls for hundreds of exchanges, so that our stock of used cars is ordinarily large with prices ranging from $100.00 to $1,500.00.

An illustration of what $125.00 will buy, we have on hand now a Maxwell roadster—complete equipment—fine tires and ready for a season's service. For $1,050.00, a Cadillac touring car less than one year old—has the most modern up-to-date Cadillac appointments, including two speed axle. The car has just been refinished and is fitted with oversize tires. All kinds and styles at prices in between.

If not familiar with motor car mechanism yourself, bring an expert with you to analyze it. In considering the purchase of a used car, or, for that matter a new one, be sure to see us before buying.

Just remember, we represent the car to be only as its actual condition justifies.

Gasoline Dangers

The Problem of Handling and Storing to Secure Safety with Ordinary Care

From Walter L. Wedger, chemist of the Massachusetts District Police—As a means of furnishing power for the transportation of both passengers and merchandise, gasoline has come into general use. It is no uncommon sight to see what was only a few years ago a one horse dump cart, containing gravel or coal, now transformed into a motor truck, with the same load increased to many times its original size, and traveling at many times its original speed. Motor fire apparatus has become almost indispensable, and the use of gasoline is not confined to getting the apparatus to the fire, but furnishes the power to pump the water after its arrival, making gasoline almost as important in the extinguishing of fires as water. I shall expect soon to see Standard Oil motor trucks filled with gasoline responding to all third alarm fires.

Experience has proven that the underground system renders the storage of gasoline practically safe, the danger being in the handling largely. Underground tanks should be placed not less than two feet below the surface of the ground, and if within ten feet of a cellar or other open area which is below any part of the buried tank, it should be embedded in cement concrete, not less than ten inches in thickness. Such tanks should be constructed of steel plates from 1/16 to 1/4 inch in thickness, and should be well covered with asphaltum varnish to resist rust. Usually there are three pipes leading from the top of the tank—the fill vent pipe. The latter extends from the top of the tank to a point four feet above the roof of the building, and is considered necessary to conduct off the residual vapor in the tank, which is forced out during the process of filling.

In the drawing of gasoline from an underground tank by means of a pump, it is much better to use a pump that holds the gasoline in the draught pipe continuously, rather than one that allows it to run back into the tank, for in the latter case you are pumping vapor for a short time before the gasoline liquid comes.

The act of drawing gasoline from pump and filling the tanks of cars by means of a hose or a can, through a funnel covered with chamois skin for the purpose of removing water and dirt from the gasoline, has been known to cause a number of fires by the generation of frictional electricity.

For a long time mysterious fires occurring during this process of handling gasoline have been reported to our office.

I was just skeptical then of the fact that these fires were caused by frictional electricity as the general public is now. During the early part of last April a fire occurred at the Cambridge garage of the Metropolitan Park Commission while they were filling a car with gasoline by pouring it into a funnel through a chamois skin strainer from a five-gallon can. To make the funnel set up right on the car tank they had placed a piece of wood with a hole in it over the filler hole of the tank, thereby insulating the funnel from the metal in the tank. After a few quarts of gasoline had passed through the chamois skin, the man happened to bring the pouring can near to the metal edge of the funnel, when a spark jumped from one to the other and set fire to the gasoline vapor rising therefrom. Quick action with extinguishers saved the car. The man insisted that he saw and heard the spark, and believed he could cause it again in my presence; so armed with a gold leaf electroscope used to show the presence of static electricity in any substance, I proceeded to make a number of tests. The officials of the Standard Oil Co., both in Boston and New York, New York, as well as several engineers and technical men, were very much inclined to disbelieve what they termed a theory, so I invited them to be present. We imitated the conditions as they were at the time of the fire, except that we took it on the open floor of the garage. We caused the spark by simply pouring gasoline through a chamois skin covered funnel inserted from the floor, and all present saw it.

A chauffeur in a private garage at Brooklyn hung a five-gallon can by the bail, on the hook of a common self-measuring pump, the bail having a wooden handle, which insulated it from the metal of the pump. He had drawn about a gallon when a spark jumped from the can to the pump and set fire to the gasoline. He threw the can out of the open door and after extinguishing the fire and desiring to fill his car, he repeated the operation with the same can with the wooden handle, and it caught fire the second time.

After that the man refused to go near the pump and went to a public garage to get his car filled.

Not long after another chauffeur in the same town proceeded to fill his car from a pump by means of a 10 foot rubber hose, to the end of which was fitted a nozzle shut off of metal. While one man was doing the pumping the other held the nozzle near the car tank, but did not bring it in actual contact. A spark, which he describes as half an inch long jumped to the tank and set fire to the gasoline.

Several fires have occurred recently at one of the Albany oil stations, evidently caused by the generation of frictional electricity in a canvas spout used to convey gasoline to tank cars.

The canvas was covered with a coating of shellac, and the spout hung from an overhead pipe, the lower end being in, or near the manhole of a tank car, but not touching the metal of the tank.

Recent tests show that the friction of gasoline passing through this spout and rubbing against the shellac coating caused the generation of between 400 and 500 volts of electricity.

SEC. BACHMAN IS MANAGER

The Wonderful Automobile Accessory Department of a Popular Store—Reasons for Success of this Growing Business.

Some Facts Which Every Autoist in Michigan Should Read and Act Upon.

It is to be supposed that the most successful and satisfying auto accessory supply house would be one which in direct charge of a man who is an expert autoist himself, and an authority in automobile matters.

Probably no man has a better automobile experience and a wider acquaintance among auto owners than W. B. Bachman, secretary of the Wolverine Automobile Club, and manager of the accessory department of Heyn's Bazaar, Detroit, Mich.

The auto accessory section of Heyn's Bazaar is located in the base and occupies an immense space with additional storage space in the rear and on other floors. Mr. Bachman has gathered together a corps of salesmen who know just what auto owners require, and whose knowledge is of the greatest benefit to the purchaser.

Following the usual policy of this concern every item is sold at a sharp cut in the usual price, in fact there is probably no other auto supply house in the U. S. which offers such "bargains" as Heyn's. This is made possible by immense purchases and intimate knowledge of market conditions.

This department was organized over four years ago and is operated on the same basis as any department store section—and everyone realizes that the department store offers the greatest value to be obtained with unexcelled service in every detail.

Behind every sale made at Heyn's Bazaar stands a permanent, lasting and dependable guarantee, which is an added source of satisfaction to the purchaser.

Mail orders are given every attention and prices will be gladly quoted on any desired article at once. In fact, the mail order end of the business is one of the chief propositions with Mr. Bachman.

As an illustration of just what Heyn's Bazaar auto accessories really are we note $2 steam vulcanizers at 88c and a splendid vulcanizer at that. Guaranteed spark plugs at a quarter; tire covers at 75c; shell rim goggles at 48c; tire prices cut to the bottom.

However, it is easy to drop a postal to W. B. Bachman, Manager Heyn's Bazaar Accessory Dept., Detroit, and he will take good care of your requests at any time.

WHERE THE AUTO OWNER GETS A "SQUARE DEAL" TREATMENT AT ALL TIMES

One of the best known accessory dealers in Detroit is E. A. Bowman, who with Mr. D. C. Preston, form the E. A. Bowman Co. In a recent interview with Mr. Bowman in regard to the activity in auto accessory sales, and other details of the business Mr. Bowman said: "While we started in this business in a very modest manner back in February, 1914, you can see we now carry one of the largest and best assorted stocks in the city of Detroit."

"I attribute our success to the fact that we carry every item a man wants when he wants it, and we sell at prices which are usually below list in the majority of cases. We do a big business and our sale of items is also a most important item."

"We have been elected by the General Electric Co. to act as sole distributors for the 'Genemotor' in Michigan and we gladly give details of this on request. We are a firm believer in advertising, but we positively advise nothing we cannot back up with our full guarantee of quality and value. We have a tremendous mail-order business throughout the state, and issue a complete catalog of tools, tires, lamps, and in fact all accessories wanted."

"The fact that we ship goods as far as Alaska is evidence that we have the right prices and the right service. We will gladly give even the smallest order immediate and careful attention."

Mr. Bowman is a hustler and his modern store at 844 Woodward Ave., Detroit, is always filled with satisfied customers, and the office force is a busy assortment and filling the mail orders from distant points. The E. A. Bowman catalog is certainly well worth having by any autoist who wishes to save money and have the largest stocks from which to choose.

When seen in his salesrooms Mr. Loveland, who is perhaps the best known of all the used car dealers in Michigan, said he didn't have much time to talk. The floor was filled with a line of standard cars that were all shoddy beauties, and in the finest condition imaginable. Mr. Loveland says these cars, himself after right investigation and sells them on a full guarantee to be in fine condition and just as he represents them to be.

The fact that you can buy an auto for $150 to $160 less than the regular price and still have car that is fully up to the service level of any of the regular priced new cars, means that it is fully up to write or call on Mr. Loveland and see for yourself how well he can serve you and save you a good big sum of money as well.

Mr. Loveland's salesrooms are located on Woodward Ave., cor. of Palmer, Detroit, Mich. He also maintains branches and Chevrolet branches. Mail inquiries will receive instant attention.

When many are looking about for automobile bargains, it must not be overlooked that the motorcycle of today is in vogue and that this popular method of transportation is worthy of investigation.

There are many good makes on the market, the sort that carry you to the end of the city in comfort and safety, always to be relied on and convenient to a great degree.

It is a pleasure to know that the desire for a good motorcycle can be met with no great outlay of money as the well known concern of W. E. Wandersee Co., 129 Gratiot Ave., Detroit, offer a great big stock of all the standard makes at a discount well worth securing. It will pay to come to Detroit and look over the offerings, or drop a line for the complete price list. Your order and inquiry will have the best of attention at all times.

CHICKEN MITES QUICKLY AND EASILY DESTROYED

Poultry raisers will be gratified to learn that a preparation has just been put on the market that spells instant death to Chicken Mites. These annoying and destructive pests can now be exterminated in a few minutes and at a very trifling cost.

Mr. Thompson, of the F. A. Thompson Company, Detroit, announces that his concern has recently placed on the market a "Fumoth" fumigator that kills mites and lice instantly and not by suffocation, like sulphur or formaldehyde. It is harmless and easy to use and eliminates that tedious work of spraying and exposure to the lice and mites.

The fumigators are large sheets of fumigating paper, saturated with a volatile, non-corrosive material that is readily volatilized by heat produced in slow burning. The fumes go into all the cracks and crevices and permeate the straw, killing every insect. There are no after orders and the fowls can be returned immediately afterwards.

One sheet will fumigate a chicken house 10 or 12 feet square in less than one-half hour's time.

The fumes go into all the cracks and crevices and permeate the straw, killing every insect, which is not possible with spraying. Can return fowls immediately. Fumes kill instantly and not by suffocation, like sulphur or formaldehyde, and not dangerous to man.

Two fumigators, 25 cents; 5 for 50 cents; 12 for $1.00. Postpaid. Ask for descriptive folder. Send name of supply house. Guaranteed—money refunded. Fumigator also kills mosquitoes and house moths.

HONOR SYSTEM JOKE AT NAVAL ACADEMY; IS CHARGE; INVESTIGATION IS NOW ON

Seven midshipmen at the Annapolis Naval Academy who are in trouble because they "cribbed" at a recent examination are borne out by the presidents of the classes in the statement that the honor system has failed at Annapolis and that a large majority of the students use unauthorized means in passing examinations. Midshipman James E. Moss is one of the accused "midgies." A board of inquiry, with Capt. Robert L. Russell at its head, has made an investigation and recommended the dismissal of Moss and four others.

TIME CARD TRAINS.

There are approximately 2,300 passenger trains dispatched each month on the Pere Marquette system and 97 per cent of those trains arrive in time during the months of March and April and the first three weeks of May. That is a record of efficiency which makes possible our motto "On Time Trains—F & P M Railway News."

And there isn't a place in existence outside of the P. M. depots where a person may find out the time of one of those 2,300 passenger trains leaving a P. M. depot. It makes but little difference to the public whether a train is on time or two hours late if there is no way of ascertaining what time the train is due to go. Contrast the policy of the steam railways to that of the electric lines and the boats. Their time cards appear in every newspaper along the routes but not a peep from the steam railways. The boats and electric lines advertise their attractions in a very extensive manner and keep the public constantly informed as to their service and the existence of the steam roads is getting more and more obscure. Seemingly the steam roads could find profitable employment for some good publicity men.

"Feminism" has received another justification in the sensational episode in the educational and literary circles the other day, when a Radcliffe college girl put her answers to a three-hour examination into proper as well as errorful blank verse, and within the regular allowance of time at that. But think of the result if all the college girls in the land should attempt to poetize their scholastic achievements in a similar manner. "Spring poetry" of the ordinary kind has at least the merit of brevity, usually.

"On Rats," says the small boy (who takes 'em away from the family cat to save up for the new beauty when he reads that it requires five of the rodents to make a "count"). No less than that number can be accepted by the township clerk, who must draw an order for each sum on county clerk who must draw in regard to the county treasurer. And after all this, the rats—or heads, or scamps—will be left for the cat's to dispose of. When?

The Pontiac Press Gazette in an article on the Covert fishing law, makes the startling statement that it will be "illegal to remove snappers, perch and blue gills from inland lakes when measured less than six inches in length." Well, in that's the way the law reads we'll all agree not to fish a "no such" small lake as that.

Judging by Thursday's Detroit ball game we sometimes think if Hugley Jennings would put as much pep in the beginning of his games as he does in the last inning or two he wouldn't have such a nerve racking finish every day and he would also have fewer games to win after dark were lost.

Farmington Guild will meet next Monday evening at the Town hall, at eight o'clock. Eastern Central time, says the Enterprise. Seems 'nif there is trouble enough now about the three different "times" without juggling in the fourth variety.

It's also something of a mystery how some men can live in apparent ease the year around without apparent labor, while others have to work the year around without any apparent ease.

A "Single Color maid" is wanted as an advertiser in a Detroit daily. No variegated work-lady need apply, of course.

FIRST REUNION

CLASS OF 1914

HELD AT WALLED LAKE TUESDAY, JUNE 22.

The first annual reunion of the class of 1914, N. H. S., was held in the Holcomb cottage at Walled Lake with Miss Mae Holcomb as hostess on Tuesday of this week.

The young people went to the lake in automobiles Tuesday morning. Six of the class were unable to attend. Those present included the Misses Frances Yerkes, Hazel Wilcox, Myrtle Gorton, Lucile Lanning, Nola Ross, Katherine White, Alice Jones and Mary Pearsall, and Carl Van Vatterburg, Wilbur Cook, Vine Yerkes, Oswald Wilcox and Don Miller. Besides Miss Holcomb, Prof. F. W. Wheaton and Miss Anna Johnson, High School teachers of this class, were present.

A sumptuous dinner was served at noon after which a business meeting was held. The alumni officers elected were: Frances Yerkes, president; Mae Holcomb, vice-president; Myrtle Gorton, secretary; and Wilbur Cook, treasurer. It was decided to hold the 1916 reunion at the home of Frances Yerkes next June.

Following the meeting the class members enjoyed out-of-door games and boating.

At six o'clock they were again invited to the dining room which was prettily decorated in the class colors, red and white. Favors were small but baskets of red, made to resemble American beauty roses, the class flower. The Misses Dawn Clark and Elsie Ambler acted as waitresses. The return trip was made late in the evening after a most enjoyable day.

LIBRARY ASSOCIATION

ANNUAL MEETING

and for borrowing books. A new library was installed costing $60, and the cost for fuel was $89. A little more than $80 was paid out for repairs and redecoration, for janitor and extra work $22, and for insurance about $25.

It was stated that since 1909 the board has paid $750 for new books and repairs on books. The regular income of the library is entirely insufficient for the necessary outlay each year, but the deficiencies are made up by the board through the giving of entertainments from time to time. The number of cardholders is less than five per cent of Northville's population, which is far from the proportion that should be shown in an intelligent and progressive community like ours.

The ladies of the board have certainly been faithful workers, and have achieved excellent results, but their reward for all this unselfishly unpaid labor and care is not what it should be in appreciation and patronage of the public except for the good friends who "stand by" so faithfully year after year.

From Our Exchanges.

Education seems on the wane in Rochester. There will be no graduating class there in 1916—Oxford Leader.

The Holly advertiser mentions certain things that are taking place "now that summer is here." But is it? There seems to be some doubt about it.

The telephone "trouble man" for Milford and vicinity found some the other day when a farm dog succeeded in getting a taste of him by a balk movement.

The village of Redford is trying for a five cent car fare to Detroit according to the Redford Record, claiming that the volume of business for the D. U. R. would more than double as a result of the reduced fare.—Farmington Enterprise.

Work was begun last Monday by the county road commissioners in the construction of the cement road from the village limits to Michigan avenue. The route it is proposed to follow will run about a half-mile south from the village, then west a mile to the Canton Center road, going down this road to Michigan avenue, where it connects with the Bellville road. This will be one of the greatest road improvements in this part of Wayne county.

There is some talk that while the road commissioners are constructing this road, it would also be a new thing for the village to connect the brick pavement on Main street with the cement road by a similar cement road construction between the two points. Such an improvement could be made at this time with much less expense if negotiations could be entered into with the road commissioners to do this work, and the Mail hopes the village council may see its way clear to make such an arrangement.—Plymouth Mail.

Catholic services will be held in Cattermole hall Sunday morning at 9:30, standard time.

The Eighth graders and teacher Miss Weller, enjoyed an outing at Walled Lake last Friday.

Rob Pickell is building a cute little house for himself and family on Church street just south of Cady.

Now that the school teachers have gone home for the vacation days, Northville ladies are once more being entertained with movie pictures and auto trips.

Big preparations are being made for "Forester Day," which will be observed July 28. The business men are aiding to further the project by donating articles for prizes in the sport contests, and all things considered, the day will be a big one for Northville.

A social hour will be held in the Masonic temple Wednesday evening, June 30. The entertainment will be given by the young people and children of the members. Members are urged to come and each one has the privilege of inviting two guests. No admission will be charged.

The local Foresters of America will hold a meeting Friday evening, June 25. Election of officers will occur at this time and plans will also be made for July 28, which is to be "Forester Day" in Northville. A dance will follow the meeting which will open promptly at 7 o'clock.

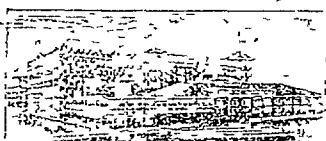

Kind of seems as though the boys of this year's graduation class put it all over the girls, with their ice cream trousers and white shoes. Of course it's an every day occurrence to see a girl dressed up, but usually the boys have been only a dark spot on the platform. Not so this year.

The Alseum theatre management is planning to give a matinee every Saturday afternoon, beginning in the near future. It is thought this will benefit the farmers and families in this vicinity who cannot get to town for the evening show. The matinee will begin at an early hour, enabling them to return home by "chore time."

The Misses Thelma Ambler and Aline McCully entertained the Senior class and High school teachers at an informal reception in Ambler's ice cream parlor, commencement evening. The parlor was decorated in red and white, the class colors, and the guests were served ice cream and strawberries, wafers, salted nuts and candies.

It's not difficult to love the homely, where wit and grace and beauty combine, our affections flows out. But to love those who have no loveliness and in whom there is nothing that can attract attention or affection, is by no means easy. It requires an inward fountain of love, which springs up and flows out, and reaches those who need it.

Probate Clerk C. C. Chadwick, of Detroit, one of our former Northvillians, was graduated last week from the Detroit college of law, and with the additional honor of being the president of the class. "Chad" certainly ought to make a good lawyer, with a thorough legal education added to his unusual facility as a conversationalist and debater.

Read Stimpson has secured a splendid position with the Cadillac automobile company in Detroit, for the summer.

One of the pretty poultry sights of this vicinity is the flock of over 300 Rhode Island Reds, large and small, at the Sloan farm west of town.

Mr. and Mrs. E. C. Langfield will entertain a number of out-of-town people at their home on Mill street today, in honor of their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary.

The most pretentious movie pictures yet shown at the Alseum was "Cabrila," the Wednesday night feature. Wonderful effects were produced in the earthquake, fire and battle scenes.

The county superintendents of institutions of Ohio have decided to hold a spelling bee throughout the state some time this present month. More than 1,000,000 pupils of the schools are expected to participate in the contest.

The twelve members of the Library board were charmingly entertained by the president, Mrs. F. S. Harmon, at a five course luncheon Friday afternoon at one o'clock. The floral decorations for the rooms and luncheon table were masses of big white field daisies, of which each guest was given a large bouquet as a souvenir of a delightful occasion.

Plymouth band boys are very indignant because it has been widely reported through the newspapers that they refused to play Saturday evenings in street corners to emphasize their disapproval of a "dry town." The members of the band say this is entirely untrue. They are mostly working men and want their Saturday evenings for recreation.

Many inquiries are being made as to the cause of the breaking of the drinking fountain presented to the school a few years ago by C. R. Benton through the Northville Woman's club, and much wonder is expressed as to why the fountain has not been repaired and replaced. It was certainly appreciated by the children and the public, being too valuable a gift to cast aside.

Joe Montgomery escaped serious injury by a small margin, Monday morning. He had loaded his wagon with gravel at the Lawrence pit and in stepping up on the wheel to get in caught his foot in the spokes of the wheel. Before he could loosen it the horses started up, the revolution of the wheel wrenched his leg and threw him to the ground, so that the heavily loaded wagon ran directly over his leg. No bones were broken, but Mr. Montgomery did get some pretty bad bruises.

About a dozen ladies were most delightfully entertained Tuesday at the pleasant farm home of Mrs. M. H. Sloan at a delicious "country luncheon." The floral centerpiece at the table was a bouquet of purple blossomed alfalfa and red and white clover, and a pretty spray of alfalfa bloom decorated each place card. Exquisite yellow roses and masses of fragrant clover ornamented the other rooms. Out-of-town guests were Miss Mary Power and Mrs. J. M. Burgess of Detroit, and Mrs. Kittie Himmian of Bozeman, Mont., all former residents here.

What was described as an "epidemic of marriages" broke out among the women teachers of the Battle Creek "Vich," schools a few months ago and in order to head it off the board of education ordered the county clerk to refuse marriage licenses to young women employed as teachers. A member of the board warned marriageable young men to be wary of teachers who break contracts with school boards by marrying because a woman who does not scruple to break a contract with six men would probably not hesitate to break one with her husband.

CHAPTER I.

A Fugitive Goddess.

The doctor was so small and frail that his narrow face was rescued from inconsequence only by a tiny, cropped Vandyke with a dignified sprinkling of gray. I always felt that, should I ever see him in a bathing suit, I would have to seek a new physician. I could never again think of him as sufficiently grown up to practice an adult vocation.

Yet, when the doctor spoke, his mentality issued out of its small habitation of flesh and expended to commanding proportion.

The little doctor was, in fine, a very great doctor; and on this occasion he was bullying me with the large authority of a Bonaparte.

"But doctor," I began protesting.

He raised a small hand which suggested the claw of a delicate bird and fixed me with quizzical eyes that had the faculty of biting sharply through a man's unspoken thoughts.

"Don't assume, to say 'but' to me," he sternly enjoined; and since we had long known each other, not only as physician and patient, but also as men who breakfasted at the same hour and at the same club-table, I momentarily heeded.

"Once upon a time," he continued, "the German Kaiser presumed to question a pilot on his imperial yacht. Do you recall the result?"

"No," said I, "I don't, but—"

Again the doctor eyed me, basilisk-fashion, across the baron and eggs of our belated morning meal as he continued:

"He very improperly reminded the emperor that upon a vessel in the high seas a pilot acknowledges no superior this side of eternity. In matters of health I take the bridge. You obey."

"But—" I weakly insisted.

"You presume to think because you house your nerves in a well-muscled body that they are infallible," he impudently continued. "I've seen rotten motors in excellent garages. I've seen overwrought wives inured in pillows, and I've seen fine figures of men that go in asplums."

"My nerves are simply of the high-strung type," I argued.

"Those are the kind that snap," he retorted the sage. "If you were a race-horse, it might be a matter of reason able pride to you to be bred in the purple. Being a man with no vocation except the spending of unearned money, it means that you are perilously over-stimulated."

"What implies the pedantry are you leading up to?" I demanded. "Out with it!"

"I mean to say you have the artistic temperament which, without genius, is worse than useless. You choose to regard yourself a failure and grow morose because you have found the law un congenial, and because editors earn their salaries by returning your manuscripts. The durability of your nervous system depends entirely on how you utilize the next five years."

"Go on," I encouraged him. "Don't mind me. Sentence me to death if it amuses you."

"It won't be death; but unless you fortify those nerves," he calmly went on, "there probably will be disaster. It may take any one of several forms."

"As, for instance?" I inquired, with pardonable curiosity.

"Oh, arteriosclerosis, paralysis, insanity—something of that sort."

"Thank you kindly," I murmured as I reached for the matches. "Can I have my choice of the lot?"

"However," went on the big little doctor, "if you devote the next five years to a program of diversified travel, you ought to lay up an account of nerve-strength upon which you can draw at lib. for forty or fifty years to come. You should even have a surplus against the unfortunate exigency of living on when you are old and useless."

"But I have traveled," I argued. "I've been to—"

He interrupted me with a short and sweet my declarations aside unfinished.

"You have dabbled at travel, like a school girl nibbles at cucumbers. Get out on the hike and stay out for a year or two. Build into your artificial self something of the outdoor animal. You have a fair start—you were once an athlete."

He rose to go down to his motor, and I shouted after him contemptuous and profane criticism. Nevertheless, within the week I booked passage for the Mediterranean.

I found once more that Europe and the African fringe of the landlocked sea have to offer to the hunger of the wanderlust only a stereotyped table-d'hôte. Shortly it dawns. Within several weeks one thing only had promised to break the suggest—surface with a little of interest. And that one thing puzzled me in no small degree, since it was not such a matter as would ordinarily have challenged my attention.

I have passed with a glance many beautiful women and felt no need to turn my head for a further inspection. I am not of the cavaliering type; and yet, here I was finding myself interested in a strange and indefinable way—in a woman whose face I had not seen, and whose name I did not know. That, I told myself, was the secret of it. It was exactly because she was elusive, mysterious in fashion, that I found my flat interest pliqued.

I never had more than the swish of her skirt or a glimpse of her retreating figure, until sheer inquisitiveness gave her an augmented importance. At all events, she had eluded me over southern Europe, then from Genoa to Egypt, and I wanted to see her face.

It was at Naples that I had my first cursory glance at her. I was hurrying through the Galleria Umberto, on my way to a luncheon appointment for which I found myself late. As I passed Merola's a young woman was sitting before a counter, with her back to the street, trying on gloves.

I could appreciate the gypsy grace of her figure, which was slender, because one of the things at which I had failed is painting. The single thing at which I have not failed, except the success of having selected parents who bequeathed me money, is an appreciation of the beautiful. That appreciation, despite my hurry, brought me to stop for a fuller glance at her; but there was no mirror at any part of the shop which gave me a reflection of her face, and as my appointment was imperative I refrained from going in to buy gloves.

But there was something so exquisite in her bearing and in the tasteful lines of her simple traveling gown, that I caught myself thinking of her. Then, as I went down to the quay a day later to say farewell to some friends, just as the gangplank of an outgoing steamer was about to be drawn up, I saw her hurrying across it. Her face was still averted.

I strained to catch a feature, but a wayward gust from the bay wrapped a filmy veil about the profile—which was for a moment turned my way—and hid it.

She did not turn at the rail, but disappeared as the gangplank came up and cut off pursuit. But I had added to my first impression the knowledge that she did not merely walk. She moved as though her feet wore the sandals of Hermes, and she carried herself with the splendid grace of a center young queen.

At Monte Carlo I was strolling on the Boulevard de l'Europe at night. Ahead of me walked a young man and a girl. It was she, and I had only to hurry my steps to overtake and see her. I hurried but an untimely acquaintance stopped me and held me in useless talk until at a distance saw her disappear into a lighted doorway, against which her face and figure showed only in silhouette.

The next two days I haunted the cafes and the casino, but she had gone.

Riding one day around the walls of Jerusalem, I had a glimpse of her standing on the ramparts by the Gate of the Needle's Eye, but as I looked up the sun was full in my eyes, and I could see only the lashing of her skirts in the wind and halolike haze of gold about her uncovered head.

I was sitting on the terrace at Shepherd's hotel on the evening of my arrival there. I was finding life flat, as one must who can discover no fascination in Cairo's appeal to the eyes, nostrils and ears. Before me was the olla-podrida of toasting fashion and tell-tale squalor, the smell of camel and altar of roses; the polyglot chatter of European pleasure-seekers and the tom-toms of Arab pilgrims.

Then once more I saw her. But still I did not see her face. I suppose there were other persons with her. I did not notice. I did notice the salient thing. She was boarding a motor-bus, presumably for the Alexandria train, and was followed by the usual Cairene retinue of turbaned porters and luggage-bearers.

My glimpse of her was again only in exit. My baggage had just been unpacked, and I could not also catch the Alexandria train. Had it been her entrance instead, I should perhaps have remained in Egypt and fanned into rebirth a languid interest in sarcophagi and cartouches, and camel-riding and scrambling up the comfortable slants of pyramids.

As it was, I sought out an empty place on the terrace, where unattended usually enough. I overheard an earnest conversation between a fair-haired, unattractive young Englishman and a grizzled fellow in middle life. They were talking business in one of the writing rooms which give out through open windows upon the terrace, and the Englishman's voice gave me a carrying quality to his voice.

He was, it appeared from the solicitude, seeking a pilot which lay in the power of his elder vis-a-vis to be shown.

From the discussion, which neither of them treated as confidential, I learned that there is somewhere in the Pacific Ocean a perfectly useless island from which certain ethnological data and exhibits might be obtained. It further appeared that the British museum was deficient in these particular curios, and that the glass cases were yearning to be filled.

The youth had been employed in Sudanese excavations and research. Now that work had ended—and with it the pay—the necessity for other work and pay had not ended.

"The billet down there," suggested the elder man, "will be no end, beastly, I dare say. A tramp steamer sailed from Port Said in three days for Singapore, Sandakan and the South Seas. The pay will be one hundred and fifty pounds for the job. The fare will probably be state biscuits—still, if you feel game to have a dash at it—"

The speaker finished with a shrug which seemed to add: "It's never difficult to find a fool."

But the young man laughed with a whole-hearted enthusiasm that entirely missed the under note of contempt in the manner of his benefactor.

"Well, rather," he declared. "And I say, you know, it's jolly good of you, sir."

Later I made the acquaintance of the British in the American bar where, over Scotch and soda, we discussed the project to the end that I nominated and elected myself an assistant forager for the British museum, serving at my own expense. There was something likable about my new and naive acquaintance, who was so eager to shoulder his futile way across a third of the globe's circumference in search of crudely inscribed rocks and ad heads and decaying skulls.

My own experience in life had been even more futile. I had learned to speak five languages and had completely failed of gaining a foothold in five useful professions—art, law, literature, music, and—contentment.

Possibly the appointment of my Sahibbi hunger, the curing of the curae, did not, after all, lie along the routes of Canada and Pullman. Maybe I was still nibbling at travel as the schoolgirl nibbles at chocolates. Perhaps his method of taking the trail was the heroic medicine my itching feet required.

At all events, sentimentally quoted to myself, "I think it will kill me or cure, and I think I will go and see."

"When I informed young Mansfield—that for proved to be his name—that I meant to be his traveling companion, his almost childlike face took on an uncharacteristic expression. He was a great two hundred pound chap whose physique should logically have been the asset of a pirate or a pugilist; but the visage which surrounded it had a rosy pinkness, and his blue eyes were the guileless charity of essential innocence.

With his physical power went a long suffering good nature; and as he talked of the widely scattered places he had seen and the things which should have made him wise in his generation, it seemed to me that his soul must have worn a maskintosh, from which the showers of experience had been shed off without leaving a mark. I have seen mastiffs with eyes full of wastefulness because nature has denied her affectionate temperaments the gentle lives of lap-dogs. Mansfield struck me the same way.

Why I, a man, by his simple standards as rich as Croesus, should care to ship with him on a voyage promising stale biscuits, was quite beyond his mental process. He confessed, in all frankness, that he did it merely for the money—the pitiful hundred and fifty.

And where was the girl back in England, probably as devoid of surpluses and complications of character as a lonesome primrose. I pictured her to myself as a creature of pink and shallow prettiness. The day to which his ambition straitened as the ultimate goal was the day when he could become a curator in the British museum and transplant her to decent London lodgings.

He longed to placard and arrange scarabs in a plate glass case to classify Chomote pottery—and on bank holidays to push a go-cart in the park.

Perhaps there are other corroded hulks shrouding here and there among the less frequented ports of the seven seas, as uninviting in appearance and as villainously named as was the Wastrel, but on this point I signed unconvinced.

A glance told us that her seaworthiness was questionable and that her overhauling cargo pressed her Plimsdon mark close to the water line. We were to learn by degrees that her timbers were rotten, her plates rust-eaten, and her engines junk. Her officers were castaways from respectable seafaring, none too cordial in their relations with admiralty courts. They had fallen back on the hazardous command of such a vessel not from choice; but necessity, precisely as other er types of unemphatic and unpressing men fall back on vagrancy and crime. Her crew was picked from the dregs of scattered ports. They were Lascars, Kanakas, Chinese, and nondescripts from here and there, hauled forth and signed from dives where human garbage trickles down to the sea.

At first they interested me as new and recharged types of men; yet, as I say, I was more than grateful for the shoulder-touch of at least one, being of my own sort.

From our arrival, none of them, except the captain and officers, took the slightest pains to conceal that they regarded us as unwelcome interlopers, and the courtesy of the afterguard was short-lived enough. In that desert of tactlessness, Mansfield babbled like a brook and overflowed with young-sentimentality.

The first leg of our journey ended at Borneo, leaving us as unacquainted with officers and seamen, save in the surface details of personal appearance as we had been at Port Said. Now we were dropping Sandakan harbor over the stern. Ramparts of sandstone were burning with a ruddy glow in the sunset. Already the sprawling hillside town, framed in its mangrove swamps, was lost around the rocky buttress of the harbor's mouth.

A sense of isolation settled on us. As we had nosed our way outward, Mansfield had been leaning silently on the after-rail. His eyes had dwelt on the green gardens and white walks of the British consulate, which sits upon the hill. Now we had seen the last of that, and of the bay's fittilla of matting-galled junks. Off the port bow was only beetling sandstone and the countless gulls, flashing white as they tilted the snowy linings of their wings into the sun. He talked for a time, in low tones, of the girl in Somerset; as men will talk when they are homesick; and then he rather shamefacedly produced from somewhere and opened at random a much battered note book, written close in a woman's hand.

"I dare say," he hesitatingly told me, "I have no moral right to read this. It's quite personal, yet it's unsigned. Invasion of privacy can't apply to anonymous persons, you know."

He paused for a minute and indolently watched the screaming hordes of Sandakan birds as it awaited my agreement, but I said nothing.

"You see," he continued, "I've been living lately in a cheap boarding house at Cairo and, before that, in beastly Soudan inns; so when I drew a bit in advance, I resolved to treat myself to a day or two at Shepherd's."

"You remember how full the house was. They had to give me a small room on the roof. It was really a sort of servant's room in loss crowded times, I fancy. A beggar of an Arab used to pray on his rag in front of my door. In rummaging about I found this." He held up the note book.

"I looked for an address, meaning to mail it to its owner, but there was no address and only given names. Some servant must have found it in a vacated room and later left it in the one to which I had fallen heir. Seems to have been some girl's desultory, but intimate, diary. Just an entry now and then, with evidently long gaps between. You see, the first writing is immature, almost childish, and the last is dated at Cairo."

I nodded my head, but said nothing. He appeared deeply interested, but his simple punctilio required the reinforcement of my approval before he could quite clear the skirts of his conscience in the matter of having sampled its contents.

"You see," he half apologized, "my first glance was disinterested; I was merely seeking to identify ownership. But from just a few lines, read in that fashion, I saw that it was—his voice became serious, almost awed—"well, that it was rather wonderful. Some girl has been putting her heart into words, and she's written a human document."

Again he paused, drumming on the rail with the fingers of one hand.

"From a half-dozen bits of Chimote pottery," he reflected, "I can read a great deal of the habits and life of the Incas. I can restore an extinct mammal from some fragments of skeleton. But I find it jolly difficult to understand anything about a woman. If a fellow means to marry, he ought to try to understand. That's why I'd like to have a dip into this. Do you think I might?"

"Do you think," I countered, smiling, "that you would have the right to read somebody's unsigned love-letters?"

A certain magazine editor had once wistfully opined that I would never succeed in literature until I acquired some insight into the feminine riddle. But he had not pointed me to diaries. He had bluntly advised me to fall in love with a few variant types.

Until a man had found blond or dark hairs on his coat, said the editor, he could not hope to write about heart-beats. If he had found various kinds, and that often, he could write better.

Young Mansfield was giving my question a graver and more literal consideration than it merited.

"I rather think," he said seriously, "that one might read such letters. Unless the offense is against some definite person, there is no offense at all."

"Perhaps you are right," I admitted; and in a moment he was reading aloud.

No Job for Him

The spring had brought out the usual crop of flatless wanderers. "Want help, do you?" said the prosperous-looking party who had been applied to for assistance by one of these. "You're a husky-looking beggar, I must say! Why don't you work?"

"My business isn't good at this season," said Dusty.

"What is your business?" said the prosperous-looking party.

"I'm a professional tobogganist," said Dusty.

Keeping Her Down

Mrs. Lowerten—"Well, Sally, I suppose we've got to call that new neighbor. Just take your scissors and cut some sort of a hole in the middle of our visitin' cards."

Daughter—"What for, maw? What does that signify?"

Mrs. Lowerten—"It doesn't mean anything that I know of, but she'll think it does, and she might cheap to find she doesn't know as much about society ways as we does."

You Never Can Tell

"When you poke a toad," said old Farmer Hornbeck, philosophically, "you can't tell which way he will jump, nor how far; an' it is just about the same way with a jury."

"That so?" returned young Jay Green, in a nonsensical way.

"Yep. For instance, in the case of Plunk Jarvis, who has just been tried over at Kalamazoo Court-house for pullin' out his brother-in-law's whiskers by the roots, in a fight, the jury discharged Plunk an' fined his brother-in-law ten cents, the regular price of a shave."—Puck.

Just a little philosophy may enable one to take things as they come, but to part with them as they go—that is different.

EASY TO SWIM IF YOU KEEP WITS

Almost impossible to Sink if You Balance Yourself Correctly in the Water.

LOST ART IS DISCOVERED

Father Odenbach of Cleveland Gives Demonstration of Walking Amid the Waves.

Cleveland, Ohio—Attention, young women! In fact, all who go near the water, whether they hang their clothes on a hickory limb, bide their time in a locker or keep them on, may listen to this.

You cannot sink in water, fresh or salt.

That is, you cannot sink unless you try. You are lighter than water and will float if you give yourself a chance.

When the "smart Alex" who rocks the boat has succeeded in his little efforts—and capsize! all that stood between you and being a mermaid or a merman, or, grievously speaking, a case for the coroner, remember that you cannot sink.

According to discoveries made in the late nineties of the Eighteenth Century in an Italian scientist, named Oronzio de Bernardi, and remade by Rev. Fred L. Odenbach, professor of physics and astronomy at St. Ignatius College, Cleveland, O., there is a way to balance yourself so that you may stand comfortably erect amid the wild waves, at least until you are rescued or the wind has blown you ashore.

If you weary of standing up, you may, by a simple adjustment of balance, seat yourself quite comfortably in the undulating deep.

You may even cross your legs or cross your feet at the ankles.

Indeed, if one judges from the experiments performed by De Bernardi, there is nothing to prevent a person who has mastered the trick of balancing from propping himself on one elbow and going to sleep.

Father Odenbach, who bears a high reputation among the physical scientists of this country, has definitely established himself that these things are true.

That the human body is one-eleventh lighter than the fresh water it can be forced to displace and one-tenth lighter than salt water.

That the specific gravity of the human body is, therefore, about .92 minus.

It was in a quaint old German work, one of twelve volumes by John Samuel Halle, printed in Vienna in 1798, that Father Odenbach found the account of De Bernardi's experiments. The noted Jesuit scientist is extremely modest concerning his part in the discovery.

The exact figure of specific gravity of the human body is given by him. He found many authorities who conceded that the human body was slightly lighter than water, but none who said how much—none, that is, except De Bernardi.

A free translation from the German work follows:

"It was in the nineties of the Eighteenth Century that Oronzio de Bernardi, a Neapolitan servant, was ordered to stop his work and take sea baths."

"In doing so he carried on experiments concerning the specific gravity of the human body and found to his satisfaction that it was lighter than water and that he could take any position he desired in the water by adjusting his center of gravity and oscillation, using for this purpose, first of all, his neck and head, then also his arm and legs."

"He taught this art to others and it was demonstrated to thousands in the Bay of Naples and in surrounding streams."

This German book is illustrated with old engravings, showing how the Italian stood, or sat, in water.

To convince a person that he cannot sink, De Bernardi gave the following instructions, which Father Odenbach has successfully put into practice at St. Ignatius College:

Take a subject out into increasing depth and when the water has reached his armpits, let him extend his arms in effort to float and take an upright, easy position.

The instructor will now stand behind him, place his hands underneath his arms near his shoulders and ask the subject to move forward slowly. When the instructor, seeing that position is an upright and easy one, moves the subject forward beyond his depth and quietly removes his supporting hands. If everything has been properly attended to, the subject will find himself standing in and on water as though on terra firma.

Caution—The surprise of this novelty may cause slight motions in the subject and he may turn over. The instructor must, therefore, be ready to replace his supporting hands before the subject takes fright. Confidence and composure are indispensable.

Then the subject, with the instructor near him, should walk out of his depth and try to take position all by himself. And this should be repeated until he is convinced that it is as easy to stand in water as on the land.

A tendency to tip over, forward and backward, may be counteracted by getting the subject to extend his legs, one forward, the other backward, keeping the head and body steady.

A thin, hollow-chested person may have to put his hands out behind him.

If this tends to throw him backward teach him that a slight forward inclination of the head will prevent this.

Now, tell the man who is standing upright in the water, with his hands stretched out, to move them slowly down to his sides. With a little practice he will be able to do it.

The next lesson is to draw up the legs into a sitting posture. The head must be kept far enough back to prevent the nose and mouth from getting under water.

To get into a standing position from the floating position it is necessary only to raise the head and bring the chin down upon the chest.

Standing erect in the water, it is easy to begin swimming. Bring the arms forward, straight out, the backs of the hands toward each other, and with a slow, steady sweep, make them describe a quarter circle backward, pushing the water behind you with the palms. Draw the hands and arm in to the sides and repeat.

There it is. Very simple, isn't it? It seems that we are all human corks; and that drowning is a crime, as much as any form of ignorance.

Father Odenbach believes the principles will some day be in general use. If they save one human life annually they are worth while.

Rachel's Sentence—
"Who can give a sentence using the word 'pendulum'?" asked the teacher.
Little Rachel's hand shot up. The teacher nodded encouragingly.
"Lightning was invented by Benjamin Franklin."

Household Hint

SOUP WISDOM

In making cream of tomato, corn, spinach or any other vegetable cream soup, it is a good plan to thicken the soup before straining the vegetable. Then one straining will remove the thick parts of the vegetable unsuitable for soup and will remove any lumps from the thickening.

Remember in mixing a cream soup to pour the meat or vegetable liquid on the milk to avoid curdling. Always pour the tomato mixture in the milk in cream tomato soup. Many cooks do not use soda in mixing tomato soup, for they say that when the tomato is poured on the milk there is no danger of curdling. However, a pinch of soda is a safeguard. To give an amber color to stock, add finely grated carrot to it. Tomato juice gives a red tone. Spinach leaves, pounded until the juice is pressed out, give a green color. Add enough of the green juice to gain the desired tint. A little burned sugar or flour gives a deep brown color to soup.

The addition of cold or warm water to soup in the cooking spoils it. If it is necessary to add more water to cooking soup, add bubbling, boiling water.

TABLE WARE

Among the customs of our grandmothers was that of giving personal care to the fragile cups, saucers and other pieces of fine china and glass, and it was probably this appreciative attention which made the china last so long. A little tub or sometimes a silver basin filled with hot soapsuds was brought to the housemother on a tray, directly after each meal. She would then gather up the silver, glass and egg shell cups, and wash, dry and put them away.

THE TABLE

Baked Egg Hash—Ordinary hash may be greatly improved in this ### way:

Chop the beef and potato as usual, season well, add milk to moisture slightly, put in baking dish and bake about half an hour, or until slightly browned on top. Then separate the yolks and whites of as many eggs as may be required, being careful not to break the yolk. Beat whites to a stiff froth, and pile in as many heaps as you have yolks on the hash. Make a slight depression in each side and slip a yolk into each of these. Place in oven until the yolk is set and white slightly browned. This makes a very attractive dish.

Good Bran Bread—Three cups sour milk, three-fourths cup brown sugar, two teaspoons soda, one pint bran, one teaspoon salt, two pints graham flour. Stir soda into sour milk till it foams good; put in salt and sugar, stir till dissolved. Lastly, add bran and graham flour. Pour into two well-buttered bread pans and bake one hour in very slow oven.

Brown Bread Which Is Excellent—One cup brown sugar, one cup white flour, three cups graham flour, two cups sour or buttermilk, one half cup milk, one egg, one teaspoon baking powder, one teaspoon vanilla, spoon butter, one level teaspoon soda. Put in two pans and bake one hour.

Johnny cake—One cup corn meal, half cup flour, pinch of salt, three tablespoons brown sugar, one table spoon melted lard, one cup buttermilk with one teaspoon soda dissolved in it. Add two well-beaten eggs just before baking. Bake about thirty minutes in a hot oven.

SIMPLE HOME REMEDIES

For Toothache—Heat two tablespoons vinegar. Dip a little absorbent cotton in the hot vinegar and apply to the gum at the root of the aching tooth.

To Relieve Pain—A turpentine compress is made of half pound corn meal, half cup turpentine. Make mush in usual way, add turpentine, spread between two cloths. Lay flannel over the flesh, then mush bag, then cover thickly, so the patient will form a sweat. From thirty to sixty minutes usually stops pain.

How the Japanese Live.
Baron Kaneko says "Well-to-do Japanese do not live so very differently from Americans. For breakfast they have their coffee—from your latest possession, the Philippians; condensed milk from Chicago, bread from flour milled in Minneapolis. They smoke a cigarette from Virginia leaf, and they read a morning paper printed on paper made in Wisconsin."

—Boston Record

Charity in France.

It is said that there are in London about 2,000 charitable institutions and organizations to advance the cause of progressive and advanced civilization. The number includes large and small institutions, and more or less relief to the afflicted and those in distress. They are supported almost entirely by personal contributions.

In Mourning 100 Years.

One British regiment has been in mourning for more than a century. This is the "old Forty-seventh, the Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, the officers of which wear black blended with gold braid, in memory of General Wolfe, who was killed at Quebec.

Even the woman who enjoys a good cry may have a perfectly normal sense.

Many are called, but more are bluffed.

Glimpses of Married Life

"The baby's asleep," said Nell, tiptoeing out of the bedroom and softly closing the door. "I shall not be gone longer than absolutely necessary, but I must attend to several matters of business. You will have your work all done. Mary, by the time he wakes up and needs your attention, and Nell let herself out of the house noiselessly.

By the time she had gone a few blocks she discovered that she had left an important memorandum and hurried back to get it.

To miss doing all the things I planned to get done," she thought, letting herself into the house as quietly as burglars and mothers of wakeful babes alone know how. She opened the bedroom door. There sat the maid at her desk calmly reading Olive's last letter. The packet of letters had been opened and was strewn about the desk. So absorbed was the girl in her occupation, and so silent had been Nell's entry that she did not look up. All stood speechless with indignation on the threshold.

"She stepped up behind the girl and took the letter out of her hand. Mary spring to her feet and faced her mistress, who stood with blazing eyes. "You've broken down," she thumped down.

the thoroughly frightened maid. "Tell me what you were doing with my private letters."

There was no answer. The girl was too confused to construct a lie.

"You sent Miss Dunn's address to Mrs. Ellison?"

Still the silence was unbroken.

"It will be better for you to confess to the whole thing. You have been acting as her spy, listening to all our conversation, reporting all our doings to her; sending all her poison letters. Is this not so? Tell me!" she commanded in a hard voice.

"Yes'm," came in a low voice, and the girl bowed her head on her arms and burst into tears.

"Do you think that was honorable? You are a common, vulgar eavesdropper. I'll not have you in my house another day."

Deep convulsive sobs shook the girl's frame.

"You have made no end of trouble for innocent people. Why did you do such a thing?" asked Nell in a softer voice.

"She was always good to me and I was sorry for her," came brokenly from the sobbing girl.

"Sorry for her?"

"Yes." The girl raised her tear-stained face. "She said I could help her by keeping her posted on what the doctor was doing; that she had no one else to help her."

"What does she think she can gain by sending her wicked, lying letters around, and causing so much misery?" asked Nell.

"I don't know," said the girl, dropping her head on her arm and sobbing afresh.

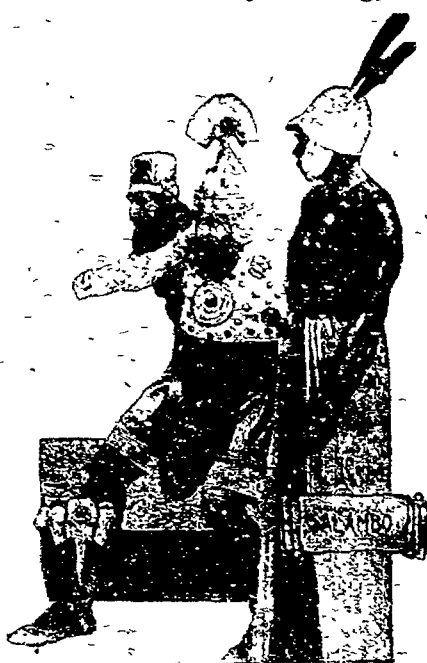

"She paid you for your trouble of course," said Nell bitterly.

"Yes'm."

"Well," said Nell after a pause, "I'll pay you to the end of the week, and you may pack your trunk at once. I won't have anybody around that I can't trust."

Special Feature Alseium Theatre, "Salambo," Thursday Evening, July 1st, 1915.

Manager Thompson has booked seven big features for the seven coming Thursday evenings. Admission for each night will be 15 cents. Next week Thursday's drawing card is "Salambo," a six reel production.

The story of the photo play to follow: Salambo, daughter of Amilcar, ruler of Carthage, and Priestess of Tanit, is the keeper of the Sacred Veil, "on which human eyes must not gaze." She falls in love with Matho, a slave, who becomes the leader of a band of mercenaries, fighting for Carthage, against Rome. Matho steals the sacred veil and Salambo is ordered by the priests to reclaim it. The lover's meet in Matho's tent and Salambo recovers the sacred veil. Matho is made a prisoner by the Carthaginians through the treachery of Narr Hava, who is rewarded by Amilcar for his treachery by the Land of his daughter, Salambo Matho escapes from prison and death; and the Oracle of Tanit is made to declare, by the instrumentality of Spendius, Matho's faithful slave, that Matho is acceptable to the God and will one day govern Carthage. Salambo, who has protested against her marriage to Narr Hava, whom she does not love, is thereupon given by Amilcar, her father, to Matho, and the marriage ceremony is celebrated with much pomp.
